THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

286.05
BAP
v.4

286.05
BAP

Volume IV February 3, 1923 No. 1

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Univ of Ill Libr
Urbana Ill

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
FEB 3 1923

THE Temple Baptist Church of Charleston, West Virginia, is a fine illustration of the work of the department of architecture of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. In a general way, it may be said that this represents a step forward in the design of modern church buildings. The architect, understanding the present usefulness and significance of a Protestant church, unhampered by tradition, has tried to fit it perfectly for the work it has to do. The building is an attempt to make a highly useful building beautiful and significant in appearance.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Edward Scheve, professor of music at Grinnell College, will for the time being lead the ministry of music as organist and choir director at the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y.

The ten-year census in Burma shows that for the period 1911 to 1921 there was an increase of 7 per cent in the Buddhist population, and an increase of 22 per cent among the Christians. Mohammedans increased 15 per cent, while the Hindu population shows an increase of 29 per cent, which was doubtless due to emigration from India.

The graded Sunday-school literature is now available for the Baptist churches in China, through the China Baptist Publication Society. This institution is doing an immense business and its presses are kept busy all day until 10 o'clock at night. It is not uncommon to receive orders for religious tracts amounting to 100,000 copies.

Rev. G. A. Leichliter has resigned the pastorate of the Adelaide Church, London, Ontario. He has accepted the call to the Prospect Avenue Church of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Leichliter has had an unusually prosperous ministry in London. One hundred seventy-one persons have been baptized, twenty-four restored to fellowship, eighty-seven received by letter, a total of 222 added to the membership. In 1918 the total income was $6,242 and last year $18,365, including $5,891 for missions.

The annual report of Col. John T. Axton, chief of chaplains, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C., recently submitted to the secretary of war, makes an interesting summary of work done by members of the Chaplains Corps during the past twelve months. It is shown that if one were to place the total attendance at divine services conducted by chaplains over against the average strength of the army for the fiscal year the figures indicate that every man in the army voluntarily attended church in an army post twelve times last year. If this percentage held good among men throughout the country there would be instant demand for many more church buildings to accommodate the throng in every large community.

According to Mr. Samuel Adams, president of the American Agricultural Editors' Association, the formation of a national group designed to embrace the power of dry Republicans in agricultural organizations and dry elements of the Republican party for the purpose of electing a dry president in 1924, is under way. An intensive campaign, nation-wide in scope will be launched January 1 to broaden dry sentiment and force the Republican national and state conventions to come out with dry platforms, Mr. Adams said. The organization will be known as the National League of Dry Republicans with headquarters in Washington, D. C.

In "The Reminder" published by the First Church, Dallas, Texas, of which Dr. Geo. W. Truett is pastor, we find "The free-will offerings of the church for the past year have been the largest in our history reaching the sum of $231,050, a large part of which has been dedicated to serve elsewhere in benevolences, missions and Christian education and we wish it could have been more." Of this vast sum $39,500 was for current expenses, $74,400 for the church building fund, $6,700 for Sunday-school expenses, $22,300 for a list of charities, orphanages, hospitals and other objects, $75,000 for the $75,000,000 campaign and $13,000 for miscellaneous objects.

Rev. C. H. Dickey, who for more than three years has been pastor of the First Church of Aurora, Ind., has been called to the pastorate of the Southwest Church of LaGrange, Ga. His resignation will become effective, Sunday, Feb. 11.

Evangelist Geo. W. Griffin began a meeting with Pastor Frank Gray at the First Church, Holyoke, Colo., Jan. 21. Evangelist Griffin is opening the eighth year as general evangelist with Baptist churches, having labored in twenty-eight different states. He recently closed a meeting with the First Church at Christopher, Ill., in which there were fifty-two conversions. He may be addressed 706 Security Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Just before Christmas Dr. J. E. Conant held an evangelistic campaign in the First Church, Albion, Mich., which resulted in many conversions and greatly stirred the city. The Albion church was organized in his grandfather's parlor, his grandparents and mother were constituent members of it, and he himself was brought up in that Sunday school and was converted and baptized into the church at the age of eleven. After the holidays Dr. Conant held a campaign in Memorial Church, Jackson, Mich., which grew out of a Sunday school in which he was a teacher just before going away to prepare for the ministry.

A. Judson Tuttle of Assam writes: "I turned the job of writing for your survey over to Fielder this year. He writes from a new worker's point of view. It is some time since we sang together at Crozer. Since that day I have learned the Lord's songs in a strange land. It is great to have our dusky friends join with us in 'Joy to the world, the Lord has come.' Yearly he is growing more real to them. We greatly appreciate the visits of THE BAPTIST."

Chinese, American and British Christians are working together for the relief of the typhoon sufferers in and around Swatow. Miss Abby Sanderson writes: "On Independence Day, Oct. 19, the whole school turned out and each class tried to out-sew every other in making garments for the typhoon relief. Thousands of garments have been cut and made by our Christian women and girls."

The First Church, La Porte, Ind., announces that it is in better condition than it has been for the last twenty years. The illustrated children's sermon every Sunday morning is attracting wide interest. Rev. W. F. Bostick is pastor.

The Stoughton Street Church, Boston, Mass., Sunday, Jan. 7, gave a pageant "Christ Illumines the World." Rev. Willard Pratt is the pastor.

The enrolment of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary has reached 423, the largest enrolment in sixty-four years. Thirty-three states and eleven foreign countries are represented.

Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Moody are beginning their thirty-third year of mission service in Sona Bata, Belgian Congo, in the heart of Africa. They have been helping in the great revival there, and Mr. Moody says, "I am glad that God brought me here to see this revival. It is a glorious privilege to have a part in it."

Rev. L. Luther of Reval, Esthonia, treasurer of Baptist relief-funds in that country, in a recent letter to Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, writes: "The Esthonian government with its subjects is looking with amazement on the fellowship of the relief work made possible by the American and English Baptist brethren. Through this service the Baptists are no longer considered a dangerous sect, but a real scriptural church. It is no wonder that this past year will stand in Esthonian Baptist history as one of the best and blessed years in which about 1,000 souls have been saved and baptized."

Rev. E. M. Lake and Mrs. Lake arrived safely in New York, Jan. 17, on the "Olympic" after a rough and tempestuous voyage from Cherbourg. They have made an extensive trip abroad, traveling up the Nile 450 miles to Luxor. They state that the visit to Palestine was doubtless the most profitable. They were in Rome at the fall of the ministry and later saw 50,000 facisti march into the city. They will for the present reside at 62 Hillsdale Road, Medford Hillside, Mass. Mr. Lake expects to enter the active pastorate again soon.

U. M. McGuire writes: "In The BAPTIST of Jan. 11, I presented a report of a recent meeting of the social service committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, in which I included a list of the persons present and participating. In that list the name of Rev. Henry D. Coe, of Owego, N. Y., who was both present and a lively participant, is omitted. My attention has just been called to the omission. In the minutes of the meeting kept by me as secretary, his name is properly entered, but it was missed in the hurry of copying to get the report off in time for that issue of THE BAPTIST.

(Continued on page 4)

Brothers All!

The observance of Race Relations Sunday, Feb. 11, 1923, by churches, Sunday schools, young people's societies, men's brotherhoods, women's missionary societies and other Christian organizations has the hearty approval of the American Home Mission Society and the Woman's American Home Mission Society following the resolutions and recommendations of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions as well as the Federal Council of churches. It is the general opinion that the Sunday preceding Lincoln's birthday is an appropriate time to call to the attention of white and Negro congregations in every rural and urban community the real need for a better understanding between the two races. Pastors will find this a proper occasion for special adaptations of the gospel of good-will; Negro churches may find it a feasible plan to invite visitors from white churches while white congregations may well extend a like invitation to their Negro brothers. It is hoped that Feb. 11, 1923, will mark a distinct advance in the promotion of interracial understanding and cooperation. George E. Haynes, secretary of the commission on the church and race relations, 105 East 22nd St., New York City, has prepared material which will be found helpful in an effective observance of Race Relations Sunday.

286.05
BAP
v. 4

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., February 3, 1923 No. 1

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

Page

FRESH FROM THE FIELD ..... 2
EDITORIAL ..... 5
IMAGINATION SEES IDEALS, by E. H. Johnson ..... 8
THE TEMPLE CHURCH OF CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA, by Joseph Hudnut ..... 11
"I CAN AND I WILL," by Alva J. Brasted ..... 12
THE NEAR EAST—DOWN EAST, by Wayne E. Davis ..... 13
OUR NEW EDUCATIONAL POLICY, by Frank W. Padelford ..... 14
OPEN FORUM ..... 16
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ..... 17
THE CHIMNEY CORNER ..... 18
YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK ..... 20
OUR OWN FOLKS ..... 21
OUR BOOK SHELF ..... 30
OUR MUSIC CORNER ..... 31

Step Lively Please

Ford—not Henry but Herbert—in the issue of Jan. 20, made an appeal for friends to send to a dozen of the native Baptist pastors in Porto Rico THE BAPTIST and Missions—(we added Missions for good measure). These men have small salaries but need to keep in touch with Baptists. This of course is but Jan. 24 and our message has barely reached the two coasts. We are however anxious to send these pastors the two journals—$3.00 will pay the bill. Here is one now. B. A. Knapp, of Morgan Park, writes: "Bill me for THE BAPTIST and Missions for one of those Porto Ricans." Next!

Killam's Kollum

His Last Dollar for "THE BAPTIST"

Here is one of the most pathetic cases we have been called upon to record. A pastor spends his last dollar to secure the weekly visits of his denominational newspaper and then breaks forth in verse. What other investment of one's last dollar could create such a spirit? He says: "I also enclose a 'poem,' with apologies to everybody, that I scribbled off last night. If you have the nerve to use it—an editor did print something that I once wrote. He is not an editor any more. To return to the subject I was about to say if you do use it you need not use my name as my friends will all recognize the authorship by the subject, not the style. Anyhow is it not good enough for the Kollum?"

Broke.
Not a cent.
I turn my pockets out and prove
That which my mind affirms.
I have no money.
Last week I heard the rattle of the change
That sung it's note of courage to my soul.
Last night I touched the silver piece that told
Of one more meager breakfast. Now the whole
Is gone to swell the coffers of the rich:
And I—a pauper. Yet I hear a voice
That tells me of a Father in the skies
Who feeds the ravens: sees a sparrow fall;
And clothes the lily. He will care for me.
I am back on Super-Natural Resources.
Sufficient the supply. In faith I pray
"Give us this day—OUR DAILY BREAD."

Broadcasting the Church

Churches often overlook first-class opportunities to make their denominational principles, aims and accomplishments known to the people outside the membership. Most towns and villages as well as the larger cities have libraries and reading rooms. THE BAPTIST and Missions would be welcomed in these universities of the common people. Again and again librarians write for extra copies of issues because they have been worn out by use. Of course here and there a Baptist will stop his subscription and wend his way to the library to get the news but think of the hundreds who will see the papers, read a bit here and a bit there and thus get a new appreciation of the magnitude of our work and the spirit of our people. And then it is worth more than it costs by way of showing local church enterprise. Are THE BAPTIST and Missions in your public library? We will warrant that the Christian Science publications are. Yes, and the Roman Catholic. Brethren here is an opportunity to broadcast your church work.

579532

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 2)

The members of the Big Darby Church of Plain City, Ohio, sent New Year greetings to their centenarian fellow-member, Rev. John Hunt. Some months ago Brown University, his alma mater, passed resolutions upon his having attained his hundredth birthday anniversary.

The great evangelistic revival at Sona Bata, the Belgian Congo mission of the Foreign Mission Society, still continues. In sixteen months the church membership has grown from 1,500 to over 7,000. There have been forty-four baptismal services and from one to 537 people have been baptized at each service.

In a recent public address, U. Ottama, a Buddhist monk of Burma said, "As a Buddhist monk, I feel most painfully the fact that while out of the total population of Burma only one in fifty is a Christian the Christians have a much larger per cent of children in schools than Buddhists."

Rev. Henry Alford Porter, pastor of the Second Church, Atlanta, Ga., celebrated his seventh anniversary as pastor on Sunday, Jan. 7. On January 14 Dr. Porter began a series of sermons on "Great Questions of the Day."

The First Church, Pitman, N. J., was dedicated Sunday, Dec. 3. At the morning service Milton G. Evans, president of Crozer Theological Seminary preached the sermon, and at the evening service Charles O. Wright, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of the University of Pennsylvania, spoke. The church was remodeled with full equipment at a total cost of $14,000. Rev. Edward O. Clark is pastor, and began his work November, 1919.

Feb. 16, 1923, has been selected as the Interdenominational Day of Prayer for 1923, and it is earnestly urged that all Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention set this day apart for prayer and praise. Printed programs have been prepared by the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America and the Council of Women for Home Missions. These may be secured at any of the Literature Bureaus of the General Board of Promotion at 2 cents each or $1.50 a hundred. The programs consist of songs, Scripture readings and prayers.

Dr. F. W. Patterson, president-elect of Acadia University, has rendered twenty-three years of service in Western Canada. His going will be a distinct loss to the work in that great country. For the past four years he has served as the general secretary of the Baptist Union. In addition to his other labors he has been for seven years editor of the Western Baptist. Rev. M. L. Orchard, of Toronto will succeed him as general secretary.

New Year's Eve in the West Park Church, St. Louis, Mo., the motion picture "Men of Tomorrow," was shown. The next evening two young men came to the pastor, P. G. Van Zandt, asking for a conference on going to college. At the time designated they brought three others who stated they also had decided to prepare for the ministry. All but one were boys who were forced to drop school before completing high school to go to work. Two have to help maintain their homes. Three of them come from homes where there is no active sympathy with their religious activities. Three were baptized within the past year. Although the picture did not originate the idea in their minds, all agreed that the picture crystallized their decision.

Rev. Norman B. Henderson, pastor of the University Church, Minneapolis, exchanged pulpits on Sunday, Jan. 21, with Rev. John H. McLean of the Calvary Church.

(Continued on page 32)

Foreign Society Meets in Chicago

A meeting of unusual interest and of first importance will be held in Chicago February 11-14. This is a meeting of the board of the Foreign Mission Society and a Bible and missionary conference in cooperation with the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Rev. W. S. Abernethy, a product of Chicago, is president of the society. Mr. Fred T. Field, of Massachusetts, is first vice-president and Rev. Joshua Gravett, of Denver, second vice-president. Prof. Frederick L. Anderson of Newton Center is chairman of the board, and Mornay Williams of New York is vice-chairman.

The conference begins Sunday, February 11 at which time there will be addresses by missionaries and members of the board and officers of the society in the churches of Chicago and vicinity. On Monday morning there will be a conference of Baptist ministers of Chicago and, as far as possible, of the state, in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association. There will be short addresses by outstanding representatives from the foreign fields and by members of the board. Luncheon will be served at the Morrison Hotel, where the Bible and missionary conference will be held in the afternoon. There will be meetings of the budget committee and of the board of managers following the conference. Tuesday morning at the same place the finance committee and the home department committee will hold sessions. The annual meeting of the Woman's American Baptist Mission Union of the Chicago Association will be held at the Belden Avenue Church at 10:30. In the afternoon at Belden Avenue the Bible and missionary conference will be continued, and in the evening there will be rallies of the various Baptist young people in the city. Wednesday morning at 10 there will be a public session of the board of managers at the Belden Avenue Church for the consideration of regular business. At this time candidates for appointment as missionaries will be introduced and examined. The Bible and missionary conference will be held at 11 and 2:30 o'clock at the same place.

In the evening there will be meetings in Chicago and various cities. It would be difficult to overstate the importance of this gathering, combining as it does the opportunity to become acquainted with the routine work of the board of managers of the Foreign Society with the Bible and missionary conference. It is expected that a large number of churches will make it possible for the pastor and his wife to be present at these meetings. Any Baptist will find it worth his time and money to be present.

Religious Training Through Home Study

Every person facing the problems of church work today realizes the need of thoughtful preparation for successful work. Not every one who needs training can go to school. Some are facing an immediate and pressing opportunity with inadequate preparation, others are in the midst of important work and must continue.

Opportunity is offered to every such one who has the will to study. We wind our watches while they are running. We must sometimes do that with our workers while they are working.

Courses of Study Now Available

Bible

How Our Bible Came to Be (12 lessons)
Biblical History (A Survey Course) (12 lessons)
The Life of Christ (24 lessons)
The Apostolic Age (24 lessons)

Baptist Church History (12 lessons)

Religious Education

New Testament Interpretation (12 lessons)
How to Study (12 lessons)
The Pupil (12 lessons)
How to Teach Religion (12 lessons)
The School of the Church (12 lessons)

Practical Studies

Evangelism (12 lessons)
Church Efficiency (12 lessons)
Introduction to Social Service (12 lessons)
The Rural Church (12 lessons)

Essential Christian Truths (12 lessons)

These lesson units are organized into a standard course of study leading to a Diploma. A Certificate is issued for the completion of each unit of study. You may either follow the regular course, or select the unit that best meets your present needs.

The Cost

Three dollars for each course of study in addition to a small amount for text-books. This fee is remitted to any one who is engaged in work under the direction of The American Baptist Home Mission Society and The American Baptist Publication Society, provided the course of study is completed within six months.

These courses of study are open to any one who is able to pursue them.

Write for further information or send your enrolment, with fee to East of the Mississippi River

Seldon L. Roberts,
Acting Director,
1701 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

West of the Mississippi River
George L. White, Director,
313 West Third Street,
Los Angeles, Cal.

The Correspondence Study Division

The American Baptist Publication Society
Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society
New York City

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

Shall the Devil Get the City?

IT was a wise-hearted and long-headed Baptist preacher in the South who said, "Of what use is it for us to beat the Methodists, if the devil beat us both and get the city?" That sinister spirit of evil would seem to have made progress in his campaign of late, and back of the question of our title is the question of the city's getting control of the country. What is the probability of it? What would be the consequences of it?

The expected has happened. The balance between urban and rural population, steadily moving for many decades toward a preponderance of city-dwellers, passed the center-point by 1920, when the census reported 51.4 per cent of the nation in the cities and 48.6 per cent in villages and the open country. But this is not the whole story; it is the South which keeps up the rural percentage. Only one southern state (Maryland with 60 per cent urban) has a majority in its cities, whereas the North immensely preponderates in urbanites, Ohio with 63.8 per cent, Pennsylvania with 64.3 per cent, Illinois 67.9 per cent, New Jersey 78.7 per cent, New York 82.7 per cent, Massachusetts 94.8 per cent and Rhode Island with 97.5 per cent of their population urban.

What does this mean for morals, religion, good government and the dominance of American ideals?

In one sense the facts may not seem so startling. The preponderance of urban population in 1920 was so small that a change of 1½ per cent would have put the balance on the rural side. Moreover, the census counts as urban all cities of more than 2,500 population; but many cities of 10,000, 25,000 and larger, have had so normal a growth as to retain their sturdy religious and American ideals. But not present conditions alone count; tendencies must be reckoned. The cityward drift of the century past will continue. At the present rate of urban increase the ratio in 1930 will be 57 to 43, and in 1940 it will be 62.6 to 37.4. That means that whereas in 1920 the urban and rural elements of the population were almost equal in numbers, by 1940—a date only seventeen years ahead—city-dwellers will outnumber the rural population nearly two to one!

Still more startling is the fact that in certain states single cities or metropolitan districts outnumber all of the remaining population of the state. In 1920 the New York City metropolitan district had more than two-thirds (77 per cent) of the vast population of the state; Providence had 73 per cent of Rhode Island's people; Baltimore 54 per cent of Maryland's; while Chicago and Boston had so nearly half of the people of Illinois and Massachusetts that they doubtless have more than half now. For the cities are growing far faster than the country at large. The increase in the whole United States for the latest decade was but 14.9 per cent, while that of Chicago was 23.6 per cent, of Cleveland 42 per cent, of Detroit 113 per cent and in twenty-two other cities the rate was more than 100 per cent—in two cases more than 1000 per cent. The most of us will live to see, and our children's lives will be conditioned by, an America overwhelmingly dominated by its cities. Is this fact a threat or a promise?

It is in cities that we find the greatest coagulations of ignorant, pauperized, alien and criminal humanity. But thither also are borne, by some subtle principle of psychic gravitation, the master minds and wills and workers of the globe. The most astute and conscienceless political boss is here, but so are the greatest preachers, educators and leaders in charity and reform. The corrupt politician finds people in great masses and subservient to his demagoguery and bribes. Foreigners are massed in regions of their own, where they scarcely need learn the language—let alone the ideals—of America. You may pass through regions where the shops greet you with Polish or Greek or Hebrew or Italian signs and advertisements, but rarely with those in English. Assimilation seems difficult if not impossible, though much social and religious work is attempted among them; and the public schools, amid sinister difficulties, battle bravely for the children.

Daring outlawry stalks through the large cities, and it is unsafe to walk save in well-lighted streets after dusk; amusement seems almost synonymous with nastiness, in the vocabulary of many. Too often great newspapers flaunt indecencies and advocate deliberately the breaking of laws which they do not like. But there is promise in the city, as well. Things are done on a big scale and religion too may attempt achievements which vie with the vast undertakings of commerce, education and civic government. The thing which has failed when feebly projected may succeed mightily when a far more daring attempt is made. Religion should catch the inspiration from alert business men; should learn that imperative of promptness, of instant action, which is the watchword of the great merchant, the railway, the newspaper. It should learn, even as dignified banking institutions have done, that one must go after the people and not expect them to come of themselves.

OUR Methodist brethren, as a part of their great centenary campaign, devoted $5,000,000 to special work in Chicago. A large part of this is devoted to the building of the Temple, that imposing structure which is rising in the heart of the loop, with a tower mounting above all other structures in that great city, a perpetual reminder to the passer-by of God and eternity and righteousness. They are doing a work and setting an example for all American Christianity. Chicago Baptists long ago abandoned an even more eligible site in the loop, but are hoping to regain some of their lost ground in that metropolis. And throughout America Baptists have shown their ability to maintain great down-town churches, light-houses on the rocky shores of city life; in Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Rochester, Syracuse, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Denver, Los Angeles and other cities we have conquered the downtown problem.

No, we cannot concede the city to the devil. We must save it, for America's sake, for our children's sake, for the sake of Christ who wept, and still must weep, over the city.

Four Engagements

AT some time during our lives most adult Baptists have held membership in churches using the commonly accepted Baptist covenant. This covenant is an excellently put-together document, simple in language, compressed in style and specific in stating what kind of a Christian a Baptist ought to be. It has a small theological front porch, three well-furnished rooms and a back hallway which sometimes leads to the cellar.

"We engage" is the motto over the entrance of these rooms, number one reading: "We engage, therefore . . . . . to walk together in Christian love, to strive for the advancement of this church. . . . ." the rest of this sentence and paragraph being concerned with our obligations to the church, i. e., the particular local church of which we are members. There are no provisions, exceptions, loopholes or alternatives. We engage to "boost" the church in every possible angle of its work and mission at home and abroad, social, moral and religious, current expense, pastor's salary, poor relief and everything, and to do it gracefully. We entered into a joyful covenant agreement to be 100 per cent for the church, and, theoretically, we tied no strings to these items. Now, actually, how do we "stack up"? Forty per cent of the members of Baptist churches do not strive for the advancement of the church, do not contribute regularly, do not sustain its spirituality, do not give to the spread of the gospel through all nations. We need an inventory of most local churches. After the New World Movement, what? A housecleaning, venture we. Drop this 40 per cent and we shall have stronger churches, because membership in a church will then mean something!

In a small city is a Rotary club of fifty members and a Baptist church of 500. The fifty group has more influence in the community than the larger group. Why? Well, for one thing, in the small group every member has to pay his dues, subscribe to the organization paper and attend the meetings regularly, and the members all stick together. If a member absents himself frequently from the weekly meetings, the other members take him gently, but firmly, by the neck, lead him to the elevator, and some one pushes the button marked "Going down." If we treated our membership in a similar fashion, subject, of course, to the limitations of commonsense, there would be infinitely more respect for church membership.

In other words, there is not only virtue, but necessity in "togetherness." If we all walk together, share the burdens and responsibilities together, suffer together and fellowship together, then there is joy in our hearts, success in the church and rejoicing in heaven, for assuredly the harvest of souls will come when Christians pray, serve and build shoulder to shoulder.

Fellow church-member, if you would walk with God, keep this your first engagement with your church and "Walk together in Christian love."

An Invaluable Asset

IN THE business world "good will" is considered the greatest asset. Good will means good reputation or good name. The value of a transfer is not to be measured by the quantity of goods turned over to the buyer. There is that intangible something which has been built up through the years, which tends to hold the confidence of men.

What is true in the business of selling goods is true in the business of the Christian church. Through its message, its service and its product the local congregation gradually builds a name which makes it either easy or difficult to carry on its work in the community.

The name Baptist has become the trade-mark of millions of church people. Given to them in derision, it has served to identify a peculiar brand of religious life. As a people we have made high claims and advertised them through the proclamation of our message to the ends of the earth.

We have a good name to protect. In business it is generally understood that only by a fulfilment to the letter of the claims made is the good name or the "good will" maintained. In our message we proclaim the right of direct access to God through Christ for every individual. We claim that the New Testament is an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. We claim that the church is properly a regenerated body of baptized believers. We declare that in the great commission we have our marching orders.

Our advertised product is the Christ-like life. "Good will" can be lost only by a living contradiction of the claims set forth in our message to the world. If we partake of His nature, seek to do His will and share in His compassion for the world we protect our greatest human asset.

Board Meeting and Bible Conference

WHAT more happy combination could be imagined! A meeting of the board of the Foreign Society and a Bible conference. A glimpse into the routine work of those entrusted with the policies of our great foreign mission enterprise and a study of the motive born of God which has prompted the work.

The combination is not only happy but it will be fruitful. There is a constant danger that a great gulf shall be fixed between the churches and their agencies —the general societies and boards. The clank of the machinery of these organizations too often comes to the ears of the churches and the faith and prayers of the officers and executives is sometimes forgotten. The plan of the coming meeting will make it possible for any Baptist in Northern Illinois to understand in part at least the problems which the board faces and the spirit in which they are met.

Churches within two hundred miles of Chicago can make no better investment than to present the pastor and his wife with a purse and with orders to go to Chicago to attend the meetings of the Foreign Society board and the other gatherings planned for Feb. 11-14. Such action may spell the difference between success and failure in the work of the local church. The light that shines farthest shines brightest at home.

A Page of Opinion

The Vatican Policy in the Near East

THE Roman Catholic Church is a religious organization. It is a religious organization with more political entanglements than any other similar institution. Day and night some one must be planning its political program and day and night the press of the country is grinding out publicity of one of the best publicity organizations on top the earth—the Knights of Columbus. In view of the very active part being taken in world politics the following statement of the policy of the Vatican will be of interest.

"The main points of Vatican policy in the Near East have been summarized by Signor Giulio Castelli in the Nazione. The first is to prevent the spread of the Orthodox Faith, whether Slav or Greek. In this point, we may observe, the Vatican has already received enormous assistance from the Turk, who has not only prevented the spread of the Orthodox Faith, but has almost blotted it out of existence in Asia Minor. Another point of the Vatican policy is to obtain a formal undertaking from the Turks not to obstruct the work of religious institutions, and to abstain from the persecution of Christian minorities. It does not seem that these two points are logically compatible. The third point is to prevent any action on the part of the western powers favorable to Protestant influence through American and English charitable missions, and at the same time to frustrate the spread of Jewish influence through English schemes of Jewish colonization. Minor points are the strengthening of the position of the orders which have acquired status in the Near East; as the Franciscans, in their capacity of guardians of the holy places, and the Jesuits, who have helped educational work and scientific research through their University at Beyrouth. In pursuance of this policy the Vatican has nominated an envoy to represent it at the coronation of the new sultan, the nominee of the Angora government which has been so busy in exterminating the Orthodox. The policy, as Signor Castelli presents it, will not wholly commend itself to Protestant churchmen.—Church Times.

Liberty and Fidelity

THE prospective trial of Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, a prominent Episcopalian rector of New York, for heresy in repudiating cardinal doctrines of Christianity, calls forth the following editorial expression in the New York Times (Jan. 22) concerning the issues involved in the controversy between the rector and his bishop:

"There is much more in Bishop Manning's letter to Dr. Grant than its immediate bearing on the utterances which caused it to be written. It constitutes, too, a lesson, much needed, these days, on the real nature of free speech and the right of everybody, in such a country as this one, to believe what he chooses and to tell the truth as he sees it.

"At frequently recurring intervals some clergyman, and even oftener some collegiate professor or instructor, says something or teaches something that grieves or offends those upon whom depends the retention of his place in the church or college. Now and then such a person is dismissed, after a controversy more or less bitter and sensational, and all too often he goes away claiming sympathy as a martyr and the victim of oppression. All too often he gets from people who share his beliefs the sympathy he claims—and not infrequently he is able to capitalize his well advertised woes and to become both more famous and more prosperous than he was before.

"In most of these cases, no rights, of free speech or other, have been violated, and there would have been no trouble whatever if the clergyman or professor had done what he should have done and exactly what Bishop Manning tells Dr. Grant he must do—recant or resign. Freedom neither of speech nor of opinion is violated when these alternatives are presented, and he who does not accept and act on one or the other of them has no grievance if effective measures are taken to make him seek other scenes for promulgating doctrines which, with or without reason, are viewed with disfavor by those who have been paying for his services or under whose authority he voluntarily had placed himself.

"As was to be expected—as was indeed inevitable—Bishop Manning made very clear in his letter to Dr. Grant that he did not deny to the latter the privilege of modifying or even of abandoning beliefs once held by him and still held by his church as represented by its authorized representatives. The bishop explicitly repudiates the desire as well as the intention to silence him. He proudly proclaims that in the church to which both have belonged wide liberty in the interpretation of creeds is accorded, but he quotes with approval words of the late Dr. Potter to the effect that interpretation of a creed is one thing and denial of it is quite another.

"He makes plain his earnest hope that if Dr. Grant finds himself in conscience unable to carry out longer the promises made at the time of his ordination he will go where no obligation to fulfill them exists, and so to prevent undergoing a trial for heresy of which there could be but one result."

Race Relations

THE Federal Council of Churches has selected Feb. 11 as the day for the beginning of a great campaign against lynching. Every effort will be made to create goodwill and a better understanding between the white and Negro races in America. Outstanding leaders feel that such a movement is necessary not only in the South where the greater number of Negroes live, but also in the North and West because of the migration which began during the war period. The race problem like most other problems is at the root a religious problem and the service the churches can render is essential to its solution. What is the attitude of the members of your church toward the Negroes of your community? Is it Christian?

Imagination Sees Ideals

By E. H. JOHNSON

THE least sentimental of men are ruled by ideals. These may be ideals of something to be worked out today, or of rest, it may be of amusement, at the day's end. They may be ideals of self-indulgence or of self-denial; of ends no further off than self-indulgence usually is, or as remote as the aims of self-denial must commonly seem. But all rational beings live, if possible, with some object in mind, and imagination holds this object up to view until another ideal object takes its place. Otherwise existence would be made intolerable with ennui. For the most part life is calculated. Utterly unpremeditated action is rare. The premeditation may indeed be brief, but at its briefest is sometimes long enough to commit a man's entire life to virtue, or to get him hanged.

Good or bad, every man is like his ideals. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." People can hardly be better than a good ideal, and are not often worse than a bad one. We live for ideals, and are like what we care enough to live for. It is hardly worth saying, certainly not worth saying here at greater length. What is imagination's part in all this?

1. Christ Offers Ideals to Imagination

Obviously enough it belongs to imagination to picture the ends that shape us. But the real dominance of imagination begins to appear when we note how imagination goes about its practical offices. It is by embodying ideals. A person must stand for our ideals. No abstraction can be master of a man. But imagination enjoys this enormous advantage, that the most persuasive embodiment of ideals is far and away the easiest to form; to wit, one's idealized self. No one who cares to be pure dare imagine himself as indulging in vice; and none can find a more stirring incentive to virtue than to picture himself as great in goodness. Ambition too is kept ablaze by fancying one's own successes, like the Turkish commander in the fiery poem dear to a former generation of schoolboys:

"In dreams through camp and court he bore
The trophies of a conqueror."

Or if inveterate wrong has become intolerable, it would be hard to guess which would stir the more a dynamic spirit, to imagine oneself bringing society into order, or helpless to do any good. Moral ideals above all others require embodiment, and are therefore most in need of aid from imagination. Reason is competent to pronounce between abstract right and wrong, and calmly gives inexorable judgment between these two. But who will execute judgment between actualities? Who has force enough to see it done? Only one who is inspired by the vision of embodied good, or spurred by the sight of personified wrong.

Now the all-important contribution of Christianity to this end is that it furnishes an ideal man, an ideal so perfect as to be universal, and universal that all men may identify themselves with him. Christ is the Christian ideal; and so the initial problem for the best living is, Will I imagine Christ? Success in so doing does not turn on knowing what he said, except as a clue to what he was. His precepts cannot take the place of his person. It is all a matter of intimacy with Christ, of taking the pains to imagine him truly and distinctly. His mere presence was ever a touch-stone. For him to be among men was to pass judgment. It is inevitable always when men find themselves placed beside a perfect and appreciable pattern. To imagine Christ is to read in him the ideals which are characteristic of Christianity. Some notice of two or three among these will be the most convincing exposition of what imagination can do, at its best, for ennobling life. It will be found that, while possibly every precept of Christianity may be duplicated by another religion, Christian ideals are unique. This is certainly because Christ himself is unique.

DURING his professorship in Crozer Theological Seminary, Dr. E. H. Johnson manifested an especial interest in the uses of the imagination, especially the religious use of it. He emphasized this in his class work and shortly before his death, the lectures given before his classes were embodied in book form and published by Silver, Burdett & Company. "Imagination Sees Ideals" is one of these lectures.

In the light of the present wave of "Couéism" that is sweeping over the country, it is interesting to note that a quarter of a century ago, Dr. Johnson was teaching and writing along the lines of the influence of the subconscious mind and was much in advance of Coué in that he linked the highest use of the imagination always with the visualization of Christ.

2. Imagining It Possible To Be Strong

One such unique ideal is that moral energy is possible for the morally weak. In the presence of Christ all his disciples felt strong—so strong that Peter could dispute with Christ and say, "Though all men should deny thee, yet will not I." Likewise said all his disciples. All felt strong because he was near. When Peter presently denied Christ, the Master was no longer at hand to his mind. At that moment the Master seemed mastered; and from him, so misunderstood, no strength was to be drawn. But afterward, when the real Christ was ever before the minds of the disciples, their strength did not fail.

There was a race energetic beyond all ancient races, possibly at its best more vigorous than modern races, the old Roman race. Their force carried everything before it. To them other peoples were weaklings, and it could never seem possible for the weaklings to become strong. How regularly they gave way before the Romans. But it is the practical problem of Christianity to achieve this impracticability. It undertakes to make the weakest the strongest. And it has succeeded so far as to keep alive the ideal of such a possibility. Paul was no weakling. A more forceful man can hardly be named. But he had discovered in Christ an energy so surpassing his own native force that he could state the case only in a paradox: "When I am weak, then am I strong." He meant that he was strengthened against a bodily ailment which made him cower, a buffeting of Satan, and persecutions by evil men. With such odds to face, brave Paul could at first think of nothing but prayer that this thing might pass from him. It was while in this extremity that he was told, "My grace is sufficient for thee." He found it so, and learned to glory in his infirmity, because then the power of Christ rested upon him. This superhuman power has been shared by other Christians since Paul, and has been proclaimed everywhere until the least that can be said of it is that the idea of its possibility is the common possession of Christendom. But for every one of us it is the ideal of a vigor possible only in the companionship of Jesus. One cannot imagine himself as morally impotent while in this daily companionship. It is not that he then lashes himself into abnormal courage, or spurs himself into the passing frenzy of feebleness. It is only that he sees Christ, and in seeing feels the tonic of his presence. Missing the Lord, he must cry as Paul did, "Who is sufficient for these things?" In imagination finding him, not Paul himself is more confident that he "can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth" him. Now, even if one has to believe that you, stout-hearted reader, are mistaken when you say it for yourself, no one can help admitting that you, or he, in a lively and a steady imagining of Christ, will inevitably gain the ideal, or rather, be held by the ideal, that it is possible for any one to be strong.

3. Imagining It Beautiful To Be Good

Another characteristic Christian ideal is that moral excellence has æsthetic value. It is beautiful to be good. An ancient race surpassed all other races in appreciation of beauty. Its taste was infallible, its works were classic. We have gone to school to the Greeks and learned all that our duller sensibility could compass. But Greek refinement never received from temple, statue or poem a distincter impression of beauty than untutored Christians obtain from more or less distinctly imagining the moral character of Christ. None of all who knew him left a credible tradition, certainly none wrote an enduring word, about his stature, form, features, voice or bearing; but they have left the amplest impression concerning his character, and that, too, without describing it. This conviction of a beauty higher than physical has never since been lost. It was peculiarly strong in the centuries when artists thought it irreverent to accord any physical comeliness to Jesus. Bernard sang in the eleventh century:

"Jesus, the very thought of thee
With sweetness fills my breast."

Pious souls have not more loved than they have admired the Son of Man.

Now to find the moral excellence the ideal of beauty is a unique habit of mind among Christians. And it is of priceless moral value. It has been quite common enough to exalt admiration of beauty into a religion. Many an artist would subscribe to Rousseau's confession that he always thought the good was only a form of the beautiful. But to resolve all good into the beautiful is quite another thing from finding beauty in goodness, even an opposite thing. "Art for art's sake" can placidly look on while virtue and vice display each its peculiar charm. Indeed, the Greek art seems essentially pagan. It is too self-contained, physically too perfect to suggest that anything spiritual can be finer than itself. An idolatry which makes its gods ugly makes them hateful;

> MORAL ideas above all others require embodiment and are therefore most in need of aid from the imagination. Reason is competent to pronounce between abstract right and wrong, and calmly gives inexorable judgment between these two. But who will execute judgment between actualities? Who has force enough to see it done? Only one who is inspired by the vision of embodied good, or stirred by the sight of personified wrong.

but an idolatry which apotheosizes beauty fails to remind us that there are gods, even while it leads us through their perfect temples and shows us their incomparable images. Nevertheless loveliness is forever charming. It is its own warrant to be, to be admired, and to be longed for. Christianity therefore has done well to satisfy at once the highest æsthetic and the purest moral taste by establishing the conviction that no other beauty compares with that of goodness. This conviction has been sung into familiarity in the words

Majestic sweetness sits enthroned
Upon the Savior's brow.

It has grown to a commonplace among simple Christians. But such persuasion as they feel that it is beautiful to be good they owe to such picturing of Christ as they practice. The idea may lie on the surface of their minds and find expression in cant phrases; or it may penetrate the depths of their minds and be lodged there as a ruling conviction, if only Christian folk make so to say, a personal acquaintance, and in imagination keep company with their Lord.

4. Imagining What Honor Is

A third ideal is yet more uniquely and exclusively Christian. It is so intimately and delicately Christian as to be hardly appreciable when announced. This is the ideal that honor is in humility. Elusive and all but incredible as this notion of honor is, while Christ is before the mind's eye any different notion is excluded. His precepts set forth this ideal of honor; much more did his person embody and his life glorify it,—that is, for all who imagine him.

The sentiment of honor had its exemplars in the knights of the middle ages. It was fostered, if not begotten, by the institution of chivalry; and chivalry was a Christian institution. According to the most favorable account of it, every youth of gentle or noble blood, if sound in mind and body, was expected to learn the duties of knighthood in the service of some notable model. When at length fitted by age and accomplishments, after a vigil of an entire night in church at prayer, the aspirant for knighthood in its best form took on him the knightly vows of honesty, chastity and, above all, of valor in defense of the wronged. Though noble by birth he was bound to risk his life for a peasant woman whom he might find exposed to outrage, and often wandered far in search of wrongs to right. This obligation kept chivalry respectable long after it had lost every other title to respect; and although Cervantes set out to make us laugh, he has made us love his fantastic Don Quixote, who was always so amiably fierce to redress a wrong. An institution like chivalry could not but give rise to peculiar notions of personal dignity. It was the moral dignity of duty. Its honor, according to its best exemplars, was essentially in humility.

So long as it was associated with rank and titles, humility could not well be void of dignity. Nor does Christian humility ever consist in self-disparagement. True humbleness of mind does not exist apart from self-respect. Indeed, humility is the best safeguard against humiliation. It is the reverse of vanity; is nearer to lofty pride than to meanness of spirit. It does not consist in thinking ill of oneself; it consists in not thinking of oneself at all. Not to think of oneself, not to be self-centered! If this is the essence of Christian humility, it is evident enough how the ideal of it may be due to a strong and perspicacious imagining of Christ. It is plain, too, that only the self-respecting can afford to be self-forgetful. But these can take the chances, and their boldness in putting self out of mind is a mark of confidence in their own character and aims. If we ask who of all Americans stands highest in the reverence of his countrymen and even, as we please ourselves with thinking, in the respect of mankind, who of all our people stands so high as to be held in imagination as an ideal by all good citizens, it is of course the Father of his Country.

Honor in Humility

Surely that austere personage was not wanting in respect for his own character. He compelled deference from all who approached him. Not a few described their sensation while in his presence as one of awe. But if we ask who of all Americans has been most vilified, traduced and denounced, again it is the Father of his Country. And the lies cut him to the quick; the abuse made him rage in secret. But did it make him flinch? Did he ever follow his duty with laggard step? When the issue was between forgetting himself and forgetting his country, he remembered himself only to remember what such a man as he could do and could bear for his country. This made him masterful. It led his countrymen then and since to exalt him almost into a demigod, and even now to resent all attempts in the name of historical truth at their disillusioning. And who has been the most loved of Americans? It was the plain man whose fate looked out of his sad eyes, appealing not in vain for the people's trust and love. But the martyr president was hardly less maligned than Washington. Indeed, if the abuse was less violent, it was more deadly, for it was contemptuous. But for Lincoln also the highest honor was in humility. He did not think ill of himself. We know now how self-controlled and how controlling his spirit was. Yet it became almost an eccentricity with him to put a man who had abused him into office, if the abuser could be made useful there. So far as our copious information goes, he always remembered his country, and if necessary forgot about himself. For this no one else will ever forget him.

In religious history the like characteristic challenges imagination in the case of Paul. His self-assertion at times became almost violent; but it was when to assert himself was to assert his cause. He would make everybody bend to it, as he bent himself to it. If an angel from heaven should preach any other gospel, the angel could not escape Paul's anathema; but the apostle was willing "to spend and be spent" for the childish, contentious Corinthians, and would love them, although the more he loved the less he was loved. It was this lowliness of mind which built the lofty pedestal on which his image stands. He was great because he was willing to be small. Can we then forget Paul's Master and our Master, or that he called himself "meek and lowly in heart"? Did Jesus lack respect for himself? Does he not startle us with claims such as mankind was never willing to listen to from any other human being, but rejoices to hear from him? Yet he "came not to be ministered unto but to minister."

> GOOD or bad, every man is like his ideals. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." People can hardly be better than a good ideal, and are not often worse than a bad one. We live for ideals, and are like what we care enough to live for.

And when he was "found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death. . . . Wherefore also hath God highly exalted him, and given him a name above every other name." There never was such humility, nor ever such honor. And we all understand that his honor was in his humility, not merely earned by humility. His own precept to ambitious disciples was that he who would be greatest among them must be servant of all. It was an astute pope who called himself "the servant of servants." If he could contrive to serve all servants, nothing could prevent his being lord of all lords. To the imagination of the great Gregory the ideal was the real.

As regards this particular ideal the most convincing illustration, as in so many other cases, is to be found in one's own experience. Let the reader ask himself when in all his life he was most respectable in his own eyes. It was surely in the hour when he cared enough for some worthy object to be devoted to it at no small cost to himself. And he now honors what he was in that hour as highly as one can sanely honor himself, providing that his object was worthy that for its sake he should smother all sense of injury and affront, despise even shame, and devote himself absolutely to it. One who never did this or something like it, has not yet found out whether he is thoroughly respectable or not; for to leave it in doubt whether one is capable of devoting himself unselfishly to a good cause, is to keep it doubtful whether he is fit to be trusted by others or by himself. This appeal to the reader's self-judgment has been made without any doubt of its issue. But however wholehearted the reader's recognition of humility's honor, it is quite as certain that such an ideal is unusual. The reason is clear: imagination is more busy with self-aggrandizement than with self-denial.

Absurdity of Self-Importance

Yet it is the fitting and grotesque penalty of abnormal self-recollection that, just when a man's imagination is busy with his own importance, he seems to others most absurd. The more conspicuous his position the more undignified his feeling appears. Our political and military annals furnish enough painful instances of publicly displayed chagrin toward which public opinion has been little better than pitiful, and has often proved pitiless. In the case of Christian ministers nothing short of vice is so unworthy of their high calling as sensitiveness which cannot bear a slight, and will sacrifice everything except itself. The disciple has forgotten to be as his Master, and even to imagine what his Master was. Such absence of humility is a defect in his ideal of honor.

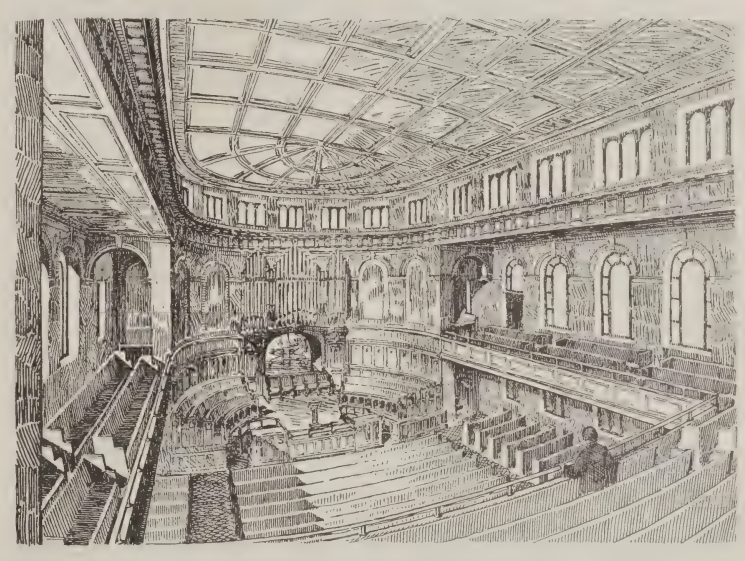
I have dwelt at length upon the peculiarities of the Christian ideal of honor as illustrative of imagination's service to life. Here, I am sure, is a field for imagination indisputably hers, and indisputably neglected. For, see: if humility is honor, who can maintain even the ideal? Only he that diligently imagines Christ. The picture must quite fill imagination, or it is quite futile. Christ's humility was animated by love; but unless love is felt to be more than a sentiment, felt to be a mark of extraordinary elevation and force of character, it is discredited as fantastic and unmanly, a weakness not of mightiness, and is looked down upon as far less sagacious than self-seeking. How unlearn all this? Christly love and Christly humility must be either grandly imagined, or completely falsified. Only the noble understand noblesse oblige. Who then will adequately imagine Christ? Who rise to the pitch of imagining himself to be honorable because humble?

The Temple Church of Charleston, West Virginia

By JOSEPH HUDNUT

THE Temple Baptist Church of Charleston, W. Va., is a fine illustration of the work of the department of architecture of the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

In this church, the drawings for which have recently been completed, there are expressed the basic ideas which led to the formation of the department of architecture. The building is an embodiment of the principles for which the department stands.



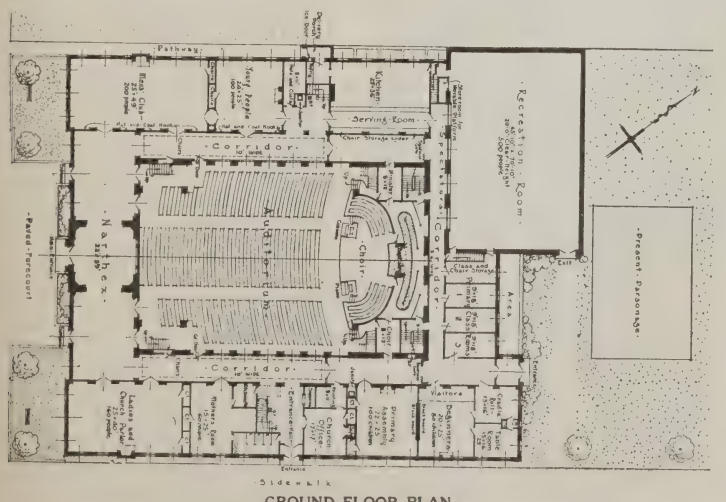
The Temple Church has a membership of 1000, with a Sunday school of about the same size. The congregation, under the leadership of Rev. F. H. Devine, made available the sum of $300,000. The enterprise of building a new building was begun under the leadership of Rev. E. LeRoy Dakin, who carried the drawings to completion. Rev. Clarence W. Kemper, who took up the pastorate on January 1, will carry the building to completion.

The plans committee, before selecting an architect, called in the department of architecture to act as consulting architect and to develop, in active cooperation with the committee, the preliminary plans for the new building.

The church property is located at the intersection of two important streets where property values are high, so that it was not possible to secure an area of more than 37,500 square feet, extending 150 feet along the principal street and 250 along a street of less importance. On this restricted lot a large auditorium, with an adequate up-to-date equipment for social work and school buildings, together with a parsonage, had to be provided, and it was necessary then to develop a plan by which the greatest possible use of the grounds could be made; yet this economy in space must be secured without injury to the free circulation of people among the various rooms and without a sacrifice of light and air in any part of the building. At the same time the amount of space devoted to each of the three activities of the church—worship, religious education and social service—must be so worked out that no one activity should be sacrificed for the sake of the other two.

A large number of preliminary studies, with frequent conferences in Charleston, were necessary before the final scheme was worked out; and long before the plan had reached its final stages of development, the plans committee, acting on the advice of the department, retained Mr. Ernest Flagg, of New York City, as the architect. From this point, the architect, the plans committee and the department of architecture worked together in complete harmony and the plan presented herewith is the result of their joint effort.

The school units are grouped about a central auditorium in such a way that they retain the full benefit of external exposures, while the auditorium, with its superior height, is amply provided with light and air by means of large windows on both sides above the roofs of the school units. The auditorium and the school units are then united into a single centralized organism by the introduction of a large narthex from which the main entrances open. The minor arteries of circulation, such as corridors and stairs, center at this narthex.



INTERIOR VIEW FROM THE GALLERY

This centralized arrangement is made with a view to the coordination of all the church activities. They are blended together to form parts of one cohesive scheme, and are not scattered or separated into independent units. It is felt that this intimate relationship, made possible by this architectural scheme, will greatly enhance the inspirational and practical value of the work to be carried on. The older members of the church and the young people who are to form the church of tomorrow feel themselves to be members of one church body.

Entering the narthex, we pass directly to the church auditorium, seating on the main floor 650, with galleries on three sides seating 400, making a total, with the choir, of 1100. Opposite is the pulpit platform with the choir at either side, and the baptistry directly behind the preacher. The baptistry is so arranged that its floor is on the same level as the preaching platform, and it is set in a recessed arch with a background scene, in illuminated art glass, producing the effect of the River Jordan.

The baptistry is reached by gradually inclined walks, the candidate not being visible from the auditorium until the full depth of the water has been reached. A dry path parallels the wet path.

GROUND FLOOR PLAN

Above the baptistry and the choir, provision is made for a fine organ, producing a complete and harmonious effect.

You will notice the ample stairways to galleries and especially those leading down to the floor on either side of the pulpit platform for use in evangelistic services.

If we turn to the right from the narthex, we first reach the ladies' or church parlor, a large room facing both streets. Adjoining is a mothers' room, a kitchenette and ladies' retiring room. Next are the church and school offices, with a convenient side entrance. Then follow the beginners and primary assembly rooms, class rooms, the cradle roll and an elderly folks' class room, all being on the first floor so that none of these small children and elderly folks will have to go up or down the stairs. Note the separate entrance for the little children at the end of the corridor towards the parsonage. This prevents crowding and keeps these little tots from getting under the feet of their elders.

Turning to the left from the narthex, the men's club is first, facing on the main street; then the room for young men, the men's retiring room, the kitchen with its own entrance and delivery arrangement, the serving room and, occupying the north and inner corner of the property, the recreation hall, which is of ample size for basket ball games and with a gallery for spectators. Here the large church dinners will be served.

The second floor, reached by two flights of stairs in each wing, is devoted to the junior, intermediate and senior assembly and class rooms, the boys' and girls' club rooms, and the young people's classes. At the rear there is a small mezzanine floor for mission study, library and teacher training classes, and other special work. The pastor's study is situated in the tower over the narthex in a location where he will be free from interruptions.

The School and the Church

The form of the plan, with the church in the center, encircled by the main communicating corridors, is very favorable to free circulation, and has the advantage of keeping all parts of the school in close touch with the main body of the church which is the source of all its activities, while sufficiently removed to prevent the sounds of one department from interfering with the others. Assemblies of the whole school, when desired, will be held in the auditorium of the church building, the logical place. Thus the members of the school become consciously a part of the church. It is their church and they are not a thing apart, cast aside as unworthy.

It may be said with some emphasis that, in the Charleston Baptist Temple, we have an instance of a church which, in a large measure, functions on the principle that the church exists for the benefit of the school rather than exclusively upon the reverse principle.

The architectural style adopted is colonial, selected on account of its historic associations with the early development of the Baptist church in America, the atmosphere of the community, and also as the most suitable for treatment in brick, of which material the building is to be constructed. The treatment is simple, inviting and properly dignified, mass grouping producing the artistic effect. The trimming will be of white stone and of wood, according to position.

Heating, ventilating and lighting will be of the most modern type and every care has been taken to insure the comfort and convenience of the occupants.

The church and school have been designed for 1,000 members, each with a moderate provision for future development. Some of the departments of the school have been arranged with certain rooms transferable so that provision can be made as required for unequal or unexpected development in a department. Observe the entire omission of moving partitions, that handicap to proper educational facilities. The only basement provisions, besides that for the heating and other mechanical appliances, are baptismal dressing rooms and the shower and locker rooms for both sexes, reached by separate stairways. A study of the plans will reveal conveniently located kitchenettes for the women and for boys' and girls' club uses, ample toilet facilities, janitor's closets, and other provisions.

In a general way, it may be said that the Temple Church in Charleston represents a step forward in the design of modern church buildings. Here, for almost the first time in a large city church, the architect understood the present day usefulness and significance of a Protestant church and, unhampered by tradition, has tried to fit it perfectly for the work it has to do. The building is an attempt to make a highly useful building beautiful and significant.

"I Can and I Will"

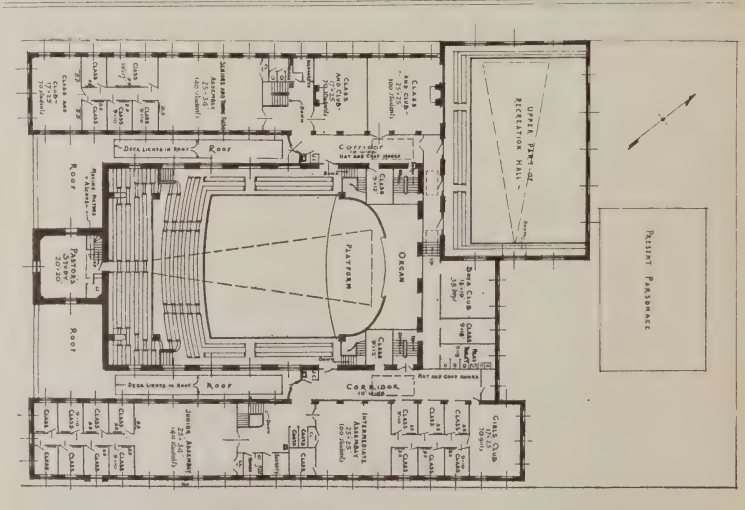
By ALVA J. BRASTED

THERE are those who contend that some laws can't be enforced, that we must yield to the will of those whose pleasure it is to violate the law, that the weakness of human nature must prevail over the higher and nobler. There are those who would drag our country back to the level of the days when the American flag protected those festering sores of moral disease known as the open saloon and they would cast the eighteenth amendment of the federal constitution to the winds as a scrap of paper.

The man who violates the law and encourages lawlessness is far from being 100 per cent American. He is rather a partner and colaborer with anarchy.

We may expect unfaithfulness and un-Americanism in some places where patriotism does not exist, but among the armed defenders of the constitution we have a right to expect that every man shall conform to the requirements of constituted authority. It is not of concern whether the law is to our liking or not. It is our duty and the duty of every citizen living under a law to obey it, and insist that others obey.



I don't believe that any man wearing the uniform of the United States or bearing the distinction of being an American citizen will ever again favor having the stars and stripes lowered to the gutter, there to wave over whiskey barrels and to invite men to the way of disgrace and hell.

It is a weak and spineless generation that will say that a law passed by three-fourths and more of the states of this great Union can not be enforced. So long as there are unscrupulous men all laws will be violated, but to give way to the will of the violators of law and say that we can't is to act the part of a weakling and to surrender to the enemies of government and the enemies of the right.

In these days when a tide of unrest and lawlessness is sweeping the earth, when the serpent of evil is lifting its head, seemingly in a desperate and final struggle against all that is good and true, we need men of conviction and courage, men of invincible spirit, who will pit themselves against the forces of destruction saying, "I can and I will."

I can and I will stand for the things that will make America a cleaner and a better country. In the torrid climates they wage unceasing warfare against rats, because rats carry the germs of cholera and plague. The cess pool and places that

(Continued on page 29)

SECOND FLOOR AND GALLERY PLAN OF TEMPLE CHURCH

The Near East — Down East

By WAYNE E. DAVIS

"THE friendship of these college people, my fellow Greeks, is one of our most rare privileges in America. It brings us into touch with the best element in American life. During the past ten years these good people have been showing toward us the same spirit that was revealed by the Americans in Smyrna when they saved the lives of thousands of our fellow countrymen from the hands of the Turk. We are proud to have our college friends as our guests tonight."

Panayiotus Dukakis was speaking. He stood in the comfortable social room of the Bates College Union. In his audience, what apparently incongruous elements, thought I, viewing the scene for the first time. Seventy-five swarthy Greek citizens, mature men and women and young people in their teens, all of them residents of America less than fifteen years and showing varying degrees of sophistication, yet none over-timid or ill at ease. Half as many college students, members of the Bates Phil-Hellenic Club. A generous representation of the faculty and faculty wives and a few trustees of this Maine college.

The event was the annual reception, the informal get-together of the Greek citizens of Lewiston and Auburn and their college friends. For the citizens it was the crowning event of the season. In this, the even numbered year, the Greeks were hosts and the collegians their guests; but in the college setting, with such an atmosphere of informality and comradeship, it was difficult to distinguish guest from host.

As Dukakis reviewed the relations of the new and older Americans of this community I learned that his own life story, better than anything else, testified to the value of the friendship between the Greek community and the college. He himself a native Greek, inspired by the interest of his American friends, helped through part of a course at Bates, and now a student at Harvard Medical School, seemed to personify the spirit of the occasion that caught my attention.

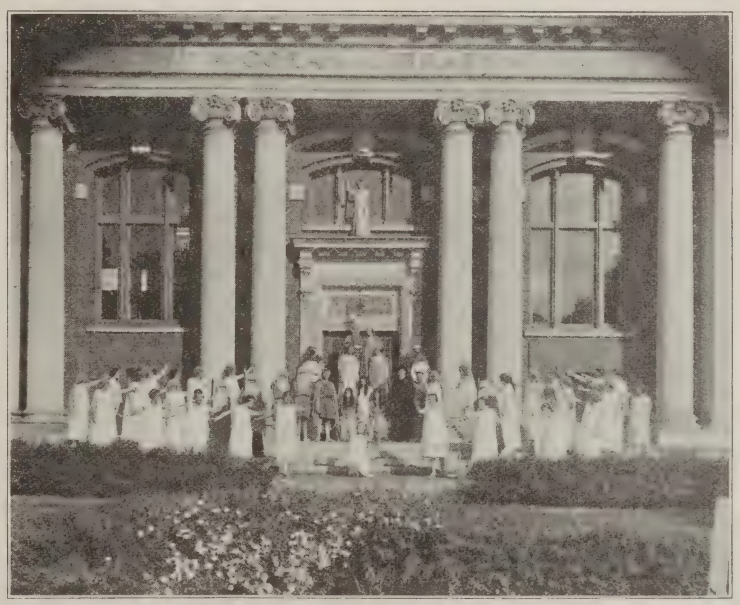
"Americanization," I said. The familiar word slipped easily from my tongue.

"Yes, I suppose so," was the hesitant reply of my informant. "But it began long before that word was coined."

The annual reception that I was witnessing proved to be only a public manifestation of a relationship active three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. In other cities, programs and propaganda, committees and conventions, schools and administrative machinery, have been presented in an attempt to accomplish something that has been in existence here for ten years as a natural outgrowth of a sincere, brotherly interest in the Greek immigrant.

By dint of assiduous inquiry I gleaned a few anecdotes that illustrate this relationship.

Christos Coutsibos moved to a neighboring town and opened a candy shop. He needed credit at the bank. The cashier telephoned Professor R. who gladly vouched for Christos and told the banker that he could be trusted to keep his word. A business relationship was established, and best of all maintained, upon confidence in character, a fundamental of our economic fabric.



Among the Greek operatives of a certain mill, thieving was in progress. The mill owners were helpless. Apostos Petropulos, one of the members of the local police force, led in a movement to clean out the undesirables and to teach his fellow countrymen, by an application of the rigorous hand of the law, the value of the eighth commandment. Petropulos had received his police appointment through the recommendation of his college acquaintances.

Another Greek citizen became the victim of a vendetta. His enemies succeeded in having him arrested on a false but severe charge. None of his Greek clansmen dared to go bail. The police court judge sent for the college professor of Greek who arranged the bail and helped vindicate his friend.

BATES COLLEGE was founded in Lewiston, Maine, less than sixty years ago. Today, with almost 600 students, it ranks second in the state in enrolment. It was one of the first colleges in northern New England to be put on the Carnegie Foundation and is the only college in Maine whose work for women is recognized by the American Association of University Women. Nearly half of its 2500 living alumni are teachers. Its debating record is unique—the first American college to debate at Oxford and the first one to debate with an English University on this side of the Atlantic. Its first two presidents served terms aggregating more than fifty-five years. Dr. Clifton D. Gray, formerly editor and publisher of the "Standard," became the third president in 1920.

And then there are more common and constant services. A group of young Greeks want an English teacher; the college Y. M. C. A. makes the arrangement. Another Greek seeks naturalization and a college professor becomes his mentor. An important ceremonial is about to occur—a wedding, christening, or church festivity—and the collegians are invited, not as curious spectators but as interested friends.

How did all this come about? More than ten years ago certain Greek students at Bates, Andronis, Stephanis and Eliopoulos became interested in the native Greeks in the city. At first, through the city school system, they helped in the night school work for their countrymen. But the best results were not obtained. The intimate touch was lacking. Then through the college Y. M. C. A. and by enlisting the support of representative members of the college faculty a new relationship was established. A reception, similar to the one I was witnessing, gave the first opportunity for friendly contact The professors of Greek, and of public speaking began inviting individual Greeks and small groups to their homes. The Y. M. and Y. W. students arranged classes for the Greeks in their own homes. Professors and students accepted invitations to the Greek homes, places of business and churches.

"HIPPOLYTUS" OF EURIPIDES, PRESENTED ON BATES COLLEGE CAMPUS

When a Phil-Hellenic club was formed by the students in the Greek department, that organization became the clearing house of the interest in the modern Greeks. The Greek professor attained such proficiency in his use of modern Greek language and became so sympathetic with the problems of the Greek in America that he was often called upon to address Greek conclaves in other parts of New England.

(Continued on page 32)

Our New Educational Policy

By FRANK W. PADELFORD

IS Christian education the responsibility of a few or is it a function of the denomination? This is one of the most fundamental questions which Baptists have to face. There are two distinct lines of policy which it is possible to follow and are being followed in this matter. Let us illustrate it by reference to two great denominations.

The Congregationalists were the pioneers in education in America. Most of the early colleges were founded by them; Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Bowdoin, Amherst, Williams, Oberlin. The line reaches clear across the continent. The colleges have followed hard upon the trails of the prairie schooners. It has been the policy of the Congregationalists to establish these schools, put behind them strong boards of trustees and then push them out to swim for themselves. Each institution has been thrown upon its own resources and compelled to build up a loyal constituency which has furnished or found the resources for its development. Practically none of the colleges have been linked organically to the denomination or been made responsible to it.

A Successful Method

That this method has resulted in building up strong institutions, a glance at the list will prove. Thrown upon their own resources they have developed vitality and vigor. So conspicuous has been the success of these institutions founded by them that the Congregationalists would probably not think of pursuing any other policy. It was not until the meeting of the National Council in 1921 that they took the first steps in their history in any effort to secure national denominational support for their colleges and this support is to be given without, in any way, lessening the independence of the schools.

It must be pointed out that this policy has resulted in the development of strong independent institutions, which have been able to fall back for support, not upon organized denominational forces, but upon a determined denominational conviction regarding education. This conviction has been cultivated assiduously from the beginning.

On the other hand, while these schools have grown strong they are entirely independent of the denomination and as they have grown more vigorous and have been better endowed, the relation between them and the denomination has become less and less close until many of them sustain no relation at all except a historical one.

In sharp contrast with this policy, is that of the Methodists. They were comparatively late in entering the field of education. In the early days they were engaged almost exclusively in the missionary enterprise. But when they finally entered the field, they did it in a way characteristic of their energy and their farseeing plans. Today they have a system of schools and colleges covering the entire country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Outside of New England there is scarcely a state that does not have at least one Methodist college and in some states there are several. The names of Boston, Syracuse, Northwestern, indicate how strong some of these institutions have become.

It has been the policy of the Methodists to tie their institutions close to the church and then as a denomination to assume responsibility for them. No college has had to sink or swim for itself. It has had at least a conference, if not the whole fellowship behind it. In the last ten to fifteen years the denomination has taken a most vigorous interest in its schools. It has as a denomination, raised large sums of money, running into many millions for the endowment and equipment of these schools. Those who are acquainted with the present situation in our country know that the Methodists are far outstripping all the denominations in the upbuilding of their educational sytem.

This policy has not resulted in building up so many strong, outstanding, independent institutions as has the policy of the Congregationalists, but the Methodist denomination has a large group of schools, many of them of very high grade and all of them related closely to the denomination. No one ever heard of a Methodist college going off on an independent career. It is an integral part of the denominational life.

Which of these two policies should the Baptists pursue? What our historical policy has been there is no question. We followed the lead of the Congregationalists. Brown University, our oldest college was founded by the vote of the Philadelphia Association but as soon as the site was selected and the board of trustees constituted, it was pushed out of the nest to fly for itself. Our second college was established by a little group of brave and adventurous souls who believed there should be a Baptist college in the Province of Maine and established the Maine Literary and Theological Institute (now Colby College), on the banks of the Kennebec. The first Baptist college west of the Appalachians was founded by the famous home missionary Johnathan Peck. Colgate was established by a little group of farseeing devoted Baptists at Hamilton who laid thirteen dollars down on the dining-room table in the deacon's home. And so we might go through the list. While there are a few exceptions, nearly all our schools have been founded by small groups of devoted men and women who have seen the essential relation of education and religion. In recent years a few of the newer institutions have been taken under the protecting wing of the state conventions in the states in which they are located. But with these few exceptions, it has been our policy to let our schools and colleges "paddle their own canoe," finding friends and helpers as they could. Some have gathered about themselves strong groups of supporters. Others have had a hard struggle from the beginning.

In the light of this review, the action of the Northern Baptist Convention in Denver, 1919, in placing the schools and colleges in the budget of the New World Movement, was most significant—much more significant than there appeared to any one. For the time being at least it was a reversal of our policy, for by putting the colleges in the budget and attempting to raise a large sum of money for their endowment and equipment, the denomination virtually decided to assume a new relation to its schools and to accept a responsibility for them. Whether this policy is to be permanent or not, it is significant that for the present period at least, we have changed our entire attitude. We have abandoned the policy followed by the Congregationalists, and have adopted some phases at least of the policy of the Methodists.

Present Obligations

What is to be our policy in the future? That is one of our most important and vital denominational problems at the present hour. Into an argument as to what we should do after the New World Movement ends, I do not, at this time, wish to enter. It is sufficient at this time to point out the obligations which the denomination, through its convention at Denver, assumed—and the significance thereof.

In the educational program adopted at Denver the denomination declared its intention to do three distinct things: (1) to induce an adequate number of Baptist boys and girls to secure an education; (2) to furnish watchcare and guidance to these young people in the great universities; (3) to equip our Baptist schools so that they may be able to give a thoroughly worthy education to our children. What progress are we making in the attainment of that program?

First: there is a very perceptible increase of interest in the education of our Baptist boys and girls—interest on their part and interest on the part of the parents. This has not been due so much to any decision of the convention, as to the wave of interest in this matter which has been sweeping the country. Our Baptist people have been borne on by the tide. It has resulted in a marked increase of attendance of our young people. The figures today are out of date tomorrow, but a recent survey shows a most gratifying increase in all parts of our territory. A hearty support of our educational program in the homes, the Sunday schools and the churches, will result in a constantly developing interest among our young people, and we shall be furnishing our full quota of the trained, educated leaders of the nation.

(Continued on page 32)

The Torch Bearer

AN OLD man, going a lone highway,
Came at the evening, cold and gray,
To a chasm vast and deep and wide.
The old man crossed in the twilight dim,
The sullen stream had no fear for him;
But he turned when safe on the other side
And built a bridge to span the tide.

"Old man," said a fellow-pilgrim near,
"You are wasting your strength with building here;
You never again will pass this way;
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide,
Why build you this bridge at evening-tide?"

The builder lifted his old gray head.
"Good friend, in the path I have come," he said,
"There followeth after me today
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm has been as naught to me,
To that fair-haired youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim;
Good friend, I am building this bridge for him."

Baptist Work in Northern France

By FRANK C. EWART

IT WAS my privilege recently to take a brief trip to some of the Baptist centers in the former war zone of northern France and observe the work of reconstruction and relief that Northern Baptists have been doing for three years under the direction of Rev. Oliva Brouillette of Salem, Mass.

We left Paris late in August for Arras. As the train crossed the Somme and passed along the Ancre, we saw ever-increasing signs of the devastation of war, trees killed by gas, remnants of trenches, masses of barbed wire, hills and valleys pitted with shell holes, numerous temporary shacks serving as homes for thousands of people, and villages partially reconstructed. At Arras, an automobile awaited us, which was furnished through the kindness of Monsieur Recher, an official of the railway. We drove about the city to observe the terrible destruction of war, which seemed even worse here than in the city of Verdun which I had seen a few weeks before. After viewing the ruins of the once handsome Hotel de Ville, we drove over the Hindenburg Line, saw the monument to the Canadians on Vimy Ridge and made our next stop at Avion.

Here we found in progress our daily vacation school of over 300 members with an average attendance of 230. Avion is a socialist center where the mayor and town council are thoroughly opposed to religion in any form but are favorable to our vacation school which seeks the moral and intellectual improvement of the children. Almost one half of the entire number of children of school age in Avion are members of our school. Mr. Brouillette has built here a permanent and attractive social center which contains also the home of Rev. Robert Farelly and his family. This social center is used also as a preaching station and the children from the vacation school attend also the Sunday school. The methods of the vacation school are similar in all respects to those in America except that religious instruction is omitted: else the parents would not be inclined to allow their children to come. When, however, these children become so delighted with the school that they also come to our Sunday school, the leaders tell the parents frankly that the instruction there is religious in character. As catholicism has no hold whatever upon the mass of these people, they are very liberal in permitting their children to attend the Sunday school.

The Fundamental Thing

This is the first year of our vacation school at Avion, and the success is surprising, thoroughly justifying Mr. Brouillette in his excellent idea of applying these new methods to the spread of evangelical work in France. That work has suffered for many years for lack of effective methods of reaching the masses. He has hit upon the fundamental thing: for the hope of our work here is among the young who have not yet become steeped in Romanism and infidelity. A better day is dawning for our work in France.

From Avion we went to Lens. This city was occupied by the Germans throughout the war. It suffered severely from bombardment and more from the systematic destruction on the part of the retreating Germans, who blew up every building so that in this city of 40,000 inhabitants there was not left a single wall that could be used in its reconstruction. A year ago scarcely a new house had been built but today there are thousands of them constructed by the mining companies for the miners' homes. The French have loaned their own government ninety billion francs to carry on this work of reconstruction with the hope that they will receive from Germany the just reparations. To travel in Germany and see the apparent prosperity everywhere; the abundant harvests, the tremendous activities of factories, the congestion of traffic, the lavish expenditure on luxuries and costly liquors by the average wage earner and then to witness the wholesale destruction of square miles of territory, of factories and machinery in northern France, makes one feel that the allies ought to be able to devise some scheme to prevent the anomaly of a bankrupt German government with a constituency that has all the elements of wealth but is spending as fast as it receives. One can easily understand the point of view of the individual German who has no incentive to save, since the income today may not be worth much in money tomorrow and so spends it on things that he can enjoy. Meanwhile the individual Frenchman is adjusting himself uncomplainingly to a reconstructed life, thousands and thousands of them living in rude shacks that are hot in the summer and cold in the winter. This number includes some of our own Baptist pastors who have lost all in the war.

Of the four foyers built by Mr. Brouillette, the one at Lens is temporary and is upon public ground. We have been ordered to remove it but there is not yet money available for the rebuilding of our church there, and the social work which we are doing in this foyer is appreciated so much that pressure has not yet been brought to bear upon us. We are still holding on with the hope that friends in America may help in building a suitable church in this strategic place. A lot has been purchased on the main thoroughfare from Lens to Lievin, a suburb where we have also some Baptist families.

Children in the Mines

After visiting Loos where there is an enormous crater formed by the explosions of a mine placed under the English camp by the Germans, we returned to Lens and early the next morning left for Anchel. Here we have another vacation school. Mr. Brouillette began the work last summer and its worth was demonstrated by the fact that sixty-eight of these boys and girls, not one of whom was a Protestant, were regular attendants upon our Sunday school during the winter. The enrolment in the vacation school this year exceeds 150. One naturally wonders at the fact that there are no children in these vacation schools over thirteen or fourteen years of age, until told that a boy or girl at that age begins working in the coal mines and this is preeminently a mining district. Some of our most progressive pastors were taken from the mines. One of these, Monsieur Evrard, who is pastor at Anchel and is conducting this vacation school, was wounded three times in the war and is still suffering from the effects of a wound made by a cartridge which passed through his body. He is full of enthusiasm and has wisely planned the work so as to prepare the way for the gospel message.

As it had rained hard the night before, our walk of five miles across the country to Bruay showed us what the mud of Flanders must be like. Here we have a small chapel that was only partially damaged by the war. Monsieur Trefier, the present pastor, lost all he had as a result of the war and is now living in an uncomfortable temporary structure, not knowing when any reparations will be received for his losses. He, too, was wounded during the war so seriously in fact that preparations were actually made

(Continued on page 29)

A Quaker Sermon

IT was the first-day meeting
And the group of gathered folk
Sat touched by the hush of a noiseless spell;
No sound the silence broke.

Until, in her place on the women's side
With a sweet and tender face
That bore the pure and peaceful sign
Of the inward spirit's grace,

A white-haired woman rose with the word
That was laid on her heart to say—
The word that the gathered people
Were waiting that sunny day.

"Sister Tabitha all to pieces
My best china tea-pot broke;
But I kept my soul in patience,
Nor a word of anger spoke."

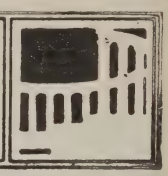
That was all; and down with the sunshine
The silence again fell sweet,
Till the elder people gave the sign
That the service was complete.

Do you say that the hour was wasted?
That the sermon was trivial, vain,
Textless, devoid of logic,
Unthrilled by one eloquent strain?

Not so; for that gospel is sweetest
That is won through life's fret and its pain,
That softens the jar of its friction,
And lightens the stress of its strain.

And the love that is over the erring,
The peace untouched by surprise,
The quiet that keeps its sweet patience,
Are dear in the Master's eyes.

While many a rhetorician
Might learn from this homily brief
A truth that the wearied people
Would hail as a glad relief—



That the lesson is most enduring,
Close to life's practical lines,
And not the length but the fitness
The heart of the hearer inclines.

And we all in our plain home duties
Find the thought in this first-day word,
That the least of our trials and triumphs
Has a worth in the sight of our Lord.

From Christian at Work.

The Open Forum

PROMOTION BY CONDEMNATION

Please find enclosed check to pay the renewal of subscription due for 1923 to our excellent paper THE BAPTIST.

I was not a stranger to your predecessors Dr. Smith, Mr. Goodman, Mr. Dickerson, et cetera, but have never met you. My life is in the "sere and yellow leaf" and my place now is among the left-overs, though I have given forty-four years to public service; four years under Grand Sherman et alii, sixteen to South India mission work, three to home missions as president of Bishop College, Texas, and twenty-one years teaching in schools and colleges. The broken health of my wife, due to Indian service, compelled our return from that work and still keeps us from it.

But the studies and experiences of the passing years have been valuable, and one may hope useful, and the recent and present doctrinal disputations in our churches do not edify us. To know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent, is eternal life, and that is the sum and substance of all our preaching in heathen lands. "Higher" and "lower," "pre" and "post," "conservative" and the rest! When I read of these things I recall a little incident of my last student week in Iowa University, 1871.

A young lawyer gave the annual alumni address and careful hearers easily noted a vein of skepticism running through his utterances. There was a newly appointed regent of the university present who was attending his first official meeting of the board. A professor asked him what he thought of the address to which he replied: "What that young man needs is some old lady with spectacles on her nose to teach him the New Testament." The pith of the answer is not less when one knows that the man who made it, later in life served through the cabinets of McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft as secretary of agriculture. I once related this incident to Dean Eri Hurlburt of Morgan Park when he quickly answered: "That is the hope of the Christian church. All the theological teachers in the land cannot get the plain people away from the New Testament." And there we may safely rest the matter. Give the Bible its proper place in the home, church, Sunday schools, colleges and in the private readings of plain people, and the gates of Hades cannot prevail against its messages to men. But constant agitation and criticism of schools, papers, books and certain men who after all number a very small percentage of recognized teachers of religion, have their chief effect in making young people in the schools and colleges hesitate to declare publicly their purpose to lead Christian lives and inclines them to defer decision till they can more clearly understand such questions. In this way much of the discussion seeking to save the church but tends to divide and distract; and numberless people are getting their first information about erroneous teachings by the public denunciations of them. What we all need is the plain gospel in season and out of season.

ALBERT LOUGHRIDGE.

Salem, Ore.

THE CORN FED MAJORITY—NOT THE PROPHETS

One wishes to protest against the estimate of our religious leadership made in one phrase on the front page of THE BAPTIST of January 13. Has America a famine in prophets? One who is not a pastor wishes to challenge the estimate.

The writer has heard too many sermons preached since the Armistice, dealing courageously with things as they are, to think that the spirit of prophecy runs slack. Last Sunday the minister in one of our strong pulpits said, "American steam boats, American cables, American enterprise have made the world a neighborhood. We are responsible to the world to take our place in it with all we have that has made us great."

Dr. White's fine insight into our dependence on the spiritual leadership of Jesus leaves nothing to say. But that leadership is being mediated to us by as fearless and assertive a ministry as America ever had. There is a clearer sense of the constructive Christian responsibility of America at this hour than we have had for a long time, if sermons and articles which appear are a fair cross section of current thought.

On the first inside page of THE BAPTIST of January 13 appeared the statement that a myriad, ten thousand, an actual myriad of pastors, recently preached upon international cooperation. On the front page it was stated that our social service committee would have taken "positive action in the interest of a definite participation of the United States in international affairs" had it not been found that the government already alive to the demands of the best conscience of the country is taking steps in that direction.

Over and again we hear the unequivocal admission that if we had done our part in the Near East we might have prevented the woe that has come and guaranteed the dawn of better things. Conscience is working. The spirit of Christ is abroad in pulpit and editor's chair and home. It is to our shame if we keep silence when the hour comes to accept the responsibilities which wealth and world power have given us. But those who speak must not be judged by the selfish refusal of a "corn-fed" majority to answer until the condition of the markets compels us.

R. L. VAN DEMAN.

SHE KNOWS HUMAN NATURE

In one of your recent issues you asked for statements of opinion from your readers on the decision of the California Supreme Court in which they take exception to the use of the Bible in the public schoolroom on the ground that it is a sectarian book.

I have taught in the public schools in all grades for ten years and know something of the opportunity of the teacher to instil propaganda of every sort in the minds of the pupils. The opportunities are varied and constant, and teachers are but human. The remarkable thing is that they are as fair-minded and open in their dealings with such matters as they are. Of course, the great incentive to be such, is the fact that they usually have all sorts of opinions among their patrons. But religious teaching is so easily coated over or camouflaged that it is often not recognized for its true influence.

The Bible is not a sectarian book but we all know that all sects go to it for the establishment of their particular and peculiar beliefs. Any teacher who was shrewd enough could very easily use it to sectarian ends. I am convinced that the recognizing of it as part of the school work in any way would only lead to confusion and strife.

EDITH M. FRAKER.

Pendleton, Ore.

The Nation's Soul

None needs more to learn than we of the West, we of the eager, restless, wealth-seeking nation, the lesson that after a certain not very high level of material well-being has been reached, then the things that really count in life are the things of the spirit. Factories and railroads are good up to a certain point; but courage and endurance, love of wife and child, love of home and country, love of lover for sweetheart, love of beauty in man's work and in nature, love and emulation of daring and of lofty endeavor, the homely work-day virtues and the heroic virtues—these are better still; and if they are lacking, no piled-up riches, no roaring, clanging industrialism, no feverish and many-sided activity shall avail either the individual or the nation. I do not undervalue these things of the nation's body; I only desire that they shall not make us forget that, besides the nation's body, there is also the nation's soul.

—Theodore Roosevelt.

Religious Education

A Lack Supplied

By James E. Clarke

Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of the Ohio State University, said in 1913: "The atmosphere in which a boy is educated counts for much. I am in no way untrue to state institutions when I say that in our day a boy might become a bachelor or a master in almost any one of the best of them and be as ignorant of the Bible, the moral and spiritual truth which it represents and the fundamental principles of religion, their nature and value to society, as if he had been educated in a non-Christian country." And he added the pertinent question, "Who is to supply this lack if not the Christian college?" The Christian college not only undertakes to supply the lack referred to, but its very existence bears testimony to the deep conviction of multitudes of the best citizens of our country that it is absolutely essential that the education of our children shall include what Mr. Huxley named "the fashioning of the affections and will into a loving and earnest desire" to move in harmony with the will of God.

A Distinction

It is not merely for instruction in things religious that these institutions are maintained, but for religious education. This is not a distinction without a difference. The difference is fundamental. Recently a lament was heard concerning the lack of knowledge of "the historic facts of Christianity" on the part of students in college. We may well share the lament and wish that all students knew much more about the historic facts of Christianity; but mere knowledge of historic facts of any kind is not religious education. We may join, also, in the oft expressed desire that students in our schools knew more about the Bible, and it is gratifying to realize that in most Christian colleges the Bible is taught as a part of the regular curriculum required of every student. Yet mere knowledge of the Bible, especially if it be merely knowledge of the Bible as history or as literature, while it may be incidentally is not essentially religious education. The function of the Christian college involves far more than to impart a knowledge of sacred things. Its task is to lay hold upon the spirit at the same time that it lays hold upon the body and the mind of the growing person and develop the whole personality so that he shall not only be instructed concerning things and their forces and men and their ways but that he shall also come into harmonious adjustment to his spiritual environment and be prepared to devote his life to the establishment of the kingdom of truth and righteousness.

Religion is an attitude of life. The inherent function of education is to change, direct or modify life. Therefore religion —or irreligion—is vitally interwoven with educational processes and religion is essential in an education that is complete. It is objected sometimes that "religion cannot be taught for religion is a life." Granted that religion is a life. Yet two things are true. First, if a particular student lacks that life, it is the province of education to seek to lead him into its possession. This is one of the aims of such educational agencies as the Sunday school, and many other Christian educational institutions count such results as among their most praiseworthy achievements. Secondly, that life when it is possessed is at first little more than an impulse. In the language of Scripture and of the church, its possessor is but a babe. Turn such a child out among savages and see what will happen. Has education nothing to do here? Just as a part of the business of education is to develop the mind, so another part of its business is to develop the spiritual life until the man as a whole moves in harmony with the laws of God.

The great lack in the life of today is not intellectual, not professional, but moral, and the greatest possible force to remedy this defect is a true and vital religious education. "Knowledge is power," we say. Yes; so is electricity power; but the use of the power depends upon the will of him who uses it. Given the will and the touch of a button may dispel pestilential darkness with a flood of light. But given another kind of will and by the turning of a switch warm hearts cease to beat, bright eyes grow glassy and the horrors of miserable death succeed in a flash the beauty of life. It's not in the power; it's in the will. It is not knowledge of things and their forces, of men and their ways, that constitutes an education. Knowledge is but a tool. A man is a spirit, developed into harmony with God and his laws. Leave the spirit undeveloped and we have a child still, unable to use the tool that we seek to place in his hand. Develop that spirit so that God is not all his thoughts and we have an enemy of society who will use the tool against us. But develop that spirit in such a manner that the controlling motive of his life is an earnest and loving desire to move in harmony with the laws of God and we have a Man who will use the tool that is placed in his hands for the blessing of society and the promotion of the kingdom of God. To produce men of this type is the mission of the Christian church, and to fulfil its mission it must maintain and enlarge and perfect the Christian college.—From "The Place and Function of the Christian College," published by Council of Church Boards of Education.

International Sunday School Lesson for February 18

JESUS AND ZACCHEUS

Lesson: Luke 19:1-10. Golden Text: Luke 19:10.

Introductory

Following the parables of last week's lesson, Luke tells of Jesus and the little children, the rich young ruler, the announcement of the coming crucifixion and resurrection and the restoring of sight to Bartimeus. Today's lesson is another occurrence on Jesus' last journey to Jerusalem, in the city of Jericho. The time is March, 30 A. D.

The Lesson

Zaccheus was rich and a chief publican. He was so short of stature that he had little chance of seeing anything in a crowd. When Jesus came to Jericho he "sought to see him, who he was," and to this end he climbed up into a sycamore tree that stood beside the road Jesus would take. It was probably chiefly curiosity that made Zaccheus do this. Not only did Zaccheus see Jesus, but Jesus looked up and saw Zaccheus. And he spoke to him, calling him by name (What sweetness and surprise there must have been in this for the man who merely "sought to see him, who he was"!), saying, "Zaccheus, make haste and come down; for today I must abide at thy house." With joy Zaccheus descended and conducted Jesus to his house amid murmurs of disapproval from the ever-watchful and critical crowd, which said: "He is gone to lodge with a man that is a sinner." There is no record of Jesus making mention of the past life of Zaccheus, but Zaccheus was a keen and a practical man. He admits the faults of his past in his resolution: "Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have wrongfully exacted aught of any man, I restore fourfold," which was much more than the fulfilment of the law required. Jesus accepts the decision of Zaccheus as he meant it to be accepted: "Today is salvation come to this house . . . . for the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."

Leading Thoughts

1. Does Jesus ever fail to see and call by name those who actively seek him? 2. When the pocketbook of such a man as Zaccheus is touched there is no doubt but that his conversion is genuine. 3. Today the chief fault of Zaccheus would have been named grafting. 4. There is nothing to repentance that does not seek to remedy past wrong doing.

The Chimney Corner

The Sahib With the Paper Voice

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

HIS name was William. And he was a most uncomfortable lad to have for a son or brother, since he was forever scouring the countryside for plants and bugs. Was there a crawling thing with curious legs and shiny wings? That evening it would be in William's room, and tomorrow he would know how it was put together—and all the rest of his life he and that bug were friends—which shows how retentive a mind he had. Moreover, the bugs of yesterday and today were assembled in neat ranks around the wall of William's room to keep him company. His sister thought it most unpleasant, although in after years she bragged of this, as any sister would, as if she had foreseen his coming greatness. Yet all she really could recall was walking mile on mile with William for some silly flower—indeed, how could she ever forget, since all his life, wherever William went, he made a garden and would write home for seeds and other things?

And in those early days if William's mother wanted him for chores he was forever to be found in a dwarf elm tree. But not alone! There would be other boys with gaping mouths and popping eyes, for all the world like hungry birds starving to be fed with William's specialty—tales of adventure. You would never have guessed the shivers that rippled down respectable spines or the gooseflesh that prickled sensitive skins when William was nicely under way. It was up in that tree that he earned his nickname, "Columbus," for you may know that this was the eighteenth century, when Captain Cook had just come back to England after famous journeys round the world, and William knew each stirring anecdote of cannibals and tropical barbarities and all the rest of it. Terrible tales, enough to last a lifetime; nobody knows how they acted on his audience, but like many other orators "Columbus" made a lasting mark upon himself.

As witness him years later, grown into a cobbler of uncertain means, making shoes and snatching moments off to do some curious pasting of brown bits of paper. These, as you may guess, evolved into a map which he hung upon the wall above his bench. And he would snatch more moments off to write things on that map—facts about every custom in each country. Things known years before up in the dwarf elm tree, and new things. And all the time there was a wife in the other room who never cared at all for William's hobby. What? Is he to be forever hanging things on walls with no one to approve?

It would seem so, for when he dragged his precious dreams before the world you shall hear with what taunts he met. William was obsessed—that is the long and the short of it. Each Christless country on his map waved beckoning fingers to him; which is the direct result of reading the Bible daily and believing it verbatim. For there it was in black and white: "Go ye! Go ye into all the world . . . to every creature." How could he get away from anything as plain as that? So every day of his life William prayed for the spread of the gospel, which no one in all England was doing anything whatever to help.

Meanwhile he cobbled shoes, which was not altogether profitable, as he had to keep a school for boys, besides. Also on Sundays he preached; at first, just as he had a chance, then as a regular minister. But he earned so little that he was forever piecing out his salary—cobbling shoes and teaching school and such!

Of course it was astounding that a country parson who must cobble shoes on weekdays should be burning with a message for remaking Christendom. But there were association gatherings in those days, and William went, just as Baptist pastors do today; although he was from the country, one who cobbled shoes and didn't know enough to leave his cobbler's shop at home, but must needs have his wall-map so deeply engraved on his soul that it suddenly began forming sentences on his lips. Right before them all, young William Carey asked whether the command given to the apostles to teach all nations was not obligatory on all succeeding ministers to the end of the world?

Well, William, it's out! You've said it; but don't glow with delight too soon, for your own old-time pastor, good old Dr. Ryland, is shouting at you in high disgust: "Sit down, young man, you are a miserable enthusiast for asking such a question. Certainly nothing can be done before another Pentecost, when an effusion of miraculous gifts, including the gift of tongues, will give effect to the command of Christ as at first.' And another minister grows almost apoplectic: "If God wants to convert the heathen he will do it without your help or mine, young man!"

This ought to have made a humble preacher-cobbler "stay put." But he knew that men could learn strange languages if they tried. How about himself, for instance? For he had not only been snatching moments off to make his map, but there was the little matter of mastering five languages. Ah, a college career, you ask?

No, just the same little English cottage with a thatched roof and roses tumbling over the doorway, where the shoe-cobbler's sign creaks on its hinges. Why choose the stately corridors of musty universities when there is a cobbler's bench at your disposal, a shoe between your knees to hammer on and a book open beside you. Latin? Greek? Hebrew? Dutch? French?

Well, it was not easy. Greek, for instance. Those were curious hooks and curves to see for the first time, and William traced them off on paper, and walked miles away to ask a college man about them. He traveled that road many times until he knew as much of Greek as ever his teacher knew. You can learn any language you choose with a book open on the bench beside you and a map on the wall as a guardian angel!

So William knew that many could follow Christ's command to go into the world and teach the nations; and because he cared so deeply he wrote articles which, when printed, stirred the people. In this modern day of surveys it is pleasant to recall that his came first. Country by country, race by race, island by island, he seemed to cover every inch of all the globe; he proved the needs, he named the means, and pleaded for a prompt response.

Then came another association gathering of Baptist clergymen in which he developed a convincing argument:

"Attempt great things for God, Expect great things from God."

Men wept openly, and at the next ministers' meeting twelve poor Baptist ministers gathered in the back parlor of a certain Widow Wallis, and chose a long name for the very first missionary society ever started in all England: "The Particular Baptist Society for Propagating the Gospel Among the Heathen." And all the money they started with in their treasury was thirteen pounds, two shillings, sixpence—about $65! Which hardly sounded reassuring enough for a missionary to volunteer his services, yet it was sufficient for William Carey, who was chosen in this fashion. Some one said: "There seems to be a gold-mine in India, but it seems almost as deep as the center of the earth. Who will venture to explore it?"

"I will venture to go down," said the cobbler quietly, "but you must hold the ropes."

So William Carey sailed to India, still poor—he needs must be the overseer of an indigo factory in order to gain a living for his family. But, after all, a factory means a horde of workmen, babbling curious words he wants to learn. Day in, day out he was to be found setting those words on paper, getting their slightest shades of meaning, until the cobbler, who in England had five languages at his command, is now master of a sixth—Bengali.

Then quietly and carefully he started to phrase his Bible in Bengali so that the sons of India could read for themselves what the Lord had planned for men. The Hindus watched his printing-press in terror. "It is the idol of these English sahibs," they exclaimed.

Then when the book was done he sent it broadcast. Could he have ever hoped to speak in all the countless villages that dot the sun-baked plains of India, or sit upon ten thousand earthen floors to tell of the Lord Jesus? But the "Sahib with a Paper Voice"—ah, now you see the meaning of our story's title! A paper voice to speak in good Bengali the life and death and clear commands of Jesus Christ. What William Carey's lips could never say to countless hosts of Hindus, his paper voice said silently each night, each day. And no one knows but God himself the magic influence of the paper voice on those who never saw a missionary or heard a spoken plea to give up idols and serve God alone. But this is true, there was a British governor who wrote home to England that whole villages within his province had actually burned their wooden gods and were living as nearly as they could according to the Bible pattern.

But 165 languages are spoken throughout India; and William Carey who in boyhood was not content to know one flower only, or to dissect one insect specimen, was not content to learn Bengali only. With restless zeal he applied himself to speak another language, and translated the Bible into it. Then learned another language, translating the Bible yet once more. Then one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen—what, you are tired of counting? Then consider, oh, do consider, what exceeding and extraordinary patience was his! For eighteen was only half the number of the Indian languages which he learned—there were thirty-six of them altogether! Thirty-six tongues into which he translated either the whole of the Bible or some special part of it.

Patient, persevering, devoted, modest, he never let any one praise him. Even when he lay dying he said to a friend who was rejoicing in his wonderful career: "Mr. Duff, you have been speaking about Dr. Carey, Dr. Carey; when I am gone, say nothing about Dr. Carey—speak only of Dr. Carey's Saviour!"

And you and I, who sometimes sing so lustily in church that old-time hymn, "Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing"—shall we not stop to ponder that of all men who have ever lived on God's earth, William Carey alone came nearest to using those thousand tongues with the thirty-six he so painstakingly conquered for use in telling his great Redeemer's praise. In pondering, rejoice that he was a Baptist, that of all denominations it was ours which started modern missions and the exploits of the Book-lovers around the world.

The Young Reserves

The Family of Jumpers

By Clarence Hawkes

FATHER JUMPER, Mother Jumper, and Baby Jumper form a complete kangaroo family, and they are as queer a family as one might see in a long journey. The members of the kangaroo family have been known to the white man for only about 150 years, although they probably have existed as long as most quadrupeds.

In 1770 Captain Cook, a celebrated discoverer and traveler, landed with his party on the northeast coast of Australia. Their attention was at once attracted by the Jumper family, although it was a long time before they could find out much about them, as they were very shy.

The gray kangaroo, which is the largest of the family, measures five feet high when standing erect on his hind legs. He balances himself by his long strong tail, so that when he is standing erect looking about the country for his enemies, he is like a tripod to a camera—standing on three legs. His forelegs are so short that he does not use them in running.

He runs with great leaps of twelve or fifteen feet, balancing himself and recovering after each jump by the use of his tail. One big game hunter measured the jump of a large kangaroo that was running very fast and found that the mighty jumper had cleared twenty-two feet, although twelve or fifteen feet would be his usual jump.

The kangaroo's hind legs are also very queer. He has no big toe. The second toe is very long; it has a long, sharp claw, as has also the toe next to it. These claws are the jumper's chief defense. When hard pressed by dogs he will catch a dog between his forelegs, and with his hind claws he will scratch him to death. So you see he is a dangerous fellow when he is cornered, although the jumper usually runs away as fast as he can.

Baby Jumper is a small, queer-looking little chap. As soon as he is born, Mother Jumper puts him into the pouch close to the feeding gland. Here he simply has to hold on while she pumps milk into his mouth. For several weeks he rides about in his mother's pouch, eating and sleeping and growing. Finally, he sticks his small head outside, but often he is greatly scared by the wide world and retires quickly. Even after he has come out of his pouch and followed his mother eating grass and other herbs, he will climb back into the pouch when they are to travel far. In this particular the kangaroos are like their cousins, the American opossums. Mother Opossum also carries her young about with her in the pouch.

Long before the white man came to Australia the natives, who were wild men, used to hunt the kangaroos for meat. They were greatly aided in hunting him by their wild dogs. But now both the wild men and their wild dogs have disappeared, so all that the kangaroo has to fear is the white man.

The white man is much better armed than was the native. The white man with his rifle can kill the kangaroo from a long distance, while the wild man had to get close and kill him with a spear.

The red kangaroo is much smaller than his gray cousin, and the rat kangaroo is still smaller. Some of these smaller species do not have such short legs as their gray cousin, so they jump more like our jack rabbit.—Queen's Gardens.

That Victrola

Readers of the Chimney Corner will recall that at Christmas time we suggested a shower of two-cent stamps to be sent to Mrs. Helen Adams Moore for buying a Victrola for the Negro work at Morgan Community House, 3 Fullerton Street, Pittsburgh, Pa. On the second of January, Mrs. Moore wrote that $53 had been received from all over the country, but especially from the West. Now why the West? ? ? ?

Aren't there just as many Lochinvars-out-of-the-East to help buy this much-needed instrument for Mrs. Moore's Christian center? The trouble was (according to one reader friend) that at Christmas time we were all so absorbed with other things that half of us did not get time to read The Baptist. It is not too late yet to send her a stamp (and as many more as you wish!) to the address already given in this article. In case you desire to turn back and read the previous story and appeals we refer you to the Chimney Corner for December 9 and December 16. Do communicate your goodwill to Mrs. Moore NOW. It will be in time for a Valentine, even if too late for Christmas.

"Better late than never!" Also don't hesitate to send even the smallest amount —"many littles make much!"

Have You Chosen "Our" Name Yet?

In every mail there are arriving new names for our column, some of them good and some not quite so good, for we do want something appropriate to all of us if we are to change our name and live with the new name for years and years to come! Here are some of the names already suggested: "The Treasure Diggers"; "The Young Peacemakers"; "The Baptist Round Table"; "The Kiddies' Corner"; "Follow the Leader"; "Growing Up in America"; "The Magic Carpet" ("Because it is in the Chimney Corner in front of the fire!"); "Seven League Boots"; "The Young Discoverers." Haven't you some wonderful name tucked away in the corner of your mind? There is to be a prize for the best name chosen by the committee.

Young People's Work

Topic for February 18

STEWARDSHIP OF SUBSTANCE

Gen. 4:9; Mal. 3:10

Available Materials (Free)

Send to General Board of Promotion, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, Calif., or 276 Fifth Ave., New York, for "Stewardship Principles and Programs for Young People" and "The Stewardship of Possessions."

Send to B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., for a package containing a large number of leaflets on tithing.

YOUTH, THE STEWARD

Hymns: "Jesus calls us, o'er the tumult"; "Christ for the world we sing."

Scripture: Matt. 25:14-30; Psalm 8.

Prayer.

Hymn: "True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful, and loyal."

Discussion of Topic

1. That God trusts us with his riches is the fundamental idea of this great parable. God has delegated the administration of his world to us as stewards because he believes in us. Time and talents and every kind of human gifts and opportunities are placed in our hands as part of the wealth of God invested in us as faithful stewards of the manifold grace of God.

"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful" (1 Cor. 4:1, 2).

2. In the parable we read, "Good and faithful servant." "Here are the elements of a great life. Christ does not say a great life is splendid. He does not say a great life is illustrious. He does not say a great life is heroic. A great life is all these and more, but Christ does not say so. He simply says 'good and faithful'—faithful to the trust of God.

"What is it to be faithful? It is to be full of faith. It is trusting God down to the end of the journey, through storm and sunshine, through adversity and prosperity, through good report and evil report, saying ever with the last breath, 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust him.'

"It is fidelity. It is being trustworthy as well as trustful. It is trusting God until men can trust me. It is being loyal to duty; so devoted to truth, so steadfast to principle that no lure of quick success can tempt me to be faithless. It means that I should rather be defeated than lie; that I should rather fail in business than succeed through dishonesty; that I should rather be broken in fortune and ruined in reputation than compromise my honor. And it is all this, not for a day or a year or a decade, but for life; not merely when it pays, but when it costs; not only when it is applauded, but when it is hissed; it is unto death."—J. I. VANCE.

In stewardship the greatness of God is manifested in that he asks so little and gives so much. He gives much because he believes in our faithfulness; let us not betray the trust, but rather be faithful unto death that we may receive the crown of life.

"To every living soul that same he saith,
'Be faithful'; whatsoever else we be,
Let us be faithful challenging his faith."

The young people of today can play a tremendous part in the advance of the kingdom through our denomination. (From "Stewardship, Principles and Programs," by Laegeler.)

BOSTON CONVENTION, JULY 4-8.

Ways of Working

Members of the Conference on Local Methods, held during the St. Paul Convention, organized for exchange of ideas, plans and programs. The following letter explains itself:

Janesville, Wisconsin

The compiled list from Mr. Adams of Huntington, W. Va., on which your name is listed has been received and in accordance with his fine idea we are submitting a few of the helpful ideas, which have been worked in our B. Y. P. U.

First, we call attention to this letter which may suggest a way for your society to make suggestions to the societies on Mr. Adams' list. The letter was composed by a committee and mimeographed at a small cost. In this way we are getting across just the information of most help, and so are sending the same letter to each one. When we receive your answer we shall pass the replies to different members of our society and thereby gain new ideas to promote this work of his.

One interesting feature of our devotional meeting is that once a month we allow a five- or ten-minute period for B. Y. P. U. current events. These may be found in Service and the young people's page of THE BAPTIST. We also allow a few minutes each Sunday for our treasurer to present short concrete messages relative to tithing. He also furnishes tithing literature for our bulletin board.

Our devotional committee has a worthwhile suggestion. The young people are urged to have a ten- or fifteen-minute devotional period each day for prayer and studying God's Word. The devotional committee prepares Scripture readings and prayer topics for this work, the thoughts relating to local denominational and inter-denominational problems, with special emphasis on our local church officers and our missionaries. This committee arranges pictures of missionaries in our B. Y. P. U. room and prayer topics are on the blackboard. This preparation is all done outside of the regular service so that no interruptions are necessary during the meeting. These ideas can be carried out occasionally on typewritten sheets done by commercial students and passed out at the door as folks enter the meetings.

Our whole work is on an award system; in other words the person who does the most efficient work in the society pro rata to ability this year will be awarded the trip to Boston. This is one of the big features of our success this year and perhaps your society could work out a definite plan governed by conditions in your church with this same award. We sent eighteen people a distance of 400 miles to St. Paul last year so the matter of expense of one to Boston this year is assured. Our church will be willing to stand by loyal young people and yours will too.

Next, we have had a very successful party which we want to explain to you in detail and trust you may be able to use the idea.

Our idea was a lemon party. We advertised it well in newspapers, church calendar and two of our members made clever posters. We sent invitations which were postal cards with the following verse:

Accept a hearty welcome to our lemon party
Next Friday night at 7 o'clock,
We hope you'll be there on the dot.
'Twill be informal like this rhyme,
Just lemons and a happy time.

Each guest was asked to bring a lemon. We decorated in lemon-colored crepe paper and lemon candles.

As guests arrived they were registered and a neat card pinned on them with their name, B. Y. P. U. Lemon Party and date on the front side. The following verse on the reverse:

"Now pin this on just like a man,
Take part in everything you can,
Then when this lemon party is done,
You'll say, 'I've had a heap o' fun.'"

First, each guest was asked to make an animal from a lemon. Second was a lemon hunt.

Third, groups of persons were supplied with a needle and thread and a dish of lemon seeds and asked to see who could string the most seeds before the amount was used.

Fourth, a lemon relay race.

(Note: Copies of program of awards may be secured from Mrs. Oliver Sanders, First Baptist Church, Janesville, Wis.)

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

A Hospital Meeting

The ministers gave the day on Jan. 15 to the history and needs of our New England Baptist Hospital. This was well, just as the hospital emerges out of a long and persistent struggle into an expansion in plant and service that will make a strong appeal to our churches. Now when strength is so apparent, and promise is so bright, the appeal is to be made. The Baptist churches of New England will be called upon to make good their Baptist name by helping to support their distinctive Baptist work.

A streak of good fortune coming to a cause often obligates us to take advantage of the suddenly enlarged opportunity. The Samuel N. Brown bequest was an instance of this. Some will thoughtlessly say—"A half million dollars! Think of it—now the hospital is fixed forever!" But those who know better are only sure that it will now need to be fixed the more. They see the new buildings, the enlarged facilities, the increased staff of helpers, the mounting expense for upkeep and services, and they know that only a new struggle has come in which more friends must engage. It was significant that Col. Haskell, president of the board of trustees, saw this first, for as soon as the Brown bequest became available he at once engaged to build the home for nurses which will cost him upwards of $100,000.

The Speakers at the Meeting

They were Col. Haskell and Miss Emma A. Anderson, the superintendent of the hospital. They made a strong team, for the colonel had given his money and his devotion, and Miss Anderson had given twenty-five full years of her life. Of course the ministers gave them instant interest and sympathy.

Both speakers clarified to us the Baptist phase of the hospital's development. They made it plain that with only such support as Baptists have given, the hospital would have failed long ago; that it has succeeded largely because paying patients were attracted by non-Baptist physicians who gave the hospital their fame and their skill. Even the large free service rendered to our home and foreign missionaries, Baptists have paid for only in part. These facts were given in frank and kindly spirit, but the entire appeal which the hospital makes to Baptists was unmistakable. It seemed to be this: If the hospital bears our name, our churches should justify it by adding and sustaining twenty free beds for our poor and worthy Baptist patients. This appeal is to be made to our New England churches, and $150,000 raised to enable the hospital to be in deed what it is in name.

Special Meeting

The week of prayer has been harder hit than usual by the weather. Much that was planned and attempted it was found difficult to reach. Also the paucity of coal in some instances lowered the temperature. The general conditions however are not unfavorable for special religious effort. In the present world outlook so dark and heavily depressing, many, many want to lift up their hearts to God, and messages that are real and earnest find hearts waiting for them. Often they welcome the old tools and the old power with gladness, yet do not respond to a sort of traditional revival machinery. Many churches are dispensing with that and are doing their work the better without it.

Tremont Temple has been, and is, a center of considerable revival activity. Special meetings—two a day—are now proceeding, with sermons by Dr. Massee. The "Gloria Trumpeteers," the Lotus Quartette, the great organ, and the uplifting praise by the people give impressive backing to the preacher and the results are in every way gratifying.

It is so unusual for our Unitarian brethren to seek an awakening by "methods" that many have been interested in their recent departure from correctness and stateliness. They have been putting girl and boy preachers into their pulpits for a day, in place of their ministers, and some of the young people have been "saying things in meeting." Let us congratulate our neighbors. The writer has heard of one thrifty suburban town where every church, except the Roman Catholic, joins in a series of revival meetings under the leadership of a prominent evangelist. Even the Unitarians, Universalists, and Episcopalians are in the effort. Such an unusual agreement in evangelism will bear watching.

Ethel Fisher Tappan

The First church at Arlington recently has lost by death one of its choicest women, Mrs. Daniel L. Tappan, in her sixty-second year. Mrs. Tappan was a high-grade Radcliffe graduate, and had all the modest faithfulness and competency of a consecrated scholar. Her shyness was all the more charming because her ability and worth often brought to her the hardest tasks, which she never shirked, but performed with characteristic thoroughness and devotion. There was hardly a woman in our churches more quietly self-effacing, yet more dependable for loyal and loving service. From an almost impassive face, a sense of humor beamed that made her winsome. The pride of the entire sisterhood in her value, was not more marked than her own humility and ability in doing her full part. Such a treasure in the church never is wholly lost.

The Men's Class

This has come to be so common a feature in most of our churches that these two varying questions are wont to be raised by it: Should we make more of it, or less of it? And the answer will perhaps vary according to the peculiar conditions confronting the church. Some churches need a men's class, and others have it forced upon them. Of course it is not the old-fashioned Bible class of men, that gathers a dozen men more or less, of which we are speaking. That serves a normal purpose in hundreds of churches.

But the men's class of modern development is a sort of institution by itself in many cases—in the church, yet apart from the church. Some churches should make more of it and others perhaps less of it. When the class is over-developed, it must monopolize the pastor as its teacher, taking him away from the whole Sunday school to whom he belongs, and compelling him to preach immediately a second sermon to many men who refuse to come and hear his first, the question of injustice to the school, and wear and tear of the minister calls for answer.

Raising the Question

So the question is merely raised. It may be too early to answer it helpfully for churches facing so many different and difficult local problems. Are separate sermons for the children and separate sermons for the men obligatory or wise in all churches? Would not both of these sermons spliced into the minister's morning message put needed jasm and ginger into it? Should an over-heavy harness of organization just for the men be saddled upon churches not quite strong enough to bear it? Of course in such churches as Tremont Temple, First Fall River, and a few others, the conditions of the community are met by their great men's classes. They are doing a wonderful service. But in churches, so many of them, where men's classes cannot be great, and are not greatly needed, what would be the wise policy? It is a question that ought to provoke some earnest discussion.

New England Baptist Library

The Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the New England Baptist Library occurred January 18. President Woodman Bradbury and the other officers were re-elected, and Dr. F. F. Peterson and Dr. Walter Calley were added to the board of directors. The librarian reported the largest total of visitors, and largest use of its facilities. The treasurer reported a balance and all bills paid to date. For nine years in succession this has been the report. It is possible because of the comparatively small outlay for running expenses. One well informed observer remarked that the library was the only Baptist institution that was without the ornament of an annual deficit. But the modern end of the collection is gradually broadening in its service to our Baptist students and workers. It is really surprising that with so modest a budget the privileges of the library can be maintained, and our Baptist people so satisfactorily served.

Down in New Orleans

By E. O. Sellers

"I can scarcely believe the facts of the new day into which the Baptists have entered in the Crescent City." Thus spoke the pastor of the big half million dollar First Church of Shreveport, La., Dr. M. E. Dodd, on his recent visit to the Baptist Bible Institute of New Orleans.

Two very significant things have recently happened at the institute. First, the gift by Mrs. Robert T. Layne of Shreveport of ten thousand dollars for the foundation of a lectureship on "Christian Doctrine and Practice." The stipulation is that "the lectures to be given on this foundation shall be true to the inspiration, authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures: to the virgin birth, deity, substitutionary death, bodily resurrection and Lordship of Jesus Christ; to the doctrine of salvation of man by grace through faith; and to the New Testament churches as self-governing bodies, spiritual in nature, democratic in organization, and missionary in spirit and practice."

The gift and its conditions was unanimously accepted by the members of the faculty and Dr. Dodd asked to deliver the first series of lectures.

Another interesting development has to do with the scholarship of the Bible Institute.

Tulane University (over 4000 students), of which Dr. Dinwoody is president and also president of the southern association of colleges and universities, has, through its committee on credits, voted to place the institute work in languages, education and history, so far as they are offered in the university, on a par with university work, giving full credit therefor. There are sixteen courses, including Spanish, French, Italian, Greek, English and Hebrew, with a total of fifty-one hours per week that are thus open to mutual credit, making it possible for a student to do degree work alike in both institutions.

This is an indication of the scholastic standing of the institute but does not mean that students lacking college preparation are excluded from the institute, for the English Bible is and always will be the backbone, along with practical training, of all of the work of the institute, its classes being open at all times to all who may attend.

The Rochester Theological Seminary Faculty

Announcement has already been made of the election of Dean John F. Vichert as professor of practical theology and public speaking, Rochester. Dr. Vichert will begin his service with the opening of the seminary year in September.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees of the seminary, Dr. Earle B. Cross was elected Hoyt professor of the Hebrew language and literature, and he has signified his acceptance of the election. Dr. Cross was born in Rangoon, Burma, Nov. 27, 1883. He is the son of Rev. B. P. Cross, since 1873 missionary to the Karens in Burma, and is a grandson of Dr. E. B. Cross, missionary to the Karens, 1842-1905.

Dr. Earle B. Cross was graduated from Brown University in 1905 and from the Newton Theological Institution in 1910. He received the degree of Master of Arts from Brown in 1907, and Doctor of Philosophy in 1909. His major was Biblical literature and his minor sociology.

Dean J. W. A. Stewart, for twenty years professor of Christian ethics and pastoral theology in the seminary, will retire with the close of the present seminary year. A part of his work will be distributed among other members of the faculty; Dr. Vichert will give instruction in pastoral theology. The work of the professorship now held by Dr. Henry B. Robins will be divided, Dr. Robins becoming professor of the history and philosophy of religions, and missions. A new chair of religious education was established by the trustees at their meeting on January 6. Dr. Frank O. Erb was elected to this new chair. Dr. Erb was born in St. John, New Brunswick, in 1878. In 1900 he graduated from the University of New Brunswick, with honors in philosophy and ethics. For two years he was a student in the Colgate Theological Seminary but took the work of the senior year at Rochester, graduating in 1904.

From 1909 to 1913 Dr. Erb was a graduate-student in the University of Chicago. For a year and a half of this time he had the New Testament as his major course and the Old Testament as the minor. For two and a half years his major was religious education. For more than three years during his studies in the University of Chicago he was the assistant pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church. Since 1917 Dr. Erb has been the editor of young people's publications with the American Baptist Publication Society. While primarily engaged in religious education, he is greatly interested in social service and missions.

Dr. Erb comes to Rochester with the best of background for his work in the chair of religious education, and he will be able to make an important contribution in that department, which is so rapidly forging to the front in the work of the churches.

Both Dr. Cross and Dr. Erb have signified their acceptance of the call to the faculty, and both will begin their work in the seminary in September of the present year.

Tribute to Dr. Llewellyn Phillips, Dean of Bucknell University

On January 9 Llewellyn Phillips, A.M., D.D., dean of Bucknell University, died after a four days' illness from pneumonia.

Dean Phillips began his career at Bucknell as a pupil in the academy and graduated from the university in '92. After graduation he taught Greek for seven years in the academy, after which he studied for three years at Chicago. He was then called back to Bucknell in '02 to teach rhetoric and oratory.

At the time of his death, in addition to his duties as dean, he was the "John P. Crozer professor of education" and taught Bible to juniors and seniors. He was greatly beloved by the faculty, the students and the community alike.

For over thirty years associated with Bucknell University, his noble ideals have become a part of the institution, and those who have been associated with him personally have realized the untiring interest and devoted energy that he expended on his great work among the students and his colleagues.

All who have been under the influence of this intellectual leader have seen the possibilities of the potent forces of right living and have been convinced that through long striving comes ever-growing strength.

Patient, courteous, and kind, yet just and firm, he molded his ideals with action, selecting from the sum total of human experiences those achievements which mean most to mankind and then making them actual controlling factors in his own behavior.

In his class-room his open-mindedness was a source of great power and his students realized that seeing true meant thinking right and that religion was a condition of the mind and heart—and not a formula; that Christianity meant a life of service to humanity, not a creed.

Professor Phillips was a man among men, fond of the social life among his friends, and ever ready to give a helping hand to the needy and a word of advice or encouragement to the students.

He loved his alma mater and Bucknell today owes much to this noble teacher who has laid down his laurels in the prime of life.

His loyalty to Bucknell, his devotion to Christian education, his zeal for high ideals was not a passing whim; it had grown with his widening experience and his study of world problems. He did some thinking for himself, seeking earnestly for the truth. He asked Pilate's question, "What is truth?" not with a sneer, but with a serious, scientific, zealous determination to know the eternal reality.

The pole-star that guided him through the maze of human philosophies was the same star that guided the Wise Men of old, for to Dean Phillips the ideals of Jesus brought the eternal truth of God into human comprehension.

He knew how to be a friend. He seemed so naturally to absorb the other person's situation and to respond to it sympathetically. Even in criticism or dissent the kindness of his heart attracted, and he was so manifestly generous and fair both to facts and people, that there seemed to be no ground for protest, no need for appeal. His wide circle of friends know that they have lost one whose exact place cannot be filled.

He lived to inspire and he was remarkably successful in his purpose. It was impossible to catch from him pessimism or despair. No matter how difficult the sheer facts might be he had the art of giving to them an atmosphere of hope.

Few men lived more openly and carefully with Christ than did Dean Phillips and it was that fact which made him so valuable a friend, so capable an inspirer.

"Some men steal away out of life, unobserved save by the little circle that surround their beds. Some go when the world has already forgotten them and learned to do without them. But of some the fall is like that of a great tree, rending the very face of nature." So did our beloved friend and inspirer crash away from us.

Dr. Phillips was a member of the Rotary Club and the Masonic Lodge and exhibited keen interest in all town affairs. As a friend to the students he was sincere, sympathetic, and inspirationally helpful. Their educational and social problems interested him greatly and in his advisory capacity his fine personality and ready willingness to serve them made him trusted and loved by the students.

He was married to Miss Jennie Davis, Bucknell University, '07, who survives him. He leaves one brother and two sisters.

At the time of his death he was professor of education, dean of the university, chairman of the catalog committee, curriculum and courses committee, and a member of the honorary degrees committee.

William Jewell Faculty Speaks

To the President and Board of Trustees of William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo.

On Dec. 11, 1922, having just heard that one of our fellow teachers, Dr. A. Wakefield Slaten, was about to be dismissed from the teaching staff of William Jewell College, the faculty addressed to you a communication wherein it was said that:

"We know Dr. Slaten to be a thorough scholar, an inspiring teacher and a devout Christian. We have never known a more Christlike character. He is sincerely loyal to the college. His students respect and love him and find his teaching a growing source of inspiration for Christian living.

"We desire to express our deep regret should the board of trustees feel obliged to discontinue Dr. Slaten's connection with William Jewell College."

On account of this communication the impression has gone forth that we knew the theological views of Dr. Slaten and that we endorsed them. Both of these ideas were foreign to the spirit and content of our note.

The theological views of Dr. Slaten, as expressed by Dr. Greene, in the Kansas City Star of Dec. 22, were not known to the faculty at the time our communication was sent. We do not endorse these views, nor do we think that they should be taught in William Jewell College. We have had no evidence that they were being taught. We heartily agree with the trustees that there was no other course for them to take than to dismiss Dr. Slaten from the teaching force of the college.

Let us say that many of us have been in William Jewell College for a long time and one of the greatest incentives that brought us here was the high Christian ideals of the institution. All of us have a profound conviction that the development of Christian character is of preeminent importance in all education and that learning is of little worth without it.

According to the light we have we are trying to live the Christian life and to add our influence to the forces that make possible the kingdom of God. We always have been and are today loyal to Christ and his teaching and we should be extremely sorry if any action of ours should prove a detriment to the best interests of William Jewell College.

We assure the president and the board of trustees that our fidelity to the college and its ideals is unabated and we sincerely hope that the spirit of William Jewell College will be the spirit of Jesus Christ and that the teachings of the college will be in harmony with his teachings and the lives of all instructors in harmony with his life. We would see William Jewell College a great force for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God and we pledge our utmost efforts to reach this ideal.

Subscribed to unanimously by all members of the faculty present at a meeting Jan. 11, 1923, as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| J. P. Fruit | P. C. Harvey |
| R. R. Fleet | A. G. Byrnes |
| W. D. Baskett | H. D. Clayberg |
| R. H. Coon | S. E. Scott |
| L. D. Weyand | E. W. Mounce |

(This includes all members of the faculty voting for the original note to the president and board of trustees.)

(Signed) H. G. Parker, Chairman of the faculty.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

School of Methods

The Baptist churches of Milwaukee, under the direction of the department of religious education, are having a school of methods this week at the North Avenue Church, where Rev. L. B. Holzer is the loved pastor. The courses deal with missions, the juniors, evangelism, pageantry, church officers, B. Y. P. U. methods and methods of teaching. The department is happy in the selection of the faculty. It has secured Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., Rev. A. H. Gage, Miss Elsie Kappan, Rev. L. H. Koehler, Dr. A. LeGrand, and Dr. James A. White for the instructors. This is the third school of methods to be held in Milwaukee in recent years, and while the numbers attending may not be as large as at the others, yet the first session indicated a seriousness of purpose not before excelled. Dr. C. A. Boyd, of our own state is the dean and teaches the course in pageantry and dramatics. Milwaukee Baptists are cooperating better than ever before in their history, and larger things are in store for them.

Among the Negroes

Milwaukee has about 5000 Negroes, a great majority of whom have come to the city in the past five years. They crowded out the Jews from a good section, who had crowded out the Germans before. For a quarter of a century we have had a small struggling church among them, which attained rapid growth with the movement of the Negroes to the city. Several years ago the state convention undertook to assist them to secure an adequate property. A contract was entered into with a Lutheran congregation for their property and recently it was turned over to the convention. Before the property was given over for use to the Negroes, the convention asked Dr. E. W. Moore to try and unite the Negro Baptist congregations of which there are four in the city. After several efforts it was given up, and the Calvary Church was told to go ahead and put on the kind of a program that their white brethren believed was necessary for them to put on. The convention and the Milwaukee Baptist Union are not satisfied to have a mere preaching station made out of this excellent property, but believe that it should be the center of the best Negro life in the city. Dr. Moore has done a good work and the future has many good things in store for our Negro brethren. Dr. Moore is also rendering some assistance to our Negro churches at Beloit and Madison.

The Associations

Wisconsin believes that the associations should be a vital cog in our denominational machinery. Beginning the first of February Dr. A. LeGrand, Mrs. Anne Long, Miss Elsie Kappan and Rev. Ralph Barry will make the round of the associations in two teams. The purpose of this visitation is educational. It is to bring to the churches something of the denominational plans, and to enlist the churches in the spring drive for the New World Movement funds. Our Baptist churches are loyal to the denomination, and while some of them have not fully agreed with all that has been done in the past, yet they are not going to be stampeded into any devisive movement that comes along. In fact there is almost a unanimity of belief that we should get under our own load and let the independent organizations go it alone.

Some Notes

There are two other building projects on just now, besides the one at the South Baptist Church, of Milwaukee. Superior, with E. A. Deake as pastor is moving forward with a building enterprise that will give them a comfortable home when it is finished. It is being erected in two sections. Later on the wings will be erected and the whole building will be worthy our people in Superior. At Wild Rose there is a remodeling of the old plant. A whole story can be written of the building enterprises and remodeling that are under way or will be under way soon as a result of the New World Movement in Wisconsin.

At the Tabernacle Church in Milwaukee, things are moving along splendidly despite the fact that it has been pastorless almost six months. At present Dr. D. W. Hulburt cares for the morning service, and Rev. Robert W. Shaw for the evening service. The church is getting itself together and will be ready for an aggressive work when the new pastor is secured.

Our church at Oshkosh is happy in its achievements in recent years. It gives about as much money to benevolences as it spends on itself. A year ago its entire plant was renovated at a cost of about $9,000. Now a modern Sunday-school plant is under consideration. During the pastorate of Rev. E. G. Mintz, which is now in its third year 125 new members have been received. It has a leading part in the community school of religion which is in its third year.

Our Antigo Church is happy in a successful revival meeting. Rev. F. L. Holden is the pastor and rejoices in an enlarging work.

Rev. W. C. Osburn received a number of persons by baptism recently, and the church is rejoicing in a splendid year of service which has resulted in all bills being paid, and the improvements on the plant being completed. Mr. Osburn was invited to remain as pastor at the recent annual business meeting.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW HAMPSHIRE

The Newport and Goshen churches have been without a pastor only since Dec. 17. These two churches have secured as pastor Rev. Matthew Francis of the Dewey Street Church, Worcester, Mass. Mr. Francis will begin his pastorate with these two churches the first of February. The Newport church is one of our important churches and the Goshen church, four miles distant, is one of our most active rural churches.

Churches recently holding their annual business meetings are the First and Pleasant Street churches of Concord and the First Church of Manchester. These are among our largest churches. Their reports show that the financial side of the church work is in a most prosperous condition. In fact, we know of no active Baptist church in New Hampshire with a poor financial showing. Standing indebtedness among the churches is almost nil.

The resignation of Rev. Paul E. Alden of the Pleasant Street Church, Concord, to accept the position as assistant to Dr. Lerrigo in the Foreign Mission Society deprives New Hampshire of one of its successful and most promising workers in the pastorate. Mr. Alden's departure from New Hampshire will be regretted not only by his own church but by many outside. His work with the Concord Church will close in April and he will take up his duties with the Foreign Mission Society in New York, May 1.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH of Nashua is to have a series of state evenings. Sunday evening, Jan. 21, was for the Sons and Daughters of Maine. The subject of the sermon was, "How Much Is a Maine Man Worth?" Sunday evening, Jan. 28, the Sons and Daughters of the Bay State will be the guests of the church.

GEORGE HOLBROOK WAS recently elected deacon for life at the annual meeting of the First Church, Manchester. Mr. Holbrook has served in the office of deacon for a period of fifty-three years. He has passed his ninetieth birthday by several years, is active in different branches of church work and teaches an adult Sunday-school class. In the Milford Association he has not missed an annual meeting of the association for seventy years. He fills the office of deacon according to the New Testament standards.

COL. R. C. GOODELL, FIRST vice-president of the convention and member of the church in Antrim, was taken ill and obliged to go home at the time of the meeting of the convention in Exeter in October. Brother Goodell was confined to his house for more than two months. All will be glad to know that he is well on the road to recovery again and was a welcome visitor at the state headquarters recently. He expects to go south soon where he will doubtless experience a full recovery of health. Mr. Goodell has always taken an active interest in the work of the state convention as well as in the work of the denomination at large.

REV. LINNIE B. TREADWELL has closed her pastorate at Twin Mountain and is now visiting her brother in South Portland, Maine.

REV. W. I. COBURN, WHO HAS held pastorates in Turner Falls and Lynn, Mass., will take up his residence in Littleton and serve the church there for a period of three months. It is the hope of all that after three months he may see his way clear to serve the church permanently as pastor.

VERMONT

AT EAST HARDWICK the Baptist and Congregational churches have recently entered into an agreement to unite in work and worship, this arrangement to become effective May 1. Each church will retain its own organization and raise its own benevolences, but the united forces will be able to do more aggressive and constructive work in that community.

THE RUTLAND CHURCH has just closed one of the best years in its history. At Christmas the pastor, Rev. George W. Peck, Jr., who has now served this church for about seven years, was presented with a purse of $100 as a token of the love and esteem of his people. As a further expression of their appreciation of Pastor Peck's leadership, the church at its annual meeting voted to increase his salary for the fourth time during his pastorate. The report of the trustees showed that there had been nearly 400 contributors during the year, and that the amount raised through weekly offerings and from miscellaneous sources was $13,146.17. Of this amount $6,109.22 had been used for current expenses and $7,036.95 for benevolences. During the year fifty new members were received into the church, thirty-four by baptism, fifteen by letter and one by experience.

AT THE RECENT ANNUAL MEETING of the Bennington Church, Rev. W. G. Towart, pastor, splendid reports were given by all departments. The church school continues to hold its place of leadership in the state, having been awarded the 100 per cent seal of the State Sunday School Association Convention in October. During the seven years of Mr. Towart's pastorate, 106 have been added to the church by baptism and forty-eight by letter, making the present membership 531. Seven years ago the total collections were $4,480.06, of which $3,373.13 was for current expense and $1,106.93 for benevolences. During the year which has just closed $16,758.22 was raised, of which $7,094.74 was used for current expenses and $9,094.74 given for benevolence. It will be seen that in seven years this church has more than doubled its current expense budget and increased its benevolences more than eight times. A unanimous rising vote of appreciation and thanks was extended to Pastor and Mrs. Towart for their faithful, efficient and helpful service.

ON JAN. 14, REV. H. A. CHILDS of Rangeley, Maine, assumed the pastorate of the Montpelier Church, and is now getting settled in the parsonage at the corner of Elm and Winter streets, which has recently been purchased by the church. This modern house is well adapted for a parsonage, and supplies a long felt need. At the annual business meeting held Jan. 1, the treasurer reported all bills paid and a balance in the treasury.

DEC. 23, MISS RUTH C. BROWN, the efficient worker at the Italian Mission in Barre, closed her work. During her stay in Vermont Miss Brown won many friends whose good wishes follow her as she returns to her home in Pennsylvania. Miss Katherine Aldrich of Essex Junction has been secured to assist in the work at the mission. Miss Aldrich is a graduate of the teacher training course in the Essex Junction high school. After graduation she taught in the public schools and then went to Gordon Bible College where she had two years of training.

JAN. 11, THE CAVENDISH CHURCH, Rev. R. N. Allen, pastor, held its annual roll call and business meeting. Supper was served at 7 o'clock, following which the roll was called. There was a good attendance and many non-residents responded by letter. The report of the treasurer showed all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. This church sends to the convention office $100 monthly for the New World Movement. Plans were laid for aggressive work during 1923. The state secretary was present at the meeting and delivered an address.

THE MANCHESTER CHURCH, Rev. J. Alex Donald, pastor, held its annual roll call and business meeting Jan. 1. In spite of the inclement weather, there was a good attendance and a splendid spirit manifested.

THE FOLLOWING TEMPORARY officers have been chosen by the Woman's Mission Society of Vermont: President, Mrs. A. A. Silver, Jr., of Derby; vice-presidents: Mrs. F. R. Dickerman of Bristol, Mrs. H. A. Tolman of St. Johnsbury, Mrs. C. D. Ordway of Burlington, Mrs. H. S. Moses of Bennington, Miss Bertha I. Field of North Springfield, Mrs. Florence W. Penney of Brattleboro; secretary, Miss M. Adelle Orton of Burlington; treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Dalrymple of Vergennes. The above, together with the state director for the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Ada A. Brigham of Bennington, and the state director for the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. J. A. Greenwood of Chester, and others making up the state board of directors held a meeting in Burlington Thursday afternoon, Feb. 1, when the work of the society for the remaining months of the year was planned.

REV. THOMAS ADAMS, pastor of the West Haven Church, has recently been assisted in special meetings by Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant. In spite of the fact that the roads were blocked with snow and it was stormy most of the time, some people came out and a good spirit was shown. Fifteen new members will be received into the church, twelve by baptism and three by letter. Eight were baptized in the baptistry at Fair Haven on the afternoon of Sunday, Jan. 14. During the period of special work, the every member canvass was carried out and money raised for the pastor's salary.

AT THE OPENING OF the term on Jan. 2, Mr. Vernon G. Smith assumed his duties as assistant principal and instructor in science at Vermont Academy. Mr. Smith's successful experience in schools in other states, as well as his experience as district superintendent of schools in Vermont, will make him a valuable addition to the faculty of the academy.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE BOSTON BAPTIST AND City Mission Society had the day at the Ministers' Conference on Jan. 22. Director Charles L. Page, presided, and, after an informing address in which he outlined the multiform work of the organization, and concretely described its many lines of endeavor, called upon workers in the different districts to feature for us their effort and their success. We heard from the Italians, the Portugese, the Polacks, the Syrians, the Negroes, and the unclassified, and it was a revelation to have foreign missions brought so close to our own doors. This work has taken new vigor and enlargement under Director Page and the present aggressive board of management, and is showing how city missions ought to find the classes that must be blessed.

REV. C. H. WALCOTT IS duplicating at Winchester the solid and developing work which he wrought in his strong pastorate at Sharon. Winchester is one of the most substantially attractive of our suburban towns. The grade of intelligence is high, and the growth steady and solid. The Baptist church is admirably located, and prosperous. As a recent expression of the prevailing conviction that Pastor Walcott perfectly fits into the situation the church has added $500 to his salary.

DR. AUSTEN T. KEMPTON OF the Broadway Church, Cambridge, after the strain of the year in his busy and exacting pastorate, has just departed for a three months' trip to Egypt and Palestine. Dr. Kempton will make an intelligent traveler. He has an eye for picture and for feature, so that when he returns, the well-earned experience will have blossomed into brilliantly illustrated lectures that will make the Holy Land and the wonderful Nile country delightfully realistic. His pulpit will be filled by Rev. J. G. Loja, the Portugese pastor, in the morning, and Rev. Kenneth C. MacArthur in the evening.

THE CHURCH AT MILFORD, where Rev. Ernest S. Loomis, now of South Boston, was pastor, has settled Rev. Louis W. West of Bath, Maine. This is an early and a happy provision for that important vacancy.

DR. E. M. LAKE, FORMERLY pastor of the First-Highland Church, Springfield, delights his friends by his reappearance after a long tour through Europe and northern Africa. He appears greatly invigorated, and will be able efficiently to lead some strong church. He is living in Medford for the present, and will doubtless be in demand for pulpit supply work. Years in secretaryship and in the pastorate, add greatly to such equipment as his.

REV. CHELLIS V. SMITH OF First Church, Hyde Park, is firmly gripping his task there. Already the men's class has grown to 100, and other services in proportion. A unique community evangelistic service from Jan. 23 to Feb. 11, in which all Protestant churches and ministers unite, is now proceeding. Dr. Geo. R. Stair is the evangelist and leader.

NEW JERSEY

THE CHELSEA CHURCH OF Atlantic City recently held its annual business meeting. The clerk's report showed a membership of 316. The financial secretary's report revealed the fact that $7,566 for the regular church budget and the board of trustees reported $6,022 had been received on the building fund and that the church debt had been reduced $2,000 during the year. The property is valued at $175,000. The Sunday school has a membership of 460 and raised $2,288 during the year. The church supports two native workers, one in China and another in India. Mrs. Emma Gower presented a scholarship in Temple University to be used each year by some member of the Sunday school. To start the year right the church added $600 to the salary of its pastor, Rev. Thomas J. Cross.

THE FIRST HUNGARIAN BAPTIST Church of New Brunswick has been formally recognized by the Central Association.

FIVE CHURCHES OF Montclair have united in a community service Sunday evening. There will be a series of sermons on Christian fundamentals. Such subjects as "The Bible," "The Divinity of Jesus," "The Meaning of Salvation," "The Meaning of the Cross" and "The Christian Faith in Immortality" will be discussed.

THE CLINTON HILL CHURCH, Newark, has printed and distributed the annual reports for the year 1922. It is a model document. Its disbursements are itemized to the last dollar and is certified by the auditors. It shows total receipts of $40,502 and disbursements of $38,008. Rev. Albert Bretschneider is pastor.

NEW YORK

AT CAZENOVIA, the pastor, Rev. C. C. Winter, extended the hand of fellowship to four persons at the communion service on the first Sunday of the new year, two of these having been baptized on the previous Sunday evening. For three successive years the brotherhood has had charge of the week of prayer. From forty-five to fifty men regularly attend the bi-weekly meetings of the brotherhood for Bible study, followed by a social period, the meetings being held at the homes of the members. The Storehouse Tithers Association, organized a little more than a year ago, now includes more than one-fourth of the resident membership of the church. The church is in excellent financial condition and has not fallen down on its pledge to the New World Movement, although it originally pledged three and one-half times as much to the N. W. M. as was formerly contributed annually to missions.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. J. S. BROMLEY, FORMERLY pastor of Great Bethel Church, Uniontown, has been called as acting pastor for an indefinite period by the First Church, Jeannette. While Dr. Bromley has not accepted the invitation as yet, he has promised to preach for the church during January. The Jeannette church has a membership of 300 among whom are loyal and active workers. Plans are already under consideration for the erection of a new church edifice.

REV. HARVEY W. FUNK ENTERED upon the pastorate of the First Church, Greenville, Dec. 31, after a successful pastorate of three years in Ellwood City, during which the church debt was reduced about $2,500, the basement finished and the entire interior of the church edifice redecorated, about $880 per year given to benevolences and seventy members added to the church. Interest was developed in young people's work and religious education. The church is left in fine spiritual condition.

MONONGAHELA, HAVARD GRIFFITH, pastor. The teacher training class with thirty-two members is now engaged in taking the second unit in the standard course, the intensive method being used. A class of young ladies is completing the first unit and is now ready for the examination. This class studies during the Sunday-school hour. The adults of the school have been placed in a separate department with their own opening exercises. This department is under the superintendency of the pastor. This gives four separate departments operating at the same time. The enrolment of the school is now 415.

CALVARY, IRWIN, REV. NOAH FEHL, pastor, writes: "We feel thankful to God for the inspiring, soul-saving campaign we had two weeks ago under the splendid leadership of Rev. James S. Braker. Fourteen of the new converts have already appeared before the deacons for church membership. The pastor is giving five consecutive Sunday mornings on "The Word of God" and seven Sunday nights on "The Churches in Asia Minor." The Bible school registered and adopted The Bigger and Better Sunday School Program, and the senior B. Y. P. U. is entering upon a three months' contest.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

THE FIRST CHURCH OF Youngstown, recently met with a severe loss in the death of Maxwell H. Rupe, son of Rev. Clarence M. Rupe, for many years a prominent Baptist minister of Ohio. Mr. Rupe was a Denison student, a member of the class of 1901, and made a large circle of friends in the various places in which he lived. He was a man of splendid talents; of unswerving fidelity and integrity, of marked devoutness of character. He leaves a widow and five sons. At the time of his death he was the president of The Transportation Equipment Company, of Youngstown.

THE FIRST CHURCH, YOUNGSTOWN, two years ago was considering selling its property because of inability to get an evening congregation in its down-town location. Dr. A. C. Archibald, formerly of Lowell and Brookline, Mass., was persuaded to take up the work. Hundreds are now unable to find sittings each Sunday evening and the church is compelled to enter upon a building program. The local papers carry Mr. Archibald's sermons each Monday morning as front page matter, and the First Church has become a center of interest for the thousands of people in this great steel belt.

THE ATTENDANCE OF THE Euclid Avenue Sunday school, Cleveland, on Jan. 7 was 1,018. The first Sunday of January a year ago the attendance was 696.

THE BOARD OF PROMOTION, Dr. F. G. Cressey, director, has announced a one-day school of modern church methods to be held Jan. 30 at Canton, thirty-first at Lima, Feb. 1, Columbus, Feb. 2, at Zanesville. P. H. J. Lerrigo and F. A. Agar of New York are among the speakers.

THE STUDENTS OF Denison University again showed their inherent sympathy and brotherly spirit this last week when they took up a freewill offering to provide hospital treatment for a fellow student, N. P. Pillai from far away India. He came to Denison as a protégé of Waldo Heinrichs, an alumnus who gained renown through the Literary Digest story about him as "the luckiest man in the war" because of his miraculous career in the air service in France. Pillai before he had been in residence a year developed incipient tuberculosis and by a special dispensation was admitted to the Ohio Sanitarium. He is now showing splendid improvement and the student body is anticipating his return to college by another year.

FOR SEVENTY YEARS THE First Church of Toledo has used its present house of worship. A careful survey and study of the field has been made and the conclusion reached that to insure the future life and usefulness of the old First it must move to the residential section where the great majority of its people reside. Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Bartley have presented the church with a property in the west central section of the city and the church has unanimously decided to build on this site as soon as possible. Albert King Morris is the pastor. The church has voted to sell the old property for $20,000 to the American Protective Home Circle, a fraternal insurance society. The church is to have use of the building for two years from the date of sale. A pleasant surprise in the form of an unsolicited gift of $1,000 in cash for the building fund was received from Mr. and Mrs. William Marks. The church will invite Rev. F. H. Devine to lead in the financial campaign.

Dayton Association

The pastors of the Dayton Baptist Association held their regular monthly meeting at the Y. M. C. A. It was one of the best attended meetings of the season. Mr. W. D. Chamberlin addressed the pastors regarding the outstanding pledges for the Forward Movement. President J. M. Cosby presided. The report of the churches showed much activity in many departments of church life.

Pastor L. M. Copeland, of Clifton St., Springfield, is now in the third year of a successful pastorate. There has been a great increase in attendance, owing to the earnest effort of the pastor.

Rev. J. S. Hill is the supply pastor for the Colorado Avenue Church while it is selecting a minister. The church is in able hands and has time for prayer and thought in the calling of a pastor.

Pastor B. F. Farris, of Union, is leading his people to take active part in the New World Movement. They are now in a meeting with the able assistance of Pastor Jonah Vuker.

Pastor M. F. Scruby, Haynes Street, is having conversions. Ground is being broken for a new parsonage. The church gave the pastor and his wife many valuable Christmas gifts. It also increased the salary. Rev. R. C. Fletcher, of Newcomerstown, is leading the songs and singing in special meetings.

Pastor O. F. Miller, DeGraff, was well remembered by the church at Christmas time. A B. Y. P. U. has been organized.

Pastor Vuker at Sinking Creek had an encouraging report of the church's offering. Pastor Vuker teaches tithing. A Bible conference for the church and community is being arranged.

Pastor O. T. Swigart who has done such excellent work at Greenville has closed his work. There is a chance for a church to get an able man. The Sunday school was greatly built up during his pastorate. A primary department which started with five grew to sixty. There were twenty-nine additions to the church.

Dr. J. S. Kirtley, who is so ably leading the First Baptist Church, gave the hand of fellowship to twenty-three and has a number more to baptize.

Pastor W. F. Staley of the Central Church baptized ten and received two by letter. $1200 has been raised for repairs. Pastor Staley is leading the church into greater activities.

Pastor F. F. Fenner, of Piqua, had a Sunday-school specialist visit and the Bible school has been reorganized. There is a revival among the scholars. The visit by Dr. J. S. Kirtley was greatly appreciated. He gave them his helpful lecture "The Bare-footed Kingdom." The pastor has baptized a number. The church is preparing for the coming of Dr. Porter in March.

Pastor J. C. MacFarlane, of Memorial, baptized nine and gave the hand of fellowship to thirteen the first of the month. The church expressed its loyalty to the pastor by many personal gifts. It has realized, under the leadership of Pastor MacFarlane, a long cherished hope. Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, it dedicated a pipe organ costing nearly $4000. Besides installing the organ other changes have been made at an expenditure of nearly $12,000.

North Dayton: The church closed the year with a baptismal service. The pastor baptized eight. Four were baptized Jan. 14. The obligation on the new $47,000 house has been reduced to $3,500. The Bible school is making a good record. Pastor W. R. Sloman has organized a campaign—one hundred new members by spring.

Pastor G. W. Johnson, of Linden Ave., observed the week of prayer. Five were baptized, four came by letter, one by confession. Pastor Johnson has been elected to serve as president of the Dayton Baptist Union. He also has the duty as moderator of the Dayton Baptist Association.

Pastor McGuire, of St. Paris, has led in perfecting a Baptist federation of many churches around St. Paris.

Pastor R. C. Fletcher has just begun his second year at Newcomerstown. He conducted a revival which resulted in adding fifty to the church.

Pastor J. M. Cosby of Tippecanoe City finds many of his young people are looking toward Denison. This pastor and wife are making some sacrifices to extend the cause in this place. The people are loyally supporting them to the full extent of their ability.—PHILIP BAUER.

ILLINOIS

ON JAN. 19 THIRTY-FIVE representatives of the five missionary training schools of Chicago—Congregational, Methodist, Brethren, Presbyterian, and Baptist—met for dinner at the Baptist Missionary Training School, 2969 Vernon Avenue. During the dinner hour the students entertained the visiting guests by singing a group of B. M. T. S. songs. Following the dinner was a short social hour, then came the discussion period devoted to subjects vital to all the training schools and led by the chairman. Dr. D. F. W. Lesseman, president of the Methodist Training School. Following this a program was given under the direction of Miss Jessie M. Olin, instructor in music in B. M. T. S. The assembly voted unanimously to have a similar meeting at the Presbyterian Training School in April.

THE OLD STONINGTON CHURCH has more than $13,000 in hand for a new church building. It owns a modern parsonage and five acres of land across from the building site where the old church burned. The church is anxious to settle a pastor who can give full time to the work. Rev. J. H. Cozad preached recently here on Sunday afternoon at which time five new members were received.

THE FIRST CHURCH, BELVIDERE, reports a good attendance at all its services. Forty-three additions to the membership of the church were reported for the past year. The church is responding to the leadership of its pastor, Rev. W. E. Mundell.

Activities of Joliet First

At the first annual meeting of the new First Church of Joliet, held Jan. 17, 1923, the following items of unusual interest appeared in the reports:

During the year the church has undertaken two new branches of work—A school for the training of workers in religious education, under the direction of Rev. W. R. Jewell, the new director of religious education employed by the church. During the first semester the enrolment was sixty-eight, representing twelve Bible schools and six denominations. Courses were offered in Old and New Testament, general psychology, junior methods, the psychology of teaching and worship in the church school. For the new semester, opening Feb. 2, the courses offered will be Old Testament, prophecy, intermediate methods, psychology of story telling, the Acts and epistles of the New Testament, child psychology and organization and administration.

Another new line of endeavor has been the work among the Spanish speaking people. Rev. Manual Madrigal, of Central America, has been conducting a Bible school and preaching service in Spanish every Sunday afternoon. Three Mexicans have recently united with the church by baptism, as a result of his ministry. Arrangements are being made that will enable him to give full time to this work.

The church is conducting five Bible schools in separate parts of the city, in buildings owned by the church. Plans are being drawn for a new church edifice to be built opposite the new high school buildings. This edifice will be built in three sections, one for worship, one for religious education and one for socials and recreation. $40,000 toward the erection of this building is already in hand.

The present membership of the church is 514. It has a very strong women's circle, young people's society and men's organization. The total amount of money raised for all purposes since the organization of the church less than a year ago was over $10,000, more than half of which was for benevolence.

The church at the present is pastorless, Rev. Theodore Gassaway having resigned in November. But it is expected that a new pastor will be called in the very near future. The director of religious education is acting as stated supply.

MISSOURI

REV. J. H. HUGHES IS closing the fifth year at Mexico. There have been 618 additions. The annual meeting which was held Jan. 10 showed expenditures for the past year of $16,000. The budget during the first year of Mr. Hughes' pastorate was $2700. In appreciation of his work the church has four times increased his salary, adding $1000 at one time. Mexico is the home of Hardin College. The present membership of the church is 978.

MICHIGAN

THE CALVARY CHURCH, Harbor Beach, enters the New Year with the brightest of prospects. Financially the church is in the best condition in years; the congregations are the largest they have been during the present pastor's stay. The brotherhood, with 110 men as members, is doing great work. With the pastor it is determined to make the local church the first "he" church in the thumb district. George M. Vercoe, of Flint, this month leads in a revival of religion. The pastor, Rev. E. Shepard Bramble, in the last twenty months has put this church on the most secure footing that it has been on in years. A recent innovation is the bi-weekly noon day luncheon for young men; these are largely attended, a speaker is always present; and the spirit of the Christ is pre-eminent; the key-note being "Young Men for Christ," and the results are exceedingly gratifying.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF the Marshall Church recently held splendid reports were made by various church officers. Increase in church membership of thirty-two was reported. Sunday-school enrolment was reported to be 380. Splendid report was heard from the newly organized Women's Union. This organization has only been running for six months, has begun splendid missionary work and has $463 in its treasury. Mr. Henry Krotzer, who had been superintendent for twenty-seven years, tendered his resignation and A. W. Sayre, who for the last year has been educational director of the Sunday school, was elected superintendent in his place. A Junior Department has been organized, using graded lessons and several other classes have also adopted graded lessons. One evening in the week, under the direction of Douglas O'Leary, the athletic director of the Sunday school, the gymnasium of the school is used to good advantage. The rural work of the church is going steadily on. A large number of rural families are attending church services regularly and plans are being made to conduct cottage prayer meetings in some of the rural districts, in preparation for Easter. Nine rural districts are organized, each with a chairman and social events in these various districts are being promoted this winter. Sometimes as many as seventy-five people meet in a home in the country, including from fifteen to twenty from the church in the city of Marshall. Cooperative suppers and miscellaneous programs are attractive features. An every-member canvass is being made of the entire church for subscriptions for Baptist periodicals.

WISCONSIN

THE OCCASIONAL PROGRAMS OF religious drama crowd the church at Oshkosh to its capacity Sunday evenings. The following dramas and pageants have been given: "Ruth the Loving," "Esther the Daring," "The Striking of America's Hour," "The Birth of Christ," "The Pilgrim and the Book" and "Thanksgiving Ann." Other plans have been laid to include "Peter the Rock," "A Thousand Miles for a Book," "Paul," "Elijah," "Isaiah." These dramas are proving instructive and add greatly to the spirit of worship and service. They furnish the young people with a knowledge of the Bible and its intrinsic worth, ancient customs, geographic situations and spiritual truth, The school of religion is now in its third year. Last year the enrolment was 200. The first night this year 125 enrolled. The school covers a period of ten weeks, one session each week. The Sunday school is registered in the Bigger and Better Campaign and adds new members each Sunday. The missionary zeal of the church has not waned. It contributes about the same amount for missions as is expended for home needs. Although in the past three years $10,000 has been expended on improvements on the building, yet there is felt the need of a new modern Sunday-school building. One hundred twenty-five new members have been added during the pastorate of Rev. Eugene G. Mintz.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF La Crosse, finished the year 1922 with money in its treasury. For the first time in the twenty-five years that the present chairman of the board of trustees, Mr. L. J. Killian, has served in that capacity, the church has passed through a whole year without borrowing money. Even the lean months of the summer were successfully passed and all bills promptly paid, due to the present system that has been placed in the finances of the church. The Sunday school enrolled in the Bigger and Better Campaign. Since that time the school has increased its membership over 40 per cent, and its average attendance over 25 per cent. The reason that its average attendance has not kept pace with its increased enrolment, is that at least 20 per cent of this increase was in the cradle roll and the home department. The deacons of the church, under the guidance of the pastor, W. S. Stewart, are carefully conducting a system of family prayers and of individual interviews among those who are on the prospective list of the church. The spiritual condition of the church is very good and everything seems to point to a large harvest by Easter Sunday.

Pre-Dedication Day

Years ago the South Baptist Church, of Milwaukee, was one of the leading churches in the city. But a changing population weakened its membership until it had less than half the members which it formerly had. This, with some dissensions, set the church back to its lowest point about three and a half years ago. At that time Rev. Robert W. Shaw was called to the pastorate and an attempt was made to realign the forces and study the situation in the light of changed conditions. It was decided to move two miles westward where the church had a mission in a choice residence location. But many people were doubtful as to whether a suitable building could be erected. By the advice of the various denominational agencies they voted to go forward on a $65,000 building campaign. It was agreed to erect the plant in two units or sections. The first section is the Sunday-school plant, modern in every particular and departmentalized. This unit will cost about $32,500 complete and furnished.

On condition that the old plant be used for mission purposes the Home Mission Society, the state convention, and the edifice fund of the convention voted $12,250 to the new enterprise. On Sunday, Jan. 14, the church held a pre-dedication day, at which an effort was to be made to clear up the balance needed or $7,579. When the day was over the church had gone over the top, with others yet to be heard from. This means that this church has contributed approximately $20,000 to this first unit, and if the old building were to be sold, and the money paid back to the various denominational agencies that contributed it, there would not be a dollar of denominational money in this first unit.

Dr. A. LeGrand, the State Superintendent, was present and led in the raising of funds, though his work was made easier because of the work which the committee had done in preparing the way.

The church voted to pay the pastor's premium in the M. and M. Fund as an appreciation of his work in leading forward in this enterprise. The dedication service will be held in March without the usual strain for money.

IOWA

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH of Cedar Rapids, Rev. Clarke R. Parker, pastor, is enjoying a marked advance in its work. A new memorial pipe organ will be installed April 1. Immediately after Easter the church anticipates a series of evangelistic meetings under the leadership of Dr. E. S. Stucker, of Ottawa, Kan. There is some possibility that the church will send the pastor to Stockholm in July.

REV. W. B. HUTCHINSON, who closed a seven-year pastorate with the First Church, Burlington, Jan. 1, has removed to Des Moines and taken up work with the Iowa Baptist Convention covering the northeast district of the state.

KANSAS

WELLINGTON. First Church is responding splendidly to the leadership of the new pastor. A thorough reorganization of the forces was made during the fall months. A new system of finance was introduced which is working satisfactorily. A successful stewardship campaign was carried on during October, in harmony with the suggestion of the Board of Promotion, and an every-member canvass was made Oct. 29, resulting in an increase of 25 per cent for current expenses, and 300 per cent increase for missions. Thirteen have been received by letter, and the pastor is conducting a class among the young people preparing a number for baptism. The Sunday school is one of the best in town with an average attendance of 85 per cent of the enrolment. It was the first in this association to enroll in the bigger and better Baptist Sunday school campaign. The ladies' Bible class has subscribed for THE BAPTIST and Missions to be put in our public library for the coming year. We have three divisions of the B. Y. P. U., all doing good work, with an average attendance of seventy-five every Sunday evening. Last fall the senior society subscribed for THE BAPTIST to be used among its members. Three chapters of the W. W. G. have been organized, a senior, a junior, and the Alice Thayer Guild—the last named for one of our own Kansas girls, a graduate of Ottawa University, now a missionary in Burma. Dec. 31 was held a union watchnight service in this church with 450 present from 9:30 to 12:01. On Jan. 5 the men of the church held a banquet at which W. C. Coleman, mayor of Wichita, was the chief speaker. He gave the men an address, straight from the shoulder, on the topic, "The Relation of Men to Business and the Church." All parts of our organization are in good running order and the outlook is the most promising, the best for years. First Church is looking forward with pleasure to entertaining the state convention next fall.

SOUTH DAKOTA

VIBORG: During the past year the membership has been increased. For all purposes the church paid out about $4,300, contributing $915 to the New World Movement. A legacy of $2,000 has been bequeathed by Mrs. Lars Nielsen. A church program for 1923, outlined by the pastor, was adopted at the annual business meeting, and the official board was given authority to carry it out in detail. Some

Flames of Faith

By WILLIAM L. STIDGER

"A series of essays, critical and semi-biographical, of many of the modern authors not previously treated in this author's 'Giant Hours With Poet Preachers.'"—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Net, $1.25, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS
PULPITS
COMMUNION SETS
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY
1089 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Outfits, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMOULIN BROS. & CO., Dpt. 17 GREENVILLE, ILL.

of the new activities are: Week-day instruction class, teacher training class, activities among the men, every-member canvass (making an up-to-date payment of New World Movement pledges possible), departments of music, evangelism, literature and social life. Rev. I. Fredmund is the pastor.

NORTH DAKOTA

IMMANUAL CHURCH OF FARGO recently held its annual meeting. The secretary reported twenty accessions to the church since the coming of Pastor Finwall. The treasurer reported all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. The Sunday school has the largest attendance in its history. The pastor was presented with a gift in cash in appreciation of his services. It was decided to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the church March 30. A series of special meetings have been planned.

Rocky Mountain States

ARIZONA

THE FIRST CHURCH, YUMA, has become self-supporting. Rev. C. H. Moore of Oakland, Cal., recently took up his work as pastor.

REV. L. F. TAYLOR OF Washington, Pa., began his ministry at Glendale, Feb. 1.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Phoenix, has invited Rev. W. B. Percival to become its supply pastor.

TWENTY NEW MEMBERS have been secured for the stewardship league in the church at Bisbee with a greater number tithing their income. The church has recently paid $2,200 on its indebtedness. Pastor Garnett is proving to be a wise leader.

THE GLOBE CHURCH is nearing self-support.

EAST WASHINGTON AND NORTH IDAHO

THE MICHIGAN BAPTIST Convention has extended a call to Rev. John E. Smith, pastor of the First Church of Spokane, Wash., to become the promotional director of the state. This is the third contribution which East Washington and North Idaho have made to the denominational and promotional forces. Rev. F. G. Davies, formerly of Grace Church, Spokane, who is now promotional director of the Southern California Convention, and Rev. A. E. Peterson, a former pastor of Grace Church of Spokane, who is now promotional director and state secretary of Illinois. This contribution in men to the leadership of some of our great states together with the magnificent gift of Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield of Spokane, of $250,000 to Linfield College, McMinnville, Ore., constitutes a series of contributions from the East Washington North Idaho Convention of which there is reason to be proud. This statement is not intended in any sense as bragging. We find ourselves in the position of Bridget who, while confessing to the priest, admitted that Pat kissed her. The priest becoming much interested in the statement asked how many times he kissed her; to which she replied, "I am not bragging, your riverence, I am just confessing."—A. H. BAILEY.

UTAH

THE UTAH BAPTIST CONVENTION reports fourteen churches with 122 baptisms and a membership of 1154 in the state. Two new churches were received, one at Taylor Avenue, Salt Lake City, and one at Soldier Summit where a new church building was erected by Rev. Earl D. Sims. There were two ordinations; Rev. Henry Jacobs at Rio Grande and Rev. A. L. Hendrix of Tremonton. Two new church buildings are planned for this year. The foundations are in and the cement work finished for the basements. The first is being built by the First Baptist Church of Ogden. Dr. L. A. Garrison is their much loved pastor and the church is united under his splendid leadership. Dr. Garrison has a splendid church with ninety tithers on its roll. The building will cost $100,000 and its special features will include chimes, complete social rooms and latest arrangements for Sunday-school work. The Burlington Church is building a modern Sunday school plant, the first unit to cost $12,000 and its assembly room will be used for regular worship. Rev. Henry Jacobs, their pastor, is doing a great work with real saints for his supporters and fellow workers. Two church buildings have been repaired and repainted, one at Murray and the other at Eureka.

THE MEMBERS OF Immanuel Church are very much pleased with their new pastor, Rev. Russell M. Brougher, who came here last September. At the annual meeting twenty-three baptisms were reported and a total membership of 401. The year closed with the greatest increase in the history of the church. The ushers reported an average attendance since September the first of 250 at the morning service and 350 at the evening service. That record is very unusual for a Baptist church in Utah and shows something of the progress made and the happy relations between pastor and people.

UTAH DID HAVE TWO CHURCHES with buildings for their pastors' homes, now it has three. The Wall Avenue Church in Ogden had a building for a parsonage that was a disgrace to the denomination but Rev. M. A. Eilonth and his people have converted the old frame into a comfortable and pleasant home.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

SAN DIEGO: A very interesting and largely attended quarterly meeting of the San Diego Baptist Missionary Society was held on Jan. 14 at the First Church. Rev. F. O. Belden presided, and Rev. F. T. Barkman was chorister. Among the clergymen and pastors who took part in the public exercises were Rev. Dr. W. F. Harper, of Los Angeles, Rolla E. Brown, of Ocean Beach, J. W. Beaven, of Logan Heights, L. P. Valentine and A. B. Apra. Lay delegates from the various Baptist city churches were present. There are now three Baptist missions in this city: one among the Italians, and two among the Mexicans; and at the meeting on Jan. 14 a number of children from these missions sang songs, some in Spanish and some in Italian, while their pastor, Rev. A. B. Apra, played upon the piano. The principal address of the evening was made by Rev. Dr. Harper, who spoke of the extraordinary growth of the cities of Southern California, and the consequent need of more churches. The new church building at Ocean Beach was dedicated on Jan. 28. It has been announced that Rev. Floy T. Barkman will conduct a party in a tour of Europe next summer. The chief objective for the larger portion of the party will be the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-28.

Obituary

John Waller Coghill, son of Benjamin Coleman and Millecent Ellett Coghill, was born Aug. 17, 1830, in Hanover County, Va. His father's home at that time was on a part of the Patrick Henry estate, purchased a short time before. In 1836 the family came to Illinois and settled near Oquawka.

When eleven years old John Waller was sent to a private classical school in Carthage, Ill., and during this time united with the Baptist church. He attended Knox College, at Galesburg, and then taught in several schools in Henderson county. Returning to Knox he finished the sophomore year. After this he engaged in the milling and mercantile business in Coghill's Mills, a business established by the father and widely known in the pioneer community.

Aug. 11, 1858, he married Elisabeth Tucker, daughter of James Tucker, also a pioneer Baptist. The families of B. C. Coghill and James Tucker, gave their best efforts to the establishing and maintaining of a Christian community. The earliest Baptist church of Henderson county, now known as Rozetta, was organized in the Coghill home; while James Tucker and his daughter Elisabeth were charter members of the Baptist church of Roseville, Warren county. In these two churches, first at Rozetta and afterwards at Roseville, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Coghill maintained their membership during most of their married life.

Mrs. Coghill died in 1910, aged 73. The evening of Sept. 21, in Lawrence, Kan., Mr. Coghill passed away at the age of 92 years. The surviving relatives are four children, Caroline, John W. Jr., George E., and Wm. H.; two sisters, Mrs. Lewis Duke and Mrs.

Want Ads

Collection Envelopes, 8 cents a pack of 52 each in cartons. Write Dufold-Trifold Company, Asbury Park, N. J.

PRINCIPAL WANTED: For High Grade Coeducational Preparatory School. This Christian school is located in a rural state and needs a man of highest character and ideals, broad training and successful experience as teacher and executive. Attractive salary will be paid the right man. All correspondence confidential. Write Box I, The Baptist, 417 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE ORIGINAL VEST-POCKET HELP
TORREY'S
Gist of the Lesson
By R. A. TORREY and Others

Lesson Text in Full. Emphasized Words and Phrases in Black Face Type. Condensation of Thought. Changes in Revised Version Noted. Dates Given as Accepted. Exposition of Lesson. Prayer Meeting Topics.
Flexible Binding, 35c postpaid
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., New York, 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Cook Academy
A boys' school under Christian influences, open to students of all religious beliefs. Academic and College Preparatory courses with training for business careers. Graduates admitted without examination by colleges admitting on certificate. Music advantages. A fine school spirit prevails and healthful sports are encouraged. Gymnasium. Athletic field. Basketball court. For catalog address
The Principal, Box B Montour Falls, N. Y.

5,000 CHRISTIAN WORKERS WANTED
to sell Bibles, Testaments, good books and handsome velvet Scripture Mottoes. Good commission. Send for free catalogue and price list.
GEORGE W. NOBLE, Publisher,
Dept. "K." Monon Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

L. E. Pollard; twelve grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Brief services were conducted in Lawrence by Rev. Frank Jennings, pastor of the First Baptist Church of that place, and the funeral services were conducted by Rev. E. E. Clayton, in the Baptist church of Roseville, Ill., where interment took place. The sermon was preached from the words "It doth not yet appear what we shall be."

REV. DAVID E. POST

David Evander Post, son of James M. and Catherine Post, was born in New York City, January 1, 1852. Converted at fourteen, received into the South Church, and deeply interested in Christian work from the first, it was his ambition to go to the foreign field. This was also his mother's desire, but while mother and son were denied the privilege, David's daughter, Vida, a student volunteer at Holyoke with special training at the Bible Institute for Christian Workers in Philadelphia, has been in Japan since 1920. Entering Colgate Academy in 1870 he was graduated from Madison University in 1875, and from the seminary in 1878, holding also membership in Delta Epsilon and Phi Beta Kappa. Ordained at North Granville, N. Y., June 3, 1878, he married Miss Harriet E. Allen, of that town. Then he went to Brandon, Vt., for six years, and to Warwick, N. Y. for six years. He closed his pastorate at Warwick shortly after the death of his wife, who was survived by two daughters, Laura Allen (Mrs. Samuel Bryant) and Miss Catherine M. Post. All his pastorates were now in New York state. While at the East church, New York city, he was married to Kate Ter Williger, of Chester, N. Y. After four years here he gave three years each to Sandy Creek and Westport, then nine years to Gilbertsville, Treadwell and Cobleskill, and then seven years to LaGrange. Here, his health failing, he was obliged to retire from the active ministry. Always keenly interested in denominational affairs he took an active part in each of the associations. He gave a large portion of his time after he had retired to the study of evangelism and was greatly interested in simplifying the study of the Bible. When death overtook him he was preparing a simple analysis to encourage the young to make a systematic study of the Bible. Several young men, whose names are well known in our denomination, were led by him to enter the ministry. He passed away on Dec. 31, 1922, at Pine Bluff, N. C., where a brief service was conducted the following evening by Rev. L. E. Wheeler, an old classmate.

The funeral services were held on Jan. 3, 1923, at the residence of his brother, James H. Post, Woodside, Borough of Queens, conducted by Dr. Alvah S. Hobart, of Yonkers, an early schoolmate at Madison, assisted by Rev. A. F. Trice, of Woodside, and Rev. Paul Hayne, of Hackensack, N. J. The interment was at Warwick in the family plot. Mrs. Post is comforted in the living children, Mrs. Samuel Bryant, Miss Catherine M. Post, John J. Post, M.D., Howard J. Post, C. Jane Post, Vida Post and David L. Post, and made a short address, although eighty-are sources of disease are no longer tolerated in civilized cities; but the den of vice, the retreat of law breakers and degenerates, still lingers to spread the germs of moral disease that destroy both soul and body.

A. G. LAWSON.

"I Can and I Will"

(Continued from page 12)

To the work, to arms, against the hotbeds of immorality and sin. In the face of the enemies of both the law and the soul let no one say I can't. If we will combat the sources of immorality with the same tireless energy and splendid cooperation with which we attack the mosquito and the flys, our community will be delivered from many prolific sources of moral plague and it will be cleaner and better and happier.

Among us the forces of good are more mighty than the forces of evil; and if good men everywhere will unite and stand for and fight for the principles that are eternal, the darkness of evil will be dispelled as are the shadows before the rising sun.

The Dutch saw the ocean sweeping over the rich low lands. They built the dykes and drove back the sea; so let us build barriers against the admission of sin into our lives, both individual and national. We must overcome the immoral influences that would destroy patriotism and justice, ruin homes, crucify love and chastity and drag the mountains of character to the level of the engulfing sea.

There is one who is strong to give us victory. The strong right arm of "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" is able to crown the efforts of the faithful with glorious success. It is my plea that all shall accept the mastery of the Christ and gird on the full armor of the Christian soldier, the shield of faith, the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the helmet of salvation, the sandals of peace and the sword of the spirit. As did Paul, so we can do all things through Christ who strengthens us.

Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Baptist Work in Northern France

(Continued from page 15)

for his funeral, as the surgeon thought he could not possibly get well. His people prayed constantly for him and he feels his recovery was due to their prayers. He is ably assisted in his work by Madame Trefier, who, starting with three members of the Sunday school, has organized a sewing class which now numbers forty and meets every Thursday.

The materials used by this sewing class were furnished through the generosity of Northern Baptists. Instead of giving money or buying the garments outright Mr. Brouillette has very wisely administered the fund: for the child keeps the garment that it makes. Thus the need is supplied and the child learns a valuable lesson at the same time.

This is quite characteristic of the method of using the relief fund. Cash payments have been made only in the cases where a stipulated sum of ten or fifteen francs a month has been given toward the support of orphaned children. Each case of need is thoroughly investigated.

We returned to Lens and the following morning at our foyer there was a conference of all the workers in these two vacation schools. It was a valuable exchange of ideas and methods of work. I have the firm conviction that the establishment of these schools marks a new epoch in our work in France. Not only will that work extend beyond our old borders in this way, but the modern methods used in these schools will be applied more and more to the Sunday schools of France, whose methods leave very much to be desired.

It is my privilege to spend several weeks of my Sabbatical year in visiting for two weeks at a time several of these churches to talk over with pastors and people some of the problems of schools, young people's societies and church finances. The importance of this grows upon me day by day. There is practically no literature in French upon Sunday-school work. America has a great opportunity and duty in furnishing our French Baptists such literature and also in sending one or more workers to France to train teachers, for the hope of our future work there lies in the young whose minds are now open to new ideas and methods.

---

"Buddhism and Baptists in Burma" is the name of the latest moving picture film put out by the stereopticon department of the General Board of Promotion.

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

Northern Baptist Convention; New York. W. C. Bitting, D.D., Corresponding Secretary, 5109 Waterman Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; New York. Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent. a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

CHURCH ARCHITECT
Wilson B. Parker 620 State Life, INDIANAPOLIS
Send for illustrated booklet.

IT IS A BURNING SHAME
that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation
Furnishes Protection AT COST
FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM
no assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.
Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured.
No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 23 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager, 1509 Insurance Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

THE PILGRIM PRESS ANNOUNCES:

WHEN YOU ENLIST Margaret Slattery

Pastors who are planning for communion of church membership classes should not fail to have at hand this marvelously succinct, inspirational and non-sectarian history of the Christian Church. It is intended primarily for young people, especially those who are looking forward to church membership. Would be an ideal gift to any young person on the occasion of his joining the church. Castilian paper. Price, 75 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE COUNTRY COMMUNITY (Revised Edition)

Warren H. Wilson

Long considered a standard on the relation of the church to the rural community, this book has been thoroughly revised and gives the author's matured and ripened conclusions.
Price, $2.25. Postage 10 cents.

THE STORY OF JOHN FREDERICK OBERLIN (New Edition)

Augustus Field Beard

This great classic of Christian biography is also one of the most valuable and suggestive books on rural church work. "It contains inspiration to good citizenship, to truer living, to better teaching, to more devoted ministry."—The Presbyterian.
Price, Cloth, $1.25; Paper, 75 cents.
Postage, 10 cents.

OUR AMBIGUOUS LIFE

Rev. John A. Hutton, D.D.

Alike into the stories of the early chapters of Genesis, and into great sayings of Christ, Dr. Hutton reads new and illuminating meanings. To him the Christian life is always a great and inspiring adventure. Price, $2.25. Postage, 10 cents.

ORACLES OF GOD Studies in the Minor Prophets

Rev. W. E. Orchard, D.D.

Pastor of King's Weigh House Church, London

Dr. Orchard's fame as a preacher is world-wide. In this book we find him a clear and vivid expositor. He sets in relief the personalities of the Hebrew prophets, and shows what light they throw on modern social problems.
Price, $2.25. Postage, 10 cents.

THE USE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT In the Light of Modern Knowledge

Prof. John E. McFadyen, D.D.

Professor McFadyen restores the Old Testament to those who have neglected or lost it, and reassures those who are disconcerted by criticism, or who have not acquainted themselves with its processes and results. Price, $2.25. Postage, 10 cents.

ALTARS OF EARTH Studies in Old Testament Humanism

Rev. Hubert L. Simpson, M.A.

Author of "The Intention of His Soul"

"These studies, which deal with the first eleven chapters of Genesis and with the book of Ecclesiastes, are new as the morning and bright as the day. It is difficult to speak too highly of them."—"Democritus," in the Methodist Times, London.
Price, $2.25. Postage, 10 cents.

THE PILGRIM PRESS
14 Beacon St. BOSTON, MASS. 19 W. Jackson St. CHICAGO, ILL.
At Your Service

The Open Fire

By WILLIAM VALENTINE KELLEY

"A number of splendid essays. They are charming in style and finished in construction. All are delightful."
—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Net, $2.00, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

Our Book Shelf

The Mind of the Master, by John Watson, D.D. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co.

The volume contains fifteen sermons upon important gospel topics. Any minister of today will find food for thought by giving this book a careful reading.

Syllabus for Old Testament Study, by John R. Sampey, D.D., LL.D. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co.

A very helpful arrangement for use by any student of the Bible. The book opens with an outline of lessons and introductory note, then follows "A Syllabus for Study." Towards the close of the volume a valuable bibliography and chronological charts complete the work. The book is worthy of a place in any library.

Revealing Light, by Sidney M. Berry, M.A. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

Twenty topics are discussed in this volume written by a noted English minister. The old faith in a God and Savior is reverently proclaimed in such a way as to meet the needs of modern life. Young people in particular will find much to help them in this book of addresses. Mr. Berry writes "The creed grows out of life. It is not a starting point but a goal. Set out on the pathway of discipleship in the ways of practical living and you also, out of the depths of experience will come to the creed of the prophets and the saints."

Jesus of Nazareth: A Biography, by George A. Barton, Ph.D., LL.D. New York: The Macmillan Company.

To the writing of the biographies of Jesus there seems to be no end, but no one could read this extensive and carefully prepared work of Dr. Barton's without feeling that the author has made a real contribution to this great field. This biography is designed for class-room work among those of adolescent age but is so resourceful and carefully indexed as to be helpful to pastors and teachers as a reference work.

It is in the true sense a biography, being neither apologetic nor critical. Care has been taken in the compilation of the facts of the life of Jesus as furnished by the four Gospels and many points of conflict of evidence have been made clear. Devotedly Dr. Barton goes to the Gospels and, with the inductive method of analysis used in scientific research, endeavors to gain the facts and relate them in a most appealing way. The work is stimulative to constructive thinking and brings one into a very close personal fellowship with Jesus Christ in the daily walks of his life.

The Undiscovered Country, by Caius Glenn Atkins. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

A volume of sermons by the pastor of the First Congregational Church, Detroit. In the introduction the author harbors a doubt of the appreciation of published sermons by the religious public. While we would not relieve him of such a suspicion lest it be well-grounded, we are sure that the sermons of this gifted preacher are an exception to the charge, at least they deserve to be. The volume takes its title from the first sermon. It might be surmised from the subject that it is peculiarly an Easter sermon—a plea for the faith in personal immortality. While the evidences urged are not new there is a freshness and impressiveness about their presentation that make them "old truths in new light." The texts and subjects of the sermons befit the title of the volume. Few of the texts have been discoverable by the average pulpit, and the treatment of each text has been an "undiscovered" feature. This newness is not due to fanciful imagination, but to the unusual spiritual insight and mystic penetration of the preacher. He is loyal to the spiritual consciousness of the believer in religion. In the light of the sermons the reader will discover experiences and emotions in his life which are no less real because they have been "undiscovered." Above all they are loyal to evangelical truth and have an unusual grip on spiritual discernment. We place the volume near by, convenient for frequent perusal and spiritual browsing.

Facing The Crisis, by Sherwood Eddy. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50.

The author has spent more than twenty-five years among the students of the world. He finds that today in every part of the globe in great educational centers the students are facing the same crisis. In the realm of religion and philosophy in industry and society there are questions which will not down. Mr. Eddy believes these inquiring minds have the right to a frank and fearless answer. In the Fonden Lectures for 1922 which make up this volume the author has given us the soul of the gospel message as he understands it. This book is a plea that we face the crisis of our times honestly proving all things and holding fast the good, the true and the beautiful.

"It Is to Laugh"

Does decrease in the number of deaths caused by automobiles indicate that we are being transformed from a nation of jay-walkers into a race of artful dodgers? —Boston Transcript.

A little girl was given a celluloid doll. A short time after when some one asked the doll's name, she replied, "Her name is Sally Lloyd-George."

Upon being introduced to a Chinese ambassador in London a woman given to pretense said:

"Me no speak velly good Chinee."

"Never mind, madam," politely replied the ambassador, "I think I can manage to converse tolerably well in English for half an hour or so."

He pulled in his line, and found—nothing. Several times that day the same thing happened. He had a dull time until, in making another cast, the hook caught in the back of his coat. He went through more evolutions than an expert contortionist to reach that hook. He even tried to rub it out against a tree, but a smart jab in the small of the back soon stopped that.

At last he started in search of some one to extricate it. Five miles he tramped down stream before espying a human being.

"Here, my good man," he called out to a farm hand, "will you be so kind as to take that hook out of my back? I've walked miles and miles trying to find some one to pull the thing out."

"Of course I will, sir," said the farm hand, "but why on earth couldn't ye take yer coat off?"

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

WORDS OF WISDOM

By FRANCES R. GRANT

Perhaps no musicians in this country are more capable of discussing the various aspects of our present educational tendencies than are David and Clara Mannes. For these two musicians, in addition to their wide concert activities, have given constant devotion to the highest ideals of music, and, in the David Mannes Music School, have built up an institution unswerving in its artistic standards.

It was Mrs. Mannes who consented to discuss some features of present-day musical education:

"Music seems to be regarded in the light of something which can be superimposed, in the shortest time possible, on the student, whatever his foundation. There is lacking the realization that all knowledge comes from within; that teachers are only guides, but that accomplishment rests upon the learner. The present false attitude has resulted in an artistic inertia and dependence, instead of giving students the creative freedom and inquisitiveness which education should bestow.

Function of a Musical Education

"The function of a fitting musical education is to provide the student with a foundation so thorough that he will find it an open sesame whereby to search out other musical treasures. Instead of making him an artistic parasite, it should furnish him with a puissant independence. For instance, we would regard as subnormal a person who, after studying for many years, would take up a book and have to spell out the letters laboriously. And yet that is what we are countenancing in music. After studying for years, students still drudge over the reading of their music, instead of grasping it with the intelligence with which the educated person comprehends the printed page. Instrumentalists should be taught to conceive of music apart from their instrument, in the subjective sense, and to study it in its broader meaning. It seems incredible to realize that many pianists, who have studied until they are technically advanced, will be utterly at sea and even lose all that they have acquired, as soon as they leave the teacher's guidance. It demonstrates the futility of the system.

"Even among some advanced students and professionals, who have come to us, this aspect of studying music in its abstract sense and so assimilating it as to make it part of one's very being seems at first incomprehensible. That is why the study of solfège should be emphasized from the very beginning, so that the student learns to read, analyze and grasp the substance.

"Ensemble practice is another great aid to the student in gaining artistic equilibrium. The violinist who thinks of music in the terms of a melodic profile is immeasurably helped by orchestral or chamber music. For here he finds himself only part of a great musical whole; his narrow aspect is widened into a comprehension of the tapestried background of the art. And so with other instrumentalists.

"A great part of the blame for present conditions must be laid to the parents. For it is rarely that parents strive to comprehend this larger ideal in education or to instill it into their children; they neglect to impart to them that notion of actual responsibility toward their work. Much is said here about freedom of education; but we should emphasize that freedom which at the same time makes us mindful of other persons' happiness. The child must be taught to measure his duties to his tasks, as he measures his duties to his government. Parents prefer to consider the teacher as a sage who can pour education into their child; they forget that without proper response and equal effort on the student's side the instructor's efforts are wasted. Parents even show surprise when we tell them we expect the child to work and study when he is away from the school. Teachers can arouse interest and provide the key, but the ultimate result rests upon the pupil, and the grave duty has thus far been neglected by parents of making their children comprehend this. When parents are educated up to this point we will make considerable progress in our American art.

"However, our educational future has its promising side. One of the most encouraging movements in music today, perhaps, is the fact that so great a number of college men have entered the field as a profession. A most remarkable change has permeated the collegian's attitude to the art. Such work as that being carried on by Dr. Davison with the Harvard Glee Club is indicative of the change. Besides there is the definite revelation of this in the fact that our youth is turning to music for its life work. It seems as though in this country we had passed the crest of our commercial and industrial craving, and as though American youth were seeking self-expression in more subjective fields.

"Furthermore, these students are beginning to comprehend that the knowledge of music cannot come in a day. The acquisition of any profession such as law or medicine, requires the devotion of many years of study. Shall we not set aside at least as many years to the preparation for a calling which concerns itself with so subtle a thing as art?—Musical America.

THE ONE-REHEARSAL CHOIR

There are no hard and fast rules as to the number of rehearsals that should be given to the preparation of an anthem before it is sung in public. Not all anthems that are of real worth are difficult; some of them are so simple that they can be mastered easily and be ready for the Sunday service in a single rehearsal. But the choir that confines itself in its rehearsals to that grade of difficulty is setting its ideals too low. A "one-rehearsal choir" will never get anywhere. One can never hope to make much progress without constantly tackling the difficult thing. That is also true in choir work. An anthem that takes at least two or three rehearsals to prepare properly is about of the right grade of difficulty for that choir. With that grade of material it can do its best work and have its best opportunity of development.—Choir Leader.

Says Doctor

Charles W. Gilkey

Minister Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago

"No other religious journal has contributed, either to my thinking, preaching or living, anything like the wealth of guidance and inspiration that I find in The Christian Century."

EDITORIAL STAFF
Charles Clayton Morrison
Herbert L. Willett Orvis F. Jordan
Joseph Fort Newton John R. Ewers
Lynn Harold Hough Edward Shillito
Alva W. Taylor Thomas C. Clark

The Christian Century is distinguished by its candid discussion of living issues in the light of the mind of Christ

Mail Coupon to-day. Foreign postage extra

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY
508 S. Dearborn St., Chicago

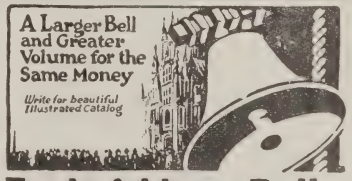
Dear Sirs: Please enter my name (a new subscriber) for a year's subscription to The Christian Century at your regular rate of $4.00 (ministers $3.00). I will remit upon receipt of bill and you will please send me without extra charge a copy of ☐ "The Reconstruction of Religion," by Ellwood, or ☐ "The Crisis of the Churches," by Leighton Parks, or ☐ "The Mind in the Making," by Robinson, or ☐ "What Christianity Means to Me," by Lyman Abbott.



Name .....

Address .....

The Baptist.

LESTER STUDIOS
426 Fine Arts Building, Chicago, Ill.

Special Training for Church Work
Definite work in Voice, Piano and Composition
MARGARET LESTER, Soprano
and
WILLIAM LESTER, Pianist-Organist
Available for Concerts and Special Services
Manuscripts Revised and Corrected
Organ Dedications a Specialty

Fredericktown Bells
The J. B. Foote Foundry Co., 24 Front St., Fredericktown, O.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Our New Educational Policy

(Continued from page 14)

Second: The financial support which has been given the educational program through the New World Movement, has enabled the board of education nearly to treble the number of pastors which it is supporting at the universities to care for the moral and religious interests of our Baptist students. This is one of the most significant and far-reaching ministries which the denomination is rendering today. In the conservation of these young people it is assuring to the church, an increasing group of well-trained ministers and laymen who will be the strength of the church tomorrow.

Third: Convinced that a Christian college furnishes the best atmosphere and environment in which a young man or woman may secure an education, the denomination, through its New World Movement gifts, is strengthening its own schools so that they may give an adequate education—approximating the best—to its own young people. We cannot induce our children to go to our schools unless we can give them as good an education as they can secure elsewhere. We must be able to give them the best.

The rapidly developing interest in education, the increasing number of students, the multiplying cost of education, are all making unprecedented demands on our schools. The timely arrival of the gifts of the New World Movement is helping the colleges greatly in meeting the new situation thrust upon them. The New World Movement came just in time to save several of our schools from most embarrassing situations. We have saved them for a great mission.

By our new educational policy, therefore, we are accomplishing certain very definite and valuable results. First: By reason of their gifts, our people are coming to have a new interest and a new sense of proprietorship in our schools. Men follow their gifts with their hearts. Second: We are no longer leaving to others, but assuming ourselves, the responsibility of furnishing our schools with the equipment and funds which will enable them to give our children the kind of an education we want them to have in the kind of an environment in which we want them to live. Third: By reason of our quickened interest, our declared determination to stand back of our schools, our constant stream of money, small though it is, flowing to our schools, we are binding these schools to the denomination in a way they have never been bound before. We have taken no steps to cement legal ties, but we are binding them by cords that are stronger than steel, the strongest cords in fact that can be forged, the cords of fellowship and gratitude. If we can follow this policy for a season, we shall have a group of schools extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, enjoying all the advantages of independence, but bound into our fellowship with indissoluble ties, an integral part of our denominational life.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 4)

January 23, Dr. Carter Helm Jones of Philadelphia spoke at the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, on his experiences in Czecho-Slovakia.

Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame spoke Sunday, Jan. 21, at Temple Church, Detroit, on "The American Bond." Feb. 4–9, Dr. F. A. Agar will visit the church for instruction and conference. Dr. Taylor, of West China, and Rev. A. H. Gage, of Chicago, were the guests of the church Jan. 22. Rev. Llewellyn Brown is pastor.

The Chicago Baptist Institute will hold a series of B. Y. P. U. courses Monday evenings, Feb. 12–April 16 at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary. The leaders will be Mr. Edwin Phelps, Rev. A. H. Gage, Rev. Jacob Heinrichs, Mrs. Geo. W. Taft, and Rev. Augustine S. Carman. The registration fee is $1. Further information can be secured of John Singleton or President Geo. W. Taft.

The Near East—Down East

(Continued from page 13)

The professor of public speaking acted as official representative of the Lewiston Greeks at a big Venizelist convention in Boston.

In several other ways the influence of this community spirit has spread beyond the bounds of Maine. The development of the annual out-of-door Greek play—always a feature of the Bates commencement— is watched with keen and helpful interest by the Greek citizens. A few years ago the mid-year play of the Phil-Hellenic club was hailed as an annual success. Arrangements were made to take the entire cast to the Greek community of Haverhill, Mass. There it received an enthusiastic reception, not only for the histrionic art displayed, but also for the spirit it typified.

The reception I myself was witnessing, I was told, would be heralded the country over in all the Greek language papers.

How responsive and appreciative these Americans-in-the-making seemed to be! I was shown some of the gifts they had made to their college friends—an expensive silk flag of Greece for the Phil-Hellenic club room, a bust of Olympian Zeus for the college library—and as I witnessed the glow of hospitality on their countenances as they now acted as hosts, I realized that the Bates community must have been free from cant and devoid of hypocrisy. That the work has been so successful was ample proof that the attitude of the leaders in this movement had been anything but patronizing.

"If you were going to preach a sermon upon the work that this scene represents," I asked the Greek professor, "what text could you choose?"

Quick as a flash came the generous answer, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians."

But as I later reviewed the evening in my own mind, I decided that I should choose "For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

Baptist Education Day

Baptist Education Day is to be observed by the denomination February 25th.

On that day we shall thank God for the generous men and women who gave us our Christian schools.

The church will remember its boys and girls who are away at College.

The pastor will preach a sermon on the value of a high education.

The young people will discuss the place of trained Christian leadership in the world's life.

On that day we shall all unite our prayers that God will raise up friends for our schools; that He will keep our colleges loyal to Jesus Christ and all our students loyal to His trust.

If you need material for sermons, addresses or discussions, address

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION
275 Fifth Avenue New York City

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
FEB 10 1923

Volume IV February 10, 1923 No. 2

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Ba nvention

Univ of Ill Libr
Urbana Ill

If Lincoln Spoke To

IF Lincoln, man of tempered mold,
Should speak to us today,
What would his word to us unfold
Of progress in his way?

What would he say of racial strife
'Gainst which he gave his all;
Of selfish greed and lawless life
That heeds not God's high call?

What of the chains we forge anew
In shop and market-place;
The slaves we make to serve the few
Not to uplift the race?

What would he say of bigot's plan
To shackle freedom's mind,
To keep us with the tribe and clan
Traditionally blind?

What healing words for open sores
Left by war's heated breath,
For ills that love alone restores,
While malice gives but death?

O Captain, breaker of men's chains,
Speak to us as of yore
Teach us that only Love reclaims
And heals forevermore.

—Arthur E. Cowley

Fresh from the Field

Rev. J. F. Nix has accepted the call of the First Church, Clovis, N. M. Mr. Nix was formerly pastor of the First Church, Portales.

A Bible for the blind has been printed by the American Bible Society. It requires nineteen volumes, weighs 150 pounds and costs $75 to produce.

Rev. M. Neilson resigned as pastor of the Turtle Creek Church, Pittsburgh, Jan. 31. Mr. Neilson has accepted a call to Toronto, Canada.

Mahlon H. Day, formerly pastor of State Street Church, Rockford, Ill., and until recently field representative of the Canton Christian College, is now state manager of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., for Oregon. His headquarters is Portland.

Rev. L. B. Crosby, pastor at Fort Collins, Colorado, was taken Saturday, Jan. 20, by his wife and doctor, to Rochester, Minn., for a very serious operation at the hands of Mayo Brothers, the church paying all expenses. Brother Crosby did not know he had such a serious trouble until about a week ago.

Rev. Robert Van Meigs of Quincy, Ill., conducted a series of special meetings in the First Church of Carlinville, Ill., which resulted in forty-eight accessions to the church. While in Carlinville, Mr. Meigs addressed the students at Blackburn College, the community high school and the birthday club. The last night of the meeting a men's Christian service club was inaugurated.

The resignation of L. Wilbur Messer, for nearly twenty-five years general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Chicago, has attracted wide attention and brought forth a wealth of expressions of appreciation of his character and ability as an executive. Mr. Messer has seen the membership of the Chicago association grow from 2,000 to 25,000, and his efforts to extend the work on the community plan have resulted in well-equipped buildings at strategic points throughout the city. These buildings, thirteen in number, are valued at more than $6,500,000.

It will be of interest to the readers of THE BAPTIST to learn that the first Baptist church erected in Austria has been opened and dedicated during the past month. Until the signing of the peace treaty Baptists had no legal right of existence in Austria and the work of the Vienna church was carried on only through a succession of legal evasions, meeting in a hall under the guise of temperance workers. The Vienna church has acquired property and work will be commenced immediately. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. A. Wiegand of Vienna and the public officials of the district were present.

A great atlas of the Milky Way, which has been in preparation for twenty years at the Yerkes Observatory on Lake Geneva, is now ready for publication. By a photographic method developed at the observatory, the distances of 250 stars have been determined with an accuracy not previously attainable; and Prof. A. A. Michelson, head of the department of physics, has successfully applied the interferometer to the measurement of the diameter of the stars. Prof. Leonard E. Dickson, of the department of mathematics, has produced a monumental history of the theory of number.

Rev. A. L. Hendrix, formerly of Tremonton, Utah, has accepted the call of First Church, Cle Elum, Wash.

Rev. Arnold E. Look began his work as pastor of the Upland Church, Upland, Pa., Feb. 1. Mr. Look was pastor at the Hebron Church, Philadelphia.

The Emmanuel Church, Ridgewood, N. J., is conducting a winter evening college which began Feb. 1 and will continue six weeks. The subjects are Bible study, the kingdom task, church school methods and choices and life. The latter course is for young people. Rev. Thomas H. Sprague is pastor.

Alva J. Brasted, formerly pastor at Lisbon, N. D., Montevidio, Minn., and Ft. Dodge, Iowa, and for the last ten years chaplain in the regular army, is now divisional chaplain of the Second Division and post chaplain at Fort Sam Houston, Tex. Since the union of Camp Travis and Fort Sam Houston, this is the largest military center in the United States. Chaplain Brasted is one of the chaplain missionaries of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Lincoln, the Dreamer

HE knew the curse of poverty,
But lighted by his dream,
He heeded not the clouds of night
That covered him. The gleam
Of high ambition led him on Through cruel years of fate
Until he entered, heaven-led,
The pathway of the great.

He found, amid the sloughs of youth,
A path of blessedness,
And, as he walked the stony road
Of eminent success,
He kept his lofty dream of truth,
Nor left her righteous way
Until the crown of martyrdom
Brought sunset to his day.

O tender ruler of our hearts,
Bequeath to us the grace
That shone from heaven's inmost shrine
Upon thy saintly face.
On selfishness and greed and pride
We rear our mighty state:
Inspire in us again the dream
That made thy leading great.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

According to the "Baptist Times and Freemen": we have a large and prosperous Baptist church in Gelsenkirchen, one of the towns in the Ruhr district just occupied by the French. It was founded by emigrants from East Prussia in 1887 with a membership of 130. In 1893 Herr Broda, a student from Hamburg College, became the pastor, and under his charge the church has prospered greatly. Today it has splendid buildings, free of debt, a membership of 1,100, and three Sunday schools with 700 scholars.

Mrs. Jessie H. Pratt, widow of Rev. W. C. Pratt, died at Modesto, Calif., Dec. 29 at the age of ninety-one. With her husband, twelve years were spent in pastorates in Illinois and thirty-four in Iowa. Notwithstanding her advanced age, Mrs. Pratt was interested in all missionary movements. She was the oldest delegate present at the Golden Jubilee of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society in Oakland, June, 1921. She maintained her work in the local church and on the last Sunday of her life taught her Bible class in the Modesto church.

Recently Rev. W. T. Lowrey, president of Blue Mountain College, Miss., delivered the Julius Brown Gay Foundation lecture at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. His subject was "The Minister as a Man Among Men."

The women of First Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., raised $1,045 for the Union Women's Colleges in the Orient. Altogether Poughkeepsie has contributed over $11,000 which makes it possible for the Missionary Federation to erect a building in Tokio.

The South Church, Lansing, Mich., has extended a call to Rev. N. F. Douty of Gilman, Ill., to become its acting pastor during the absence of Rev. C. H. Heaton, who has resigned temporarily because of ill health. Mr. Douty was formerly a member of the South Church and was ordained there last June. Mr. Heaton and his family have gone south by automobile to remain four months or more.

Rev. Robert W. Shaw, who has been at the South Church in Milwaukee for almost four years, recently intimated to his church that he would close his work with them, now that the first unit of the new building is assured. However, sufficient pressure has been brought to bear upon him by his own church, the Milwaukee Baptists and the state leaders, so that on Sunday, Jan. 28, he announced his reconsideration of the matter, and his intention of remaining with the church in order to lead them in the important work of establishing themselves in the new field and of finishing the building.

The topic for February in our Promotional Program is "Our Bible." In connection with this topic every one who has not read "The Bible and Missions" by Mrs. W. A. Montgomery should do so. This book had a wide circulation a year or so ago, but there are probably a good many who have not yet read it. In connection with this book women's societies will appreciate a fine devotional service entitled "The Word and World Wide Missions." Both the book and the devotional service can be secured from the General Board of Promotion at any of the literature bureaus.

The largest single Bible order ever placed by any organization in the United States, perhaps in the world, has been given by the American Bible Society to a firm in New York City. 1,500,000 volumes of Scripture portions consisting of the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the Book of Acts, and the Book of Proverbs in English and Spanish constitute this order. These little books are to be uniform in size, sixty-four pages each, with a separate heavy cover, and will be sold throughout the United States and South America for one cent each. This is the first time since the war period that the society has been able to produce these volumes at this price. Before the first deliveries had been made advance orders to the number of 800,000 had been received.

(Continued on page 36)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., February 10, 1923 No. 2

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.
REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.
SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.
ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.
CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.
BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

Page

FRESH FROM THE FIELD....34
EDITORIAL....37
THE BAPTIST OUTLOOK, by Eri B. Hulbert....40
WHY I BELIEVE IN THE BIBLE, by Robert Gordon....44
ARE THE SCRAPS SUFFICIENT? by Chester H. Howe....45
WHAT WE COULD DO IF WE HAD THE MONEY, by Charles Alvin Brooks....46
THEREFORE, PRAY, by Helen B. Montgomery....46
GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION STATEMENT....47
YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK....48
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION....49
THE CHIMNEY CORNER....50
OUR OWN FOLKS....52
OUR BOOK SHELF....62
OUR MUSIC CORNER....63
A GUARANTEED MINIMUM PENSION, by E. T. Tomlinson..64

Saturated With Other Things

W. P. Bristow, pastor of the First Church, Prescott, Ariz., writes:

"In regard to the question raised by Dr. H. K. Carroll as to why there should be less than half a million circulation of the denominational papers among our 8,000,000 Baptists, I am of the opinion that our much-loved and oft-quoted doctrine of predestination has something to do with it. With a comfortable seat in the Chariot of Predestination, why worry about reading the denominational paper? Our salvation is assured anyhow. Some such frame of mind is more prevalent among the Baptist brotherhood than we have yet dreamed of.

Killam's Kollum

Such people need something to jar them loose from that easy chair.

"But the greater reason, to my mind, for the relatively small circulation of Baptist newspapers, and not only Baptist, but all other denominational and religious papers, is that sweeping deluge each week of the great Sunday daily, that reaches out into every hamlet and village, and the countryside as well, even carried by burros where the auto or stage cannot go.

"What chance does the little 8, 16, or 32-page denominational paper stand in competition with 110 pages of the most fascinating, alluring, enticing and bewitching material that Satan, with the help of the ingenious mind of man, can compile?

"When this pile of printed matter, enfolded in a brilliant vari-colored outer garment, is hurled at the front door on Sunday morning, it's goodbye Bible, Sunday-school lesson, denominational paper, and everything else, until that man-made mass—or mess—of worldliness, is at least partially digested.

"There are eight pages of funnies for the kiddies, the magazine section for father, society page for mother, daughter grabs the style sheets, while brother scans the automobile and pink sporting pages. No wonder they are all late for Sunday school and church.

"It takes the whole family a week to digest that pile of rubbish. By the time they are through with it another Sunday rolls around and they are ready for a fresh supply. Of course the denominational weekly stands no chance where the Sunday daily reigns supreme, as it does in so many of our Baptist homes.

"The Sunday daily stands in the same relation to the denominational weekly as the 'movie' does to the church; the 'movie' gets the members, and the 'daily' gets the 'dough.'

"The above may not be a correct answer to the question raised by Dr. Carroll, but I am of the opinion that it is getting somewhere in the neighborhood of the truth, at least."

Is this the answer? If it is what are we going to do about it? Will the material of the "110" pages stimulate the desire to be good and good for something? Will the "pink" pages tend to make that boy a preacher or a pugilist? Dempsey can get $500,000 for a few minutes of hard hitting. What will the average preacher get if he hit hard? Pastor, if you want to be a martyr just insist that Christian parents owe it to their families and to themselves to feed the minds of the household upon more nourishing material than the average daily paper. These families ought to have the denominational paper at least as an antidote.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 34)

Baptist of Illinois, Attention!

Baptists of Illinois are invited to attend the meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and a Bible and Missionary Conference to be held in connection with the board meeting, in Chicago. The meetings on Monday will be held in the Morrison Hotel and the Central Y. M. C. A. The meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday will be held in the Belden Avenue Church. Any Baptist will find a hearty welcome at any and all of the public sessions. A number of churches will send the pastor and his wife and other representatives. Remember the dates, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, February 12-14.

Rev. A. L. McMillan of Appleton, Wis., has accepted the pastorate of the church at West Allis, a suburb of Milwaukee.

Rev. J. J. Wicker a well-known evangelist of Richmond, Va., is arranging a number of tours in connection with the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm. His announcement is in another column.

The rumor is abroad that the Baptist World Alliance meeting in Stockholm has been called off on account of the present European conditions. Dr. P. C. Wright, secretary of the committee to promote attendance, writes: "The rumor is absolutely without foundation."

There are more than forty building projects under way, or being planned by the Protestant churches of Rochester, N. Y. All of these building programs have been referred to the committee on comity of the federation of church of that city. This is a decided improvement over the old competitive plans.

The alumni and friends of Hillsdale College held their annual dinner in New York the last week in January. The attendance was large. President Emeritus J. W. Mauck introduced President William Gear Spencer who spoke on the contribution of the Christian college to education and life in America.

Word comes of the death of William L. Eaton at his home in Rockford, Ill., after a painful illness of six months. The class of 1875 at Kalamazoo College had but three members, Lemuel C. Barnes, Mary Clark who became Mrs. Barnes, and W. L. Eaton, their worthy though less widely known classmate. Mr. Eaton devoted his life to editorial work, for a few years in Kalamazoo, then for a generation in Rockford. He was a man of wide and accurate information, admirable gifts of judgment and expression, and had a quiet, kindly personality which won for him rare and lasting friendships. He was a valued member of the State Street Church, Rockford, and served the denomination as moderator of the Rock River Association, as an aid in the million dollar campaign and in other of its undertakings. His wife, who was Helen Colman of Kalamazoo, died nine years ago. Two sons and two daughters survive them.

Though the pledges of the John Mahan English Lectureship Fund of the alumni of Newton Theological Institution have not been fully paid, it has been decided by the alumni committee to inaugurate the series this year. Professor English has been invited to give the first course. The general subject will be "The Pastoral Ministry." The lectures will be delivered this month and next.

The executive work of the late Dean Llewellyn Phillips and of Pres. Emory W. Hunt, of Bucknell University, the latter having gone to Battle Creek, Mich., to find relief from sciatica, is being performed by Dr. Joseph R. Wood, who last fall was made assistant to the president. Dr. Wood is a Bucknell graduate of the class of '94 who served several pastorates in Pennsylvania, as a "Y" man during the war, and held positions on the executive branches of the denomination before being called to Bucknell.

Nearly a third of all the contributions to the University of Chicago have come from citizens of Chicago, according to President Harry Pratt Judson in his recent address at the public library celebration of "Fifty Years of Cultural Progress in Chicago." The funds of the university have been given by various generous donors, and of the total gifts of upwards of fifty millions, fifteen millions have come from citizens of Chicago. The interesting statement was also made that the University expends annually approximately $3,300,000, all of which of course is disbursed in Chicago. In addition to the expenditures of the university are those of the students, who last year numbered over 12,000.

SAVING THE CITY

The majority of the people in America now live in cities. The city is the center of trade, the home of wealth, the hub from which the influential press radiates its potent influence. By saving the cities of America, you will save America.

To Provide Adequate Church Accommodation

for these great and changing cities is one part of the stupendous task of our City Mission Societies. Many well equipped plants in down town sections must be abandoned. To construct new plants in residential sections where Sunday schools must be developed and the members of our future churches trained, requires staggering sums.

Such changes mean the breaking of organizations, the severing of strong sentimental ties, the making of new alignments, and the incurring of heavy financial losses. These changes must be made and new churches established in order to save the cities.

Institutional Churches, Social Settlements and Mission Stations

adapted to serve the great down town sections from which our well organized churches are removing, must be organized and financed. Many of these will be a drain upon our resources but they will be great assets to the Kingdom. These changes are costly but they will help save the city.

In many cities such as Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland and New York, The New World Movement Has Made some of these necessary adjustments possible. The money expended will provide a home base from which to finance future denominational enterprises.

Help Save The City

THE ASSOCIATION OF STANDARD CITY MISSION SOCIETIES

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

Northern Baptists on the March

CLIMBING a mountain we pause half-way to the peak to look back. Midway of a long campaign we take time to compare the paper plan of our beginning with the actual eventualities and attainments of the course. Then, facing failures without dismay and victories without undue elation, we sum up the situation and outlook, no longer on the basis of expectation but now on that of experience. We may forthwith set out for the consummation of the campaign, as veterans knowing the territory we travel, adjusted to our accoutrements, toughened to the hardships of the campaign, alert to the tactics of the enemy.

There is a fine sense of fitness therefore in the issuance at this time by our General Board of Promotion of a manual complementary to the Survey which in 1919 was largely the occasion of the New World Movement. The new manual takes the campaign at this midway point and frankly looks the facts in the face, reckoning up the gains and the losses or negative results. Each division of the denominational army is made to march up for inspection and to give account of itself, until the entire army, the whole area of campaign and the complete record are before us. It is a searchlight illuminating the way behind and then turned on the coming course; it is a reminder of our enlistment vows and an impulse toward carrying the campaign all the way through to completion.

An advance copy of this manual of eighty-five pages has been sent to THE BAPTIST. It bears the simple but significant title "On the March" and its cover carries the beautiful emblem of our campaign—a globe swinging in space, its darkness illumined by radiance from a shining cross. The margin of each page has some single pertinent line of quotation, illuminating the context like a ray of light. The manual is an admirable and deeply interesting piece of work, though this is wholly incidental to its serious purpose, the presenting of a full and truthful report of conditions in our great denominational campaign. We believe that it will produce a profound impression, and that it should convince even those who are not too anxious to be convinced, that magnificent results have been already attained and that there is every reason for pushing the fight to a finish. THE BAPTIST purposes to make much use of the new manual in this and succeeding numbers, and our people will everywhere wish to secure copies for themselves at the earliest possible moment. It should be studied and mastered by multitudes of us, as was the Survey.

When the first intensive campaign ended without achieving its full goal, and when the following period of financial stress and the combination of opposition and pessimism encountered by the board still further hampered its operations, the result was naturally a condition which called, and still calls, for constant appeal on behalf of our missionary work and for the frankest statement of the difficulties which face it. Some who have been loyal supporters of the work, and much more those lukewarm in their allegiance, may have thought of our New World Movement as now a sort of forlorn hope, verging on bankruptcy out of which we may hope only to save the remnants. "On the March" shows that, despite the difficulties which confront it, the work of our Northern Baptists is not only in no danger of dissolution but has made most substantial gains in assets, in equipment, in converts and in more adequate recognition of our obligations.

It shows also the peril of a partial success; for when certain designated gifts for much-needed hospitals, schools, and missionary residences, as called for by the Survey, were made by generous individuals or churches, these have been erected; but failure to complete the general fund has left the upkeep of the new buildings unprovided for, so that it must be taken from the already inadequate funds of the foreign societies or in some instances these much-needed new gifts be left unutilized for lack of means to operate them. Then, too, the completion of the full amount would have provided for the whole work on an equal scale, while its partial completion leaves some portions of the field provided for by the designated gifts but allows other equally deserving fields to remain in want. The most tragic feature of the situation is the fact that many missionaries are detained in America for lack of funds to send them to and support them in their fields.

YET in spite of everything the showing for the first three years of the campaign is a remarkable one which should stir the denomination to deep gratitude—mingled with shame—and should incite it to a final, irresistible effort. The story of the New World Movement in its relation to the state conventions which are the chief constituent factors of the denomination; to the city mission societies who are fighting lest the devil get the cities; to the work of our foreign and home mission societies whose field is America and the world; to our publication society with its manifold work for old and young; to the ministers' and missionaries' benefit board, the one object which has passed its original goal; and the remarkable report of what has been accomplished for education—all constitute a thrilling tale of achievement in spite of difficulties. At the end are several pages given to a full, precise, luminous statement of the financial results of the campaign of three (in reality only two) years.

Get your copy of "On the March" as soon as possible. It should set the whole Baptist army of the North marching on the double-quick.

Four Engagements—II

THE second spacious room of relationship in our church covenant is that of personal religion—constant contact with the Creator, and its resulting influence upon our daily associations with family, friends and folks in general. It follows the pointed paragraph on church obligations and brings church relationship down to the core—real heart worship. "We also engage to maintain family and secret devotion." What a force we Baptists could be right now in the world if all our members who voluntarily assumed this engagement with God would keep their tryst! Family and secret devotion! The family altar; daily devotion; alone with the Alone; practising the presence of God; thinking the thoughts of God after him; "dwelling in the secret place of the Most High"! Maintain these—family and secret devotion—and it would indeed be "day by day in every way we are getting better and better," not by "kidding" ourselves à la Coué, but by using a vital force sanctified by centuries: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Closely upon the heels of "secret devotion" spreads the circle to "educate our children religiously," then to "seek the salvation of our kinsfolk and acquaintances," hence to the larger group of people with whom we live and work, till it attains unto the limitless eternity of God's purpose for the world: "to be zealous in our efforts to advance the kingdom of our Saviour." If the pebble drops short of the pool the stagnant surface will not undulate and the shore will be unlapped; if there is no starting point of "secret devotion" the stagnant soul will silently settle and "the kingdom of our Saviour" will be advanced not an iota. All the essays, sermons, homilies and songs ever written will but feebly move people to "walk circumspectly in the world and avoid . . . excessive anger," as against the dynamic force of "secret devotion." Hypocrites may pray in the market place and temple area to fool their fellows, but no one prays insincerely in secret, for, though we may fool ourselves we usually have sense enough to know that we cannot fool God.

"To educate our children religiously"—every Baptist should do this. "Every child has a right to be well born," says the sociologist: "every child has a right to be reborn," says the soteriologist. The religious training of the children of Baptists is vital, for our churches do not make any special efforts to receive children into membership and follow them up in the name of the denomination, after the manner of other Christian bodies. The rank and file of our Baptist constituency must be taught to teach their children the Word of God and the fundamental Baptist principle. If only this were achieved any covenant emphasis we might make in our churches would be infinitely worth while.

"To be exemplary in our deportment; to avoid all tattling and backbiting"—toning down our natural tendency to the sin that inundates us with its flood and tuning up our Christian lives to him who "saves us with his blood." Let us pull out of the past and vitalize by the living power of the present this wonderful document, the church covenant! Let it live, and let us live it!

Not The "Only" Dividends

HERBERT KAUFMAN in an editorial in the Chicago American says of our part in the world war: "We came back with empty knapsacks and empty ranks. We brought along no new boundary lines, no conquered territory. The sad and only dividends from that investment are taxes and tombstones and ingratitude."

"Only" spoils the statement. It makes it untrue. We did not go after new boundary lines and conquered territory. We expressly repudiated such a purpose before we crossed the sea. We are taxed. We have tombstones and perhaps some ingratitude, but these are not the "only dividends."

In taking our place in that terrible conflict we saved our self-respect—our soul, if you will Never was there in our land such a period of unselfish purpose and high ideals as that just preceding and following our entrance into the war.

We are taxed, and the bitter taste comes from the knowledge that no small part of that burden is due to waste, mismanagement and corruption of our own people. Millions of money, Uncle Sam's investigation has shown, were taken fraudulently by unscrupulous contractors and corporations. This should not, however, blind us to the unselfishness and heroism of the rank and file of the people who honestly attempted to do their bit—some of them at the supreme sacrifice.

The "ingratitude" is in no small measure manufactured and peddled by small-souled political demagogues. Was there shown ingratitude to our special Baptist representatives as they visited all sections of Europe? America—Christian America—still has its opportunity to serve and bless every stricken country over which war clouds still hang. We can afford to close our ears to those who criticise our relief efforts. We have sent millions upon millions in money, food and clothing. We will send millions more. Money spent to save the lives of little children; to rebuild the homes of Europe and to restore its agriculture and industry is seed from which it is impossible to reap a harvest of hatred and revenge. Such expenditure yields more than temporary good will. The indemnity returned to China years ago is still bringing in dividends of untold value. We will pay our taxes; we will forever make pilgrimages to the places where white slabs mark the resting place of those who died and such ingratitude as may exist we will forgive, for it is the result of exhausted public mind. We may have taxes, tombstones and ingratitude as a result of our part in the world war but these are not the "only dividends." Christian America knows better.

A Page of Opinion

Baptist Prophets

THE roots of our Baptist present are not far back in our Baptist past. This we have shown from time to time in recent months by reproducing messages of Baptist prophets of the near past. The publication of the address of Dr. A. H. Strong delivered at the May meetings in 1904, made a deep impression and called forth considerable correspondence. In a lesser degree the same has been true in the case of other teachers and preachers who have been made to speak again through the pages of THE BAPTIST.

It would be difficult to find a more forceful message than that of Dean E. B. Hulbert, delivered several years before his death and printed in the Standard twenty-six years ago. So striking is the fulfillment of his prophecies that we are reproducing the article in full. More than a quarter of a century ago this clear-visioned teacher analyzed the denominational situation. He granted that there was no such thing as static Baptist belief and practice. He made clear that party lines do not divide Baptists on what are commonly accepted as Baptist principles, the Christian Century notwithstanding. "All Baptists believe and will probably continue to believe in immersion, believers' baptism, a regenerate church membership, the memorial character of the Lord's Supper, local church independency, separation of church and state, soul liberty." Party lines do not divide us, nor are they likely to, on the great fundamental, saving and moral truths.

Baptists do disagree the minute they enter the domain of metaphysics, of speculative philosophy, of historical inquiry, of dogmatic theology, of scientific discovery, of literary criticism.

At that time, two parties were "beginning" to appear —the "conservatives," standing for old beliefs and practices; the "progressives," a new party until recently conservatives, who were beginning to feel the spell of the newer educational methods. Dr. Hulbert asks, "Will they fight or will they be gracious to each other?" If they fight, ostracize, undenominationalize each other, no one can foretell the lengths to which the contest may be carried. If the two parties are gracious they will help each other and the denomination. What is your spirit toward those with whom you differ?

Can the United States Criticise France?

THE reparations controversy is now between France on the one hand and the German industrialists on the other. The occupation of the Ruhr was prompted by economic rather than political motives. When the Armistice was signed we should not forget, one-sixteenth of the soil of France was devastated by her neighbor, Germany. According to promises made at Versailles Germany agreed to pay the reparations. France suffered a loss amounting to 102,000,000,000 francs. She has expended 44,000,000,000 in seeking to restore the damage and Germany has put in 4,000,000,000. France was restless and faced bankruptcy unless the agreements were fulfilled. "America of all nations should be the last to find fault with France for entering Germany to enforce her reparations," says the news letter of the World Alliance for International Friendship. "Had America been a member of the League of Nations, France could have been restrained." The most disquieting part of the whole situation is that this action on the part of France means a widening of the chasm between the two countries. We cannot have peace in Europe with France and Germany at swords' points.

Dollars Decide Destiny

THE medical association of Jackson county, Missouri, issued a bulletin recently in which the members of that body declared:

"No one stands for vice. Nobody sits up nights to protect it. If vice were not a producer of profits there would be no difficulty in suppressing it. The real center of the vice question is not vice. . . . It has never been a question of vice. . . . It is a question of dollars, profits, revenue. Vice, alone, is a subject that is mentioned only in whispers in polite society, and the word is not known in the vocabulary of those having access to the 'inner circle.' Those who think the meat of the vice question is vice are fooling themselves, and those who think the effective way to rid a locality of vice is to fight vice are wasting their time and money.

"Don't lose sight of the fact that vice makes dollars. Dollars make votes. Dollars buy drinks. Dollars pay all kinds of 'bills.' Dollars will also make bonds and provide legal protection for those 'in trouble.' The Lord only knows what dollars won't do in this country."

Japan Returns Shantung

ONE of the most encouraging signs of the adoption of a new international ideal among the nations is the restoring of Shantung to China by Japan. It took a good deal of argument and negotiation at the Washington Conference but Japan acted very generously and courteously in the whole matter as a recent editorial in the New York Times remarked: "The only real pressure brought to bear upon Japan was moral and in creating this power the churches in America played an important part."

The condition of Shantung is far from happy, but this instance of political action which has not been at all common in the history of nations should be noticed and all credit given to Japan. Perhaps it is no credit to be good, but it does take some superabundance of goodness, considering the ethical standards of nations in the past, to do an act of this sort.

The Baptist Outlook

The theology of the future will make Christ more central and regnant, will seek more the spirit than the letter of the Bible, will shape itself to the needs of this life as truly as to the life beyond.

By the Late DEAN ERI B. HULBERT

IN time past marked changes have occurred in the beliefs and practices of American Baptists. In time present changes more rapid and radical are taking place. In time future Baptists will differ from us even more than we differ from our fathers.

This shifting of denominational position creates among our people conflicting opinions. Some see in it a departure from New Testament ideals, others a return to them. With some it betokens retrogression, with others progress. Some dare not even touch the Bible and are sure it is about to be injured; others dare not let it alone and are equally sure it is about to get fresh vigor and strength. Some fear the foundations are being removed, others are confident they are being settled. Some turn to the past and would hold back, others hail the future and would push ahead.

These diverse views are breaking our Baptist brotherhood into parties. Already the line of separation is becoming so definite and fixed that preachers and churches are arraying themselves or being arrayed on one side or the other. Party names are being given or assumed. "Conservative" and "progressive" are beginning to be so employed. Perhaps these terms will remain. Neither is a term of reproach. Each stands for a great and even necessary idea.

We shall be helped in presaging the future of our denomination by noting some points in which conservative and progressive Baptists agree and some points in which they differ.

Baptists Agree

Party lines do not divide us, and are not likely to, on what are commonly accepted as our distinctive principles. All Baptists believe and will probably continue to believe in immersion, believers' baptism, a regenerate church membership, the memorial character of the Lord's Supper, local church independency, separation of church and state, soul-liberty. Perhaps increasing numbers are and will be less tenacious of the logical order of the ordinances than formerly. Perhaps increasing numbers are not positively sure of the binding authority of our simple, pure, congregational government. However evident in the New Testament writings and however suited to the first century, it may be less suited to the twentieth, and there is no explicit command. Perhaps increasing numbers suspect that while in theory the Baptists are stout believers in soul-liberty there is no denomination harder on its members if they are rash enough to exercise it. With these slight modifications all Baptists see eye to eye, and are likely to, on our distinctive principles. They will be held as intelligently and tenaciously in the future as in the past, only less belligerently, with less acrimony, emphasis being laid on points of agreement with other denominations more than on points of difference.

A Common Faith

Party lines do not divide us, and are not likely to, on the great fundamental, saving and moral truths of Christianity. Those truths which lie under all religion, those in which consists the saving efficacy of the gospel, those which give breath and form to a life pleasing to God, all Baptists heartily accept and defend. Over the central and vital principles of the Christian religion, the experimental acceptance of which renews the soul and the ethical outworkings of which render the renewed life worthy and useful, Baptists have never entered into controversy. They hold a common faith concerning the basal verities of our religion, and speak a common language concerning its graces, duties and rewards. When all non-essentials are stripped away and all is reduced to original simplicity and necessity, Baptists, in the future as in the past, will confess a common creed. They have never questioned any primary, saving and morally essential truth of the gospel, and they show no disposition to do so. We may believe, therefore, that Baptists will never divide on those distinctive principles which separate them from other communions, nor on those simple, ultimate, evangelical verities which unite them with all true believers.

Troubles begin to appear and divisive opinions to arise when we enter the domain of metaphysics, of speculative philosophy, of historical inquiry, of dogmatic theology, of scientific discovery, of literary criticism. Here the Baptists are no longer one. In our ranks the division is less apparent than in some other denominations, but it is no less real. The lines are being drawn and the party spirit is gaining strength. Already the things in which we disagree are being more talked about and emphasized than those greater things in which we stand together. Talk and emphasis are passing on to criticism and censure. In the near future every intelligent layman and minister will place himself or be placed in one or other of two well-defined parties. Even now the marks are plain enough for descriptive purposes. The very names assumed or imposed, which begin to be heard, are in part descriptive.

The conservatives are the old party. They stand for the old beliefs and practices. They constitute a large body of brethren who wish things to remain about as they have been and are. We hear them saying: "The opinions we cherish, and in the strength of which we have lived, were bequeathed to us by spiritual fathers who loved God and served their generation, and ought by us to be handed down to our sons, who, in turn, should pass them on to children's children. Opinions tested by time, entertained by the wisest and best of men, taught us and, in turn, taught by us in home and church and school, only recently called in question by a few zealots eager for innovation and change; opinions such as these we shall still maintain and defend." A generation ago this conservative party embraced nearly the entire Baptist brotherhood. There was only here and there an erratic, sporadic case of deviation from the recognized standards. Probably now the party enrols the great majority of American Baptists.

The New Party

The progressives are the new party. Not long ago they, too, were conservatives, but they have been touched by influences which have thrown them out of sympathy with the old order of things. These Baptists with new ideas, though not as numerous as Baptists of the old type, seem to be increasing, and already constitute a fair body of brethren who are not at all content to have things remain as they were and are. This discontent has been created and nourished by the new thought that has spread abroad since the beginning of the last half of the present century. The marvelous progress in the domain of natural and physical science, the recently promulgated theories of evolution, the philosophical and theological speculations imported from Germany, the reconstructed apologetical literature adapted to present-day exigencies, the discoveries in the ruins of ancient oriental dynasties, the studies in comparative philology and in comparative religion, the new way of conceiving and writing history, the new canons of literary criticism, the new outlook in the realms of ethics, the new science of sociology and the new humanitarian activities — this new world of new thought in the midst of which we are living has profoundly moved some of our Baptist brothers. It has not merely changed their point of view and given them a new center of observation, it has well-nigh revolutionized the very substance of their thinking. They do not look at things as they once did.

Radical Transformation

Mere modification of conception has passed over to radical transformation. They are not able to analyze the process by which this change has come about. It certainly has not been in the main by a conscious, deliberate dropping of old ideas, but rather in the main by an unconscious passing over into a new world in which the old ideas cannot survive. Notions for which they would once have laid down their lives are notions for which they would not now lift a finger. They have either ceased to be true to them or have lost their interest and importance. The whole subject of religion is now looked upon in the light of the new learning. There is not a time-honored belief which must not submit itself to fresh scrutiny. In the ecumenical creeds we have not the final word on the points of which they treat. The doctrinal statements of the Westminster divines need revision. The five points of Calvinism are not as delightfully clear and sure and comforting as they once seemed. Indeed, Calvinism, by a process of dilution, seems likely to weaken itself out of the world. Mediaevalism and traditionalism can no longer command respect and assent simply because they are wrinkled and gray.

The progressives, living in this new world of new thought, give a new statement or a new emphasis to nearly every article of religion. They have a new conception of God, of his goodness and glory. His sheer sovereignty and decrees fall into the background, and his moral excellence, beauty, and common Fatherhood fill the vision. They have a new conception of Christ as the express image of his Father's person and the perfect revelation of his thought and love; and of Christ's work in man's behalf as designed to meet the necessities and aspirations of his entire being—body, mind, soul—for time and eternity, in earth and in heaven. They have a new conception of man, of his creation

> THE truth has nothing to fear from the fullest inquiry. It can never suffer by examination. Therefore the truth we hold, the other party can turn bottom side up and inside out, search it, scrutinize and analyze it, try it to their heart's content and their wit's end. If it is really the truth they have no power to destroy it. No crucible can be hot enough to injure gold. If, perchance, dross is there, let the fires burn it out.

in God's image, and his boundless possibilities of growth in the likeness of his Creator, Father and Savior. They have a new conception of the Bible. They have ceased to believe that it was dictated in a mechanical way, and that its chief design was to furnish proof-texts in polemical theology. They have parted with many of the traditional notions of the authorship, structure, and purpose of the sacred books. They maintain that no theory of inspiration has yet been advanced which covers the facts, and that their reconstructed Bible is a book more human and divine, more consistent and rational, more helpful and inspiring than the traditional volume. Living in this new, modern, up-to-date world, they think their view of all truth is broader, profounder, more in accord with fact, more soul-satisfying, more helpful to man and more honoring to God.

So it has come to pass in our denomination that we have or are about to have two parties differing widely in their views of the Bible, and on many of the dogmas of speculative theology, yet claiming to be loyal Baptists, and professing their distinctive principles, and agreeing perfectly on the really central and vital things of revealed religion—the fundamental, saving, and ethical truths of the Christian system.

In presaging the future of our denomination, the supreme question is, What is to be the attitude of these parties toward each other? If they are to fight, ostracise, undenominationalize each other, then presently conservatives and progressives will not be on speaking terms. If the old and the new are to fight it will be a fight all along the line, among pastors, between schools, in churches, associations, conventions, national societies. It will extend to our young people, seminaries, mission fields, religious press, to all our organized denominational activities. Many will tire of the conflict and pass over to other more strait-laced or liberal communions, or will try to propagate their views by independent movements. Old and new will wage a war of extermination and neither will live to gain the satisfaction of having destroyed the other. If both parties are to invite and keep up a satanic spirit Satan will deservedly get them both in the end, and perforce, the denomination will go to the devil.

The Christly Spirit

On the other hand, if the evil spirit is exorcised, and a Christly spirit takes its place, then the two parties can each help the other and both can help the denomination. This good spirit will lead each party to see that in the other the real leaders, pastors, teachers, intelligent laymen, are sincere Christians, holding the distinctive Baptist tenets, pledged to the essentials of evangelical religion, anxious to have God honored, souls saved, the church established and Christ's kingdom widened. Of intelligence, unsullied character, the spirit of inquiry, love of truth, fair mindedness, neither party has the monopoly.

This good spirit will lead each party to say, the truth has nothing to fear from the fullest inquiry. It can never suffer by examination. Therefore the truth we hold the other party can turn bottom side up and inside out, search it, scrutinize and analyze it, try it to their heart's content and their wit's end. If it is really truth, they have no power to destroy it. No crucible can be hot enough to injure gold. If perchance dross is there, let the fires burn it out.

This good spirit will lead each party to vie with the other in the exercise of a tolerant temper. The Baptists have taught the other denominations and the Christian world what toleration is, and now we will not violate the letter and spirit of it against our own brethren. In every decade of our history we have suffered in some part of the world from the intolerant spirit of the professed disciples of Christ. We have felt the injustice of it. We have protested against the iniquity of it. We have warned our adversaries that they could never win their cause by the exercise of it. We have by unyielding, persistent and patient suffering gained the victory over it. Today we stand before the world as the triumphant champions and defenders of toleration; and today we will not belie our antecedents by turning with intolerant zeal against our own brethren who happen to be so unfortunate as to be poorer theologians than ourselves.

A Campaign of Education

This good spirit will lead both parties to confess that truth never emerges except by agitation. What the theological world is always needing is a campaign of education. Bring the conflicting opinions into the arena of open debate. Give all sides a fair hearing. Investigate as fully and freely and deeply as you please, and bring the result to public notice. The time is past for repression, which will only beget suspicion which in time will harden into distrust and disbelief. Up with it and out with it. Then let objections reasonably urged be given a fair hearing and be reasonably met. The distractions created by divided opinions are only temporary, the resultant good is permanent. Therefore let opposing notions grapple. The issue cannot be doubtful. Free discussion is the life of knowledge and the death of falsehood.

When this good spirit leads each party to recognize the honesty and ability of the other, leads each party believing that truth is indestructible freely to offer it for testing, leads neither party to crush the other by tortures of the inquisition, leads both parties plainly to see that only as differing views grapple with each other is there any chance for truth to gain a victory, then under the tuition of this good spirit, each party will help the other and both will help the denomination. It is difficult to see how our people can well get on without the aid of both. Both seem essential to our best advancement, only providing that both are inspired and controlled by a worthy spirit. In general the conservatives are needed to keep the progressives from going too fast, and the latter are needed to keep the former from standing still, and under this alternating check and spur we may confidently look for healthful progress.

This friendly contention of conservatives and progressives will give us a better Bible and a better understanding of it. So long as the original text and the translation of it are not the best the most enlightened scholarship can give, there still remains room for improvement. So long as the date, authorship, structure, purpose, and interpretation of a sacred writing are left in an obscurity which enlightened scholarship might clear away, a better understanding of the Word is our privilege and duty. "The Bible is what the Bible means, and not what inaccurate translations and misinterpretations make it seem to mean." The Bible is what the Bible really is, and not what men pledged to a preconception have tried to force it to be. The Book as a whole, who made it, and how he made it, and why he made it, exactly how it came into the world, and what it is here for, are topics in debate on which the progressives should prod the conservatives out of their inertia, and on which the conservatives should check the undue haste of the progressives. This enlightened criticism and counter-criticism will give the Baptists of the future a better Bible and a better understanding of it than Baptists today enjoy.

> PARTY lines do not divide us and are not likely to, on the great fundamental, saving and moral truths of Christianity. Those truths which lie under all religion, those in which consists the saving efficacy of the gospel, those which give breath and form to a life pleasing to God, all Baptists heartily accept and defend.

The Baptists of the future are to have a much better theology than we now possess. It was never in more sorry plight than it is today. It has left the old positions and has not yet reached the new. Once Baptists felt safe and happy in the rigid inclosures erected by that "godly, learned man, John Calvin." Once the Westminster Confession furnished them the doctrinal formula which sheltered and nourished their souls. Once Andrew Fuller's reconstructed and moderated Calvinism seemed exactly to meet the necessities of the case. Thirty, twenty, fifteen years ago our seminaries served out a theology which some of the conservative pupils are disposed still to retain, but which to their progressive teachers has become obsolescent. The theology of the future may not be the "new theology" of today, but it will be a vast improvement on the old theology of yesterday. It will not revolve around metaphysical abstractions nor deal largely in proofless and profitless fictions. It will come nearer to the real heart of things, will make Christ more central and regnant, will seek more the spirit than the letter of the Bible, will shape itself to the needs of this life quite as truly as to the life beyond. We may trust the progressives to import into it all the divine treasures which the new learning of this new age can provide, while we may trust the conservatives that no divine treasure of the old theology shall be discarded or neglected.

Teachers Criticized

Along with a better Bible and a better theology we are to have a better education—more of it and of a higher quality. In the last half-decade marvelous strides have been made in an educational way. East, west, and south an impulse hitherto unknown has seized our people. Apparently not yet has the denomination struck its gait, but once under way the next half-century will show an advance which only the most daring would venture to predict. True to their instincts the conservatives are finding fault with the teachers and the teaching, with the things taught and those who teach them—with the new spirit which has seized the schools—but their obstructive tactics will simply keep the progressives in healthful movement—not too fast for safety—and the denomination will enjoy an educational progress unprecedented in Baptist history.

A better-educated people with a better understanding of the Bible and a better theology, will have a better ecclesiasticism. We shall still hold our denominational tenets as wisely and firmly as ever, but sectarianism for the mere sake of sectarianism will seem to our children unworthy of Christian men. Confronted by the sullen masses of heathenism abroad, and the tremendous forces of evil at home we shall feel that it is more important to stand with other denominations against our common enemies than to stand aloof from them for our distinctive principles. We shall still teach what we conceive to be the evident meaning of the word of God, but the old bitterness will disappear. We shall indulge no more in railing accusations. The outrageous way in which we have been treated by other denominations will be forgotten. The marvelous progress of Baptist principles in the past, principles of which these denominations are stout champions today, but for which they whipped, fined and imprisoned us a few generations back —this gratifying incorporation of principles for which we once stood alone against the world leads us to hope that the other denominations will some day have sense and grace enough to adopt the few that remain.

Baptists Are Needed

We shall still insist on Bible teaching, but shall try to do it in the spirit of the Bible. It will be some time before Baptists are no longer needed, but we shall make ourselves as agreeable to other people as their errors will permit; and we shall show them plainly that our ecclesiasticism is no bar to the most brotherly co-operation where the interests are common and no principle is in peril. Here as elsewhere the tendency of conservatives to obtrude denominationalism offensively and of progressives to disparage denominationalism unduly will check and correct each other.

In the missionary activities of the Baptists the party spirit is not yet conspicuously present. Here, as elsewhere, however, the old and the new are likely to come into collision. There exists a good deal of discontent with present ideas, aims, methods, and results, which manifests itself in a half-hearted support of existing agencies, but which will some time take new shape in open criticism and in suggestions of reform. If the advocates of old-time missions, and the advocates of radical and far-reaching innovations and readjustments meet each other in a spirit of fairness and concession a gradual and peaceful revolution will not be impossible. Not too much will be demanded and not too much will be conceded. The recent creation of a commission on systematic beneficence is one of the hopeful signs. It means much that the officials of our missionary organizations are willing to occupy common ground, and to bring their several societies into coordinate relations. Perhaps this will prove a greater indirect blessing than anything directly intended. Certainly its tendency will be quietly to remove the wicked distinction between foreign and home missions, and the wicked partisan spirit which that distinction has so unhappily fostered. This instance is a good illustration of the way in which God, in his overruling providence, can break down antiquated prejudices, can harmonize jarring interests, can reshape and reanimate our whole broad denominational missionary enterprise.

It is certain that in the future the new science of sociology will play a conspicuous part in the activities of Baptists. Once two preaching services, a Sunday school and a prayer-meeting, composed the public duty of a Baptist church. Only narrow and belated people entertain that idea now. Today Christians and churches see it to be part of their Christianity to understand and to help man in all his conditions and relations. It is not enough to think of his soul and his future. To be effective this thinking must include his body as well, and all the antecedents and surroundings that affect his soul. And this thinking must become truly effective by reaching a helping hand to the whole need of the whole man. A fractional service will not meet the coming ideal. The institutional church is the initial step in this direction. Such churches will exist in all our larger towns before the close of the century; and our wide-awake missionaries in China and India will catch the idea and transport it to foreign lands. It seems inevitable that much precious energy will be ill-directed and wasted in the transition from the historical to the ideal Baptist church, but undoubtedly the improvement will justify the expenditure.

> "The old, old story told in an old, old book is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind."
>
> —Gladstone.

It would astonish our fathers to witness the prominence of the young people in modern Christianity. This prominence will not diminish. Some evils are already here and still others will doubtless come, but the advantages of this phenomenal movement easily overmaster all unfriendly criticism. The elderly members may wisely attempt to guide this mighty force, but they will never be foolish enough to attempt to stay its progress. The wisdom of creating an independent denominational organization seems to be steadily justifying itself by the increased intelligence and efficiency which its educational and systematizing agencies are bringing about. A few years of Christian culture courses will bring upon the scene of action a generation of Baptists better prepared than were their predecessors to do the Christian work of the day, and to realize the aims and claims of the religion they profess. In the near future we may look for a hot contest between the conservatives and progressives over the possession and control of the young people because it is evident that the whole future is in their keeping. Men who cling to the past and are afraid of innovation will do their utmost to silence the questionings of the Baptist youth and to frighten them into submission to established notions and customs. Men whose minds are open to new impressions and who are willing to change their views on sufficient ground will do their utmost to free the Baptist youth from the trammels of traditionalism and to make them reverently receptive of divine truth however it may collide with their preconceptions. Between conservatives and progressives our young people will get a training which will admirably fit them for the new duties of the new age into which they are about to enter.

Advance Under Check and Spur

In that new age most of the questions which now divide us will be finally settled, and our people will be of one mind concerning them. Just as we have forgotten the issues which distracted our fathers, so our children will forget the issues over which the conflict rages now. In that day new issues will emerge and new lines of division will be drawn. As of old the conservative spirit and the progressive spirit will enlist on opposite sides; and with new questions in dispute the Christian world will advance in the future as in the past under the check and spur of these two principles which have their seat in human nature itself.

Why I Believe in the Bible

"If we and our posterity neglect the instructions of this book no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may bury all our glory."

By ROBERT GORDON

"THERE is but one book," said Sir Walter Scott. That is my faith. To an Indian prince who asked the secret of Britain's greatness, Queen Victoria replied, "This book." Could one who knew the work of Wycliff and Tyndale or the songs of Caedmon and Tennyson have given any other answer? The life stories of Burke and Bright, Cromwell and Gladstone, Wilberforce and Howard, all vindicate Victoria's opinion. Looking upon the family Bible, as he lay dying, Andrew Jackson said: "That book, sir, is the rock on which this republic rests." From the landing of the Pilgrims to the winning of the west, proof of that shines on every page of our country's history. The more I know of life, the more sure am I of the wisdom of Webster's warning, "If we and our posterity neglect the instructions of this book, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may bury all our glory." We have good ground surely for believing our Bible an inestimable, enduring treasure

When I reflect upon the times this volume, like an irresistible tidal force, has swept aside all barriers, overturning whole civilizations; when I consider how it has burned as an imperishable flame until coldest hearts have been warmed and aroused not only to shake off indifference but to give themselves with joy to the uttermost of self-sacrificing service; when I remember how this book has been a light to the feet of childhood and has brightened the eventide of old age and has comforted the desolate, I have no difficulty in understanding why so many have preferred to lay their head upon the block rather than surrender a revelation so incomparable. I can understand why our missionaries have been willing to toil on for years in tropic heat or arctic cold, foregoing all that men count dear, that benighted peoples might some day read these lustrous words of life, every man in his own tongue. So profoundly do I believe in this book, I desire, with passionate longing, to have the largest possible part in leading others to see its beauty, share its wealth, and feel its power.

A Page From Life

But earnest desire is not enough. Often faith has been hindered by those who wished to help. And one of the reasons why I so deeply believe in the Bible is the amazing way it has survived all the fearful things it has suffered in the house of honest friends. Our man-made dogmas have made difficult and sometimes impossible what otherwise would have been easy. Here is a page from life. Dr. R. F. Horton writes, "No pastor ever hinted that the deeds of treachery and blood in that book (Judges), wrought by men on whom the Spirit of God was said to have come, were not approved by God himself. . . . . I know of course that a large proportion of the boys brought up with me on the same principles of interpretation have actually become unbelievers or at least callously indifferent to the Bible." Recently I heard one striving to convince a large group of Sunday-school teachers that Jehovah was justified in ordering little children dashed against the stones. And a few days ago I heard the pastor of a large church using the Bible to prove the vanity of working for world peace. There is not an evil thing that has not somewhere been defended by some text.

The Bible is not a dead level of revelation. It is not a little thing that so frequently still our youth should be so taught. That false idea has caused the death of thousands. In our own country innocent people have been hung because ministers read, as the command of God, the text, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Even John Wesley so clung to this pernicious method of using (or should we say abusing) Scripture that he said he would throw his Bible away rather than give up belief in witchcraft. What huge blunders have been made and how disastrous the consequences! "Infallible," "inerrant," "verbally inspired" are fearfully big words. And they are not biblical words. Why not stick to the Scripture and assert with Paul that the book is "profitable"? That is a much more modest word but wouldn't it be vastly better to have our people really believe that, with genuine conviction, than to have them say other high-sounding things of which they are not altogether convinced, indeed of which they are so little convinced that the Bible remains unopened while they spend a whole Sunday morning burrowing through a straw-stack of Sunday news?

A Self-Evidencing Book

I believe in the Bible because it is a self-evidencing book. Faith is never the ardent belief of "what we know ain't true." It is not necessary to force one's mind against evidence. This door is high enough so a man can enter head and all. To trust this guide of life is as creditable to the intellect as it is inspiring to the soul. The more diligent our study, the more unshakeable our conviction. "They searched the Scriptures, therefore they believed," we read. Let us rejoice over every sincere question asked. Let us welcome every opportunity to tell the truth about the Bible. Let us be sure that the closer the scrutiny and the sharper the intellect, the more sure will be the result. We must read with the heart, devotionally. But we must also read with the mind, intelligently. There is real danger that the proper attitude of reverence and awe will tend to become mere blind superstition. Sometimes closed eyes have made real discoveries but that is not a method to be generally recommended. A farmer's wife, worn out by a hard week's work, was told by her husband on a Saturday afternoon that he had invited friends for Sunday dinner and that she would find a couple of chickens in a crate. She quit. She threw herself down on a lounge and declared she was tired out. He could do as he pleased about that dinner; she was through. After resting awhile she recalled her mother's habit of opening the Bible at random and reading whatever passage her finger fell upon. This she did and found herself reading, "Rise, Peter, slay and eat." She went back to work. I know another who tried that with different result. She was perplexed about the matter of baptism and was about convinced she ought to be immersed. She opened her Bible haphazard and read, "Let not your heart be troubled." Straightway she dismissed her anxieties and Baptist statistics suffered by that much. Surely there was need for that chapter on "common sense in Bible reading." The test of a revelation is that it reveals.

But most of all, I believe in the Bible because of its universal appeal to the religious instinct. Everywhere simple, devout souls have in their own experience found that which enables them to say, "I am certain this is the Word of God. Here God finds me and, most clearly

---

By Radio to America's Heart

You can hear them crying if your heart is tuned to the key of humanity

By HENRY VAN DYKE

INTO the bright mirth of our sheltered homes, into the peaceful murmur of our country's prosperous life, there comes a strange and piercing cry—a sound of many voices moaning, wailing and lamenting—broken men, outraged women, and bewildered little children, thousands, yes, myriads of suffering souls in wounded, starving bodies, crying "Help! Help!"

These are the exiles of Christ in the Near East, driven forth by the Turk to wander and perish. You can hear them crying if your heart is tuned to the key of humanity.

Now listen, for the voices are coming together, blending, uniting in a strong and piteous appeal. The little ones are gathering in companies, regiments, armies, led by wise and valiant guides from America, marching with bleeding feet over bleak mountains and in wild valleys and through dusty deserts, plodding painfully to reach their cities of refuge. It is the new Children's Crusade, not setting out to conquer the sacred place of the Cross, as in the old time, but each one carrying a cross into banishment for the name of Christ.

Now listen again, for many of them, perhaps a hundred thousand, have reached the shelters provided on the slopes of Mt. Athos, Mt. Zion, Mt. Lebanon, in Nazareth, on the Bosphorus; their hunger has been stayed; their wounds have been bound up. Now with their crying a little sound of thin and quavering song is mingled; for they are only children after all, and they will sing if a chance is given. What are they singing?

Jesus, tender shepherd, hear me;
Bless thy little lamb tonight;
Through the darkness be thou near me;
Keep me safe till morning light.

Well, shall they be kept? Let our great country speak and act with all her might to make peace on earth—peace with power. But, meantime, we, personally must answer this closer question. Shall these little lost lambs be kept? And how?

How near is the Near East to us?

That depends on how near we are to Christ.

here, he speaks to me." We would be in a sad predicament could one not have assurance without being a linguist and historian and critic. One may know the sun rules the day without knowing a thing about either Claudius Ptolemy or Copernicus. So by living under the disciplines of this book, by the strength which it supplies, there comes to all classes and conditions of men a persuasion of the heart which means more to me than any other warrant for faith. Let me in closing give a few glimpses of what I mean. At six o'clock one morning in France, I came across a Negro soldier reading his Bible. It was nothing strange to see a man read a Testament but this man had a large, leather-bound Bible. I asked him where he had found it and he told me he had brought it from home. "How long have you been in France?" I asked and learned he had carried that book about for eighteen months. He was reading the fifth chapter of Ecclesiastes and pointed to the verse, "For they consider not that they do evil." "That," he said, "is the trouble with this camp." When I was giving Testaments to a company of Negro soldiers, one expressed his appreciation and said, "Men, if that book were more read we would not have so many troubles. We wouldn't have wars. That book says swords shall be beaten into plowshares. If that were done, we would have less fightin' and more wheat. Bread wouldn't cost so much." The brother of the Scotch minister who was chaplain of the British headquarters regiment in France told a small company of us that on that Sabbath which the British called "Black Sunday" because on that day the Germans broke through and it seemed nothing could prevent loss of the coast cities, General Haig came to the service as usual. There was nothing about him to indicate anxiety. And he said that on leaving, the general gripped his brother's hand and said, "Remember, the battle is the Lord's."

So, also, were men in the ranks sustained. From torn, blood-stained uniforms which I handled about Chateau Thierry and Belleau Wood there were taken scores of New Testaments. Many of them, pencil marked, were sent home to bereaved parents. Man cannot live by bread alone. While I was pastor in Milwaukee a man whose home had been disrupted by his drunkenness, was sent to jail. A visitor read to him from this Holy Book. He came forth a new man. His home was restored. And I saw him rebuild seventeen other homes by aid of that book.

But prevention is vastly better. I know a man whose father gave him a five-cent New Testament when as a boy he left Chicago to work in the northern woods. At close of the hard day's work, by the light of a kerosene lamp, he read that book, chapter by chapter. When he finished, he told me, he laid it on the chair and on his knees prayed for grace to live that kind of a life. For years he has stood like a rock against all sorts of temptation and his strong character has been a refuge for many weaker folk. A soldier in France showed me an ugly chunk of shrapnel buried in his Testament. It projected through both covers. "That book," he said, "saved my life."

A mate of mine whom I had known in college days, was helping wounded men on a battle field. Seeing a soldier sitting with his head in his hands, he went to see whether help was needed. The boy was dead. In one hand he held two photographs, an older and a younger woman. In the other hand he held his Testament. To a dying man I repeated slowly the twenty-third Psalm. Upon his face there came that light that never was on sea or land and with his dying breath he whispered, "That's beautiful."

Blessed Bible, book divine; precious treasure, thou art mine.

Fond du Lac, Wis.

Are the Scraps Sufficient?

By CHESTER H. HOWE

LAZARUS longed "to make a full meal off the scraps flung on the floor from the rich man's table"—Luke 16:21 (Weymouth's translation). And the rich man was "habitually arrayed" in purple and fine linen and "enjoyed a splendid banquet every day." What a contrast! Inside the house lay the rich man gorging himself with food and throwing the scraps on the floor as he snatched for the next course. Fine linen but abominable manners! Outside the gate lay the beggar clothed with sores, and the dogs were his only sympathetic companions. Was he the one who first gave utterance to the sarcasm, "The more I know of men the better I like my dog"?

"And it came to pass that the beggar died." We are not surprised. But the rich man also died, paying the high cost of high living. And then the judgment! Were the scraps sufficient? They had not saved either Lazarus or the rich man. Lazarus needed more than scraps—a physician, the tender care of those who pity the sufferer and a friend. The rich man had given none of these. His habit was to dress up and to eat up all he could. He needed to practice the stewardship of his possessions by ministering to the needy. The scraps did not relieve the sufferings of Lazarus or fulfill the stewardship of the rich man.

Are the scraps sufficient for the present situation? They certainly will not meet the world's needs. Half the world is without a trained physician. The sores of humanity are probed by the needles of the superstitious and washed by the nasty ointments of witch doctors. Half of the world has no teacher. Myriads are in spiritual poverty. They need the Christian physician and nurse, the Christian teacher and organizer, the Bible and Christian literature, the Christian evangelist, prophet and friend. Scraps are not sufficient for these. America rides habitually in its ten million automobiles. It is well clothed and warm. Its daily food would make the rich man of old envious. It can be said of us, "thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things." How many give any more consideration to a needy world than the rich man did to Lazarus? In the midst of our prosperity three years ago we determined to deny ourselves and to give the needy world something more than scraps. Our New World Movement was a great constructive program. It meant sacrificial giving. Today, are we slipping back and throwing out a few scraps?

Lazarus died and we don't even know whether he had a decent burial. The rich man died, was buried and was tormented. He had not fulfilled his responsibilities in life. We wish we might have had a chance at the rich man when he was a little boy. If he had been taught the heavenly Father's care for his world and had learned as a little boy to bring gifts for the sick, he might have paid more attention to Lazarus at his gate. If he had learned to do the daily good turn as a boy, he would have acquired a habit which might have made him a helpful man instead of a glutton. If he had felt the warm glow of the appeal to service as a young man, he might have taken the course of some other rich young men and turned his home into a refuge for the needy. We may wish for a chance at the rich man as a boy but we must face the fact of his neglected responsibility as a man.

They Know

Send Lazarus to warn my five brothers lest they come to this place of torment, pleaded the rich man. He wanted them to have a chance to avoid the destiny that was his. A messenger from the grave would startle them and they would give heed. No, replied Abraham. They know what Moses and the prophets taught. They are not ignorant of God's law as to the stranger at the gate. They know the word of the prophet as he warned the people that the sacrifice of lambs cannot take the place of righteousness and mercy. The rich man had known these things too. But he was so filled with good things that he gave no attention to them. He had the light but he did not live by it. The brothers had sufficient light to keep them from the road that led to Hades. If they found themselves there, it would be because they preferred their fine linen and their feasts to their responsibilities.

We are trying to train up a generation to be world citizens with the love of God in their hearts. But—we are without excuse and they will be. Our daily papers, our weekly journals, our magazines spread the story of the world's need before us. In church, school and from the pulpit the attention of our people is being called to the needy world at our very doors. Distances have been wiped out by the railroad, the auto, the steamship, the flying machine, the telegraph, the telephone and the wireless. The crippled Chinese boy is lying at our door. The blighted home of superstition is just across the way from us. The multitudes whose hearts are distressed with the unsatisfied longing for rest in God are thronging near by. The world is a neighborhood. We have what the world needs. We call ourselves Christians after one who gave his very life to serve others. Are the scraps sufficient to meet the world's need? Are they worthy of the world's Savior? Will they justify us in his presence?

New London, Conn.

The Glory of Lincoln

WHO builds of stone a shrine to bear his name,
Shall be forgot when months and years have flown;
Who writes his name upon the scroll of fame,
The centuries shall find to men unknown;
But who for fellow-men endured the shame
Shall have eternal glory for his own.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

What We Could Do if We Had the Money

Facing the Facts of Immigration

By CHARLES ALVIN BROOKS

THE heading of this article seems to suggest that what we need most is money; whereas I wish at the outset to disavow any such thought and to reiterate what I have constantly preached, in season and out of season, viz., that far more than money we need a new faith and a new patriotism. It is too cheap and easy to give vent to our inherent dislikes and prejudices and feel we have demonstrated our super-patriotism and proved our love of country thereby, while as a matter of fact we have probably wronged our country and defeated the very end we professed to seek.

One longs for a brand new vocabulary and a fresh approach in order to gain an arrest of attention on the part of intelligent Christian people in America. At the same time one hesitates to express himself freely and frankly lest his words add fuel to the flames of prejudice and suspicion he would quench or that the blame for things as they are be misplaced and the wrong remedy for acknowledged ills be prescribed.

Our Foreign Problems

I have recently had occasion to make a restudy of the missionary phases of what we call our foreign problem. The one thing which is perfectly evident to the most superficial observer, is that a significant change has taken place among the immigrant population and many of their immediate descendants.

To state it in the briefest possible words and by way of contrast, this is the change. But a few years ago the immigrant population was scattered, unorganized, inarticulate, poor, without influence, timidly self-conscious, with a sense of having little to say or do concerning the affairs of this strange new America. Today these groups are highly organized, locally and nationally, well led, well financed, highly articulate, commercially powerful, politically influential, with social institutions well housed, group insurance of all kinds and a consciousness of being a vital factor in the life of the community where they live. All of which is in itself without prejudice and very much to be praised.

Honesty compels us to observe, however, that these groups represent a great loss of religious faith, social unrest and economic discontent, with great numbers living below the standard of health and community well-being, a fertile soil for ultra-radical seed and a difficult field for Protestant Christianity. The leadership of these groups is often in the hands of unsafe elements. The bitter and indiscriminate anti-alien propaganda has tended to solidify the opposition to the best American influences. Prohibition has much of its opposition in this group and the elements opposed to Protestant Christianity have capitalized this opposition to the disadvantage of evangelical Christianity. And to add to the confusion in the minds of millions of innocent and friendly folk, the campaign of aggressive masqueraders has complicated the situation incalculably.

To send forth into this situation a handful of young and comparatively inexperienced and only partially trained Protestant missionaries is pathetically inadequate if not utterly futile. They must cope with almost superhuman obstacles, with the wealth and influence and organization led by master minds and to add to this frontal attack is the consciousness that all the while behind them is an America that does not believe in their people, or their capacity for the best America has to offer—that it is bitterly hostile, indiscriminating in its criticism and unwilling to pay the price of their redemption in terms of better working and living conditions and larger and fairer opportunities for the children of the foreign born.

Well what has the money to do with it? What would I do if I had a million dollars? I would do a few very fundamental but far-reaching things.

1. I would reinforce our foreign language missionary (without whom we are lost) by the kind of service that Dr. F. E. Taylor and Dr. C. H. Jones and Dr. W. S. Abernethy rendered last summer in Europe. I would carry on a carefully planned campaign of public education, which would be reciprocal and in which I would use the best possible publicity methods.

2. I would promote a high grade periodical literature to offset the other kind of influence in the foreign language press. I would meet misrepresentation of facts by the whole truth. I would not use such literature to keep the people ignorant and contented but make them intelligent and free.

3. I would equip and man adequately more Christian community centers which have already demonstrated what transforming influences can flow from such a power house where Christian love is articulate with a thousand tongues.

4. I would make it possible for every promising boy and girl in our foreign language churches to get a higher education on some plan which would not ruin their self-respect.

5. I would promote in every part of the country institutes and conferences for the promulgation of our faith, social, political, economic and religious, as an offset to the wrong kind of education to which we have abandoned the best people in our foreign groups.

And all this I would do, not in a spirit of a crusade, relying upon the magic of some formula, but without racial or sectarian bias would endeavor to interpret national unity and brotherly love in common every-day terms and seek to fill up the chasm which now separates millions of perfectly good Americans who do not know how much there is to admire and love in their neighbors.

If the New World Movement can be translated into terms of service and can be made fruitful in love, it will bring forth the money needed to release the spiritual forces without which all is in vain.

Therefore, Pray

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

IF AN army should undertake a campaign in utter neglect of the principles of major strategy, it could expect only defeat, no matter how brilliant might be its record in minor details. Yet our Baptist hosts are prosecuting their great campaign with comparatively little reliance upon their mightiest weapon of supreme strategy—prayer. It is in the hope of awakening true Christians to the place and efficacy of prayer that these few words are written.

We need to realize that prayer is not only a means of communion, through which we attune our spirits to the will of God, but that it is also a real force, a practical agency by the use of which we cooperate with God for the regeneration of the world. It is because of this failure to believe that "prayer changes things" that many Christians fail to exercise the ministry of intercessory prayer.

Yet the Bible is full of examples and precepts to enforce this conception of prayer. Elijah prayed earnestly and the heavens were shut up; the Jerusalem church prayed, and the place where they were assembled was shaken; Peter prayed, and the dead Dorcas was restored to life; the church offered fervent prayer for the release of Peter from prison, and was astonished when the prisoner stood knocking at its door; Paul and Silas in the jail at Philippi were praying and singing hymns, when the earthquake shock set them free.

In all the teachings of Jesus the supreme efficacy of prayer is emphasized. We are to ask, to seek, to knock; faith even if only like a grain of mustard seed will remove mountains. Of the demoniac boy at the foot of the mountain of transfiguration we are taught "this kind goeth not out save by prayer"! We are commanded to "Have faith in God" and encouraged by the promise "Whatever you pray and make request for, if you believe that you have received it, it shall be yours." (Weymouth.) And again, "Whatsoever you shall ask in my name, I will do." "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

We ought to be more ready to release the revolutionary power of prayer than has been done by any of the generations which preceded us. Not only have we the cumulative testimony of the millions of Christians in past generations who have put prayer to the test and not found it wanting; but we have also the reinforcement of our faith in recent discoveries in the material world. A generation which projects its voice by wireless telephony, which knows the marvels of radio transmission, which has seen the impossible achieved in the aeroplane, which has experienced the miracles of healing effected by radio, need not be slow of heart to believe in the reality of the unseen and the spiritual. If God has set us in a physical universe so marvelous, is it likely that the spiritual powers and realities which underlie it, will be less wonderful?

Consider the radio. If one tunes in he can catch the vibrations of the human voice, so that what is said in Pittsburgh may be heard at Denver, or be broadcasted a thousand miles out to sea.

Shall it be thought a strange thing if prayer has even wider vibrations? If one could really see, he might behold fine waves vibrating from the soul of the true Christian in prayer, waves that are registered in the throne of God.

We can, if we will, develop this prayer power; but like electric power it has its laws. One must work and not against the laws, if power is to be produced. Electric power is developed from falling water, if there be height or mass or both. A trickle of water falling through the finger drives no machinery. The mass of the Mississippi dammed up at Keokuk produces 2,000,000 horsepower, and drives the machinery even in faraway St. Louis. A slender stream falling from a great height has the same effect when caught in the waiting turbines. What are we going to do with prayers that have neither height nor mass to back them—languid wishes that issue in nothing?

Our times, our desperate circumstances demand that we throw ourselves back upon God, that we call his Almightiness to our aid. It is only when men are at their wit's end "when they stagger to and fro like drunken men" in the grip of circumstances that they call upon the Lord and "he hears and delivers them out of their distresses." "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness!"

Always the power of God waits upon our utilization of it. Always we have but to put up our trolley and grasp the wire of his willingness. For centuries men went chilly till they learned to use his provision of coal. For ages men huddled at the foot of waterfalls, laboriously grinding their corn, lighting their houses with tallow dips, driving their slow ox-carts along their poor paths, when all the time the waterfall thundered by, inviting them to harness their weakness to God's omnipotence.

The parable is plain. Northern Baptists are summoned to believing prayer in this day of our weakness and our desperate need as never before. God can enable us to do our duty. God can reach the heart of his children who have means. God can revive his church. He asks us to cooperate with him for his great ends. He asks us to release spiritual energies that can do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. He invites us to become partners of his in creating in the moral deserts of the world fresh streams that shall irrigate them with the water of life.

Wherefore, pray!

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention

Statement of State Quotas and Receipts for Period May 1, 1922, to January 1, 1923

| Name of State | Am't due Jan. 1, 1923 on State Quota in $10,000,000. | Total Collections reported to Jan. 1, 1923. | Per cent Collections reported to Jan. 1, 1923. | Total Collections reported to Jan. 1, 1922. | Per cent 1922-23 Collections of 1921-22 Collections. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| District of Columbia | $ 21,701.04 | $ 25,622.11 | 1.1807 | $ 19,514.36 | 1.3130 |
| New York Metropolitan | 669,679.12 | 423,531.14 | .6324 | 421,031.03 | 1.0059 |
| Delaware | 8,312.39 | 4,588.95 | .5520 | 3,389.50 | 1.3539 |
| Arizona | 16,878.59 | 8,851.76 | .5244 | 7,868.60 | 1.1122 |
| Rhode Island | 120,053.70 | 62,860.66 | .5236 | 66,973.30 | .9386 |
| Idaho | 17,703.48 | 9,250.92 | .5225 | 11,263.88 | .8213 |
| California, No. | 100,000.00 | 50,362.55 | .5036 | 62,980.36 | .7997 |
| Vermont | 71,321.54 | 35,548.42 | .4984 | 41,152.90 | .8638 |
| New Hampshire | 78,491.77 | 38,462.63 | .4900 | 50,499.47 | .7616 |
| Pennsylvania | 657,884.16 | 315,177.97 | .4791 | 341,274.01 | .9222 |
| Michigan | 222,340.48 | 106,314.35 | .4782 | 105,379.26 | 1.0089 |
| Wisconsin | 81,854.80 | 38,828.66 | .4744 | 39,637.25 | .9796 |
| Missouri | 44,226.97 | 20,902.06 | .4726 | 20,973.23 | 1.0175 |
| Nevada | 3,236.12 | 1,486.53 | .4594 | 1,509.24 | .9850 |
| New Jersey | 430,975.04 | 194,849.24 | .4521 | 258,403.46 | .7547 |
| New York State | 696,083.07 | 305,780.46 | .4393 | 360,103.51 | .8491 |
| Connecticut | 198,799.29 | 85,392.82 | .4295 | 87,801.40 | .9726 |
| Washington, W. | 59,519.22 | 24,428.78 | .4104 | 27,790.12 | .8790 |
| California, So. | 316,187.96 | 127,993.02 | .4048 | 143,653.54 | .8910 |
| Nebraska | 82,235.52 | 33,136.40 | .4029 | 38,946.69 | .8508 |
| Montana | 13,896.28 | 5,532.08 | .3981 | 8,170.42 | .6771 |
| Massachusetts | 619,431.44 | 243,818.91 | .3936 | 291,689.91 | .8359 |
| Illinois | 410,162.35 | 155,981.12 | .3803 | 180,909.64 | .8622 |
| North Dakota | 23,223.92 | 8,613.08 | .3709 | 10,174.30 | .8466 |
| *Indiana | 230,779.77 | 85,567.54 | .3708 | 65,751.72 | 1.3014 |
| Maine | 123,797.45 | 45,541.53 | .3679 | 58,970.26 | .7723 |
| Ohio | 452,231.91 | 164,885.33 | .3646 | 199,931.67 | .8247 |
| Kansas | 158,696.79 | 57,532.53 | .3625 | 63,728.55 | .9028 |
| Oregon | 66,666.66 | 22,895.20 | .3434 | 37,274.83 | .6142 |
| Colorado | 85,662.00 | 29,198.07 | .3409 | 33,535.50 | .8707 |
| Washington, E. | 52,235.14 | 17,634.85 | .3376 | 29,719.31 | .5934 |
| Iowa | 172,846.88 | 58,278.25 | .3372 | 69,096.71 | .8420 |
| West Virginia | 150,384.40 | 48,127.63 | .3200 | 61,621.36 | .7810 |
| Wyoming | 8,629.65 | 2,647.70 | .3068 | 3,879.44 | .5902 |
| *Minnesota | 152,478.36 | 46,646.46 | .3059 | 70,970.78 | .6573 |
| South Dakota | 39,277.61 | 10,265.14 | .2613 | 15,819.87 | .6489 |
| Utah | 2,601.58 | 327.31 | .1258 | 662.15 | .4943 |
| Miscellaneous | 6,180.21 | 11,819.14 | | 9,465.43 | |
| Total | $6,666,666.66 | $2,928,681.30 | .4392 | $3,321,516.96 | .8816 |

* December collections not included.

 November and December collections not included.

Amount of collections to Jan. 1, 1922, not complete.

Young People's Work

Topic for February 25

MISSIONARY MEETING
NEGRO MEN AND WOMEN OF ACHIEVEMENT
Hebrews 12:1-2

Introductory

For a number of months the home mission topics will be a discussion of the Negro problem. Every society should have at least the following books: "In the Vanguard of a Race" and "The Trend of the Races." These may be obtained from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, Calif., prices, cloth 75 cents, paper 50 cents. In the following discussion, we can deal only with the life of John B. Pierce.

A Builder of Prosperity

Negroes are usually thought of as poor people, spending as they earn and satisfied with the merest necessities of life. Nevertheless, Negroes bought $225,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds and war-saving stamps, besides giving large sums to the Red Cross.

White people know little about the more prosperous Negroes, their contacts being chiefly with the house-worker and day-laborer class. The business and professional men and women, the well-to-do farmers and better educated classes are seldom met with in the daily affairs of the average white person. The remarkable economic progress made in sixty years is due primarily to the influence of mission and government schools and to the Negro leadership they have developed.

Such a leader is John B. Pierce, a product of Tuskegee and Hampton. After graduating from Tuskegee he taught school. It was in a time of great depression, and a very hard time for Negroes. Men worked all day for 50 cents, or even less. Tenants could make nothing out of their cotton. They lived on corn-pone and bacon, and the cotton raised hardly paid for their poor food. The young school-teacher knew there was a better way for he had seen it at Tuskegee. He knew they could raise better crops of cotton, and plenty of vegetables, chickens and eggs to supply their needs. Unfortunately, however, he had learned trades rather than farming, and could help them but little.

He entered Hampton, specialized in farming, working his way. In 1906 he became a farm demonstration agent in Virginia for the government. He shows Negro farmers how to spray fruit and potatoes, to make the proper kind of sweet potato beds, to test seeds and soils, to plan corn and cotton. He tests cattle for tuberculosis and immunizes hogs from cholera. The farmers learn much better when they see how these things ought to be done. Home sanitation is demonstrated, and better schools discussed.

When America entered the war, and it was vital to speed up food production, Mr. Pierce was put in charge of the colored work in eight states. The record crop yields in Virginia are an interesting commentary on John Pierce's life work. In fifteen years the corn crop has increased

(Continued on page 61)

Speakers and Conference Leaders

Boston Convention, July 4-8, 1923

F. W. PADELFORD
New York

R. H. CONWELL
Pennsylvania

F. W. PATTERSON
Nova Scotia

R. M. WEST
Pennsylvania

J. A. FRANCIS
California

B. C. CLAUSEN
New York

H. B. ROBINS
New York

U. M. McGUIRE
Indiana

M. M. McGORRILL
New York

A. H. GAGE
Illinois

Religious Education

International Sunday School Lesson for February 25

THE PARABLE OF THE POUNDS

Lesson: Luke 19: 11-48. Golden Text: Luke 16:10

Introductory

In the text the lesson of today follows immediately that of last Sunday's which ends with the tenth verse. Some authorities give the parable as spoken in Jericho, others that it was after Jesus had passed through Jericho. Verse 11 says: "He spake a parable because he was nigh to Jerusalem." This parable of the pounds is not the parable of the talents which is given in Matthew and should not be confused with it.

Lesson

On this last journey to Jerusalem, looking forward to the time when he would no longer be with them, Jesus took every opportunity to present truths to his disciples which would be with them when he had gone into the "far country" which he mentions in the parable. It is because of this approaching departure that he gives the parable of the pounds, himself depicted by the noblemen, when he returns for a rendering of the trust bestowed, the disciples by the receivers of the pounds. To his ten servants the nobleman gave ten pounds, or about $16 all told, before his departure for the far country with the injunction, "Trade ye herewith till I come." Upon his return the servants gave their several reports—one had increased his pound to ten, another to five, another had put his away in a napkin for safekeeping because he knew his master to be an austere man. The first man received his master's commendation and the rulership of ten cities, the second the rulership of five cities, and the one who had so carefully treasured the pound against usefulness was made to give his pound to the one who had ten! "They said unto him"—most likely they refers to the bystanders who were so intently following the parable as Jesus related it—"Lord, he hath ten pounds." To which came the reply, "I say unto you that unto every one that hath shall be given: but from him that hath not even that which he hath shall be taken away from him." On every hand is witnessed the truth of Jesus' statement—the man who has money can make more money with that money; the man with a talent can cultivate that talent and win friends and money by means of it. There might be a depressing fatality in the statement were it not true that every man has something which he can cultivate and be made rich thereby. Each of the ten servants had a pound—it was only because the one made no attempt to use what he had but put it away in the dark, that it was taken from him. Any talent will wither away if it is so hidden.

Leading Thoughts

1. It is not the number of pounds that counts, but the faithfulness used in handling what is given. 2. "Neglect not the gift that lies within thee." 3. He who is not faithful in small things can never hope to be equal to great responsibilities. 4. Give us not tasks according to our powers, but powers according to our tasks.—Phillips Brooks.

Why Not Talk College to Him?

By R. L. Van Deman

He may be only a lad on the streets, whose parents are foreign born, or his father may have a farm and a mortgage. He may go to a little stone school building in the mountains and know no other school. Or he may be a member of a school community of a thousand pupils. He may be the unsophisticated child of a country Sunday school or he may have gone to a big city church school having a salaried director of religious education.

Talk college to him. College means self-development. If you are chumming with him you know whether or not he has a mind which with an opportunity might make him a leader of his fellows. If he has, it is a loss to him and a loss to the world if he does not somehow get the ambition to go to college.

The writer went down yesterday into the bowels of the earth beneath the noble Harper Memorial Library building at the University of Chicago. The sub-basement with its acre of concrete floor, its fine lighting and ventilating system is crowded with metal book stacks. In an alcove at one side were the old college catalogs which were the object of the quest, some of them well toward a century old. In one of these, not so old, issued by Denison University, were two names that have made a deep cut in the face of the wax of an impressionable generation. Among the faculty was William Arnold Stevens, M. A., professor of Greek. Among the students was Ernest De Witt Burton from Davenport, Iowa.

These two, the man and the boy, found each other. Before many years, working together, they had issued the Stevens and Burton "Harmony of the Gospels" which proved a splendid contribution to the effort of a generation of young men to understand Christ. The older of these men became a teacher in New Testament at Rochester, the younger a teacher in New Testament at Chicago.

Two men who found each other at a Christian college in the day of small things. One is gone now, but his works follow. The other becomes the president of the University of Chicago in February, 1923. When these men met at Denison there were only a hundred or two of students and the few hereditary courses. Most of the students took most of the courses in four years. In doing so they became men. One notes many names in the catalogs of those days belonging to boys who became men of leadership afterward in church and state. One of the secrets was that the teachers and the students found each other.

Now Denison has a great endowment and a catalog of 125 pages and its distinguished alumnus comes to the leadership of a university with 11,000 students. In the headlines of the sporting page of a Chicago daily one reads "New Prexy at Chicago stands for physical education." Denison's day of small things dominates the threatening athletic situation of tomorrow and gives it Christian guidance.

Whether you want to send him to a college with a small enrolment or to a school with courses which one could not cover in a lifetime you may find them with Christian presidents and with teachers who conceive their mission in terms of personal attention to the building of human life. One of the elements of religious education is the stimulation of desire to grow, to become, to go to school, to pay the price of learning. Talk college to him.

Obedience the Key to Spiritual Power

By Helen B. Montgomery

The following extract from a personal letter sheds light on the question often asked, "Why do I not have answers to my prayers?" and points back to an old statement of the Bible—"If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me":

"I had been fighting a losing fight for over ten years. I had been hiding iniquity in my heart, a secret hate. I knew I was losing out. My health was failing and I had to give up first one thing, and then another, until there was little left for me. But God would not let go his hold on me. That sentence you gave us kept ringing over and over in my mind—'As long as we do not obey, we cannot pray.' I knew it, but I had never allowed myself to put it into words. I prayed almost all of one night there at Keuka, at least I tried to pray. But something wouldn't let go, and I came home unsatisfied. A week or two after I went to a friend and told her the whole story and with her help it came out all right. Now the old hate has turned into a great pity, my health is being restored and I can pray!"

The Chimney Corner

Venus II and the Valentine Voile

LIVING in the same house with Venus the Second ought to have offered a perpetual suggestion to the young Templetons, but like the gods of the heathen—"eyes have they but they see not, ears have they but they hear not, neither feel they with their hands."

It is hard to describe Venus the Second with justice, for she had her peculiarities, poor thing. There was, for instance, no head on her black shoulders: she terminated sharply at the neck! And, like her famous predecessor Venus de Milo, she was armless; also, more serious still, she had no feet. It was necessary for a cast-iron standard to hold her rigidly upright and four little castors made it easy to roll her from place to place. But alas! for several years nobody had cared to roll Venus anywhere. So with silent self-effaciveness she inhabited the attic storeroom, and if her buxom frame could have heaved with sighs one fancies that it would have been for the same reason that mother Templeton occasionally sighed down in the front parlor as she stroked her old Sunday-go-to-meeting dress, and hated it!

"I must be getting me a new dress," said she at intervals. But the ears of the young Templetons, like the gods of the heathen, were deaf. They were used to mother just as she was, and with their own perpetual need of sports skirts, sweaters, woolly scarfs, silken scarfs, gauntlet gloves, long gloves, party frocks, silver slippers, knickers, goloshes, brogans, and "mules," they saw little likelihood of either mother or Venus being newly adorned. Indeed they thought of mother as little as they thought of Venus, in matters of fashion, until the fateful fourteenth of February when the family—as a family—discovered itself a giver of gifts, quite unbeknownst to the several members. Thusly:

The wealthy Mrs. Paige on the Avenue was to give a fancy dress valentine party that night, and all the girl-guests were to be "flowers" with a wonderful prize for the outstanding blossom which appealed most æsthetically to the great English portrait painter, Claude Arnold, who would be present to judge the beautiful costumes. Needless to say the Templetons were in a perfect stew over their apparel. Mother ran upstairs and down fetching this, that, and the other for Isabel and Natalie; Gladys as usual had made a dead secret of her own affairs—somewhere under lock and key she was hiding whatever of petals and leaves were to adorn her.

At 5:45 by the grandfather clock, Isabel announced that if she only had a headband of rosebuds she would be utterly ravishing and prize-clutching! Every one agreed with bated breath, and mother said: "I know exactly where there are some rosebuds, darling," and pattered away on her dear old feet toward the attic store-room and—Venus.

She snapped on the light and was starting toward an old trunk when she suddenly stood transfixed: for Venus was swathed in lavender voile with a bouquet of big Russian violets at her silver girdle. . . . Mother gave a delighted smile and as she stepped nearer saw on the floor a card: "For the dearest mother in the world, from all of us."

"My! My!" she ejaculated in dazed delight as she walked around and around Venus, fingering the lovely material—admiring—yes, gloating! "Isn't it just like my girls to do this?" she sighed fondly, "I reckon that at first they aimed to get it all made up into a dress for me, but I'm always home so they thought they could surprise me best this way. My! My! I am surprised, all right! Isn't it beautiful goods? French voile is lovely, and it won't muss much. I'll have it made up for summer . . . let's see, how would a little of my old Irish crochet look on a sheer net collar? Sweet! And these violets . . . my girls are getting extravagant . . . when have I ever had violets, anyhow?" She buried her dear old nose in the dewy flowers and drew a blissful breath. Her rapture was cut short by the tinkle of the supper bell. With eager haste she unpinned the flowers and fastening them at her waist pattered down to the table where her family had already gathered, looking impatiently at the door.

Suddenly she stood there: "My dears!" she cried, "this is the dearest, happiest, proudest moment of my life! Oh, Isabel, you and your rosebuds all an excuse to lure your innocent old mother up to the attic! Well, when I saw my poor neglected Venus decked out in your marvelous valentine, then I wasn't so innocent, darlings. But how can I thank you? I never saw such violets! I never smelt such fragrance! I feel like the gayest débutante in town, dears; it's lopped forty years off my poor old back! And as for that lavender voile, if I once got my nose inside your party I believe that grand Mr. Claude Arnold would pin the medal on your mother, indeed I do! Thank you! Thank you!" and she kissed them one at a time, while Isabel looked at Natalie in stark surprise, and Natalie looked at Gladys, and Gladys looked at the tablecloth.

A Belated Valentine

By CAROLYN WELLS

GOOD-natured Enoch Satterlee had a good-natured wife;
No quarrels ever marred the even tenor of their life.
They jogged along serenely in a calm and placid way,
And all the neighbors quite agreed a model pair were they.

Almira wasn't much on style, but gave him three square meals;
She let him smoke his pipe in peace and darned his toes and heels;
And Enoch never thought to rise when she came in the room—
Unless indeed she shooed him out with duster, mop and broom.

And as to little compliments about her looks or dress,
He never thought of those at all—and she thought even less.
Had he been asked he would have said,
"Oh well, I like her ways,"
And "He's a good provider" would have been her meed of praise.

All this was well enough, of course; but as the years went by
The pair began to drift apart and couldn't say just why.
They loved each other; but, you see, it never had occurred
To either of them that love pines for lack of spoken word.

One day as Enoch went downtown, by luck he chanced to pass,
Absorbed in their own love affairs, a laughing lad and lass;
They read something together, and smiled
at every line;
Old Enoch craned his neck to see; it was a valentine.

"Look here!" he said, "you old slowpoke!
I wonder what she'd say
If I should send Almira one? I will—this very day!"
He hurried to the village store and bought the finest one,
And sent it to his wife by post—then waited for the fun.

He watched Almira while she read the tender missive through;
The tears fell from her shining eyes and
—his were filling too;
And as he took her in his arms she flushed a lovely pink,
And said: "This valentine has brought all that life lacked, I think!"

—Ladies' Home Journal.

What was it all about? Where did those violets come from? And voile . . .? Yet in mother's hands that card: "From all of us!" Secretly nonplussed they were still staring at one another, but as mother said grace Gladys kicked them under the table and put a finger on her lips.

Supper was a curious meal: three quiet daughters, one ecstatic mother going off into new avenues of gratitude every few seconds, sure that there were no daughters in town—in town?—nonsense, not even in America or the whole world quite so thoughtful! Then the telephone rang. For mother. It was Mrs. Paige: "Can't you come over with those charming daughters of yours, Mrs. Templeton, it's going to be such a lovely sight? I told them yesterday to invite you, but I dare say they forgot. You needn't dress up unless you wish to."

"Dress up?" mother beamed, "oh, but I want to! Just let me tell you what these darling children did to equip me for your party. You know I have a funny old dress model up in the attic, we call it Venus the Second. Well, these blessed girls of mine—" and so forth, and so forth, while the blessed girls behind her were looking frozen, Gladys actually congealed! "Don't you dare tell mother!" she managed to whisper.

"But what will you wear, Glad?" her sisters said in a shocked duet.

"Goodness knows," sighed Gladys.

"How did that card ever get on the floor?" the duet whispered.

Gladys shook her head miserably: "Can't imagine! Unless one of us whisked it out of some old trunk when we were rummaging upstairs. Mother hoards the strangest things like that."

They nodded miserably. Then with generous intent proceeded to donate part of their own "petals" to the petal-less sister—all hope of the prize oozing away by degrees as they were forced to sacrifice more and more of their glory.

An hour later they were all busy draping mother in lavender voile. She looked adorable. They made a little pokebonnet for mother from voile and old lace, from the deep valley of that bonnet mother's sweet old faded eyes had almost a periwinkle twinkle, and her little curl was coquettishly determined to straggle out from under the brim. She kept thanking them again and again for their exquisite interest in her.

Two hours later they were at the party. Giant Sunflowers and wee Forget-me-nots, comical Four O'Clocks (with noisy alarm clocks "going-off" around their necks) and demure Blue-bells sallied arm in arm before the great Claude Arnold. He admired and admired and admired. But when it came to awarding the grande prix he called forth a round little old lady draped in several yards of lavender voile, with fragrant single violets at her silver girdle: "It is as if you stepped out of an old English garden, madam!" he said, as he laid in her hand a small box.

With lovely un-selfconsciousness she called her three daughters: "It is all due to my dear little girls; so whatever is inside the box is going to be theirs, turn and turn about!"

It was seventy-five dollars in gold pieces! Smilingly she gave each of them their share, then confided in the great artist, as parent to parent: "It isn't often in these days that you find young folks waxing extravagant over a mere mother—why, violets like this cost over five dollars! And the voile is at least a dollar a yard! So I'm real glad the dear girls can get their reward for such lovely devotion, I reckon they can buy them a dress apiece with that prize! Hasn't it been just the nicest party? I guess we never get too old to love Valentine's Day, do we?"

He nodded with warm approval. And later in the evening he told each of the three daughters separately that he would always cherish their lovely homage as something typically American: "I have no doubt she has sacrificed, all her life, for you; I am proud to have met you."

But in spite of his praise they spent a curiously unhappy night and the next day fitted Venus in a lavender voile in the style best suited for matrons, with net cuffs and collar edged with Irish crochet.

The Young Reserves

The Sore Throat Valentine

EVERYBODY likes them. Even boys! So it was rather hard on Bill to have to miss all the excitement at school on the fourteenth of February; he tried to act bored and indifferent when Peggy and Timothy went off to school at half past eight, but Mrs. Hathaway noticed that the corners of his mouth turned down in a sorry droop and that nothing had any particular interest for him. Of course it was partly the sore throat, but mostly the date. Little Bill guessed that the most exciting valentine in town was in his own home. In his home, did I say? All over his home would be more correct!

For at nine o'clock, as he lay on the rug before the living-room fire, he distinctly heard his mother do the strangest thing—she hurried up to the playroom on the third floor, then came down to the second floor and went more or less rapidly through every room, then came down to the kitchen and through all the other rooms to him.

"Say, are you taking a constitutional?" he asked.

"No," laughed his mother, "that isn't a walk, it's a valentine! If you don't believe me take this ball of yarn and wind it up for me. I really believe it's caught somewhere up in the attic. Be careful not to break it, Bill, just wind it as you go!"

"Yes, mother!" said Bill, and took the ball of wool, obediently winding as he walked into the dining-room where behold, the wool was tied around his medicine bottle, with a little card saying: "Time to take two pills!"

"Oh mother!" scowled Bill, making a wry face. But he took the pills and gulped them down hastily, then began winding the string as it led under the pantry door into the kitchen where, on the table, were three heart-shaped cookies: "To my Valentine, The Boy-Who-Takes-His-Medicine!"

There were no scowls or wry faces this time, you may be sure as Bill gobbled the cookies and eagerly began winding the yarn as it led up the back stairs. At the little window on the landing he found the wool wound around a paper heart on which was written: "How many words can you make out of the five letters in the word heart?" A pencil was attached, so he sat on the top step jotting down the words he could think of, using only those five letters. You may like to figure this out for yourself and see if you can get the same twenty-four words that Bill got. The list will be given at the end of this story.

When he had guessed all that there was to guess, he began winding the ball of yarn until it led him into the sewing room where a little tag was tied on the yarn at the doorway bidding him: "Walk once around the sewing table looking at all the objects on it, then go out in the hall and write down on the back of your paper heart all the objects you can remember. Don't peek again!!" You may be sure he kept his eyes wide open as he slowly (oh, so slowly!) walked around that table; yet would you believe it? When he got out in the hall he could hardly remember one of the things he had just seen! One by one he dragged them out of his memory—pincushion, scissors, thimble, tape-measure, needle, crochet hook, beeswax, emery, spool of red silk, and so on, but he could remember only eleven objects. When he was through writing them down he went back and counted twenty! He had completely forgotten the mirror, the pattern, the pencil, the card full of buttons and another card of hooks and eyes; which just shows you that we do not always see with our minds open.

Next his wool led him into his own bedroom where a jolly new red sweater was waiting for him. His aunt in Wyoming had just sent it to him (she started it in time for Christmas, but had only just finished it). He put it on at once, and hurried into the next room where his wool led him to Everyland, a magazine he loved to read, so he settled down as warm as you please to read it. Then remembering his wool, decided to wind some more of it which led him to more and more delights all morning long—games in the playroom, then down the front stairs to a heart-shaped box full of dates and figs and nuts which he could have for luncheon. Surely you do not wonder that when Peggy and Timothy came home from school, Bill did not envy their fun at all, but rather they envied him as they heard about his sore throat valentine.

(Words made from the five letters in "heart": he, her, hear, hare, hat, hate, hater, hart, era, ear, a, ah, at, are, art, ate, re, rat, rate, tea, tear, tare, tar, the.)

Our Own Folks

A Gift of $100,000

Franklin College, Franklin, Ind., is the recipient of a $100,000 gift from Mr. Grafton Johnson, president of the board of trustees. This gift is the initial contribution toward a fund of $750,000 to provide new buildings for the institution. Mr. Johnson is a graduate of the college and for the past eight years has been president of the board. From time to time Mr. Johnson has made smaller contributions amounting to $60,000.

The new building program which the board of directors has announced calls for the erection of five new buildings including a science hall, a men's dormitory, a women's dormitory, a dining hall and a college chapel. Dr. C. E. Goodell, president of the college, was unanimously elected by the board to take charge of the campaign and will begin active work on the proposition at once. He hopes to have the entire amount raised by June, 1925.

This year the enrolment of the college has reached 400 and will probably reach 450 when the enrolment of the second semester is complete. According to a financial statement, in 1917 the current receipts were $63,085 while in 1922 they amounted to $137,723.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

Detroit Baptists are coming more and more to see the benefits that accrue from earnest cooperation and sincere fellowship.

The growth of Detroit has been the marvel of the world. Many have thought the phenomenal development of the past decade could not be continued, but there is every evidence of even greater strides. During 1922, the building records of Detroit reached $90,000,000 and these do not include Highland Park and Hamtramck, two cities of over 50,000 population each, both located within the confines of Detroit. In addition, there is a vast suburban territory that is to all intents and purposes, a part of Detroit, but still outside the city limits and therefore beyond the statistical calculations of the city proper. Present indications point to over $100,000,000 of building for this new year.

To keep pace with this great accretion of humanity from the ends of the earth, to provide houses of worship, pastors and missionary workers, especially when we remember that 67 per cent of the population is made up of foreign-speaking peoples, is no small task.

The Baptists of Detroit are neither wealthy nor potentially influential, but we have a fine body of earnest, consecrated souls, who are awake to the great challenge that confronts us, and unitedly are faithfully endeavoring to answer the Master's model prayer: "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

The dedication of the new building for the Grand River Avenue Baptist Church is the latest illustration of the cooperative effort as manifested in the Detroit Baptist Union. This organization is what its name suggests—a union of Detroit Baptist churches for kingdom extension. Some three or four years ago, a plot 240x225 on Grand River Avenue, near Monnier Road (outside the city limits) was acquired by the Detroit Baptist Union and a Bible school organized, which held services in the public school building. When Rev. W. A. Steinkraus came to the city, he assumed the pastoral care of Scotten Avenue and this feeble new interest. By earnest care, he finally organized a church and then the Scotten Avenue church (within the city) demanded his full time and Rev. E. J. Parsons was called as pastor. The Detroit Baptist Union is not satisfied that the site purchased will be the permanent location for a church and so a one-story building that can be easily converted into stores was erected for the immediate need of this promising field. Public Service Corporation surveys prophesy that this immediate neighborhood will increase 1700 per cent in population within thirteen years. We expect this field will develop one of our strongest churches.

Detroit is one of the greatest Polish cities in the world. It is estimated by the Detroit board of commerce, that there are 180,000 Poles in Detroit. Baptists made little progress with these people until the World War, when Poland became a republic. The plans for that republic were made here in Detroit and Rev. Jos. Rzepecki, pastor of our First Polish Baptist Church, was an important factor in that preparatory convention. A splendid site has been secured on Martin Street, just off Michigan Avenue, where a new church will be erected this year. The plans are out and the location is strategic. The Second Polish Church is coming into being under the leadership of Rev. A. S. Morze. A brick business block at the northwest corner of Harper and Dubois has been purchased and is now being made ready for occupancy. This too is a fortunate location. The Baptist message is welcome news to our Polish brethren and we look for quite wonderful results from these two churches.

Detroit, too, is the largest urban Roumanian center in America. The fourth Roumanian Baptist Church in the Detroit area has just been started near the great new industrial plant of the Ford Motor Company on the west side of Detroit. These brethren are wonderful evangelizers. They are working in hearty cooperation with the Detroit Baptist Union.

The beautiful new church at Grand River and Clarendon Avenue for the Northwestern Baptist Church (Hudson Avenue) and also that for the Redford Baptist Church will soon be ready for dedication. Both are outstanding structures although as yet only the auditorium proper is being built.

Evangelism is ever to the fore among Detroit Baptist churches. Monday, Jan. 22, was a great day, when an all-day program was presented at the Temple Church with Dr. Joseph Taylor, of West China, and Rev. Albert H. Gage, of Chicago, as principal speakers and guests of honor. Both of these gentlemen left a profound impression. State Director Grant M. Hudson, of Lansing, and Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame who happened to be in the city, also gave gripping addresses. An aggressive campaign of evangelism, that will culminate at Easter, is on in all our churches.

Dr. Agar was with the Detroit churches the week of Feb. 4. An ambitious program, covering groups of churches at central locations, culminating with a great mass meeting of Baptists at the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church on Friday evening, Feb. 9, was arranged. Dr. Agar is an ever-welcome guest in Detroit. He was here in November on a preparatory visit.

Another rich treat is in store for Detroit Baptists, and that is the coming of Dr. John Y. Aitchison and President Scott, of the General Promotion Board. They are to be with us Feb. 18-19. Monday morning, February 19, they will address the pastors' conference and in the evening, a mass meeting at the First Church.

The Detroit Council of Churches is a federation of the Protestant churches of Detroit, organized to present a united Christian front to this great city. An ambitious campaign of evangelism will be inaugurated Feb. 18, when Dr. Bustard, of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio, will spend a whole week in a series of union meetings, centering at the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. Other eminent speakers will follow in turn, closing with a great series of meetings in four of the largest theatres and many churches throughout the city on Good Friday, from 12 to 3.

St. Louis Baptist Simultaneous Evangelistic Campaign

The churches of the St. Louis Baptist Association are arranging for a simultaneous evangelistic campaign to begin Sunday, March 4. Some ten or twelve evangelists of the Baptist Home Mission Board, Atlanta, Ga., have been engaged to assist in the meetings. Also several churches have arranged with pastor-evangelists to come and assist in the meetings; among these are Dr. M. E. Dodd, pastor First Baptist Church, Shreveport, La., who will assist W. H. Geistweit of the Third Church; Dr. J. E. Dillard, pastor Southside Church, Birmingham, Ala., who will assist L. M. Hale of the Delmar Church; Dr. R. M. Inlow, pastor First Baptist Church, Sedalia, Mo., who will assist R. B. Whiteside of the Euclid Church; Dr. R. D. Garland, state secretary, Richmond, Va., who will assist H. C. Combs of the Compton Heights Church; Dr. Chas. Durden, of Galesburg, Ill., will be with P. G. Van Zandt of West Park; Dr. S. M. Brown, of Kansas City, will assist J. D. Gunter at Calvary Church.

It is expected that about twenty-five churches will line up in this evangelistic campaign. Dr. J. W. Beagle, state secretary of evangelism for the Missouri Baptist General Association, will have general supervision of the evangelistic campaign. Dr. L. M. Hale of Delmar Baptist Church is chairman and Dr. S. E. Ewing, superintendent of Baptist Missions for St. Louis, is secretary of the local committee on arrangements.

Evangelistic Meetings at Shanghai College

By Henry Huizinga

Twenty-six students at Shanghai College decided to become Christians at a meeting held on a recent Sunday afternoon in the college chapel. The college has just launched a big campaign among its students to enlist them for the kingdom of Christ. With more students than ever before, many of them new ones, the problem of properly amalgamating them in thought and ideals with the character of the institution becomes a difficult one.

The object of the college is the promotion of the kingdom of God in China, and it is held that the best way of accomplishing this end is by enlisting all its members as followers of Jesus Christ. After a series of special addresses at morning chapel by various teachers and students, Dr. Stanley Jones was invited to speak to the students on a Saturday morning and twice on Sunday.

On Saturday Dr. Jones took for his subject, "The Need of Moral Character in the Development of a Nation." By means of a series of striking charts Dr. Jones compared China with other nations as to area, population, education, natural resources, railways, and increase of wealth. He spoke of the avaricious greed of certain officials and the ravages of the soldiers as the greatest curses of the land. With 1,500,000 soldiers China has a larger standing army than any other country in the world, yet she is not at war with any nation.

On Sunday Dr. Jones spoke earnestly about following Jesus Christ, as being the only reasonable way for a student who desires to do his best both for himself and for his country. At the close of the afternoon meeting an opportunity was given to all the students to sign cards, signifying their resolve to become Christians or their intention to study the matter further. There were twenty-six of the former and nine of the latter. This is regarded as the beginning of large numbers who will be induced to follow Christ in response to individual efforts of their fellow students.

At present there are about 560 students in the institution, of whom about one-half are Christians. In the college department alone about three-fourths are Christians; of the sixty-one students in the two highest classes all but four are Christians; while all of the thirty-one seniors are Christians. This shows the trend toward Christianity as the students stay longer in the institution.

The New England Baptist Hospital

The trustees of the New England Baptist Hospital have launched a campaign for the raising of funds needed in addition to certain gifts from Mr. S. M. Brown and Col. E. H. Haskell, for the completion of the new hospital buildings.

In 1893, after investigation, Baptist laymen found that the hospital facilities in the vicinity of Boston were limited. It was extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain free beds for worthy members of the 100 Baptist churches in that locality. Since its organization the hospital has given $120,000 of free service largely to members of our own churches. Through all these years many of our foreign and home missionaries have received treatment and care without compensation.

The present campaign will mean the enlargement of the service which the hospital can render.

District of Columbia

By Henry W. O. Millington

There is nothing particularly startling in our Baptist life in the District of Columbia at the present time, but a good steady movement all along the line.

There have been several pastoral changes in recent weeks. Rev. O. O. Dietz, has come from Richmond, Va., to take charge of the Brookland Church. His work there opens auspiciously, particularly in the matter of Sunday-school development.

Rev. C. B. Austin of Laurinburg, N. C., began his work as pastor of the West Washington Church on the first Sunday of the new year. He is a young man of good training and some experience, and is already commending himself to the people of the church and to the pastors of our conference. Congregations are increasing, and a hopeful spirit is apparent all through the church.

At the Tennallytown Church, Rev. W. L. Van Horn recently commenced his work. He is not a stranger to Washington Baptists, and is held in high regard by all who know him. He has been with the Tennallytown people about two months, and there are signs of new life and interest all through the church. A pressing need at Tennallytown is a new church building, and the people are already moving toward the erection of a suitable edifice.

Rev. A. Richardson began his work at Anacostia Jan. 14, and was recognized with appropriate services on the twenty-second. This church is situated in an excellent community, and ought to have a substantial growth. We are hoping that under Mr. Richardson's ministry the church may develop in keeping with its opportunities.

Calvary Church, under the leadership of Rev. W. S. Abernethy, is forging ahead, according to its usual habit. It is a veritable beehive of activity. The congregations crowd the house, conversions are frequent and substantial additions are being constantly made to the membership. At a recent prayer meeting a picture of Dr. Green, for forty-one years pastor of this church, was unveiled. This gift was made by the Burrall Class to the church, and will hang in the prayer meeting room. Calvary Church has the largest Sunday school in the District of Columbia, a total enrolment of 3755 and an average attendance for the last year of 1734. This last figure is exclusive of the home department, and the cradle roll, which are included in the total membership of the school. More than $26,000 was contributed by the school, of which $15,000 was given for missions and benevolences.

First Church, under the leadership of Rev. H. Allen Tupper, is making constant progress in every direction. The hearty enthusiasm of the pastor is a constant inspiration to the membership of the church, and the old First Church was never so wide awake and so ambitious and ambitiously progressive as at the present time. Dr. Tupper gave the church, as a motto for the current year: "Do your best. Leave the rest."

Temple Church, a neighbor of First Church, shows great strength under the continued leadership of Dr. J. J. Muir, dean of our Baptist ministry. His pastorate has been notable in the history of Baptist pastorates in the nation's capital.

Rev. H. T. Stevenson is the energetic pastor of Bethany church, which recently sustained a great loss in the sudden death of Mr. Royal E. Wilbur, the senior deacon, who died at the church during the morning services on the first Sunday of the year. Mr. Stevenson, upon carrying the news to Mr. Wilbur's family, slipped and fell in front of the house, sustaining an injury which has necessitated his right arm being supported in a sling ever since. He is improving, however, and will soon be about again.

Rev. E. Richardson, at Congress Heights, has made a notable record in Sunday-school attendance, having been present in Sunday school 1000 consecutive Sundays. He has recently been elected for the twelveth time president of the Washington Society for Philosophical Research.

A Strong Church

At Takoma Park Rev. W. E. La Rue is leading with great wisdom and vigor. This church is fortunate in the possession of an unusual number of strong men and women. The urgent need here is a building, and the church has completed plans and will enter upon the work of construction in spring. This church is situated close by the Walter Reed Hospital, where are hundreds of soldiers. Mr. La Rue has been appointed by the missionary committee of our association to act as chaplain in that institution. It would be a great help in this work if people who have Baptist friends in this hospital would notify Mr. La Rue.

Grace church, Rev. F. W. Johnson, pastor, recently reopened its auditorium after renovation and the redecoration of the walls. This auditorium is one of the most beautiful church audience rooms in the city. Rev. H. J. Stewart of Richmond, Va., is soon to assist Pastor Johnson in special services.

Metropolitan Church, Rev. J. Compton Ball, pastor, is moving toward the purchase of an adjoining property and is expecting by this movement to provide a parsonage for its pastor, and additional accommodations for its growing Sunday school. The church received 136 new members last year—a net gain of eighty-three, which is the largest clear gain made by any of our churches in the same period of time. The chorister, Mr. Gilbert A. Clark, has just completed twenty-five years of service in that office, and the church recognized the event by tendering a reception to Mr. Clark and presenting him with a gold watch. Pastor Ball was surprised by a gift of $200 in gold this last Christmas.

Dr. John E. Briggs is untiring in his work at the Fifth Church. Through ordinary and extraordinary endeavors during the past year, 165 new names were added to the church roll. This is the more remarkable when one considers the changing character of the community in which this church stands. Miss Lillian Williams has recently come from Richmond, Va., to serve as a pastor's helper.

Rev. James W. Many has been with the East Washington Heights Church for over twenty-five years, and has made a name in that church and in the service of the association that will abide forever among Washington Baptists. His has been a self-sacrificing work through all these years, but it is a work that has told strongly for Christ and his cause.

Rev. Hubert Bunyea is bringing things to pass at the Fountain Memorial Church where he is bringing in and developing a large number of young people who are giving great strength to this comparatively new interest.

Rev. Hez Swem is developing the Centennial Church into a strong organization.

At Hyattsville, Pastor J. H. Strong is doing steady and commendable work.

Immanuel Church, under the leadership of Rev. Gove G. Johnson, is looking toward completion of its new church building, which is to be in the nature of a national Baptist memorial. This property will be a magnificent structure in a most commanding location, and a great credit to our Baptist brotherhood. Dr. Johnson is an untiring worker, and is strengthening the church along all lines of activity.

Rev. Walter C. Scott is having success at the Kendall Church where new signs of life are plainly visible.

Petworth Church, under the care of Rev. F. Paul Langhorne, is striding forth in noble fashion. It is expected that this new and beautiful edifice will be ready for occupancy by Easter. The church recently celebrated its tenth anniversary and the services were largely attended and marked by great enthusiasm.

Our Italian work, under the care of Rev. M. C. Marseglia, is making progress, but the church is naturally hampered by reason of not having a building of its own in which to prosecute its work. Plans are under way for the construction of a suitable edifice in which to house our Italian mission.

Rev. E. C. Prim has been with the Second Church since last July, and has already made a large place for himself in our Baptist life in Washington. Second Church is going steadily forward under his leadership, and is taking on a real strength. Among the laymen is Dea. Thomas C. Simpson who has just completed fifty consecutive years as teacher of the young men's class in the Bible school. The class arranged a public service in commemoration of this event, which called out a large attendance of enthusiastic friends. Special music by a male quartet was rendered and addresses were made by the pastor of the church and Rev. H. W. O. Millington, executive secretary of the association. During the evening Deacon Simpson was presented by the president of the class with $50 in gold, with a Bible appropriately inscribed by the ladies' Bible class, and a basket of flowers was presented by the church to Mrs. Simpson.

This writer recently visited for the first time in over twenty years his former charge in Lowell, Mass., and preached the sermon in connection with the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Bible School of the Fifth Street Church of that city.

Baptist Report from Sweden

A Review of the Past Year

By C. E. Benander

Looking back upon the events and experiences in connection with the Baptist churches and their work in Sweden during the year past, we have many things to be thankful to God for. There have been hopeful signs of an awakening desire for a deepening of the life of faith among our people. Individuals and churches have given themselves to prayers with more fervency and endurance than usual. Efforts have generally been made to extend and develop evangelistic work. In his grace God has met the longings, the prayers and the endeavors of his people with blessings and manifestations of his power through the workings of the Holy Spirit to the edification and perfection of his redeemed, and the conversion of many children of this world. Remarkable revival movements have been going on in some places with glorious results. Additions to the churches through baptism have been numerous. As soon as the statistics have been collected, we are confident that they will show a considerable increase of the total membership.

In our theological seminaries the spirit of prayer has been filling the hearts of teachers and students. All have seemed to be earnestly waiting for special power from God for the ministry of the gospel. Our students are allowed to extend their Christmas vacation through the month of January for the purpose of engaging in evangelistic work, usually with most blessed fruits. The number of students at the Bethel Seminary of Stockholm has been forty-three during the fall term.

The work on our foreign mission fields is ever growing and prospering. Consequently there is a permanent demand for more workers. Despite the depression of business and scarcity of money in our country, we have sent out quite a number of our missionaries. This, however, is an act of faith, for at present our mission treasuries do not, by far, receive the funds required.

A Notable Visit

Like the Baptists in several other countries we were favored with a visit in Sweden of the worthy representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. Sheppard. Their short visit occurred in July. It is not easy at that time of the year to draw together any large audience at a religious meeting in Stockholm. But Sunday afternoon, July 23, we had at least 1500 people who attentively listened to the inspiring addresses of the esteemed messengers from the great Baptist brotherhood of the Northern Convention of the United States. In the morning they had preached at the Y. M. C. A. hall. The afternoon meeting was held in a public hall called the Auditorium. On Monday, July 24, a flying visit was paid to the university town of Upsala. There our distinguished visitors were received by the archbishop, N. Soderblom, for a brief interview. The Lutheran chief and the Baptist representatives had a most cordial conversation for about twenty minutes. Then there was a meeting at the local Baptist church with a good audience. The visit and the preaching were greatly appreciated by the pastor, Rev. Wennstrom and his church at Upsala. We could have wished to keep the good brethren among us for a long time, but they had to leave for the new Baltic republics. Like all representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society who have visited Sweden previously, Dr. Abernethy and Mr. Sheppard won the hearts of the Swedish Baptists through their Christian ways, their evangelical messages and their amiable and brotherly conversation.

Raising a Pension Fund

Five years ago our general convention voted unanimously for the adoption of a plan to raise a fund for the pensioning of our Baptist ministers when they reach the age at which they are expected to retire from work. The aim has been to raise one million kronor and an energetic brother, Rev. O. Nilson, was engaged to devote his time to the work of collecting this sum, and have it ready to present as a thankoffering before the Lord at the celebration, in 1923, of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Baptist movement in Sweden. Our brother has been struggling hard to carry out his mission. But owing to the depression of business which seems to grow worse and worse, the prospects have grown dark, especially during the last year which was expected to crown the efforts with great results. As things appear now, we shall have to be thankful if half a million can be brought together by July, 1923, for the more than needful purpose.

The Coming Baptist World Congress

The outstanding event in Swedish Baptist history of 1922 was the decision to invite the Third Baptist World Congress to convene at Stockholm, July 21, 1923, and continue through the week following. We were aware from the very first that it was an exceedingly great undertaking, but we ventured to take the responsibility upon us. As we are approaching the time for the huge assembly, the main interest and cares are, of course, absorbed by it, at least so far as the churches of Stockholm are concerned. Headquarters, the best to be had in Stockholm, are secured, and committees are at work to get everything ready and ordered. We are glad to know that the Baptists in America are greatly and generally interested in the congress, and that we may expect a large contingent of delegates to come. Let us all pray that the congress may be a truly spiritual meeting fraught with blessings and power from God.

Kalamazoo College

The chamber of commerce of the city of Kalamazoo has voted to put on a financial campaign in the city in the interest of the college. A strong committee representing the outstanding business and professional men of the city has been appointed by the board of directors of the chamber of commerce and this committee is working enthusiastically, organizing for the campaign. It proposes to secure in the city of Kalamazoo, pledges and cash to the amount of $200,000 to match the contribution offered provisionally by the general board of education of New York. An open forum was held Feb. 2 in the interests of the college. The actual canvassing will be done in the period between Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays. The college officials are deeply appreciative of this action taken on the part of the representatives of the civic life of the city and are hopeful of its successful culmination.

Miss Grant, chairman of the women's state committee, is doing a vigorous piece of work in the interest of the women's dormitory campaign. Pledges are coming in all the time and some encouraging letters are being received by Miss Grant and by Mr. Bachelor from pastors and others who have the interest of the college and the success of the dormitory campaign upon their hearts. A large number of the women's circles have entered the banner class by having sent in to Miss Grant or to the college, pledges covering the entire quota which was suggested to them. Miss Grant is anxious that every circle as a group will authorize its president or secretary to sign a pledge for the amount of its quota and send it in at once in order that the women's committee and the college authorities may feel justified in beginning construction of the building this spring. They are determined that they will not start the building until they can see the way clear to having it paid for within a period of three years. While they would like to have any pledges made by circles payable within two years of date, they are allowing circles that have other obligations facing them to make their pledges on a three-year basis from date, making the payments in such a way as they desire within that time.

President E. V. Creed of the State B. Y. P. U. organization, Treasurer Ross V. Wells, and Religious Education Director Morgan L. Williams are delighted with the progress in the scholarship campaign which they are conducting in the young people's organizations. A suggested quota has been given to each society in the state and the college has agreed with certain provisions to give eight scholarships in connection with the successful issue of this campaign. Pledges are made by the society as a group and are to be paid by June 1.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

The Woman's Baptist Social Union of Boston, extends to women missionaries, while home on furlough, the privilege of attending its meetings, which are held in Ford Hall, Boston, on the Tuesday after the first Monday in the month from October to June, upon payment of the usual guest fee of $1.50 each night. For further information write to Miss J. W. Woods, secretary, 161 Waverley St., Framingham, Mass.

VERMONT

The annual roll call and business meeting of the North Springfield Church, Rev. E. C. Weeks, pastor, was held on Jan. 6, when nearly 130 members were either present or sent responses to the roll-call. The various reports showed that aggressive work had been done in the different departments. Through the death of Mr. Amos D. Heald and Hon. Fred G. Field, the church lost during the year two deacons. Mr. Clarence O. Randall and Mr. J. Leslie Giddings were elected to fill those vacancies. At the close of the business meeting an excellent dinner was served to a company of about 170 members and friends of the church.

The West Haven Church, Rev. Thomas Adams, pastor, has met with a severe loss through the death of Deacon C. W. Tryon, who had served the church as deacon for nineteen years and was also treasurer at the time of his death. Mr. Clayton Gardner has been elected to succeed Mr. Tryon as treasurer.

The recent death of Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Cull of Cambridge, N. Y., brings to their many Vermont friends a sense of personal loss. During Mr. Cull's eleven years of service in the state, three years as state missionary and eight as pastor at West Pawlet, both had won a large place in the respect and affections of the Baptists of the state.

Splendid reports on the educational program for the year are now being received at the convention office. The Bristol Church, with a resident membership of 160, has just opened its school of missions with an enrolment of 115. The Brattleboro church is carrying out a carefully planned educational program. The first term of the school of missions was held during October and November, and was devoted to the study of the American Negro, the home mission study theme for this year. At the present time a teacher training class is in progress. This class has an enrolment of over thirty. The same general plan of a buffet supper with class-period and then the prayer meeting following is carried out with this class as with the mission study classes. At the close of this study another term of the school of missions will open, and the classes will then study India. Besides the intensive mission study which is being carried on, this church is also making a high record in the missionary reading contest. While many reports are still lacking, at the present writing twenty churches have reported over 1200 books, read in the missionary and Sunday-school reading courses. Feb. 3, two Camp Fire groups in the Burlington Church will start a miniature school of missions, with two classes and a story period for the younger girls. These classes will be carried on for four weeks and will study girl life in India.

NEW YORK

The annual meeting and roll call of First Church, Massena, was held Jan. 4, and many items of encouragement were found in the reports. All bills for 1922 were paid, an addition of $300 was made to the budget to care for some old obligations and many substantial increases in pledges were reported. This little church, with less than 100 resident members, raised for all purposes in 1922 more than $5000, nearly $2000 of which was for benevolences. The pastor, Rev. F. O. Cunningham, reported having preached 136 sermons during the year, the evangelistic campaign of last winter having increased the number. He has driven over 3,000 miles in the work of pastoral visitation, covering points as far away as twenty miles. As chairman of the missionary committee of the St. Lawrence Association, he has also travelled over the whole country.

NEW JERSEY

Ridgewood, Emmanuel, Dr. Thomas H. Sprague, pastor: In addition to $450 given to the Smyrna emergency fund, the church has recently given nearly $200 to European relief. The men's club has also given $155 to the Judson Health Center of New York. Dr. F. M. Lynch of Africa spoke at the morning service, Jan. 21. A four page folder announces a winter evening college, beginning Feb. 1, and continuing for six Thursday evenings. Supper is followed by a devotional service and this in turn by four study classes, one in Bible study; one in "Building with India"; one in "Problems of Leadership" (for church school workers) and one in "Choices and Life" (for young people). Theodore Roosevelt's traveling companion on the Amazon, Anthony Fiala, lectures before the men's club, Feb. 13. Emmanuel is cooperating in the community movement for a council for religious education which it is hoped will be the means of advancing opportunities for a more thorough and efficient religious education for the young people of the community.

Dr. Foster at Peddie

A week of intense Christian seriousness and moral uplift was the result of the third annual visit to the Peddie School of Dr. Allyn K. Foster, student secretary of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention, who conducted a series of inspirational talks, student conferences and devotional services, Jan. 21-26.

Dr. Foster had charge of the chapel exercises in the Wilson Hall auditorium each morning during his stay on the campus, and both students and members of the faculty benefited greatly from his informal talks on Christianity as applied to the problems of school life. As has been his practice in other years, Dr. Foster also visited various class-rooms throughout the day, interpreting the relation of the course of study at hand to the broad problem of life. Conferences with individual students also occupied a large part of his time.

The evening services in the chapel were voluntary, but a large number of the students and members of the faculty availed themselves of the opportunity to hear Dr. Foster. Particularly effective and encouraging was the final evening service on Friday, Jan. 26. On this occasion, Dr. Foster developed the idea of the efficacy of a life program in making the individual ready for whatever emergencies the future has in store.

No feature of the school year at Peddie is so full of moral and spiritual import as these annual visits of Dr. Foster.

Pastors Gather

Dr. C. E. Goodall, executive secretary of the state convention, called the pastors of northern New Jersey together for a dinner, and a conference to consider raising New Jersey's quota in the New World Movement. Brief addresses were made by Drs. C. H. Sears, J. Y. Aitchison, and F. A. Agar. The conference developed such a feeling of faith and hope that a committee was asked to prepare a statement. This conference and statement is given publicity that it may bring cheer and courage to the brethren in New Jersey, and throughout the Northern Baptist Convention.

W. J. Swaffield, R. M. Traver, M. J. Twomey, as a committee send THE BAPTIST the following account of this unusual gathering of Baptist pastors.

"We, the Baptist pastors of Northern New Jersey, 100 strong, in conference assembled in the First Baptist Peddie Memorial Church of Newark, on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1923, give thanks to Almighty God for the spiritual victories, which have come with the progress of the Northern Baptist Convention, in carrying through the program of the New World Movement.

"We reaffirm our loyalty to that program, and again place ourselves on record as accepting the challenge of the Son of God as expressed in that program; we pledge ourselves to a deeper consecration and a loyal cooperation with those who are leading us in the conquering march for Christ; we say again that he is the Son of God and our Saviour, and that we will, God helping us, place New Jersey in advance of the enviable position she has had in this grand endeavor. To this end we call the members of our churches to a fuller recognition of their stewardship of the manifold gifts of God, to a deeper consecration of their means to the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord, that our full share of the $10,000,000 required may be in the hands of the treasurer of the General Board of Promotion by May 1, 1923."

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

DURING THE SIXTEEN months' pastorate of Rev. A. A. Blake with the churches at Flatwoods and Star Junction, ninety-four members have been received by baptism and twenty by letter and experience. The financial conditions are the best in the history of both churches. Two teacher-training classes are doing faithful work.

REV. G. M. WALKER, OF Meadville, has been elected chairman of the promotion board of the French Creek Association. Following a conference of leaders with Dr. Wm. G. Russell, a program was outlined by which each church in the association will be visited in the interests of denominational missions.

THE WORK OF CAMBRIDGE SPRINGS under Rev. R. M. Safford is steadily developing. Eight hundred were in attendance at the Christmas program. Several have been baptized recently.

REV. J. M. SHREVE, pastor of the Edinboro Church, is carrying on aggressive evangelistic work, and baptisms are resulting.

MEADVILLE, Rev. G. M. Walker, pastor: Reports at our recent annual meeting showed marked gains in all departments. All current bills have been paid and the church is supporting enthusiastically our missionary enterprises. Fifty-seven were baptized during the year. The pastor is preaching a series of sermons on "The Life of Christ," heard by increasing congregations.

THE CHURCH BUILDING AT Wayland has been painted and decorated without and within. The financial condition is excellent.

REV. C. G. STEWARD is doing effective work in the Mahoning, Ambrose and Crooked Creek churches. During the year Mahoning welcomed eleven members, six by baptism and five by letter; Ambrose, four by baptism; Crooked Creek, twelve by baptism and one by letter. All of these churches are showing deep and sustained interest in missions. Improvements on the church property have been made at Mahoning and Crooked Creek.

DILLTOWN, REV. W. E. FLESHER, pastor: Twelve new members were recently received. A furnace was installed in the church early in the winter.

REV. M. NEILSON HAS resigned as pastor of the Turtle Creek Church, effective Jan. 31, to accept a call to Essex, Canada. Mr. Neilson's pastorate at Turtle Creek has been very successful. Many new members have been received and the congregations have greatly increased. His best work has been with the young people and the B. Y. P. U. of the Turtle Creek Church is now one of the largest and most active in the Pittsburgh Association.

SALTSBURG, REV. L. L. BRADLEY, pastor. The church has purchased a new parsonage which has all modern conveniences. It will make a fine home for the pastors of the church. It is already occupied by the pastor and family.

DERRY, REV. W. P. WHEELER, pastor. Three from Latrobe and two from Derry were baptized Sunday, Jan. 21. One conversion at the evening service.

THE FREEPORT CHURCH IS making real and steady progress under Rev. S. J. Cummings. The revival meetings in which Mr. Cummings was assisted by Rev. S. A. Farver, of Tarentum, helped the church members, attracted many outsiders and resulted in several conversions and several Baptists who have stood aloof are now joining in the work of the church. The salary of the acting pastor has been increased recently over 100 per cent. The church has accepted the year's apportionment for denominational missionary work. The outlook is encouraging for the first time in many years.

BELLE VERNON, Rev. Henry Madtes, pastor. Seventeen were welcomed into the fellowship of the church at the communion service, Sunday, Jan. 7. The attendance at the communion service was the largest in five years.

CALVARY, IRVIN, Rev. Noah Fehl, pastor. Nineteen persons were welcomed into the membership of the church, Sunday, Jan. 7, seventeen of these coming by baptism. The annual thank offering for the reduction of the indebtedness of the church property amounted to $330. $100 was recently sent for Near East Relief.

PARK, McKEESPORT, Rev. W. R. Hill, pastor. Seven were received into the fellowship of the church Sunday morning, Jan. 7, making a total of thirty-four in the past ten months. Four were baptized at the evening service. The Bible school continues to grow in members and interest. The annual meeting of the church was held Wednesday evening, Jan. 10.

LORENZ AVENUE, PITTSBURGH, Rev. L. J. Ramsey, pastor. The annual business meeting of the church was held Wednesday, Jan. 3. The reports showed a balance in each treasury, with all bills paid. There were twenty-five additions to the church during the year, twenty-one of these by baptism. The average attendance at Bible School was 120, a gain for the year of 35 per cent. The average contribution per pupil each Sunday was 15 cents with a total regular collection of $959. The entire contribution of the school was $1267.

REV. J. W. CASE OF RIPLEY, N. Y., recently closed a series of special meetings at Riceville, in which the Baptist, Methodist and Congregational churches cooperated. About sixty accessions to these churches are reported.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

IN CLOSING HIS WORK as acting pastor at the Irving Park Baptist Church, Chicago, Dr. John W. Weddell spoke on the following reminiscent topics: Up against the Heart of East London; A Visit to the Welsh Revival; Going up to Keswick; On Finney's Old Tramping Ground; Dwight L. Moody as I Knew Him. The brethren speak most cordially of Dr. Weddell's work ad interim and commend him to other churches in the important between-times while they are seeking for a permanent undershepherd.

AT ILLINOIS STATE UNIVERSITY there are as many as thirty-nine denominational groups represented among the 8,406 students. The larger groups have expert pastoral oversight. The 360 or more Baptist students have Dr. Martin Bryant as a leader, whose work is giving excellent satisfaction. Six thousand seven hundred fifty of the students at large have enrolled under denominational auspices, and the swing is manifestly back, if not to religious dominance, to distinct religious oversight and influence.

WISCONSIN

RECENTLY THE MEMBERS OF First Church, Delavan, and its congregation surprised their pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln Kelley, by giving them a reception upon the occasion of the completion of five years' work with them and also the tenth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Kelley recently baptized eleven candidates, making now 100 so received during his pastorate aside from those received by letter and experience.

OHIO

DR. L. L. HENSON OF Covington, Ky., has just closed a series of meetings in Hillsboro, O., in which there were 162 professions of faith and 165 others who signed cards indicating a definite reconsecration of themselves to the Lord's service.

AT GRANVILLE THE church recently observed a month of missions and stewardship. Among the speakers were Miss Isabel Crawford of Oklahoma Indian fame, Rev. G. H. Waters from China, Dr. H. W. Kirby of Assam and Pastor H. T. Houf. The campaign added fifty names to the church's list of tithers. At present 130, which is 29 per cent of the resident members, are tithers. In addition forty young people in the congregation tithe, making the local total 170. Before Christmas Dr. Allyn K. Foster was with the church a week delivering vigorous messages twice each day and counselling with students who sought his help. Special offerings were taken in January for relief work, bringing in $125 for Near East relief and over $150 for European relief. Several members have been received by letter and three young people await baptism.

MICHIGAN

YPSILANTI: The more than 100 Baptist students in attendance upon the Michigan State Normal College this year, coming from the sixty-five different Baptist churches of Michigan are proving more than ever the need of denominational interest in their religious training. These Baptist young people are finding it so easy, almost unconsciously, to slip out of touch with the church and its claim upon them in the midst of the many college duties and social possibilities. What is needed is a program, set up and promoted by some young woman with a vision, who gives her effort and thought, for the love of it, to these girls and young women, that they may be kept in touch with the church and the denominational interests. The church at Ypsilanti numbers less than 225 resident members, and this means a less number still to "carry on" in the work. Some are not interested in the student program; others are doing their best to arrange the work of the Sunday school and the church so that the largest number shall be made to feel that religion and the church has a real place in the school life. The past month has had its Sunday-school class, its worship group, its sleigh ride party and "supper" at the church besides the personal touch of the workers of the church, for the expression of what the church can do, but the student secretary, with the bigness of her opportunity appealing to her, is the one great need. Who will find her and send her to the educational committee for her appointment for this great work? Miss Frances P. Greenough, of Dr. Padelford's staff, was here Feb. 3-5.

IOWA

REV. J. ORRIN GOULD, formerly student pastor at the University of Idaho, is now located at the University Baptist Church, Des Moines, and is getting this new church well organized for active work with the students at the university and the rapidly growing community in which it is located. He is making a place for himself in Des Moines and adds strength to the Baptist forces.

REV. H. R. BEST, of the Forest Avenue Church, Des Moines, is leading his church in his characteristic vigorous fashion. His Sunday school is growing rapidly and is completely organized for efficient work. Large audiences greet him at each service. There are additions to the church each Sunday. He is in constant demand as a speaker before the various organizations of the city and conventions meeting in Des Moines.

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF Rev. Hal E. Norton, executive secretary of the Des Moines City Union, one new church has been organized; a former Union Gospel church secured to the denomination, to be known as Bethany Baptist Church; two new Sunday schools organized—Grandview, just north of the Fairgrounds and Immanuel, located between Fort Des Moines and the heart of the city. Each of these schools has a large field to draw from and is effectively reaching its respective community. In the campaign for bigger and better Sunday schools Des Moines, through the efforts of Mr. Norton, registered 100 per cent. Buffalo was the only other city reaching the 100 per cent standard. The city B. Y. P. U. Union is carrying out a strong program which will culminate just before Easter in a "win-my-chum" campaign.

NEBRASKA

FIRST CHURCH OF PERU, Rev. Claude Richmond, pastor, recently burned the note that represented the last outstanding obligation of the church, leaving it free of debt for the first time in several years. In the Bible school there is a new teacher-training class taught by the pastor, a missionary teacher who takes each of the regular classes in turn for a missionary lesson, and a class in the history of the New Testament church for students in the state teachers' college located there, for which two hours' college credit is given. A personal workers' band, with a membership of more than one-third the resident membership of the church has been organized for the special evangelistic effort which will be put forth between now and Easter. The church has not been in better condition, financially or spiritually, for years.

THE CHURCH AT BRIDGEPORT, F. M. Sturdevant, pastor, held two weeks' meetings, beginning with Dec. 31, the pastor conducting them. There was a good attendance and a good spirit. Fourteen have been received into the church, eight upon confession of faith and six by baptism. Three are awaiting baptism. The church was greatly revived and is hopeful for the future.

RECENT BOOKS

Published by

T. & T. Clark of Edinburg

Redemption From This World or, The Supernatural in Christianity

By A. G. HOGG, M. A.

The author believes that the supernatural should be the abiding note of the church; and that the world's redemption is to be accomplished, not by new methods or improved machinery but by a discovery of the unfathomed possibilities of God in Christ, both for the individual and the church. $2.75

Religion and Modern Thought

By PROFESSOR GEORGE GALLOWAY, D. D.

This book is a masterpiece. It seeks to establish the validity of the claims of Christianity as a religion that meets the demands of modern thought and that asks its adherents to assent to nothing which cannot be accepted by science. $2.50

The Epistle to the Hebrews:

Its Doctrine and Significance

By PROFESSOR E. F. SCOTT, D. D.

This epistle makes a peculiar appeal to the mind of our own age. It deals with questions which are ultimately the same as those which are now perplexing us and suggests answers which are still valid. There is need therefore, for this new exposition. $3.00

The Christian Doctrine of Peace

Edited by JAMES HASTINGS, D. D.

Delegates from every land testified at the Copenhagen Conference that there is a great silent world of men and women yearning for peace. This volume deals in a thorough and practical manner with the whole biblical doctrine of peace and above all the question of Peace or War. At every point the truth is made clear and sent home by new and carefully chosen illustrations. $4.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597-599 Fifth Ave. New York

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

FIRST CHURCH, GREELEY: The stewardship campaign in this church showed its immediate fruitage in the largest response in the history of the church, to the every-member canvass. Most worth-while of all was the response to the call for life enlistment, when two new names were added to the list of volunteers. The church now has six actually committed to missionary service at home or abroad. Two of its members, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Klein, are already on the foreign field and one other member, Miss Minnie Bush, a former student at the B. M. T. S., has recently been employed as church and Sunday-school visitor. The church begins special meetings, Feb. 25, with the pastor, Walter I. Fowle, as evangelist and Charles W. Thomas, student pastor for Colorado, as leader in the service of song.

Want Ads

Collection Envelopes, 8 cents a pack of 52 each in cartons. Write Dufold-Trifold Company, Asbury Park, N. J.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS
We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent.
Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play— Special Easter Services—Just out.
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful.
Write for slide bulletins.
Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY.
27 years Supplying Churches.
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

CHURCH BULLETINS
Every progressive church should use Winters' De Luxe Bulletin Boards. Dignified, refined, effective and economical. Over 7,000 IN USE. They increase attendance, interest and collections. Thousands of enthusiastic letters from Pastors. Write today for illus. Catalog B. H. E. Winters Specialty Company, Davenport, Ia.

STOCKHOLM
And General European Tour
France, Battle Fields, Italy, Switzerland, The Rhine, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Great Britain.
Private party under management of Temple Tours, Boston, conducted by W. T. Elmore, Pastor First Baptist Church, Lincoln, Nebraska.
Sailing June 7, on "Mongolia"
72 days, $980.
Address
W. T. ELMORE,
First Baptist Church, Lincoln, Nebr.

Religion as Experience
By JOHN WRIGHT BUCKHAM
"A vital book. It begins at the beginning and carries one forward on definite lines to ascertainable ends."
—S. Parkes Cadman, D.D.
Net, $1.00, postpaid
THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE FIRST UNIT OF the meeting house of the First Baptist Church of Vallejo has been completed and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The unit consists of the social hall and Bible school section of the building, comprising two large halls and numerous recitation rooms and kitchen. The brick wall of the entire building has been completed and roofed in, but the auditorium is unfinished and will remain so for perhaps two years because of the lack of funds. The small membership (155 including children) has been strained to the limit financially in the erection and completion of the edifice thus far. It is now under a debt of $18,000, and this will have to be eased somewhat before finishing and furnishing the auditorium, which will require about $25,000 more. But under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Luther Parker Russell, there is confidence of complete success. The ceremonies began Jan. 10 with fellowship prayer worship in the Bible school, fellowship banquet on the night of the twelfth, and on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock with the dedication sermon by Dr. C. W. Brinstad, secretary of the Baptist Convention of Northern California. At the conclusion of the sermon baptism was administered to a class of converts. At 3 p. m. the dedication address was delivered by Rev. John Newton Garst, of Oakland. On Jan. 16 the district meeting of the Pacific Baptist Association was held with Rev. D. C. Williams of Santa Rosa as moderator. Large crowds attended all these meetings and much encouragement and enthusiasm was manifested. On account of the location of this new house of worship, close to Mare Island Navy Yard, its value can hardly be estimated. Sailors, marines and officers of the Navy are continually coming and going here. It is the belief of the membership and of all who are familiar with it and its possibilites that there is no better location for far-reaching church activity in California than in Vallejo.

The Ladies' Aid

WE'VE put a fine addition on the good old church at home,
It's just the latest kilter, with a gallery and dome.
It seats a thousand people—finest church in all the town,
And when 'twas dedicated, why we planked ten thousand down;
That is, we paid five thousand—every deacon did his best—
And the Ladies' Aid Society, it promised all the rest.

We've got an organ in the church—very finest in the land,
It's got a thousand pipes or more, its melody is grand.
And when we sit in cushioned pews, and hear the master play,
It carries us to realms of bliss unnumbered miles away.
It cost a cool three thousand, and it's stood the hardest test;
We'll pay a thousand on it—the Ladies' Aid the rest.

They'll give a hundred sociables, cantatas, too, and teas;
They'll bake a thousand angel cakes, and tons of cream they'll freeze.
They'll beg and scrape and toil and sweat for seven years or more,
And then they'll start all o'er again, for a carpet on the floor.
No; it isn't just like digging out the money from your vest.
When the Ladies' Aid gets busy, and says "We'll pay the rest."

Of course we're proud of our big church, from pulpit up to spire;
It is the darling of our eyes, the crown of our desire.
But when I see the sisters work to raise the cash that lacks,
I somehow feel the church is built on women's tired backs.
And sometimes I can't help thinking when we reach the regions blest,
That men will get the toil and sweat, and the Ladies' Aid—the rest.
—Boston Transcript.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

FIRST CHURCH, OAKLAND, held its annual meeting on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10. Dinner was served at 6:30 to 525 people, forty-two tables being set, entirely filling the banquet hall and the Sunday-school room above. Dr. Arthur S. Phelps, professor in Berkeley Divinity School, gave an address on "The Church for Today." The growth of the church is shown in the fact that in 1898 the total income for current expenses was $2,880; in 1920, $15,010; in 1921, $21,430; and in 1922, $25,606. The total amount raised in 1922 for beneficences was $16,438; and the total amount paid thus far toward the New World Movement is $41,390. There was a gain of 130 new members in 1922, fifty by baptism. The present membership is 1008. A new mission has been established in the Columbian Park district of the city and a thriving Sunday school is in progress with A. C. Christman as superintendent. The present enrolment of the Sunday school is 801 as against 662 a year ago. The woman's auxiliary has had a successful year. Thirty missionary volumes have been added to the library; 250 missionary books read last year; boxes sent to Mexico, China, Nevada and the Mexican settlement in San Francisco; and the women have raised for all purposes $3100 during the year. The four B. Y. P. U. societies are all in a flourishing condition under the directorship of Hugh W. Thomas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

WORK DURING THE FALL and winter at El Centro has been encouraging. Pastor C. E. Flanagin and Mrs. Flanagin are supported by fine groups of workers and all have worked hard for better and greater things in the church. At the beginning of the fall work several were converted and God's Spirit was present among the people. A revival meeting was held for two weeks during December with Evangelist G. M. Sharpe assisting. Forty were converted or reclaimed. Twenty-seven have been received as a direct result of the meeting. Nineteen of these have been baptized, the others coming by experience or letter. Others are uniting at nearly every service. Thirty-five new members have been received this last quarter. Thirty received the hand of fellowship Jan. 7. The church has a great Bible school with Prof. M. S. Templeton, of the Junior College, as superintendent. The senior B. Y. P. U. with Mrs. C. E. Flanagin as advisor is doing good work. A junior and intermediate B. Y. P. U. has been organized. The last quarter was a good one financially also.

"Spreading the Gospel by Radio"

By Roy L. Smith

THE city of Minneapolis boasts one of the six most powerful broadcasting stations in the United states in WLAG, "The Call of the North." This remarkable station has been installed by six firms of the city cooperating, the installation and operation for one year costing approximately $50,000.

Various programs have been sent out over WLAG, some having been heard as far away as Porto Rico, and even 600 miles out on the Pacific from San Francisco. Therefore, it was with genuine pleasure that the writer accepted an invitation to speak over this radio station in connection with the Thanksgiving Day services. A few days before Thanksgiving the manager called and asked that family prayers be held each evening at half-past seven at the close of the "children's hour," and this was arranged for. Then the suggestion was made that ten minutes be taken each Saturday evening for a "family conversation" on the subject of church attendance. The three invitations were accepted and the stories told herewith are the outgrowth.

A little Minnesota town installed a receiving set in the high-school building and on Thanksgiving afternoon a great company of people came together to hear the services broadcasted. The anthems, the sermon, the prayers, the responsive reading, and the benediction were as perfectly heard as if actually spoken in the room. A family party in New Mexico, using an amplifier and loud speaker, tuned in on WLAG and while they ate their dinner the party of thirty listened to the service in Minneapolis, the difference in time accounting for the difference in plan for the day. A group of young men in a hotel were gambling. The radio was tuned in for WLAG and as the prayers were offered up a quiet fell over the group and some one quietly packed up the cards and put them away. There was no more gambling and the party soon broke up. A traveling man, hundreds of miles away from home, heard his home pastor speak to him in the lobby of his hotel.

Some of the most grateful letters came from shut-in folk, some of whom had not heard a religious service for twenty-five years. An old man, eighty-three years of age and stone blind, heard the service over a radio set purchased for him by his friends in his own home church. The Thanksgiving service was the first thing he ever heard over the radio. For nearly two hours after the first "family prayers" the station was deluged with telephone calls asking for the continuance of the custom. Not one complaint was received. Hundreds of letters have come from all over the United States thanking the minister and the singers for their service. One evening during the prayers the writer's son, a lad of nine years, joined him in the reading of the Scriptures and the offering of the Lord's prayer. The sound of the childish voice struck deep into the heart of one reckless man and he wrote asking for prayers. Requests for personal help have come from people in all stations of life. The letters that have been received have been of the most grateful spirit.

The place of the radio in our life for the next few years cannot be estimated now. The marvels that are being accomplished are almost past belief. But one thing is certain—it will never again be possible to isolate an idea. No church can prevent its people from hearing anything that is "in the air" by forbidding attendance on services where these "heresies" are preached.

A few years ago the moving picture came to the church like a great revelation and we well-nigh lost it through allowing it to get into the hands of commercial interests. The radio must not be lost to the forces of righteousness. Let no minister who ever has a chance to speak over this marvelous instrument fail in that privilege. He will speak to the largest audience he ever addressed in his life. Officials in charge of WLAG assert that at least 25,000 people have heard these Saturday night appeals for church attendance which were continued all through December. This is "spreading the gospel."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

---

Up to Jan. 1, 1923, a total of $38,367,-369.21 had been collected in cash on the Baptist seventy-five million campaign, the five-year program of Southern Baptists, according to a report to the conservation commission of that organization at its mid-winter session here, by Dr. L. R. Scarborough, chairman. This leaves nearly $37,000,000 yet to be collected within the next two years in order to complete the campaign goal, and plans were projected looking to that end.

Dr. Robert L. Kelley of the Council of Church Boards of Education says: "Of 8300 students in the theological seminaries in the United States and Canada last year, 4500 at some time had attended college. Only 3000 were college graduates; and of this number fully one-third were graduates of sub-standard colleges—colleges not having been approved by the agencies of educational standardization. In other words, only one-fourth of our ministers now in process of preparation in the seminaries are full-fledged college graduates. In this statement no reckoning is made of the large number of students in the scores of training schools which do not call themselves seminaries."

---

FOR ALL CHURCH-GOERS—A LENTEN RESOLUTION

"I WILL READ A CHAPTER A DAY FROM A BOOK WITH A STRONG RELIGIOUS APPEAL."

THE WORLD'S GREAT RELIGIOUS POETRY
Compiled by Caroline M. Hill
Cloth 12 mo. 876 pages.

"I congratulate you on its publication. I think it is an admirable work and ought to be widely useful."—Wm. Lyon Phelps, Professor of English Literature, Yale University.

For a Lenten course in the central problems of your religion, obtain

RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS
Edited by Rufus M. Jones

How shall we think of God; of Man; of Nature; of Human Relationships; of the Bible; of the Kingdom of God; of Evil; of Progress; of the Life Beyond? Authors: Francis G. Peabody, Willard L. Sperry; Eugene Lyman, Rufus Jones; Elihu Grant; L. P. Jacks (Hibbert), Seebohm Rowntree, Clutton-Brock. $1.00

If you like history, perhaps your Lenten choice will be

A SHORT HISTORY OF OUR RELIGION
From Moses to the Present Day
By D. C. Somervell

"It was a book which I gulped. He seems to me to have been extraordinarily successful in doing two things, first in preserving a continuous line of interest and secondly in maintaining historical impartiality."—Dr. James Moffatt of Scotland. $1.75

If your Lenten choice is a course in how to use the Bible, select

HE OPENED TO US THE SCRIPTURES
By Professor Benj. W. Bacon
Yale Divinity School, Author of "Jesus and Paul"

The contrast between Jesus' use of the Scripture and that of the Scribes gives not a rule but a principle. It describes not a method but a spirit. $1.00

If you are interested in psychology, make your Lenten choice

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION
By Robert H. Thouless
Lecturer in Psychology at the University of Manchester

Prepared as an elementary course for those without any great knowledge of psychology who wish to understand better the psychological problems of religion. $2.50

Extend and intensify the dominion of immortality over your consciousness by Lenten half-hours of communion with

MATTER AND SPIRIT
By Prof. James B. Pratt
Author of The Religious Consciousness

"I wish that it could be put into the hands of all ministers and laymen who have been disturbed by the modern psychological endeavor to dispose of the human soul. It is most enheartening to every one seeking rational foundations for a religious faith."—Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. $1.50

Perhaps you will choose Paul as your Lenten companion.

THE ORIGIN OF PAUL'S RELIGION
By J. Gresham Machen

"A sustained trenchant argument that the religious interpretation of Christianity in Paul's epistles requires an estimate of the historical Jesus which must be richer in supernatural content than the 'liberal' school of critics is prepared to admit. It has a place and value of its own."—British Weekly. $1.75

If you are interested to discover an applied psychology of the emotions which will seize their undeniably great energy and capitalize it for human good instead of harm, read

ANGER: ITS RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SIGNIFICANCE
By Prof. G. M. Stratton (University of California)
$1.75

If you want to see more in religion but your practical bent of mind blocks the way, plan some Lenten conferences with

COMMON SENSE RELIGION
By Rev. Frank E. Wilson
$1.50

It may be you will want to freshen up during Lent on Ethics in its good gray homespun.

FREEDOM AND CHRISTIAN CONDUCT
By John A. W. Haas
President of Muhlenberg College
$2.00

ITEMS FOR YOUR NEXT ORDER

| | |
|---|---|
| Gore: The Return of Christendom | $1.75 |
| Fertzler: History of Utopian Thought | 2.00 |
| Barton: Jesus of Nazareth | 2.00 |
| Influence of the Church on Modern Problems | 1.50 |
| Galer: Old Testament Law for Bible Students | 1.25 |
| Jones: Is There a God? | 1.25 |

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
64-66 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

A Kongo Fable

The Crocodile and the Monkeys

ONE day Mr. Crocodile called the monkeys to his feast. In this way he called them, "Come and bring your drums and your fifes for I want to bury my mother with pomp. I also want to eat with you at my table." Then the monkeys came together, the gazelles, the leopards, the elephants and other animals from a distance. When they reached the river bank the trumpet sounded. Mr. Crocodile and the fishes came to greet them, and to exchange the news of their villages. Then the younger ones were sent to blow the fifes and beat the drums for two days; on the third day the feast was ready. All the chiefs with their people had arrived. As noon approached Mr. Crocodile sent the younger ones to "set the table, put on the dishes, the glasses, the spoons, the wine and the food, let nothing be lacking." They did as they were told, then Mr. Crocodile said, "Go, tell the monkeys to put on their best clothes and come and be seated." They received the word, made themselves ready and came. They found mats, and mats only, there were no chairs. Mr. Crocodile, the chief of the feast, came in and found everything well prepared, the monkeys well dressed, but when he looked at their hands he saw that they were blackened and said, "Go get soap and go to the water and wash your hands." They did as they were told. On returning Mr. Crocodile again examined them but said, "They are not clean, go and wash carefully." This they did, but the color was unchanged.

They were told, "You cannot sit with us at the table because your hands are very dirty." So all the monkeys returned home full of sorrow. Then the mother of the monkeys died, and they made a big feast for many thousands, and sent palm wine to their relatives, and to the crocodiles. They also sent word to the gazelles, and to others. When the day for the feast arrived they beat the drums, big drums and little drums. A crowd of crocodiles came, and the monkeys went out to meet them. On the third day the feast was ready. The monkeys went to one side to talk the matter over, they wanted to get even with Mr. Crocodile. "You children of Kongo look here, we were sent for by the crocodiles to come to their table, and we were made ashamed when they looked at our hands, and said, 'Get soap and go wash your hands.' We went, and on our return were told that they were not clean, and we came away hungry and full of shame. Now they have come to us, we will set the table, put on the dishes, and everything and place chairs at the table, then we will send some one to tell the crocodiles to come to the table." They washed and dressed up well and came, they looked on the ground, but no mats were spread for them. Then the monkeys called to them. "Come and sit on the chairs, bring a spoon and knife to cut the meat." Then the crocodiles and the fishes looked at one another. They tried to sit on the chairs, but could not do so. Then they said to the monkeys, "When we eat we lie on our stomachs, but we cannot sit down." The monkeys replied, "Look we all at the table are sitting in chairs; if you cannot sit in chairs you cannot eat with us." "Then we cannot eat with you," Mr. Crocodile replied. Then the crocodiles returned with sorrow to their own town. But Mr. Crocodile sent to the monkeys, asking forgiveness for his wrong. "God has made us each as he pleased. If there is another feast we will not do so again." Then the monkeys sent a happy reply and were glad the crocodiles had considered it so for they felt the same.

Therefore we people here on the earth when we see any one not well formed, remember it is not his wish to be so, but God's who has made different kinds of people.

---

Rev. James S. West, the new pastor of the First Church, San Francisco, is receiving the hearty cooperation of the membership of the church. On a recent Sunday three persons were received by letter and seven by baptism. Until recently Mr. West was a pastor in Detroit, Mich.

Are you an up-to-date Baptist? Not if you haven't read "On The March"—the new record of the progress of Northern Baptists since the New World Movement began. And here is good news for every church! "On The March" has been included among the books in the national reading contest and will count ten points for every person in your church who reads it. You will be not only instructed but entertained as well. Order, free of charge, from your state convention headquarters, or from the literature department of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

Northern Baptist Convention; New York. W. C. Bitting, D.D., Corresponding Secretary, 5109 Waterman Ave., St. Louis, Mo

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; New York. Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent. a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent. a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

Start an Adult Bible Class with

SELL'S Bible Study Text-Books

A QUARTER OF A MILLION SOLD!

Just Out No. 10—Bible Studies in the Four Gospels
No. 9—Bible Studies in Vital Questions

1. Supplementary Bible Studies
2. Bible Studies by Books
3. B. S. by Periods
4. B. S. by Doctrines
5. B. S. in Life of Christ
6. B. S. in Life of St. Paul
7. B. S. in Christian Life
8. B. S. in Early Church

Send for circular showing how to use them.
Each, cloth, 75c; paper, 50c
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y.;
17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Dictionary of Bible Proper Names

EVERY PROPER NAME IN THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS ARRANGED IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER; SYLLABIFIED AND ACCENTED; VOWEL SOUNDS DIACRITICALLY MARKED; DEFINITIONS GIVEN IN LATIN AND ENGLISH

Compiled by CYRUS A. POTTS
Writer and Lecturer on the Symbolical Language of the Scriptures.

Net, $2.00, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

The largest book for the smallest price.
Manila $30. for 100. DeLux Boards $40. for 100
400 SELECTIONS

For all purposes. Sunday Schools, Churches, Praise Services, Young Peoples Meetings. Returnable sample or free specimen pages sent on request.

HALL-MACK CO. 21st & Arch Sts., Phila., Pa.

Baptist World Alliance!!

Stockholm, Sweden, July 21st-28th, 1923

——Other Tours to——

EUROPE, GREECE, EGYPT, and THE HOLY LAND
PERSONALLY CONDUCTED

Sailings in June and July

Write TODAY for ITINERARY and full information to

THE WICKER TOURS

Care Dr. J. J. Wicker, 1108 Mutual Bldg., Richmond, Virginia

LOWEST PRICES—HIGHEST SERVICE

Obituary

MRS. MARTHA FARNUM JOHNSON

At Denver, Colorado, on December 29, 1922, Mrs. Martha Farnum Johnson passed to her eternal home after an illness of only a few days. Born in Rhode Island, educated at the old Greenwich Seminary for Young Ladies, she married Rev. Julius E. Johnson, then a young minister, just graduated from Brown University and Newton Theological Institution. They settled in Jackson, Mich. and Mr. Johnson did a successful work in that church. Then came other happy pastorates at Madison, Delavan, Milwaukee and Beaver Dam, Wis. Left a widow at thirty-eight years of age, she brought up her family of five children at Beaver Dam and gave them their early education at Wayland Academy. These children all survive, Julius A. and Frank L. at Chicago, Herbert E., Robert C. and Mrs. Martha C. Hamilton at Denver. Mrs. Johnson was herself for many years a member of the Englewood church at Chicago and later of the Broadway church in Denver.

Mrs. Johnson's long life of nearly ninety years was filled to its very close with Christian work. She was active in the local church, in Sunday school and in missionary enterprises. When the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the West was founded in 1871, she immediately became a member and was a delegate in the convention that sent out the first woman missionary. At the public meetings held in Denver in 1921, she was on the platform and made a short address although eighty-eight years of age. Her whole life and character was a beautiful example of Christian faith and living.

Topic for February 25

(Continued from page 48)

from fifteen to forty bushels an acre. Some Negro farmers have raised as high as seventy-five bushels.

The two counties that are Mr. Pierce's home territory show a remarkable transformation. Instead of unsanitary log houses, neat sanitary cottages are the rule. Many have musical instruments. The people have better clothes, and money in the bank. In his own village of Wellville, the dilapidated church was remodeled with a baptistry, and is the center of a flourishing community work.

Schools in these two counties are no longer ramshackle buildings with a five-months' term and incompetent teachers. Neat schoolhouses and competent teachers, and a seven-months' term afford educational opportunities for all.

Finally the department of agriculture thought this wise leader had done enough for the people of Virginia, and wished to transfer him to the Gulf states, but the white people rose up and refused to let him go. They realized that a man who could transform ill-housed, poorly clad and underfed people into prosperous, intelligent folks with money to spend and to put in the bank is a builder of prosperity to be prized and honored.

—Adapted from Service.

Provision for Aged Ministers

Henry J. Allen, ex-governor of Kansas, recently wrote as follows concerning the duty of provision by the denominations for their aged ministers and missionaries:

"It seems to me that no higher duty rests upon the laymen in connection with their support of the church than that of helping to create a fund out of which we may guarantee to our ministers in their declining years peace and security for themselves and their families. From a financial viewpoint, the ministry of God is the least attractive of all the callings, because it is the poorest paid. Hence no man enters it through any other than a sense of service. We exact of our ministers a spiritual standard so high that it seems to preclude the thought of gain, and yet we provide for their well-being with salaries so small that the men who are bidden to keep their eyes always upon spiritual matters often are obliged to suffer such mental worries over their common needs as must, in some cases, reduce life to a sordid and trying basis."

Among those in our own denomination who have warmly endorsed the plan of the ministers and missionaries benefit board to make suitable provision for our own aged workers are Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes; A. K. Van Deventer, treasurer of the Southern Pacific Railway Company; F. W. Ayer, of N. W. Ayer & Son; E. J. Lindsay, of Lindsay Bros., Milwaukee, Wis.; Charles Edward Prior, Security Trust Company of Hartford, Conn.; Robert L. Scott of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Company, Chicago; D. G. Garabrant, of Bulkley, Dunton & Company, N. Y.; George W. Coleman, former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and many others.

The Savings of a Life Time

One of the recent applications to the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board for aid, came from a Baptist pastor, who had served the denomination for many years faithfully and well.

During these years of service, he had succeeded, by the utmost frugality, in saving what he thought would be sufficient to provide for himself and his wife during the closing years of their lives when he could no longer render service.

Through bad advice and unfortunate investments, all his earnings and savings were suddenly swept away.

The modest grant made by the Benefit Board will not compensate him for the loss of his savings, but it will supply his urgent needs during the closing years of his life.

He is one of the 1402 beneficiaries of the Benefit Board. These beneficiaries have given their best. Can we do less?

Ordinary justice requires an increase, not only in the number of beneficiaries, but also in the amounts granted to old and broken ministers, missionaries and widows.

You who made a gift to the Benefit Board, have had a part in this helpful ministry. Your continued support is needed.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

(Corporate Name)

E. T. Tomlinson, Executive Secretary

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

Next Week—"To Be Buried beside Her Husband."

New List DORAN BOOKS

BACK TO THE LONG GRASS
My Link with Livingstone

Dan Crawford, Author of "Thinking Black."
Back over the long, weary, dangerous, fascinating trail of Livingstone we travel in company with the inimitable author of "Thinking Black." A vivid record of a thrilling accomplishment. Fully illustrated. 8vo. Net, $4.00

THE BEST I REMEMBER

Arthur Porritt, Editor of The Christian World
An astonishingly interesting book of reminiscences covering thirty-three years of London religious journalism. Full of good stories and intimate glimpses of notable leaders in English Non-Conformist circles. Net, $3.00

THE HEBREW PROPHET AND THE MODERN PREACHER The Hartley Lecture on Preaching for 1922

Rev. Henry J. Pickett, Ex-Principal and Principal Designate, Hartley College, Manchester
A call for the prophetic ideal in the ministry today. The author says: "This book has been written under the pressure of a deep conviction that our supreme need is a truly prophetic ministry." Net, $2.50

NIGHT SCENES OF SCRIPTURE Rev. Norman Macleod Caie, B.D., Author of "The Seven Deadly Sins, etc"
"Mr. Caie has not sacrificed direct, eager power to literary ambition. One feels through the pages the glow that has made him so effective a preacher."—Rev. Prof. James Moffatt, D.D., Litt.D. Net, $1.25

THE SEVEN DEADLY SINS

Rev. Norman Macleod Caie, B.D., Author of "Night Scenes of Scripture," etc.
A series of brief sermons on the historic seven sins, notable for their literary allusiveness and simple power. Net, $1.00

OUR FAITH IN GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST
Its Reasonableness, Necessity, Effectiveness and Finality

J. Ernest Davey, M.A., B.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History, General Assembly's College, Belfast
One of the recent issues of the Student Christian Movement which will be very acceptable in Christian Student circles in America. A vigorous defense of the Christian position in the light of difficulties raised by the modern man. Net, $1.75

ST. MARK'S LIFE OF JESUS

Theodore H. Robinson, M.A., D.D., University College, Cardiff. Foreword by Rev. Professor James Moffatt, D.D., Litt.D.
Referring to this practical Student Christian Movement handbook, Dr. Moffatt says: "Dr. Robinson makes the life of Jesus more real, and so more wonderful than ever." Suitable for study circle or private reading. Net, $1.75

THE MEANING OF THE OLD TESTAMENT: According to Modern Scholorship

Hugh Martin, M.A., Literature Secretary, Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland
Of this recent publication of the Student Christian Movement the United Methodist says: "It presents a constructive interpretation of the Old Testament that solves many a problem for the Bible student." Net, $1.60

REGENERATION AND RECONSTRUCTION A Call to the Church Rev. S. B. John. With a Foreword by Rev. John Clifford, D.D.
A powerful plea for Christian idealism and a clarion call to the Church to realize its mission in the present age. (Every preacher in the land should come under its influence.) Net, $1.25

LET'S PLAY. A Book of Games for Children Edna Geister
Games and contests for little folks, at school or in the home; for large or small parties, indoor or out. A companion volume to Miss Geister's popular "Ice Breakers and the Ice Breaker Herself" ($1.35), and "It Is to Laugh" ($1.25).
Net, $1.25

DORAN BOOKS
At Your Religious Book Store
GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY
244 Madison Avenue New York

Our Book Shelf

The Dramatic Instinct in Religious Education, by Thomas W. Galloway. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $1.75.

That the primary purpose of plays and pageants in the church school is to develop the children, not the drama, is Dr. Galloway's idea, and this book is an elaboration of the idea. Part 1 treats of principles involved. Part 2 gives five simple Biblical dramas well worked out.

Timothy's Second Wife, by Isla May Mullins. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

A composite photograph wherein the theologue, the pastor, the opinionated deacon and the church gossip are revealed, along with the ideal preacher's wife, is the result of Mrs. Mullins' long and sympathetic contact with candidates for the parsonage—of both sexes. The simple story is a sort of clerical version of "The Great Stone Face." It would prove a delightful book for church reading circles.

Evangelism of Youth, by Albert H. Gage. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.00.

This is one of the Judson training manuals for the school and the church. Mr. Gage is director of religious education for the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago. He "bases his chapters on the fact of certain definite periods of youth—seasons of the soul—when responsiveness to the message of religion is as that of seed and bud to springtime. He writes to show the wisdom, and to outline the plan and methods, of an evangelism that takes careful account of this law of God. The book is adapted for use by study classes. Suggestions for additional reading are provided with each chapter."

The Religion of the Primitives, by Most Reverend Alexander Le Roy, Superior General of the Fathers of the Holy Ghost. Translated by Rev. Newton Thompson. New York: Macmillan Co. $2.50.

This is a most interesting book whether considered as entertainment or instruction. Aside from its historic survey of the races of man in their moral and religious development it is a terse review of philosophies of the Darwin and Wells schools who describe man's religion as an incident of his evolution, and it is a keen criticism of naturalistic and rationalistic speculations, from the viewpoint of revealed religion. While neither polemic nor controversial in style, yet by a constructive discussion of its subjects it exposes the defects of the endless fancies, vagaries, "possibilities" and "probabilities" that obsess radical evolutionary theories and guesses, and strongly supports theistic faith and principles. It is eminently a book for the time.

The Evangelistic Encyclopedia: A New Century Handbook of Evangelism, by G. B. F. Hallock, D.D. New York: Doran Co.

With all due regard for what is known as professional evangelism the church is coming to see that best of all is pastoral evangelism. Dr. Hallock has been gripped by this need and has poured out his soul in this encyclopedia of 350 pages. Aiming to help the busy pastor to become evangelistic in work and message he has gathered in this work 400 revival texts and themes, 450 usable illustrations and 200 evangelistic outlines and sketches. He devotes several chapters to the need of evangelism and discusses fully the various types, placing special emphasis upon Lenten evangelism and methods that might be used for decision day. In addition he adds ten revival sermons by different prominent evangelistic preachers. The introduction to this book is written by Dr. Joseph A. Vance of Detroit.

Epistles to the Corinthians. 1 Corinthians by Prof. Jas. S. Riggs, Auburn Theological Seminary. 2 Corinthians by Prof. Harry L. Reed, Auburn Theological Seminary. New York: Macmillan Co. $1.60.

We are never tired of commentarians. They are but new voices in the interpretation of the everlasting word, and each new exposition is calculated to throw added light upon the Book as its varied applications are unfolded. Two professors of Auburn Divinity School collaborate here, taking the two epistles successively, and they work well together though each for himself. Grace in gifts we have been wont to consider the major thought of the first epistle and "comfort" or, as Professor Reed translates it, encouragement, the prominent idea in the second, and both considerations are timely for the churches of today. The introductions to both epistles are thoroughgoing and illuminating. Professor Riggs comments but briefly on the language of the epistle under his survey, but quite fully and profoundly on the inner message Paul is giving, and the providential circumstances that led to his glowing utterances. Professor Reed does some interpretation work in higher criticism, urging that the epistles he expounds will be better understood as a composite of two letters from Paul written at times slightly separated from each other. This does not alter in any way the truth conveyed. The work is in good, clear type and will be found valuable to students of the Word.

"It Is to Laugh"

Boy Scout (small but polite)—"May I accompany you across the street, madam?"

Old Lady—"Certainly you may, my lad. How long have you been waiting here for somebody to take you across?"—Boston Transcript.

---

It was the terminal examination and a budding philosopher concluded his essay on mother earth with this startling statement: "The earth revolves on its own axis 365 times in twenty-four hours. This rapid motion through space causes its sides to perspire; this is called dew."

---

A burly man called and asked to see the minister's wife.

"Madam," he said, when she appeared, "I wish to draw your attention to the awful condition of a poor family in this district. The father is dead and the mother is too ill to work, the children are starving. They are about to be turned into the street unless some one pays their arrears of rent, which amount to $25."

"How terrible!" said the lady. "May I ask who you are?"

"Certainly, madam," was the reply. "I'm the landlord."

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

WORDS OF WISDOM TO COMPOSERS

Much is written these days about the American composer — his needs, his failings, his virtues. He is lectured by his rivals on the other side, he is patronized by the dear ladies, he is showered with scorn or with platitudinous praise, much of it unintelligent and useless—and worse. Hence it is something of a shock—and a tonic—to find such a sensible bit of advice as the following, quoted from Musical America, more especially so when it is realized that Harold Flammer, the author of the article, is one of the most successful of the younger music publishers. A few more such square-cut statements will serve to clear the air of a lot of the cant and propaganda which has so liberally mushed the whole question. All any composer should ask for is a fair chance against the field. He should have that; more than that simply serves as pap. No composer was yet made by coddling and hothouse methods. Certainly the other extreme has been too evident in the development of music—more composers have starved to death than ever suffered from gout! But even so, all that I, as a humble native composer, have any right to clamor for is the even chance. I want the proper rights of my nationality, no more and no less. Now let Mr. Flammer have the floor with his dicta:

"American composers certainly have a struggle for recognition in their native country. As there are more good manuscripts by first-rate American composers than good publishers to publish them, there is a surplus of latent talent undeveloped in this country. There is no incentive to write music and very little appreciation of that already published.

Lack of Organization

"The basic reason for this condition is the total lack of organization in the music industry as a whole. There is continual difficulty in finding a person who is both musician and business man. The temperament of an artist is continually held up as a virtue, and the idea of temperament has spread so as to be used as an excuse for all lack of system, punctuality, detail, precision and those qualities which are absolutely essential in a good business man.

"For example, the composer is extremely lax in his ways. His manuscripts are usually not legible. Particularly if he has gained some prominence. He leaves important details to the editor of his publishing house. He waits until receiving the proofs to add expression marks, pedaling, etc., all of which should have been worked out to the minutest detail before the manuscript is sent in.

"Now, as to remuneration. For the serious composer it is next to nothing. He must depend on teaching, performing, or some other phase in the music world to provide a living and he is compelled to look upon composition as a side issue. Here is the solution of the problem. First, more study and greater care in composition. Second, concentration on a few good works by both composer and publisher. Next the abolition of the fictitious price of sheet music and discounts; the elimination of waste in gratis copies which flood the market and are often not seriously considered by the artists to whom they are given. Then we should advocate more care in program-making, paying less regard to personal influence and more to merit and the fitness of things. When will performers cease to treasure such phrases on programs as 'Written expressly for,' or 'Dedicated to,' or 'Sung for the first time"? This is a vital menace! The idea of newness is not regarded as so important abroad as here. And I might add that here we are still laboring under the old impression that anything from abroad or imported is better than the same domestic article. We see it every day in music.

"The publication of so-called doctored compositions should be discouraged. Doctoring may help many compositions and often it is necessary in a mild form, but the doctoring which amounts to rewriting leaves the original composer as ignorant as ever and, as it does not benefit him it does not advance the standard of American music. Of course the extreme modernists adopt one standard, the old-timers or standpatters another. There is a middle path which allows for originality, melody, beauty and spontaneity as well as proper construction. The time for feeding audiences what we think they should like has gone by. If there were less of this attitude there would be less subsidizing of certain branches of music. Musicians should be self-supporting. As soon as they arrive at that point where they are good business men and organizers they will reach a higher social strata as well.

"A really good musician is not half appreciated. The general attitude is that a musician is over-educated musically and under-educated every other way, so that when he is not performing or discussing musical subjects he is lost. This idea of the musician should be discouraged, but it is often fostered by musicians themselves.

"To sum up, I would say to the publishers: Let us charge a fair price for music. It is still far below where it ought to be compared with the rise in other commodities. Let us be good organizers and systematizers, better business men, practical in every way. Let us discontinue fictitious pricemarks, waste and propaganda for trash. Wherever we find an American product of exceptional merit let us forget jealousy or a narrow viewpoint and unite to give it due praise and proper recognition."

ORGAN PLAYING DURING PRAYER

Whether that is to be done or not must be left to the individual taste and sense of propriety. We seldom feel it to be out of place when, after the offering has been taken and while the pastor is offering a short prayer dedicatory of the gifts just laid on the altar, the organist softly goes on with his offertory. But if the organist plays all through the so-called long prayer, the question arises whether that may not be too theatrical. There are those who feel it is and who would prefer to have it perfectly quiet while the pastor mediates for his people at the throne of grace in prayer.

Lorenz's Easter Music

Easter Services (New 1923)
"Easter Bells," by Ira B. Wilson
"Joyful Eastertide," for graded Sunday Schools.
8 cents per copy, $6.00 per hundred, postpaid.
Samples sent free upon request.

Easter Sunday School Cantatas
"The Glory of the Cross," by Lorenz.
"The Lighted Cross," By Ira B. Wilson.
"Easter," By Ira B. Wilson.
20 cents per copy, net in any quantity.
Send 20 cents for sample each of the three

Easter Recitations and Exercises
"Easter Treasury No. 28" (New 1923)
25 cents per copy, postpaid.

Easter Choir Cantatas (New 1923)
"Joy after Sorrow," Wilson. 60 cents.
"The Resurrection Story," Adams. 60 cents.
Sent on approval upon request.

Easter Anthems
Our ten most popular out of over 300 we publish sent on approval upon request.

Easter Solos and Duets
Our ten most popular out of 100 we publish sent on approval if you advance 10 cents for postage and packing. If you state voice desired, we will so limit selection.

Send for free catalog.

Sample and approval offers good only if the "Baptist" is mentioned.

Lorenz Publishing Company
216 W. 5th St., Dayton, Ohio
1711 Grand Central Terminal, New York
218 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

EASTER MUSIC FREE
HALL-MACK CO.

A postal from Supt., Pastor or Committee will bring a set of sample services. FREE.

* EASTER HELPER, NO. 9, 20c
Book of Songs, Recitations, Drills, etc.

FLAVIA, or THE MARTYRS, 25c.
A Song Story of early Christian Era. This and others sent for examination on request.

* PAGEANTRY
Two Easter Pageants and a Play—25c.
* These are not sent for examination.

SPECIAL—30c.
3 Services, regular edition, value . . . . . 21c
Pageant . . . . . 25c
Helper No. 9 . . . . . 20c
All for 30c in stamps. 66c

HALL-MACK CO., } 21st & Arch Streets,
ADAM GEIBEL MUSIC CO. } Philadelphia, Pa.

RODEHEAVER PUBLICATIONS
VICTORY SONGS Our great gospel song book prepared under direction of our Mr. Homer Rodeheaver—unsurpassed for general church and religious purposes. 288 pages of choice music—70 new songs. PRICE REDUCED to 25c manila—30c limp — 40c cloth, in quantities not prepaid. Single copies—30c manila—35c limp and 45c cloth, postpaid.

AWAKENING SONGS, 256 pages; SONGS FOR SERVICE 288 pages, Same rates as Victory Songs. JOYFUL PRAISE, 128 pgs. adapted to all religious services, 25c limp—20c manila postp'd single copies: 20c limp, 15c manila, not prep'd in quantities. RAINBOW SACRED RECORDS—85c each—Ask for list. Write for complete catalog.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
629 McClurg Bldg. Chicago, Ill. Dept. 8 814 Walnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

A Guaranteed Minimum Pension

By E. T. Tomlinson

SINCE the pension fund of the ministers and missionaries benefit board was inaugurated more than two years ago, one problem above others has been carefully considered by the managers. The men who are now in middle life and below sixty-five years of age who join the retiring pension fund have been receiving individual consideration by the board. Owing to the fact that when the pension plan was put into operation many of our older ministers could not receive as full benefits as the younger men would be able to enjoy, we felt that we should, if possible and consistent with the funds available for a reserve, work out a plan which would as nearly as practicable enable us to place the older ministers on a par with the younger ministers. We have endeavored to work out the most liberal plan possible. Upon the advice and recommendations of our actuary, the board has adopted the following amendment to its rules and regulations,—

"III (k), If the amount of any single life normal pension, as determined according to the preceding subdivisions of this Section III and payable after Jan. 1, 1923, on any certificate dated prior to Jan. 1, 1924, provided all dues shall have been paid to age sixty-five in accordance with these rules and regulations, is less than at the rate of $500 per annum, then beginning with that quarterly pension payment next due after the member has attained age sixty-five and has retired from active denominational service without salary, parsonage, or any similar compensation or emolument of any kind or nature, all quarterly pensions payable to a member, who at the age of sixty-five shall have been in active service in the Northern Baptist Convention during the preceding thirty-five years or during the entire period of his denominational service if less than thirty-five years, shall be increased by an additional retiring pension allowance so that after such retirement the rate of total pension payment shall be $500 per annum; provided, however, that in no case shall the total annual pension so paid exceed the average annual salary which the member has received during membership, and provided, further, that any member who, at the age of sixty-five, shall not have been in active service in the Northern Baptist Convention during the preceding thirty-five years, or during entire period of his denominational service if less than thirty-five years, shall be entitled only to as many thirty-fifths of such additional retiring pension allowance as defined above as he shall have had years of service in the Northern Baptist Convention."

Time Limitation

This amendment simply means that any man in active service below the age of sixty-five whether he is already a member of the retiring pension plan, or joins during the year 1923, will, when he passes the age of sixty-five and shall have retired from salaried service, receive a pension which shall be not less than $500 per year (except as stipulated in the rule). This privilege applies to all who have been active members and who, having attained age sixty-five, are now receiving pensions. It also applies to all who are active members at the present time. It is, however, limited as to future members to those whose certificates of membership are dated during the calendar year of 1923. This provides a wonderful opportunity for our ministers whose normal cooperative pension would otherwise be limited to an amount less than $500. By its recent action the board is confident that it has solved this problem in a manner which will be generous as well as just to our faithful ministers who are no more to be blamed than is the board for their age at the time when the pension plan was started.

W ist ye not that

A ll

B aptists should be about their

F ather's Business with

M oney and prayer to carry

S alvation to the uttermost parts of the earth?

Our opportunity to share in

His business this year calls for $502,326.95

before April 30, 1923

The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

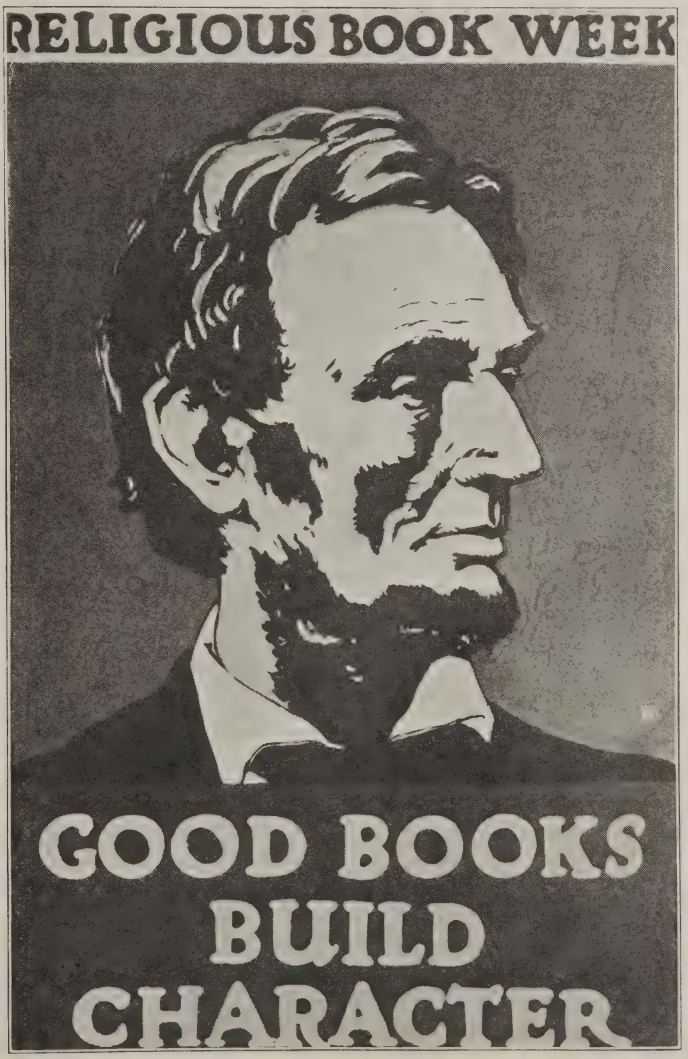
(Corporate Name)

Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION



86.05
BAP

Volume IV February 17, 1923 No. 3

The Baptist

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
FEB 17 1923
University of Illinois Library Urbana

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Fresh from the Field

Dr. F. A. Agar visited the Highland Park Church, Michigan, Feb. 7. Dr. Agar held a mission every day in the Woodward Avenue Church.

The church at Ipswich, S. D. is about to launch a campaign for a church building. Mrs. Marcus Beebe has made a gift of $20,000 toward the project. Pastor A. P. Waltz feels that the outlook is very encouraging.

The February meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Union of Minneapolis was held Feb. 14 at the University Church of which Rev. N. B. Henderson is pastor. The reports of the officers were given in the afternoon and the evening session was devoted to an Americanization program.

The First Church, Ocean Beach, Cal., was dedicated Jan. 28. Rev. W. F. Harper preached the dedicatory sermon. It is estimated that the new building with furnishings and equipment cost $25,000. Rev. Rolla Earl Brown is pastor.

The Baptist Bible School Superintendents' Association of Philadelphia and vicinity celebrated its fortieth anniversary Feb. 5 at the First Church, Philadelphia. Rev. Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the church, spoke on "Czecho-Slovakia, the Romance of Providence."

Rev. George McDaniel, pastor of the First Church, Richmond, Va., is leading his people in preparation for a great building campaign. Two men have promised $105,000 toward the necessary $500,000. The pastor has recommended that the church secure this year $100,000 in addition to the two large gifts.

Under the caption "Sidelights on an Untried Heretic" Zion's Herald states that it has in its "Buckner file" more than 100 letters, articles and documents bearing on the case of Rev. J. D. M. Buckner, whose unwilling retirement from the active pastorate has attracted nation-wide attention. In a recent Advocate it was stated that there is a campaign under way to "Bucknerize Methodism." We all have our trouble in this world.

The joint committee of the Women's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient has announced completion of its fund which secures approximately a million dollars from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller memorial fund. The Rockefeller gift covers six colleges in Tokio, Peking, Nanking, Lucknow, Madras and Vellore. The fund called for three million dollars. A million and a half was secured through a campaign conducted throughout the country.

David Lloyd George has taken a brief vacation in Spain. Upon his return he expressed himself as "disappointed" with the American debt settlement. The ex-premier said: "England is able to pay, but it is a heavy burden. I do not think it will benefit America as it must diminish markets in the world, whether here or elsewhere. The United States made the best terms for their own country. It is not for me to complain or criticise but I feel that the terms are hard and I am frankly disappointed. I still think that the proposals of the Balfour note are sound." When asked if he planned a visit to the United States he said possibly but in any event if he made the trip it would be late in the year.

Calvary Church, Parkersburg, W. Va., has called Rev. E. B. Moyer of Shinnston. The new pastorate will begin about March 1.

Rev. J. W. Graves, of Clarksburg, W. Va., assisted the Glenville church in special meetings. Dr. Graves is one of hundreds of busy pastors who take the time to help other churches in evangelistic work.

On account of ill health Rev. J. H. Jowett has been forced to make his resignation at Westminster Chapel complete and final. He had hoped to be able to give the church one sermon each week but on the advice of his physicians he will not attempt to preach for at least one year.

Rev. Harvey J. Moore, who was called from the church at Keokuk, Iowa, began his work at Wakefield, Mass., this month. It is noted in a secular paper that the Wakefield church some years ago called another pastor, Rev. Hugh A. Heath, from the same church.

It is interesting to note the ambitious program of the Searchlight, the personal organ of Rev. Frank Norris. In a recent issue he says: "We are going to take up different states and we will write up and turn the light on whatever we find—whether it be monkey, chimpanzee and the orangoutang or Dr. Poteat's amoeba or any of that breed."

TO a pulpit committee which was eagerly seeking for a pastor this wise advice was given: "Discover the man you are seeking in his study. Find out what he looks like in his workshop. See with what tools he works, and how deep is the mine in which he is digging. Find out what books of reference are on his shelves." This, of course, was wise advice, for how can a preacher preach without books? No man can work without tools, and no minister can work without books.—Presbyterian Banner.

"Many people," said Rev. F. C. Spurr in the Christian World, "found it easy to abuse the church after getting their sustenance from it, after climbing to social distinction on it, but they should compare the church of today, despite its mistakes with the church of 2,000 years ago." It may be interesting to our people to know that Dr. Spurr, according to the same journal, is spending some time in the occupied area of Germany where he is addressing the soldiers under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Bucknell University has secured Dr. George B. Lawson, professor of education at New York University for the past six months, to fill the chair of education left vacant by the untimely death of Dean Llewellyn Phillips in January. Dr. Lawson is the son of A. G. Lawson, a member of the church administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and a man active in the affairs of the denomination. Dr. Lawson assumed his new duties on Feb. 1.

Already a rather large number of delegates to the Baptist World Alliance have entered their names for reservations on the "America," the official vessel sailing June 30. Among them are Dr. and Mrs. Cornelius Woelfkin and several other members of their party; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Montgomery; Mrs. George W. Coleman; Dr. and Mrs. Curtis Lee Laws; Rev. Robert Stuart MacArthur, and his son Rev. Kenneth MacArthur; Mr. E. C. Miller of New York City and party; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Stephens of Columbia, Mo.; Miss Ina E. Burton; Miss Alice Brimson; Mrs. M. Grant Edmands; Secy. and Mrs. P. H. J. Lerrigo; Secy. James H. Franklin; and Mrs. H. Stanley Taylor, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

First Church, Springfield, Mass., has called to its pastorate, Rev. Frank B. Fagerburg, a senior in Newton Theological Institution. The secular press reports that his work will begin early in September.

Rev. L. J. Anderson, Crowell St., Boston, who has served as a general missionary in Michigan, Iowa and South Dakota, is now doing general evangelistic work. He has been helping the pastor at the Logan Park Church, Chicago, for the past month. He is on an evangelistic tour through the middle west.

First Church, Fremont, Nebr., which was completely destroyed by fire a year ago, was dedicated Feb. 4. Rev. John Mason Wells preached the dedicatory sermon. The new building has a modern Sunday school, heating equipment and a new organ has been installed. Rev. Fred Young is pastor.

Prof. Henry W. Brown, for ten years a member of the Colby College faculty, died at his home in Waterville, Me., Feb. 2. Mr. Brown was born in Camden, Me. in 1861. He attended the University of Maine and Yale. He was appointed to the faculty of Colby College in 1912 as an English instructor and later became an assistant professor in that language. Besides being a teacher, Mr. Brown was a noted lecturer and preacher and was active in all the student movements of the college. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Walter Quarrington and Pres. Arthur J. Roberts of Colby.

Dr. W. O. Lewis, the Foreign Mission Society's special representative in Europe, is now in Russia supervising the delivery of the large shipment of clothing sent recently by Northern Baptists. He expects to return to Paris about March 1. Commissioner Rushbrooke too has recently made another hurried visit to Russia.

An error in Dr. James H. Franklin's article, two weeks ago, made it appear that the Baptist work in Sweden is only twenty-five years old. The first Baptist church was established in Sweden in 1848. This summer the seventy-fifth anniversary of the event will be celebrated by the 60,000 Baptists of Sweden who have developed not only numerical strength but some leaders worthy of Viking ancestry.

Dr. John T. Proctor, secretary of our East China Mission, is now spending a brief furlough in America. He attended the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, meeting in Bethlehem, Pa., and has spent considerable time at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Society in New York. Dr. Proctor is well acquainted with developments in China. He will be heard gladly wherever he speaks.

The office staff of assistants, clerks and stenographers at the headquarters of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, contributed a special offering amounting to $39.16 to be applied toward the general funds of the New World Movement. In acknowledging the receipt of this gift, General Director John Y. Aitchi-

(Continued on page 96)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., February 17, 1923 No. 3

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter February 4, 1920 at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label. REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 66 |
| EDITORIAL | 69 |
| WHY I BECAME A CHRISTIAN, by Alexander Schaap | 72 |
| FIRST CHURCH, Tucson, Arizona | 74 |
| OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF GIFTS MADE BY INDIANS TO THE HOME MISSION SOCIETY | 75 |
| ON THE WESTERN FRONTIER, by G. Clifford Cress | 76 |
| THE ONLY BOOK NEVER OFF THE PRESS, by Frank H. Mann | 76 |
| SERVICE WITH FIGHTING MEN, by Shailer Mathews | 77 |
| A NEEDLESS ESTRANGEMENT | 78 |
| GOOD BOOKS | 79 |
| OPEN FORUM | 81 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 82 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 84 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 85 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 86 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 95 |

Modesty

A secretary visited our office recently. He inquired about our financial and religious well-being. Concerning the former we informed him that beginning May 1 with less than a "minimum balance," in the terminology of our bank, we had made no call upon the budget allowance up to Feb. 1. "Why don't you publish it?" says the secretary. "Our modesty prevents, for one thing," says the editor. And then, we have a reputation to protect. It is unreasonable to expect any denominational institution doing educational work (of a kind) to pay its own way. Perhaps it ought to be told, only do not forget that the Kollum and modesty are synonymous.

Killam's Kollum

There's Always Danger of a Relapse

"What is the matter with Killam? His Kollum seems to be getting worse, which of course from the right standpoint means that it is getting better. For when a patient is as bad as he can get a change is certainly for the better, since he could get no worse. It is getting so 'good' that I am not as anxious to read it as I used to be."—Wm. H. Z.

Not Even Pestiferous

"The enclosed facts may furnish material for an item in THE BAPTIST. I am not a persistent, perennial personalizer. But after two years on this field it seems proper to state a few facts." Yes, sir! Any pastor who stays two years on a field without sending in "news" telling of the great gains every day in every way since he came to the field can have, if he wants it, a half page to state the "facts." It is not unusual to get glowing tales before the carpet is down in the parsonage which would lead the unsuspecting to believe that the predecessor on that field conducted a morgue. Selah!

No Hobby a Hobby

THE BAPTIST has from time to time emphasized the principles which have always been held by Baptists. The Christian Century comes out editorially and charges Baptists and others with "hunting for a distinctive principle." This is interesting for the editor goes on to argue that "in the matter of the separation of church and state, even high churchmen of England and America will for the most part join cause with the Baptists." Well and good. Since when? Did they always think and act that way? Let the Baptists of Virginia speak up. It is one thing to hold steadily through the years to certain views and to cling to certain principles and it is quite another to "for the most part" join with the Baptists in the positions Baptists have always held. The Christian Century is "published by the Disciples Publishing Company." "It is not published for any single denomination alone but for the Christian world." All of which reminds us of its original habitat. Its accent betrayeth it. Many pastors can testify to experience with churches which have "no distinctive principles," which simply stand for the union of Christendom. This sort of talk reminds us of a good woman who always insisted that she had no hobby. Some might make a hobby of this and others of that but as for herself she held everything in true balance. It gradually dawned upon this woman that her hobby was the hobby that she had no hobby. It is much that way with our worthy contemporary.

Meeting of N. B. C. Executive Committee

By W. C. Bitting

The executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention met in Chicago, Feb. 2, 1923. Those present were Mrs. G. W. Coleman, representing Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Mr. G. B. Huntington, representing American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Mrs. C. D. Eulette, representing Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Mr. L. S. Chapman, representing American Baptist Publication Society; Mr. A. M. Harris, representing ministers and missionaries benefit board; Rev. J. M. Stifler, representing board of education; Mr. D. C. Shull, representing finance committee; Mr. A. L. Abbott, representing law committee; Mr. E. J. Steinberg, Rev. W. C. Bitting, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, representing executive committee.

The executive committee unanimously adopted the recommendation of the special committee as follows:

To the Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention:

At a meeting of the committee appointed by the president of the Northern Baptist Convention to advise the executive committee regarding the offer of the Immanuel Baptist Church, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"This committee desires to express its appreciation of the splendid offer of the Immanuel Baptist Church of Chicago to transfer its property in such a way as to promote the interest of the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention.

"The committee is of the opinion that it has no authority or commission to make any recommendation regarding a change in the location of the headquarters of the cooperating organizations of the Northern Baptist Convention and considers that the present is not an advantageous time to raise that question.

"Having been advised by the law committee of the Northern Baptist Convention that the Northern Baptist Convention cannot under its charter, granted by the state of New York, acquire the property offered by the Immanuel Baptist Church and that the American Baptist Home Mission Society under its charter and especially under the provisions of section 3 of its charter can take the property either absolutely or under such trusts as may be mutually agreed upon.

"We, therefore, recommend the favorable consideration by the executive committee of the offer of the Immanuel Baptist Church 'to donate its property to the Baptist Denomination for Baptist uses, and further recommend that the executive committee, at once, arrange a conference between the representatives of the church, representatives of the executive committee, the law committee, of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, or some other proper and suitable organization, for the purpose of transferring the property of the church for the promotion of the work of the church and the general uses of the Baptist denomination."

Respectfully submitted, A. M. Harris,
Chairman of the Special Committee.

Full arrangements have been made with the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association for the meeting of the Convention in Atlantic City beginning Wednesday, May 23 and lasting through Tuesday, May 29. No hotel was selected as headquarters on account of the wishes of the Hotel Men's Association to that effect. All individuals should make their own reservations. Full information as to prices will be given to our denominational papers, and may be secured by writing to Mr. A. T. Bell, Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, Atlantic City, N. J.

IF YOU HAD A BOY OR GIRL

in a great American University and subject to loneliness, homesickness, and all the perplexities that come to young people away from home

Would You Not Be Glad

to know that at the university there is a Baptist minister whose business it is to look after the interests of your son and daughter—to make his home their home, to advise them in their problems, to help them solve their moral and religious questions, to help them remain true to their Lord and to their father's church during their student days? Such pastors are now located at

Thirty-three American Universities

Your contributions to the New World Movement help to enable the Board of Education to maintain these University Pastors.

There ought to be such a Baptist pastor at every great University. There could be if the financial objectives of our New World Movement are fully realized.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATON

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

"For Obvious Reasons"

IN NOVEMBER there appeared in a southern exchange a news letter from Nashville, Tenn., in which it was suggested that "American Baptists should line up in the movement to elect" one of our honored brethren as the "president of the next Baptist World Alliance." A few weeks later an editorial appeared in another paper, stating that the honored brother had been nominated by the Canadian Baptist, and expressing the "notion" that "he will be elected to the presidency of the alliance without opposition." Nothing could be in worse taste than this newspaper nomination and election of candidates, especially in the case where the Baptists of other countries are concerned. The fellowship at the meeting of the alliance in Philadelphia in 1911 was marred by unwise procedure in connection with the election of the officers of the alliance. Let us not make the same mistake in preparation for the meeting at Stockholm.

It would be exceedingly unfortunate if the impression were to go abroad that six months before the meeting at Stockholm there was a "movement" on the part of American Baptists to "line up" to elect any one of their own number as the next president of the alliance. Such a suggestion would seem indelicate, to say the least. It should be remembered, too, that no one from the continent of Europe has ever served as president of the alliance, and its next meeting is to be in Sweden. Thus far the entertaining country has been honored with the presidency for the term immediately following the meeting. If there is to be a change of procedure, let the suggestion come from the eastern side of the Atlantic. There are brethren in Europe who are both able and worthy.

The writer of the news letter in the southern exchange and the editors of other denominational journals seem not to have recognized that they may seriously embarrass one of the finest men in our denomination, and American Baptists in general. In commenting on the nomination by several journals, the Religious Herald, of Richmond, Va., very appropriately says: "This suits us down to the ground, though for obvious reasons, we could not with propriety press the proposition." It is a pity that other American editors have not recognized that "for obvious reasons" we should not be pressing the nomination of any one from our own country, especially since the present incumbent is an American Baptist.

Since the present incumbent is from the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention, we should say that, if the next president of the alliance is to be an American, without question he should be a Canadian Baptist or a southern man, and certainly no one in the Southern Baptist Convention would be more warmly supported by the Baptists of all sections of our country than the brother whose name has appeared recently in several papers. But let us say again that we believe some Baptist from the continent of Europe should be chosen this time. It would be highly appropriate to honor one of the men who, in the face of great difficulties, have dared to be Baptists. Such a selection would hearten our brethren in Europe.

It is true that a large majority of the Baptists of the world are in America. That fact, however, should prompt us to have special consideration for the weaker groups in other lands who have come up through great tribulation. At any rate, let us be careful lest we create the impression that American Baptists are forgetting the injunction, "in honor preferring one another." Any such impression would injure the fine feeling now developing with reference to the next meeting of the alliance and might seriously affect the interest of those who have been hoping for such a season of international Baptist fellowship as was never enjoyed before. Let us avoid any "movement" which would suggest that American Baptist bodies are coveting honors for themselves. The international situation makes it especially appropriate that we show a deep desire to give honors to representatives of other nations.

Doubtless the congress at Stockholm will prove itself fully competent to nominate and elect its own president, and probably it would show displeasure at any attempt "to line up" delegates in advance of the meeting.

Buildings and Baptisms

IN the report of our foreign mission work contained in the fascinating new manual "On the March" there are stirring triumphs to atone for debt and retrenchment; the difficulties of the past three years are offset by a splendid record of buildings and baptisms.

In these three years and on the ten foreign fields nearly seventy new buildings have been erected. Nine are churches, twenty-seven are missionary residences sadly needed, sixteen are school buildings to meet the newly awakened hunger for knowledge among the people in schools ranging from primary grade to college, six are dormitories bringing the students under Christian atmosphere and influence for all of their day, and five hospitals, a ward in another hospital, a dispensary and several hostels, do their gracious work for body and soul. Among notable buildings are two at Bassein built by the Sgaw Karens with their own money, $144,000; a school in Jorhat, Assam, where young men and boys from fifteen tribes attend and where some of them have walked 250 miles to attend the school; a fine church at Kharagpur, the great railroad center of India, where the congregation is entirely self-supporting; Scott Hall for the Student Guild and student church at Waseda University in Tokyo, Japan; two fine dormitories and a new science building at Shanghai College; and under the Woman's Society a remarkable array of college, high-school, hospital, Bible training-school, orphanage and residence buildings, made possible by the Jubilee, the Mrs. Rockefeller and the New World Movement gifts. It is a wonderful record which will call for large giving to sustain and develop.

And the spiritual record keeps pace with the material advance. The year 1921, the latest for which we have full reports, had more than 12,000 baptisms to its credit on our foreign fields, and the incomplete reports since then are full of cheer. The remarkable movement reaching over the border from Burmah into China, where Rev. W. M. Young has been so successful, reports 3,350 baptisms and many thousands more in sight if sufficient workers could be had. In Manipur, Assam, until recently closed to the gospel, there were 569 converts last year, and three large villages came over bodily to Christianity. In Africa there continues a remarkable evangelistic ingathering, more than can be cared for.

Although, as explained elsewhere, the gifts have involved obligations for upkeep which leave the societies in debt and embarrassment, the actual receipts of the general Foreign Society for the past three years have been more than double those of the preceding three, viz., from $3,098,811 in the years 1917-1919 to $6,292,286 in the years 1920-1922.

Read the full story in "On the March."

The Gum Business vs. the Lord's Business

WILLIAM WRIGLEY on Feb. 5 approved contracts which call for the expenditure this year of $4,000,000 to advertise his gum. He says it pays. Perhaps the Lord's business as represented by the Baptist denomination ought not to be mentioned on the same page with the gum business.

We must have $10,000,000 to keep going the Lord's business outside the local churches and to make a modest payment on our debts. Think for a moment of what is implied in our foreign mission work; our home mission work; our state convention and city mission work. Try to appraise the work of the Publication Society; the ministers and missionaries' benefit board; the work for our young people through the organized young people's work; the work in their behalf in universities; our great educational institutions and our smaller colleges; our work with the foreign-speaking bodies and our cooperative effort in the Federal Council of Churches.

Try again, we say, to estimate the value of these world-embracing institutions and agencies; then remember that we find here and there expressions of doubt as to our ability to raise for the Lord's work a sum of money only about twice as great as that to be spent in advertising by one man in the gum business.

We beg your pardon for mentioning these two types of "big" business in the same paragraph. We are troubled, however, by the contrast to the world in the values of the two undertakings. On the other hand we admire the confidence shown in the possibilities of the gum business which will lead an individual to spend almost half as much for advertising as we propose to spend for the great missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises of a million and a half of Baptists.

Four Engagements—III

OUR relations to our church are crucial, our relations to God are vital and our relations to each other are quite as essential a part of our Christianity, if the third section of the church covenant is any criterion. In this third room, with its space for expansion in actual Christian living, we find another engagement blazoned before us in unmistakable meaning: "We further engage to watch over one another in brotherly love."

We need this now, right now! When both ends, highly organized, slap each other above, through and under the great middle group, a Baptist organization is distraught. Happy the church that has no ends, but only a middle! If, however, we all, every last Christian of us, near liberal, neo-liberal, conservative and preservative, can engage to watch over one another in brotherly love and learn to disagree without being disagreeable, we can save the situation to the glory of God!

It can be done. A few days ago when Dr. Ross said adieu to the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference, over which he has been presiding, to take up his new work in Boston, one of the outstanding liberal brethren proposed a farewell dinner in his honor and remarked: "I am happy to propose this and I want it to go through because, in spite of the differences in our theological thinking, I love him as a Christian brother; I have been happy in all my relations with him and I am genuinely grieved at his departure." Every one present knew that the speaker uttered these words from the depths of a sincere heart. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

It is the best cement to hold our Baptist churches together. The strongest bond is the bond of love. Nothing can keep true lovers apart. And if the bond that binds two hearts together runs through the great heart of God, it has the temper of eternity. "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren."

This depends on the further extension of brotherly love expressed in this section of the covenant: "To cultivate Christian sympathy in feeling and courtesy in speech." To cultivate of course requires soil. If there is no soil of sincere Christian character born of secret devotion, do not look for too much Christian sympathy. There is no point to preaching "Let love of the brethren continue" if it never gets a start.

Our social relationships within the group of the local church are matters of great import and unless an individual church can bring itself to have a family feeling of warming and suffusing brotherly love throughout its membership, it can hardly be expected to be great in soul-saving for the Saviour. Brethren of Baptist churches, if this is a minus quantity in your local church pray it in, and as you rise from your knees say to your differing neighbor, with a smile twinkling through your tears: "With all your faults I love you still."

A Page of Opinion

Toward a Science of Christian Ethics

AN extraordinarily useful statement of the social meaning of Christianity is contained in Bishop Charles Gore's pamphlet "The Social Teaching of the Sermon on the Mount" (Christian Social Union Pamphlet No. 1, circulated by Industrial Christian Fellowship, London). Throughout the sermon on the mount, Bishop Gore says, Jesus aims at a social end through the elimination of individual sins and imperfections. "Real social reform, then, will proceed not by the method of majorities, but from small groups of sanctified men, like the apostles." Yet Jesus in all his teaching is "legislating for a distinct society; not for humanity as it is, but for the humanity of redemption. . . .

"And we are to apply this principle in single parishes and districts of human life by endeavoring to concentrate church feeling, and to accentuate its moral meaning and requirements. . . . I would strive that the church in every parish should represent, not such and such a number of adherents, but the morally best, be they many or be they few, in every class; or, to put it more truly, those who are honestly striving after moral excellence, and ready to make sacrifices in its interests. The church is not to represent public opinion, but to be the home of the best moral conscience of the community."

Does the bishop mean that we are to throw open the doors of the churches to any man or woman who is "striving after moral excellence" and who has a keen social conscience? Is there not danger right here of confusing membership in the churches with citizenship in the kingdom of God?

No Heresy Trial

THE country is to be spared a "heresy trial" in the case of Rector Grant. Bishop Manning says his statements are "ambiguous." The charges will not be pushed any farther at the present time. This is at least the easiest solution if not the best of an unfortunate controversy. The thing that hurts us as churchmen is that the action indicated was prophesied from the first in the editorial pages of the secular press. So far as the grounds for this prophecy were named, they were the fact that his congregation was influential and that there was a great cathedral to be built. We do not condone heresy. We do not vouch for the correctness of the reasons given for the failure to push the charges against the rector. We do say if there is a grain of truth in the reasons set forth, a heresy trial would be a real revival of religion.

Traveling First Class

"SHIP load of millionaires on $2,000,000 trip" is the headline of a metropolitan daily. It may be all right to headline such events but we confess that it does not look right. "One of the biggest passenger lists of millionaires ever leaving New York will go on a Mediterranean cruise aboard the 'Mauretania.'" The principal suite has been reserved for Judge Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation. It costs $30,000. The average price paid by the tourists is $3,600. We cannot help but wonder what the men who are working twelve hours a day in the great steel mills think about such flaunting of wealth in their faces. And the steel business cannot prosper unless thousands of men work twelve hours out of the twenty-four. Around the shores of the same Mediterranean there are hundreds of thousands of men whose lot in life would be eased by the opportunity to labor twelve hours a day at the United Steel's pay. Don't despair, Baptist reader, you can go to Stockholm and return for $340, all expenses paid. Yes, and travel "first class."

Who Makes the Styles?

IS the matter of styles a matter of following the leader? We do not profess to be an authority on styles, especially those of women. We have, however, wondered at the ease with which the extremes in garb are adopted by our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters. Who makes the styles? Roger W. Babson in the Continent says: "I was once at a convention of manufacturers of ladies' garments. At this meeting a group of disreputable men sat in a hotel room drinking and smoking and determined what the women of the country should wear two years hence. Moreover, they succeeded, though they laughed and joked about the thing themselves. Yes, every woman who could afford it, whether she was a minister's wife or a shallow flirt, followed the orders of that convention. The general problem involved in fashions is too intricate for me to discuss here. If, however, fashions are inevitable, they ought to be determined by the better element of the community instead of the worst, especially when the change can be so easily accomplished."

Are They Read and Obeyed?

LAST year the demand for Bibles was such that practically 30,000,000 volumes were printed. Day and night great presses were engaged in producing copies of the Word. It is said that since the war there has been an unprecedented demand for the Bible in this and other lands. Bibles make suitable presents. No home wants to be known as without a copy of the Word of God. We do not need, it would seem, to urge the purchase of Bibles. What would interest us, however, would be some fair estimate of the number of people who habitually read this book and gladly endeavor to incarnate its teachings. It's one thing to buy a Bible; it's another thing to read the book; and it is quite another to obey its teachings.

Why I Became a Christian

By ALEXANDER SCHAAP

IN REPLY to your request for a statement of my religious convictions and the reasons why I have accepted Jesus as Israel's Messiah and the Saviour of the world, I want to say first of all that these convictions and reasons can be understood only by Jews and Christians who believe that the Tenach (Old Testament) was written by men of God under direct divine inspiration.

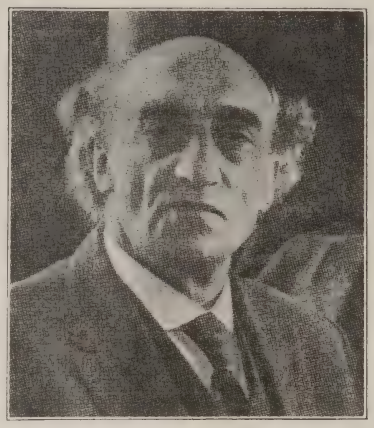
I thank God for my pious Orthodox Jewish parents and the devout teachers in the Orthodox Jewish Academy in Holland, where I was educated, for having filled my soul with reverence and devotion for the Holy Scriptures, which hold the "truths that lead to eternal life." As Jesus said to the Jews, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye believe ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify for me."

There is not room here for long theological discussion as to the authenticity of every translated word of the Tenach. More valuable than all technical study and exegesis is the knowledge of the great truths it conveys, namely:

1—God's wonderful plan of salvation for poor, fallen mankind through the Messiah.

2—The revelation that there can be no forgiveness of sin without the shedding of blood.

3—The plight of Israel for their rejection of God's grace and mercy.



4—The subsequent transfer of this grace and mercy to the Gentiles.

5—The promise of the final conversion and redemption of Israel's remnant.

"A Light Unto My Path"

Throughout life I have clung to the Tenach as God's inspired Word and, despite the claims of the so-called higher criticism and the radicals who would eliminate from it the miraculous and the superhuman, I see no reason to change my mind now and I pray that to the end, which is not far off, "it shall be a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

Believing therefore with all my heart the revelation contained in the Tenach, I believe that Jesus is the Messiah, sent by God the Father to redeem Israel, because he fulfilled all prophesies regarding himself to the letter and is still fulfilling them and, I believe, will fulfill them to the end of time.

Alexander Schaap, the author of this article, is the "Church Editor" of the "St. Louis Times." The occasion of testimony was the request of the editor of the "Modern View," the Jewish paper of that city, for a statement of the reasons why Mr. Schaap had "changed his religion." Mr. Schaap eagerly consented, little thinking that the article would be printed. It appeared, however, in a recent issue of the "Modern View." The occasion is so unique and the opportunity to get such a witness before Jewish readers so unusual that we are making use of this testimony to let our Baptist people know what is going on in the Jewish world, and what is likely to happen if such experiences are printed in their journals. Dr. W. H. Geistweit says of Mr. Schaap, "He is an intelligent, finely educated Jew of St. Louis, who has been a convert to Christianity for a long while. He is universally respected and is doing much for the religious life of the city. One reason why, I think, this article was printed is because of the spirit of the writer. He is all that could be desired in a true man, an Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile."

There is nothing that so strengthens my faith in Jesus as the fact that he was the very opposite of the carnal expectations nursed by the Jews before the dispersion as well as by the present generation, in his birth, in his life and in the manner of his death.

Until my eyes were opened, I, also dreamed of a great, powerful, earthly Messiah, a mighty conqueror, who, with Jerusalem as his headquarters, would subject all the world to his and to Jewish rule.

Our rabbis quoted all passages that pointed to the invincible power of the coming Messiah, to his reign, to his glory, to his earthly greatness. Hidden from us was his lowly, though spiritually omnipotent character.

That the birth of Jesus was to be miraculous is plainly stated in Isaiah 7:14—"Behold a virgin shall conceive and shall bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel." In the New Testament we find the writers of the Gospels minutely agreed in their accounts of the immaculate conception of Jesus.

To me this is the most precious of all the fulfillments of prophecy—"Immanuel, God with us, God in the flesh," come to redeem a sin-lost world, to atone for my sins, to reconcile me to God, to save me from damnation.

In a Manger

And then the manner of his birth—not in the soft down of a Jerusalem palace cradle but in a manger, in a stable in Bethlehem. This also according to prophecy (see Micah 5:2). Even in his babyhood he had to suffer persecution, for his earthly parents had to flee with him into Egypt to escape Herod's slaughter of babes, as was also prophesied.

And his calling—not to save the Jews alone, nor those in high places alone, nor the wise alone, nor the outwardly moral alone, but the penitent murderer, the thief, the robber, the fallen woman, and men and women of all races and color, for a "bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory. And in his name shall the Gentile trust."

Ah, this is a precious revelation to me, namely, that none is excluded from God's plan of salvation through Jesus, the Messiah, that the gates of heaven are thrown open to the lowliest believer in the vicarious atonement of Jesus.

And his life—not one of ease and comfort, of lofty position, of veneration and praise from those in high standing. His life, I say, was in exact fulfillment of the inspired prophecies of Isaiah. "He was despised and rejected of men" (Isaiah 53:3). He had not a place to lay his head. He had to depend for sustenance on the charity of his followers. He was hounded by the leaders of his own people, who plotted his death.

And the manner of his death—also in exact fulfillment of the Tenach prophecies. How any one with a sincere heart and open mind can read the story of his passion, of his trial, of his crucifixion, and not cry out with the publican in the temple, "O God have mercy upon me, a poor sinner, let his precious blood cleanse me from all sins," is more than I can understand.

And all of this was faithfully foretold in the Tenach: Read all of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; even the theft of his garments by the soldiers (See Psalm 22-18.); his temporary God-forsakenness (See Psalm 22:1.); the piercing of his hands and feet and the ignominious manner of his death (Read all of Psalm 22.); And now the same Jesus rose from the dead in fulfillment of prophecy also (See Psalm 16:8-10).

All that he, himself, has predicted concerning his church, the Jewish people and the world, either has been fulfilled, or, I believe, will be fulfilled, such as:

1—The dispersion of the Jews, their sufferings and the conversion of humanity, as he said: "The last shall be first, and the first shall be last."

2—The evangelization of the pagan world in accordance with the command to his disciples to "preach the Gospel to all nations" till he come to reign in glory.

3—The survival of his church through the ages of darkness, unbelief, false teachings, persecution, traitors within and scoffers without. As he said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away," and again, "Behold I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

4—The miraculous advance of science and learning in Christian lands, making good the claim of Jesus, that he is "the Light of the World," for in heathen lands to this day still reign the darkness of ignorance and other primitive conditions, advancement coming to them only with the advent of the gospel.

The thankless Christians who do not see in the fulfillment of all these prophecies the power of a personal divine Saviour, who is with his people to the end of time, should bury their heads in shame. It is also high time that the Jews recognize in Jesus their Messiah, whom they and their forefathers rejected, and that they fulfill his prediction when he wept over Jerusalem and said, "Henceforth ye shall not see me until ye shall shout 'Baruch Habah Beshem Adonai.'" (Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.)

Oh, that the eyes of my people would soon be opened and, as they begin to accept Jesus as the Saviour and to bring about a great spiritual upheaval, that nation after nation be drawn to the cross by the fervent preaching of penitent Jewish leaders.

I hear the voices of our silver-tongued orators sing the praises of the crucified, resurrected and risen Redeemer. I see multitudes of Jews and Gentiles moved to repentance by their pleadings; I see the phenomenal talents and untiring energies of my people directed in God-pleasing channels and then—the coming of the Lord to reign in glory and the end of all evil, sin, misery, suffering and death.

Regarding your request for a biography, there is little to say. I was born in Utrecht, Holland, of Orthodox Jewish parents, who died while I and three brothers were still in boyhood. After I graduated in Holland I joined my relatives in New York. Got the "wanderlust" and left them. Was public school teacher for a year in Minnesota and teacher of languages in various colleges for a few years, my restless nature not permitting me to stay long anywhere. Later a Lutheran parochial schoolteacher for a short time following my conversion. Studied a little in German Lutheran Seminary in Mendota, Ill., and later in an English one in Chicago. Landed in journalism, and in my three decades of newspaper work have gained the reputation of having been fair to all denominations in my news reports, despite my personal religious views, a reputation which, you know, I have maintained during my five years' work here.

The Professional Ideal

By E. H. JOHNSON

A PROFESSION is not a trade. Its end is to confer, not to receive, a benefit. Its honor is in its humility. That professional services earn an honorarium and that trade is an advantage to a buyer, that professional men are often narrow-minded and tradesfolk liberal, is all true, and all apart from the purpose. The trade must convey a benefit or no one would buy, but its real aim is to sell; the profession must have its emoluments or few could follow it, but its real profits are those of the client, not the practitioner. If a profession offered no pecuniary rewards, still some men would adopt it, as members of the English parliament follow politics without pay; but a trade could hardly survive such conditions, and if it did, would become in all eyes a philanthropy, not a trade. Since the service rendered by a profession is so distinctly personal, the client is a dependent on his professional advisers; but since trade aims to make a profit, the buyer is the patron of the seller, and the seller calls him so. Such is the professional ideal when imagination is clear-eyed and busied with the ideal.

All this is now well enough understood to make it seem a violation of professional honor in a minister of the gospel to be controlled by pecuniary considerations. The same motives would bring the same dishonor upon the lawyer, doctor, teacher or politician, if his calling were recognized as equally honorable with the minister's; and in the proportion that it falls short of requiring disinterestedness, in that proportion it lacks professional dignity, and sacrifices it to the mercenariness legitimate in a trade. Indeed, it is universally felt to be an indignity to a profession for a professional man to give prominence to his pecuniary claims. Politics in particular, which alleges patriotism as its motive, is especially under reproach when the profession of politics is allowed to become a trade. Every one then relishes the denunciation which Samuel Johnson flung against a certain active demagogue called "the patriot," when he defined patriotism as the "last refuge of a scoundrel." In other words, it is essentially hypocritical to set up as a professional man while ruled by motives suitable to other callings. At the same time men of all trades or of none are bound to serve their fellows, and all life is dignified or degraded by attention or inattention to this duty.

First Church, Tucson, Arizona

THOSE of our readers who are not familiar with the energy and progressiveness of our Baptist forces in the virile state of Arizona will be interested, and perhaps surprised, to learn of the markedly forward step taken by the First Church of Tucson, for it has well advanced its plans to erect a $100,000 church and church-school building group.

Following the suggestion of State Convention Secretary H. Q. Morton, Rev. R. S. Beal, pastor, wrote the Home Mission Society for the assistance of the department of architecture in planning the new plant. The church had purchased a well-located corner lot, 132x184 feet. The drawings here published show the vision which that church is now about to realize in brick and mortar—simple, attractive, useful and befitting its program.

The cuts shown are made from the drawings made by the architects for the building, Messrs. Lyman and Place, of Tucson. In this building we see a spirit of independence which seeks a true expression of its own locality. A design expressed in white plaster with broad wall surfaces and small window openings, is very appropriate under the bright, sunny skies of Arizona, where the intense black of the shadows stands out in bold relief against the brilliance of the wall. A valuable touch of color is afforded by the frieze of polychrome terra-cotta at the eaves and along the rake of the gables of the main church unit, while a quieter note of color is furnished by the ornamental iron window of the entrance doorway and the iron lamps.

The impressive arched doorway forms the focal point of the design. The broad, deep shadow under the arch is relieved by the detail of the ornamental iron screen set well back in its depths. The window lights above the entrance doors are filled with amber glass, thereby enriching the play of light in the interior during the day and sending out a beam of cheerful light at night to beckon the stranger to the service within.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN

In the square central narthex ample space is provided for the greeting of friends or strangers. At one side a rest-room is provided for women and on the opposite side the same facilities for men. Two stairways lead to the rear of the balcony above.

Continuing through the narthex, one enters directly into the church auditorium, using either the center or side aisles. The auditorium is a long, rectangular room, airy and well-lighted, with three large windows on each side at the floor level and a long row of small windows above the balcony level. The walls of this room are caen stone plaster and the ceiling is embellished with ornamental plaster beams. Pew sittings are provided for 850 people, and the screen between the auditorium and the narthex is designed to slide up in case an overflow meeting requires temporary chairs in the narthex.

Behind the pulpit platform and in front of the low choir loft is the baptistry having its floor upon the platform floor level. The sliding panels between the pulpit and the baptistry will remain in the position shown on the plan only during the ordinance of baptism. At other times they are moved back into their pockets. Dressing rooms for the candidates are provided at the rear of the building. Ornamental grills hide the mechanism within the ample organ chambers without interfering with the free passage of the sound waves.

The Church School

Set apart from the church but with a connecting arcade one story in height, stands the church school. This open passageway brings the two units into close relationship and affords ample circulation between church and school. To the rear of this connecting arcade is the church office and pastor's study.

The church school wing is planned to further the modern program of religious study. On occasions the entire school may assemble in the church auditorium, but in general each department of the school will assemble in a room by itself. Thus the songs, group reading, prayers and other exercises can be planned to suit the understanding of each group of children taking part. Each department has its small class-rooms close at hand to further the present-day need for individual class instruction in rooms which are free from outside noise and confusion. The children of the beginners, junior and intermediate departments meet on the first floor with assembly and class rooms closely related. Upon the second floor the primary and senior departments are provided with similar accommodations. The departmental assembly rooms make ideal club rooms for week-day meetings. As Tucson is a college community special facilities have been provided for college students. The church parlor occupies a choice location in the school unit, facing upon the main street. Here the ladies' societies will hold their week-day meetings, and light refreshments can be served from the kitchenette close at hand. Here also will be held the mid-week prayer meeting and other adult devotional services of a like nature. Living quarters for the janitor are provided on the second floor of this school unit.

In many localities the church of today must develop an active program of social and recreational activities to minister to the needs of growing youth. This need has been recognized at Tucson by a large recreation room at the rear of the lot. The floor is a little below that of the first floor of the school and will be reached down a flight of steps from East Fifth Street or down a short stair at the end of the school corridor. A good-sized kitchen is placed near the side street entrance. At the further end is a platform. Separate locker-rooms for boys and girls are upon opposite sides.

The group of buildings reflects the life and activities of this church. Provision for preaching, for teaching and for social life receive proper relative emphasis. The new building is a challenge to new purposes which the church will meet in a way worthy of the Master.

FIRST CHURCH, TUCSON, ARIZONA

Official Announcement by U. S. Indian Office of Gifts made by Indians to American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE commissioner of Indian affairs, Hon. Charles H. Burke, announced today the consummation of a plan which has been under consideration for some time past, whereby a large part of the estate of Jackson Barnett, a wealthy full-blood Creek Indian, has been disposed of by a gift to his wife and as a donation for educational purposes among the Indians of the five civilized tribes.

"Jackson Barnett is reputed to be Oklahoma's wealthiest Indian. His estate consists of his allotment in the Cushing Oil Pool of Oklahoma and Liberty bonds and cash approximating a million and a half dollars. He is probably the most advertised Indian in the United States, not only because of his great wealth, but on account of his sensational marriage about three years ago to his present wife, who is alleged to have kidnapped him from his guardian in Oklahoma and to have taken him to Kansas, where she married him.

"The affairs of Jackson Barnett have been a source of much trouble to the Indian bureau. The vast accumulation to the credit of one Indian seems to have been a magnet, which has attracted designing persons of every character from all parts of the country, and Indian department officials have been called upon to devote much time and energy in the thwarting of impossible and fantastic schemes to secure his wealth. Definite knowledge has recently come to Indian office officials that the grafters are not content with making encroachments on this estate during the lifetime of its owner, but have gone so far as to hunt up persons who will claim to be his heirs upon his death, and have secured from them contracts for 50 per cent of their interest in his estate, and which claims will be prosecuted when Jackson Barnett dies.

"Upon the request of Jackson Barnett himself, and in view of these experiences and of the fact that aside from his wife Jackson Barnett has no living relatives who have any legal or moral claim upon him, it was concluded by the secretary of the interior and the commissioner of Indian affairs, after a full personal consideration and consultation with A. J. Ward, Creek national attorney, and Superintendent Locke of Muskogee, Okla., to make such disposition of the bulk of this estate as would remove it as a further temptation to those whose interest in Jackson Barnett is prompted only by the fact that he has money.

"There has been given to the American Baptist Home Mission Society of New York, as a permanent endowment fund for the use and benefit of Bacone College and Murrow Indian Orphans' Home at Muskogee, Okla., $550,000. To insure to Barnett an income sufficient for his needs, regardless of any contingency during his lifetime, the society has guaranteed to him, as a first charge against said fund, the payment of $20,000 a year so long as he lives, out of the income from his gift. The society now has endowments for various purposes in excess of $11,000,000, and is thoroughly responsible financially. However, as a further assurance of the payment of this income, the amount of the gift has been deposited as a trust fund with the Equitable Trust Company of New York, which company guarantees the payment of said income.

"The same amount, $550,000, has been given to Mrs. Barnett, and she in turn has created a trust fund of $200,000 the income from which to the extent of $7,500 per annum will be paid to her husband during his lifetime. This trust has been assumed by the Riggs National Bank of Washington, and payment guaranteed by it. These gifts have been made absolutely, and are not conditional or in any way dependent upon the guarantees of income.

"In addition to the above income, Jackson Barnett still retains title to his allotment in the Cushing Oil Field, the royalties from which bring him an income in excess of $18,000 a year. He also has other income from interest on loans which have been made, amounting to approximately $5,000. This will give Jackson Barnett a total income of approximately $50,000 a year.

"The gift to The American Baptist Home Mission Society was made because this society happens to have administrative control of these two Indian educational institutions, which are situated in the heart of the Indian country of Oklahoma, and are the best equipped from every standpoint to carry on in a permanent and substantial way much needed educational work among the Indians. In no sense is this gift a denominational or church donation.

"During the last two and a half years, the Indians of Oklahoma have made other gifts of approximately $475,000 for the land, buildings, equipment and endowment of the Murrow Indian Orphanage and Bacone College. These gifts have been approved by the Indian bureau. The general education board of New York has also made a gift of $80,000 and the American Baptist Home Mission Society $40,000 for the buildings of Bacone College. These gifts from the Indians and their friends amount to $1,145,000 of which $700,000 is for endowment and $445,000 for land, buildings and equipment. The student body of both institutions is made up of representatives of twenty-one Indian tribes, coming from wide Indian areas. No denominational requirements are made of students, the one qualification being that they have Indian blood. Pres. B. D. Weeks, the head of the schools, is a most capable young man, who is enthusiastically devoted to the upbuilding of these institutions and to the intellectual and moral enrichment of Indian youth."

Additional Statement by Dr. White

The gift of $80,000 by the general education board and the gift of $40,000 from income of special funds by the Home Mission Society were conditioned on the gifts of large sums by the Indians and have led through the efforts of President Weeks and others to the remarkable gifts mentioned above.

The Murrow Indian Orphans' Home is under the direct supervision of the president of Bacone College and while it has been supported chiefly by the Indians, the salaries of certain teachers and matrons have been paid by the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society. The orphanage is named after Dr. J. S. Murrow, a pioneer Indian missionary to the Indians of Oklahoma, and is a monument to his devotion and fidelity to their interests.

The endowment given by Mr. Barnett is in government securities bearing a low rate of interest and after his death the income from the fund will make it possible for the Home Mission Society to enlarge and increase the efficiency of these two institutions, the growth of which has suffered in the past through the society's inability to provide sufficient funds for their adequate support.

On the Western Frontier

Tasks are cumulative as the commonwealth develops

By G. CLIFFORD CRESS

AMERICAN life falls naturally, in popular thinking, into six groups. These are New England, Central States, Gulf States, Mississippi Valley, Rocky Mountain area and Pacific Coast. This article deals with the Rocky Mountain area, generally spoken of as our western frontier. For our present purposes we will include Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Idaho and eastern Washington. Here the constructive forces of America are laying the foundations of a great civilization which is to be. The explorer, the hunter and trapper, the Indian fighter and the picturesque stage-coach and express rider are gone. But the sturdiest type of pioneers that ever attempted to bring order out of desert and wilderness are now at work here. Much of the crudeness of early settlement has passed, but in the last twenty years more homesteads have been actually settled, more arid land placed under irrigation, more roads built, more timber land cleared for the plow on this area than has ever been accomplished elsewhere in any two decades of the nation's history.

What are some of the outstanding characteristics of this frontier? It lies on the high watersheds between the Mississippi and the Pacific Ocean. America's great mountain ranges traverse it. Through wilderness and desert wind many of our greatest rivers. There are vast stretches of forest and millions of acres of fertile soil yet unplowed. It is a land of health. Its high altitudes develop vigorous physical and mental life. It contains many of America's famous beauty spots, including the Grand Canyon, the Royal Gorge, Yellowstone and Glacier Parks, with many other areas of incomparable grandeur and beauty.

A Land of Untold Wealth

It is a land whose wealth has never been inventoried. Gold, silver and precious stones together with copper, salt and other varied mineral and chemical deposits invite the industry of mankind. There are vast areas of oil, of gas, of bituminous coal and lignite in fabulous deposits. No other area in America, save the Pacific coast, has the volume of water available for irrigation and the development of hydro-electric energy. The civilization of the morrow in the western half of our nation will be dominated by the irrigation engineer and the electrical engineer. Out of the bosom of the earth at the touch of the former will come the harvests that will feed the nation. Out of the deep canyons where turbulent streams rush and roar will come the electric energy that will heat and light the homes of our children and that will drive the motors of transportation and the wheels of industry.

The people living on this frontier today are not a commonplace lot of vagabonds who have failed elsewhere. They are a most progressive citizenry. The Sage Foundation in 1919 indicated one of these states as having the most complete and ideal system of public schools in America. This group stood as a solid phalanx for the enfranchisement of women years before eastern America could be aroused in this matter of fundamental justice. This frontier had prohibition and its people lived in a saloonless area while other parts of the nation were groping in the dark shadows of the brewery and the distillery. The first woman to sit in the halls of Congress represented one of these states. The outstanding juvenile court, not only of America but in the world, developed in another. The people of this frontier have the forward look of pioneers and are not bound in the grave-clothes of precedent and conservatism. What they believe ought to be done, forthwith they do and if explanations are needed they are made afterward.

The New World Movement is the present program of Northern Baptists for the translation of the ideals of Jesus Christ into institutions and service at home and abroad. The Baptists in this western frontier are unanimously and heartily identified with it. To the utmost of their ability in these lean years they are working for its success. It was one of these states that first subscribed the entire amount of its allotment in the drive of 1920. While the actual cash contributed may not look large in the total yet it represents a high per capita giving and when the newness of the land is considered makes a creditable record.

The New World Movement makes possible many distinctive and necessary types of service. These are evangelistic agencies for rural communities, lumber camps, oil fields and mining centers. The preaching of the soul-saving gospel of Jesus has the first place everywhere. Every convention has its evangelistic department, Sunday-school work, missionary pastors, district missionaries, colporters and special women workers. The Mexicans, the Indians, the Chinese and Japanese and other racial groups are sought out and served. New meeting houses are being provided and parsonages for workers. Every type of work has been increased by this movement but the needs still remain in appalling size and number. The working forces ought to be doubled in every convention and the erection of suitable buildings should be trebled at once. Any policy of retrenchment in this area is suicidal. The West is still plastic. But history repeats itself. Fifty years hence the strategic open door of today will be closed. The youngest conventions in the Northern Baptist Convention are doing their best but they need the aid of the older and stronger Baptist groups.

In these eight conventions are thousands of Baptist boys and girls who are denied the privilege of a Christian education. There is in this vast territory only one institution for education controlled by Baptists and this a junior college for girls. It would seem that these eight conventions, if they are to furnish their quota of denominational leadership for the morrow ought to have at least one or two strong Baptist colleges.

In conclusion let us face the disagreeable fact that entrenched in the very heart of this frontier is the Zion of Mormonism. Its active propaganda is heavily financed and vigorously prosecuted in every one of these conventions. Mormonism is tremendously alert and growing. In the last United States census it shows the largest percentage of gain in membership of any religious organization in America. Every Baptist missionary force on the frontier must meet this powerful movement. Our workers stand in need of the united prayers and support of the whole denomination to the end that Christian ideals and living may develop new intensities as the West grows in population and power. Every agency for prosecuting God's work should be made efficient here. The tasks are cumulative as the commonwealth develops.

The Only Book Never off the Press

By FRANK H. MANN, General Secretary American Bible Society

FOUR hundred and sixty-seven years ago the first book was printed from movable type. That book was the Bible and it took five years to complete the task. One of these books sold recently for $50,000. Today great presses printing for the American Bible Society are turning off copies of the Gospels at the rate of 10,000 an hour to be sold anywhere in the whole world for 1 cent each. In the intervening years the Bible has never been off the press. It has had a steady run for more than four centuries. Yet if all the Bibles printed in all the years since printing was invented were available today, there would not be enough to supply the world's present population. The present rate of production of Bibles is not as great as the birth rate. Large portions of the population of the world are still unable to get the whole Bible or even a main part in their native tongue.

It must be said to the credit of the church that a vast work has been done in giving the Bible to the world. In whole or in part the Bible has been translated into 770 languages or dialects. During the past decade the Bible has appeared in a new language on an average of every six weeks. In the past century some 550,000,000 copies of the Scriptures have been prepared by the Bible societies. Millions of dollars have been given by the church for this great task. Thousands of consecrated men have given themselves in sacrificial service.

But still the fact remains that the Book is undelivered. When the Bible societies are asked for an explanation their answer is immediate, direct and simple: "It could be delivered in hundreds of languages to millions of people if paid for." It is merely a matter of dollars and cents. The scholarship of the church is equal to the gigantic task of translation if it can only be made available. The mills are equipped to furnish the paper and the presses to print the sacred words if only funds are at hand to meet the expenses. The man-power and woman-power of the church are adequate for the task of distribution. In the most literal sense all

(Continued on page 93)

Service with Fighting Men

The Welfare Work of the Young Men's Christian Association in the World War

By SHAILER MATHEWS

THESE two large volumes are much more than a defense of the Young Men's Christian Association against the storm of criticism which so unjustly beat upon it a few years ago. The element of defense is not lacking, but just as in war the offensive is said to be the best defensive, so the presentation of facts is the best defense the Young Men's Christian Association could possibly have. But these volumes are vastly more than party pamphlets. They are a genuine contribution to social history. No man can ever write the history of the Great War without using them as source material. As a sample of book making they are admirable. The editorial supervision has gone much farther than the establishment of literary style and method of treatment. The work is really a treatise, not a mere collection of essays. As a piece of historical work it must be judged. Propaganda has its own methods of procedure, but it is not that of this work. Every line is historical in the best sense of that word. The text has been worked up from documents, reports and other original material. Furthermore, many of the documents are reproduced in an appendix. Especially are we given full financial statements as to the handling of funds. There also is a mass of correspondence, general orders, and programs, which invites further study and interpretation of the facts they illustrate.

The total impression made upon the reader by this work is that of immensity of operation. We can all recall drives and propaganda for drives, but these sober accounts make even war-time publicity look small. Even those who, as the present writer, felt they had some sort of general knowledge of the work of the association, will be amazed at the extent of their ignorance.

Statistics are probably the best introduction to the subject. The Young Men's Christian Association received nearly $170,000,000 for its operations. In its oversea work it had 12,955 workers. It entertained 1,944,375 soldiers in its hotels which it maintained in nineteen leave areas. It established and maintained 1,534 foyers for French soldiers. It built 952 "huts" in camps and training centers in America at a cost of $7,698,984.75, and at one time operated 1,175 "huts" in the army of occupation. The "huts" were capable of accommodating 1,141,000 men daily. It bought pianos by the hundreds, established factories for edibles and uniforms, furnished hundreds of entertainers, bought baseballs by the thousand, gave away and sold millions of cigarettes and an incalculable amount of chocolate, furnished noble women to create an atmosphere of home, held games and boxing matches, organized thousands of prayer meetings and preaching services, gathered 3,386,000 army boys in Bible-study groups, published thousands upon thousands of textbooks for these Bible studies, organized great educational institutions after the armistice, taught men nearly everything from the alphabet to art and engineering, and, as an incident hardly to be mentioned, although other organizations capitalized similar services, gave away doughnuts by the thousands. Its men were with the front-line troops as well as in the training and rest areas, and all over France. They cared for foresters as well as fighters, furnished chaperons for boys who wished to visit young women, took over hotels, conducted excursions all over Europe, changed money, invested money, forwarded money. Even such a list of activities is fractional. One needs to read these volumes to appreciate the ordinary extent of the association's work. Its only standard of comparison is the operation of the government itself. It carried 95 per cent of the entire load. Wherever the army and prisoners were, in twenty-eight countries, in fact, there was the Young Men's Christian Association also.

The volume frankly states the criticism which came upon the association from various sources, some of which should have been engaged in better business. But the editors have not turned themselves into advocates. They have no need to. The vastness of the association's undertaking, its efficiency under all the incredible conditions, its business methods, its organization and spirit, the type of men in its work, make most of these criticisms trivial and negligible. Of course the service of the association was imperfect. The wonder is that it was not more imperfect. To organize welfare work among 3,000,000 young men hastily thrown together into an army was an undertaking for which there was no precedent in the history of humanity. There never was an army so cared for and the association, thrust by military order and necessity into the business of running canteens, never forgot that its fundamental task was something more than doing work which the army should itself have undertaken. But it was all done; there is the miracle. No complaints or criticisms can destroy this achievement.

Sidelights on Religion

The volumes, however, are more than the records of an association. There are sidelights on a nation and a religion. America may well be proud of both. When one is tempted to be low-spirited at the slow rate of progress; when the imperfection of our churches and the materialism of our people seem too much in evidence; read these volumes. They will disappoint the grumbler. Religion is neither moribund, nor intolerent, nor mere other-worldliness, when it can do the amazing things these books relate. For the work of the association in our World War would have been impossible but for its experience in peace. It is all a part of a general plan and technique of the American church life.

One must not overlook the relations of the association with the army itself. It is an interesting chapter of military history, the like of which probably never was written. In no small way, the association was militarized, and that, too, without giving its workers the rank of officers. Other countries, like Canada, gave welfare workers the rank of commissioned officers. The association placed its workers with the men. The strain of such a relationship was, of course, tremendous. Sharing the discomforts of the men, the secretaries had responsibilities of which others could know nothing. It is no wonder that man after man broke down nervously. The honor roll of the Y. M. C. A. workers is full of gold stars.

A very interesting section of the book is devoted to the work of the association after the Armistice. Its leaders seemed to sense from the start that the moral tension would be greater after the war than during it. Many a boy owes his

"No man can be called friendless when he has God and the companionship of good books."

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning

RELIGIOUS BOOK WEEK

March 4-10, 1923

moral welfare to the rapidity and efficiency with which the association undertook to find amusement and keep the millions of young fellows from getting homesick.

How any good citizen can read these books without a feeling of gratitude is impossible to imagine. The very sweep of planning ought to win admiration, and the generosity and good sense with which the association used the millions in its treasury at the end of the war is an indication of the sincerity of purpose with which its work was carried on.

A Needless Estrangement

The public library should be a close ally of the local churches

THE public library in any town or city should be a close ally of the local churches. They have much in common. They deal largely with the same constituency. Their ideals are congenial.

Yet it is a well-known fact that the two institutions are not as a rule intimate with each other. Often they are rank strangers to each other. Needlessly estranged, they deprive one another of valued support and reinforcement.

Arthur E. Bostwick, long eminent in public library service, and since 1909 librarian of the St. Louis public library, has a frank and stimulating article in the Bookman on "The Church and the Library." The following sentences are of especial significance:

"The odd, the almost unbelievable thing is, that most religious groups in this country seem to be as unaware of the public library as we are of them. I will make but two exceptions—the Roman Catholics and the Christian Scientists. The Roman Catholics have been active in public library matters ever since I have known anything about public libraries. . . . The Christian Scientists apprehend the library intensively in limited directions. They have committees whose business it is to see that all libraries are well supplied with 'Science and Health,' and they encourage the purchase of some other books. . . . Outside of these evidences of religious interest, I have never known, from my library contacts with readers, whether they were Baptists or Mohammedans, Buddhists or Methodists."

Our churches and pastors are not without blame for this obvious estrangement, although Mr. Bostwick generously assumes for himself and his profession a large share of the responsibility: "It is strange that the religious group is the only body that the library has not gone out to seek with some activity. . . . Our libraries are generally deficient in religious reference books. . . . . When we think that the religious groups are worth attracting and attaching as well as the electricians and the philologists, we shall at least divide our attention."

We offer the following suggestions looking to the removal of the needless estrangement between the church and the library:

Know your library. Cultivate friendly relations with the local librarian and staff. Ascertain the resources of the library, note its circulation and the measure of its influence in the community. Read the published lists of new accessions and call attention publicly to notable books your people should read. Give your influence to the support of the library as a valued ally of the church. A progressive Minnesota town of 10,000 people keeps its public library open sixteen hours per week, and its six pool rooms open sixteen hours per day; and the town spends 16 cents per capita per annum to maintain the library! The churches of that town or of any similar town can improve that deplorable situation whenever they will.

Aid the library by donations. Most of the libraries have not funds to purchase denominational weeklies, but welcome them when given by interested persons. An Ohio college town has in its public library the Universalist Leader and the Unitarian Register, both donated; but although both Congregationalists and Baptists are numerous and powerful in the town, neither of their journals are to be found there. A Chicago branch library had THE BAPTIST among its newspaper files, but the last number to be found was several months out of date! Include THE BAPTIST for your local library in the annual church budget, and ask the librarian to list it among the periodicals for public use.

Encourage the purchase of new books by the library in the fields of church history, religious education, missions, and Christian biography. Librarians welcome suggestions and recommendations from book lovers and those who work for the welfare of the community. In a large western city the city librarian was a member of the board of religious education, and cooperated with the school of religious education by reserving hundreds of books in a special shelf for the use of the 300 students registered.

The public library is to be included among the social forces which make for light and truth and culture and righteousness; and so is a natural ally of the church. The attitude so finely expressed by Mr. Bostwick is that of the great majority of library workers in our American towns and cities:

"Must we not force ourselves to realize that religion is qualified to be a larger part in the lives of most of our readers than even the Theory of Groups or the fate of the Lost Digamma? Even Mr. Wells, who thinks the American Civil War of only sufficient world significance to warrant a paragraph, and Abraham Lincoln as not worth mention [Wells does in fact mention him, but no more than that. —Editor], spends many a page on Buddha, and Mohammed and even on Jesus Christ. No, religion is still a world force! Librarians cannot be the universal educators—the union of social forces—that they aspire to be without working with it and toward it."

Guarding the Tongue

(An English rendering of the third chapter of James)

By ROBERT J. KELLOGG

DO NOT try many of you to be teachers, my brothers, because you know that we teachers must be judged by a stricter standard than others. For all of us stumble in many ways. Any one who never stumbles in the use of his tongue, he is certainly an all-round man, able to hold his whole body in check also. When we put bits into horses' mouths to make them obey us, we thereby control their whole bodies also. Think again of ships: large as they are, and even when driven by rough winds, they are steered by a very small rudder wherever the impulse of the steersman wills. So also the tongue is a tiny member, and yet can boast of great effects.

Think how tiny a firebrand can set the greatest forest on fire! And the tongue is a firebrand; as the perfect refinement of iniquity it ranks among our members, contaminating the whole body and setting the machinery of life ablaze with the very fire of hell!

For every species of beasts and birds, of reptiles and sea animals, is tamable and has been tamed by human kind—but the tongue no man living can tame. It is a restless plague; it is full of death-dealing poison. With it we bless our Lord and Father, and with it we curse men made in the likeness of God! From the same lips come blessing and cursing. It is not right, my brothers, that this should be so. Does a spring send out fresh and bitter water from the same opening? Can a fig-tree, my brothers, bear olives, or a grape-vine bear figs? Neither can a salt spring give fresh water.

Is any one wise and sensible among you? Let him show by his good conduct that what he does has the gentleness of true wisdom. But when you harbor bitter jealousy and intrigue in your hearts, do not boast of being better than others and thus play false to the truth. This is not the wisdom that comes down from above, but is earthly, animal and devilish. For wherever there is jealousy and intrigue, there also is disorder and every kind of mean action. But the wisdom from above is first of all pure, then peaceable, fair, conciliatory, abundant in mercy and in its harvest of good, free from contention and pretense. The harvest of righteousness must be sown in peaceableness by those who practice peaceableness.

Mass Movements Toward Christ

THE mass movements more than once recorded in the early history of Christianity have their counterpart and recurrence in connection with modern missionary enterprises. Our own Baptist missionary history in India, Burma and Africa is resplendent with instances of these mass responses of village or tribe to the call of Christ through the gospel, when idols are cast away and temples razed and heathen rites forsaken, as the Spirit of God shepherds households, communities, districts, into the fold of the Saviour of the world.

Maurice Frater, missionary of the John G. Paton Mission Fund, who is to visit the United States early this year to tell the story of God's work among the cannibal tribes of the New Hebrides, bears testimony to this same phenomenon, in his gripping missionary story, "Midst Volcanic Fires," published by the Pilgrim Press, and reviewed in this issue of THE BAPTIST. He says:

"We found that the native converts came under the influence of the gospel in two ways: by the process of individual conversion, and by mass movements. In districts where the caste system prevails, the mode of approach to God is, of necessity, by personal conversion; but for the great majority of the people the method of conversion has proceeded along lines of mass movements. These are movements among the people, when a whole tribe will abandon its heathen worship, and all the members, from the chief down-

(Continued on page 93)

Good Books

"No man can be called friendless when he has God and the companionship of good books." — Elizabeth Barrett Browning

In Naaman's House, by Marian MacLean Finney. New York: The Abingdon Press. $1.75.

The house of Naaman has a fascination for every person who has read the Old Testament; Miss Finney has chosen well her locale for this romance of the land of the Israelites. She has made these ancient characters alive in her story of love and adventure.

Mayflower Program Book (The Second Year), by Jeanette Eloise Perkins and Frances Weld Danielson. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.

A week-day course in world friendship for primary children under nine years of age, its purpose being to supplement the regular work of the church school by means of expression and service. The book presents fascinating programs, many stories, songs, games and a series of patterns of gifts.

The Junior Citizen, by Joyce Constance Manuel. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $1.60.

A course of training for week-day religious schools, to be used with pupils from nine to eleven years of age. The fundamental purpose is clearly shown by the outline of the course: Our homes, our community, our country, other countries. Different phases of helpfulness are studied with relation to these geographical divisions.

Under Twenty, by Charles E. Jefferson, D.D. New York: Revell Company. $1.50.

Dr. Jefferson supplied the City Temple, London, last summer, and on the eve of his return received a letter from Prime Minister Lloyd George expressing his "deep appreciation" for Dr. Jefferson's ministry in its helpful influence in promoting international good-will. At Broadway Tabernacle, New York, Dr. Jefferson is equally capable of promoting faith and developing character in youth. The book contains twelve finely-wrought and concise addresses for young folks. It is especially suggestive for pastors and teachers who serve children and youth. "Lions and Adders," "The Two Roads," "Precious Jewels," and "Five Wrong Ideas of God," indicate the character of the themes discussed.

The New Testament, by James Moffatt. New York: Doran Co. $2.50.

In this volume the well-known translation by Moffatt has been combined with the authorized version of the New Testament, printed in parallel columns. This arrangement makes easy a comparison of the texts and will bring a new charm to the reading of the New Testament. A glance will show the differences and make possible a new insight into the meaning of the Book of books. Ministers and Bible students will find in it a relief from the laborious methods of turning to different books for comparison and others who ordinarily will not take such pains will be encouraged to make a more careful study of the Bible. There is an extended introduction by Dr. Moffatt which will provide the reader helps for an intelligent approach to the New Testament.

The Living Christ and the Four Gospels, by R. W. Dale, LL.D. New York: Doran.

Here are fourteen reasonable lectures that come quietly into the mind of the reader and clothe his soul afresh with a steady consciousness of faith in the truth of the Four Gospels. This is a companionable book in which the line of thought is not strained, is not violent, is not harsh —but falls like the dew. It is a book with a voice of inspiration and cheer. The argument begins with the fact that Christian character detects the voice of God speaking in the Gospels. It deals with the mighty influence of Christ operating through the Gospels upon the spirit of man. The trustworthiness of the story contained therein is set forth by the overlapping lives of the church fathers and the apostle John. The modern Christian is led into heart to heart conversation with Eusebius, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Irenæus, Tatian, Justin Martyr, Marcion, Papias and Polycarp, pupil and companion of St. John. We converse as we leave the plains of doubts and questionings. We come to the foothills and through the defiles and at last we stand upon the mountain top where the soul is alone with the Christ of the Four Gospels.

A Serviceable Book

WAS Ian Maclaren right when he wrote "The most critical and influential event in the religious work is the sermon"? Do you not often hear: "Dull as a sermon": "Prosy as a preacher": "He has the homiletic habit": "Whatever you do, don't preach"? Then surely when a man who has preached with the authority of simplicity and truth for thirty-three years writes a book on "The Art of Preaching," other preachers will read his book with profit.

Charles R. Brown, now of Yale Divinity School, is the man. In his recently published lectures on Lyman Beecher, he has rendered us fellow preachers a distinct service. His preface tells us that it has been thirty years since any other Beecher Foundation lecturer chose to speak on the technique of preaching. As I finished his book I thought he had done it so well no other man need choose that subject for the next thirty years. I finished reading, not with the dismay of one dazzled by the brilliancy of an impossible ideal but with the courage of a plain preacher inspired by an approachable example.

It is the preaching biography of one "whose fame is in all the churches" for homespun religious speech. His pages are as nourishing as cuts of roast beef. His tools as simple as those used by the Nazarene Carpenter. His ideals as attainable as a mountain top after a stiff climb. His suggestions as practical as the golden rule. His book will help most the plain preacher who is willing to work to learn to preach better. His saturation with Bible language; his balanced appraisal of the factors in good sermons; his experience and his advocacy of preaching without notes; his love for men rather than methods, these are some of the elements which make me urge my fellow pastors to read this serviceable book.

FRANKLIN W. SWEET.

The Most Wonderful Story, by Amy le Feuvre. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50.

This is an attempt "to describe our Lord's life in simple language," written, says the author, "as I should like to read it to children of three or four and upwards." Most young folks under twenty will find it charming and all who read it will find it profitable. It is "the old, old story" told with fidelity to the Gospels and with reverence and simplicity.

Japan in Transition, by Loretta L. Shaw. New York: Doran. $1.25.

In a sparkling little book of 125 pages the author has set forth a fund of the very latest information concerning present-day conditions in Japan. She shows in an attractive and vivid way the conflict between the old and the new ideals through which the country is passing. Miss Shaw went to Japan in 1894 and has worked in mid Japan and the Bishop Poole Girls' School in Osaka for many years. Her whole missionary career has been marked by unusual ability and success. She is able out of her own experiences and observation to trace the gradual and almost silent changes that have been going on in government and social life in that great country due to the influences of Christianity. She shows that Christ has a great future in Japan and that he alone will be able to bring the message of home life and purity most needed. The many converts to Christianity already are a living testimony of his power to change conditions of life. Miss Shaw has a most attractive style and sweeps the reader along with her. The book is fine as a reference work as well as for definite class study.

Sermons on the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons, for 1923, by the Monday Club. Boston: Pilgrim Press.

This is a volume of sermons written by the foremost Protestant ministers of our country dealing with the international Sunday-school topics for the coming year. Each sermon is a careful analysis of the lesson and an application of the same to the most vital needs of present day life. Both liberal and conservative viewpoints are recognized in the deep spiritual note that runs through them all and the great challenge that nearly every writer has put into his message. These sermons should be of special help to the teachers of adult classes who wish to supplement other helps with a wealth of material fresh from the minds of those who are endeavoring to solve the great spiritual problems of today. The fact that the Monday Club Sermons have been enthusiastically received for forty-seven consecutive years by the Bible students of our country is sufficient recommendation of its merits.

Religion and the Future Life, by E. Hershey Sneath, Ph.D., L.L.D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

This is a thorough-going study of the belief in a life after death in religion and philosophy. The editor has secured for the separate chapters contributions from the various university and seminary pro-

(Continued on page 94)

Church Invigorator Sims in Iowa

AT THE request of the pastors of Davenport Association and the Iowa State Convention, Rev. Earle D. Sims, church invigorator of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, visited De Witt, Iowa, last May. He found a big, brick, wrecked building in the heart of the business section of that prosperous town of 2500 people, which had been closed up for fifteen years and all work abandoned—the church disorganized. The De Witt church was organized in 1852 and the house of worship was erected in 1858. The building would seat between four and five hundred people. Over 800 people had been baptized into the fellowship of the church while it was working.

Mr. Sims at once opened his kit of tools and donned overalls and put a new roof on the building and commenced evangelistic meetings in the old building. The meetings continued for three weeks and frequently the great building would not hold the crowds desiring to attend. Making a call for the Baptists and also making a canvass of the town, Mr. Sims found over 100 people of the community who had Baptist blood in them. After the meetings Mr. Sims called the Baptists together and told them it would take $4000 to $5000 to make the old building fit for church work. Mr. Sims was told to go ahead with the job.

There followed months of hard labor in which the old building was entirely gone over. New windows were put in and a pastor's study, concrete baptistry, choir-room, class-room, and platform were built. The church was furnished with new plaster, paper, paint, varnish, carpets and seats. An entrance way was built and a basement made, equipped with ladies' room, men's room, children's room, kitchen, pantry, coal and wood room, large furnace, folding tables, dishes, chairs and so forth.

THE CHURCH AS MR. SIMS FOUND IT

AS HE LEFT IT

The materials, equipment and hired labor cost over $6000. Local Baptists gave liberally. Citizens who were not members of the church contributed $600. Churches in the association contributed $1500 while the churches over the state of Iowa sent checks. The Iowa State Convention backed the work, and saw it through.

"Opening service" was held Sunday, Nov. 5. The building was complete and one of the most modern, up-to-date and beautiful church buildings in Iowa. Mr. Sims then organized a ladies' missionary circle, and a Sunday school. A number of people were baptized in the new baptistry.

A second series of revival meetings was conducted by Mr. Sims and the meetings continued for three weeks. A Baptist church was reorganized with thirty-two charter members and others followed by baptism.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 17, a council recognized the church, and on Sunday morning, Dec. 10, Rev. G. P. Mitchell, superintendent of missions of the Iowa State Convention visited Mr. Sims and assisted him in dedicating the building clear of debt.

In gratitude for all the help received the church held a banquet to which were invited the pastors of the association. Resolutions of thanks were passed by the associational pastors and also by the church in appreciation of Mr. Sims' work. Rev. A. W. McCall, pastor-at-large in Iowa, will continue the work for three months before a permanent pastor is called, making it possible for Mr. Sims to take up work at Clear Lake, S. D.

The Youthful Washington

CONSIDER how Washington illustrated in his boyhood the words of the wise man: "Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth." At thirteen years of age the boy copied in a kind of journal over one hundred maxims, which cover a wide range of thought and conduct. Here are a few: "When you speak of God or his attributes, let it be seriously and with reverence"; "Let your recreations be manful, not sinful"; "Honor and obey your natural parents, although they be poor"; "Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience."

Have we not made Washington so much of a demigod that we are in danger of losing the strength and beauty imparted by his genuine human-heartedness? He was shot through and through with a certain boyish soundness. I think he was neither given to lying nor to absolute truth-telling. He was a sturdy, imaginative, aspiring, manly, godly youth. Is it not well to emphasize this aspect of Washington's career? For we are so prone to think of Washington, the general; Washington, the hero; and Washington, the statesman, that we are in danger of allowing Washington, the human, to pass into eclipse.

Just here that youthful diary casts a significant light. It simply discloses the fact that the youthful Washington was possessed of a normal religious healthfulness. His parents were godly people. Would it not have been strange had not George Washington, the boy, been inclined to remember his Creator in the days of his youth? Did we expect him to reverse a well-nigh irrevocable law? We know that parenthood fastens many a bane and many a blessing upon childhood. Some children are cursed before being born into the world; others are blessed before coming through the mysterious door of birth; and the cursers and the blessers are named fathers and mothers. What a terrible tragedy that human creators should become human degraders! Does it not give us pause to reflect that the years of our offspring are largely determined by ourselves? Augustine and Mary Washington rendered humanity and the centuries an immeasurable debt of service in giving to mankind a son whose inner being was pregnant with the seeds of true godliness. It is one of the greatly moving chapters in our human history that good parents have made vast contributions to humanity in the form of noble children. Many an obscure father and mother have been lifted to the heights of enduring and moral fame by the righteous children sprung from their loins.

I like to linger over this normal boy's thinking of the attributes of God, of honor toward his parents, of manful recreations, of laboring to keep alive in his breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience. Herein, certainly, is one of the abiding messages of Washington to every generation of all countries. It is this: The world's childhood must be clean if the world's adulthood is to be pure. Let us labor, therefore, to give the children of the race the right to be well-born. It is a work asking for large capacity and Christlike consecration. For in producing a well-born race of childhood we shall go far toward solving the pressing problems of manhood and womanhood. I am pleading, of course, for a theoretical truism; but, in heaven's name, let us not always leave it in the realm of mere theory. O fathers and mothers in all lands, sons and daughters of our own America, let us grow a universal league of Christian parenthood! Thus shall we solve many of our tremendous world-problems more adequately than our state houses and schools and churches can ever hope to solve them. George Washington, I have no doubt, remembered his Creator in the days of his youth because Augustine and Mary Washington remembered their Creator in the days of their child's conception.—From a sermon by Dr. Frederick C. Shannon.

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. John 14.2.

Seest thou that little river of death glistening in the sunlight? And across it dost thou see the pinnacles of the eternal city? Know, then, that if thou couldst fly across thou wouldst see written upon one of its many mansions, "This remaineth for such a one; prepared for him only." Poor doubting one, see the fair inheritance; it is thine!—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Open Forum

THE CITY AND THE DEVIL

Your editorial of Feb. 3, "Shall the Devil Get the City?" is interesting and illuminating. Baptists probably have done as well as any other denomination to furnish a negative reply. But we still have to admit two things: that we have not made good yet, on a broad scale, in the two biggest cities of America; and that our particular type of belief and plan of organization are not calculated to "put over" a winning program under metropolitan conditions of society such as you describe.

Under the masterly leadership of Dr. H. C. Gleiss, we of Detroit unitedly thank God and take courage. When tempted to boast, or to "point with pride," we think twice and stop. We know it is only a short step in time to the possibility of general sag or disintegration, and we most humbly pray and work, that we may maintain the trenches already captured. We also know that much ground in our own city has not been covered at all and that abnormal rate of growth forces us, as Dr. Lynn Harold Hough once put it, "to run fast to keep up with ourselves."

Speaking of municipal wickedness, as everybody likes to do, I feel we should remember that concentration of population offers, as you say, opportunities for great good as well as for great evil. Show me the average country town, if you want to prove how much evil can be turned up in a small place—I mean sins in individuals, plain smut.

Now, no great city need show more evil than good. Our difficulty has been that evil is more alert, better organized. It is based on selfishness—vice in a city is nothing but the ring of the dollar—while goodness is based on idealism: it is "everybody's business" and therefore . . . . . Spasms of virtue are the curse of the city.

Chicago, for example, never will be rid of its Tammany corruption till the so-called good citizens get together and organize in the civic field. Collapse of the Lundin-Thompson machine will mean simply the rise of another similar gang, unless something definite is done, in co-operation. I have known Chicago thirty years; lived there five years. I often spend time there. I am not shying bricks at anybody, but stating a few fundamental facts. In one way Chicago is too much organized, but your organizations need some central clearing house for ideas and action. In the civic area you are all split up.

The trouble with Christian people in the great cities is that they depend too much on sermons, denunciations and convulsions of reform; they look too much to the gospel ministers. They do not understand that Christianity, to be effective, must be applied in practical life. Community programs, based on experience, constructive in character, calculated to cover a five- or ten-year period, with adequate financing, are the only programs that can clean and keep clean the large city.

If only our people can keep up their distinctive spiritual tasks and also lend a hand, in the name of the Most High, when there are opportunities for making righteousness a real, permanent rule in the city, then we shall stop trying to dam Niagara at the brink of the falls. We shall begin to divert the noxious stream of municipal sins at its source, and in time, if patient, we shall dry it up.

WILLIAM P. LOVETT.

Detroit, Mich.

"The Lord Gave It to Me"

AN uneducated Indian village woman, perhaps fifty years of age, gave her heart to Christ and after doing so pledged her tithe to the support of the church. Her income was 1 rupee per week, or 33 1/3 cents, 4 rupees per month or $1.33. Every Sunday morning she brought her tithe to the church. One Sunday, in addition to her tithe, she put in two annas (4 cents) more. The missionary saw what she had done and asked her why, in all her poverty, after she had given her tenth she had given the two annas more. She looked up with a smile and explained that she had done a little extra work during the week and had received the two annas. She said God had given it to her and now she would give it back to him.

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZATION

How many of us have thought through the problem created by the organization in most of our cities of churches "for the foreigner"—places where we can "Americanize" him without mixing with him, where we can give him a church where he meets only the people of his own race and paid workers to represent America? I may be getting out of the sphere of a foreign missionary when I make suggestions about home mission work, but I cannot regard the numerous Russian, Polish, Italian, Chinese, and other Baptist churches organized along national lines with other than grave concern.

I am not ignorant of the practical difficulties that confront the attempts to Christianize and Americanize the heterogeneous mass of foreigners who live in our midst—or rather in whose midst we live. It is not easy to induce these European and Asiatic peoples, with their age-old prejudices, to mix with each other. Therefore we have tended to organize separate churches, where each nationality might hear the gospel in its own language and meet its own kind of people. I have no word of criticism for the faithful workers who are giving of their lives to build up these churches.

But has the church as a whole any right to delude itself with the belief that it is either Christianizing or Americanizing the foreigner by such means? We are so accustomed to delegating every task to a specialist that we forget that religion cannot be done thus by proxy. If we are to be Christians, there is but one way. We cannot pay a substitute to love the foreigners for us—we must do it ourselves, in person, or it will never be done. We cannot discharge our obligations by building neat little churches for the foreigner and saying: "Now go ahead and worship God in our way and be thou Americanized." It won't work. The task will never be adequately begun until we, in person, get acquainted with the foreigner and open our churches, and our homes as well, to him. Not American churches, Italian churches, German, Swedish, Russian and Czech churches, but one church, where all who love Jesus Christ may gather and prove themselves true disciples by their love for each other.

Impractical? Difficult? Yes. Christianity is always impractical and difficult. Therein is its glory. We must awaken to our situation or America will be but a memory. We have already lost much of our spirit of tolerance—our faith in men and in democracy. Unless we get busy and practice tolerance and democracy with all our might, they will soon be but faded memories of the "days when America was young."

Returning to America after five years, I find a new and discouraging attitude toward the foreigner. Five years ago we were content to call them "wops" and "hunkies" and like names. Today the common attitude of the "100 per cent American" is "If you don't like our ways, go back to the land you came from." We cannot solve the problem that way. We Christians must live our religion, and make it truly universal, opening our hearts, our homes and our houses of worship to the foreigners among us. We cannot pay any one else to do this work—it is our personal duty, as Christians and as citizens of a democracy.

The foreigner is here, and here to stay. It is for us to decide whether he will overwhelm us or whether democracy and the spirit of Jesus shall triumph.

DOUGLAS G. HARING.

New York City.

The Chimney Corner

"All's Right With the World"

By Margaret E. Sangster

"GOD'S in his heaven," sang the soprano, and the thrilling quality of her voice was like a high sweet bird note. "God's in his heaven—all's right with the world!"

In the very back of the church, where the seats were free, sat the girl. She sat there ever so quietly, with her shiny blue serge skirt gathered close about her. Her face was thin and pallid, and her lips were nearly white. But her great dark eyes were vivid enough to make up for the lack of color in the rest of her face. And as she listened to the voice of the soprano her soul shone, like a lighted lamp, through the brown of them.

"God's in his heaven." The arched ceiling of the church seemed to echo the words of the singer; "All's right with the world." The sunlight, shining through the impressive stained-glass windows, seemed to throw back the song. But the girl in the back of the church shivered suddenly, as if she were very cold, and her slim little hands clasped tight together in her shiny, blue serge lap.

The soprano sat down quietly behind the velvet curtain that screened the organ loft. The voice of the organ died away to a murmur. And the pastor, black-gowned, impressive, rose to his feet. All over the church people settled back into positions of greater comfort. And the sermon began.

All through that sermon ran a thread of hope and faith. All through the fabric of it one could sense the tint of courage. But when the sermon was over, when the benediction had been pronounced, one listener had not responded to the inspiration of it. The girl in one of the rear seats rose quietly, like a little gray mouse, and stole out of the church. And in her heart, over and over again, sounded the words of the soprano's solo.

"God's in his heaven!" rang the words, but "How can he be?" she questioned. "How can he be in his heaven—and allow the world to be so torn with unhappiness? How can he sit calmly up there, looking down on our sorrows and disappointments? Perhaps," the thought came to her with a grim whimsicality, "perhaps it's because heaven is so far away—perhaps that's why he thinks that all's right with the world! Perhaps that's why."

The street that the church stood upon was one of the most impressive streets of the most impressive city. With a feeling of distaste, almost, for the great buildings that stood all about her, with a sensation of nausea toward the rich gowns of the passing women, the girl turned abruptly into a side street, and walked as rapidly as she could, away from the church.

"They don't know," she told herself fiercely, and the "they" included the soprano, the pastor and the congregation that she had just left. "They don't know what it is to be hungry and discouraged and out of work! They don't know what it is to be alone in the world!" All at once her fierce young tone trembled.

There was a hurried step behind her, a very hurried step. A breathless voice called softly——

"Oh, miss, wait a moment. I've been tryin' to catch up——"

The girl turned quickly, almost aggressively. As she turned she winked back a mist that clouded her vision, a mist that might have been tears. But surprise was in her expression as she saw that the owner of the breathless voice was a strange woman—a little woman with white hair, and a kind face that was a fine network of wrinkles.

"Did you call me?" she questioned, a shade blankly.

The little woman had paused beside her. She spoke in a voice that was still faintly breathless.

"Yes," she answered, cheerily, "yes, I called. I was sittin' with you—in th' same pew, I mean, in church. An' when you went I saw that you'd left your purse, an' I just felt as I had to catch up with you—to return it." Her little wrinkled hand extended a flat bit of leather.

The girl laughed, and the sound of her laughter was not in the least mirthful.

"You were very kind," she told the little woman, "but you needn't have taken so much trouble. There wasn't anything in the purse." She laughed again. "There wasn't anything in the purse," she repeated, "But 'God's in his heaven,' just the same. And 'All's right with the world!'"

The woman looked at her sharply. But when she spoke her tone was pleasantly commonplace.

"I saw you takin' in that song," she said, and the enthusiasm in her voice was almost girlish. "The singers at that church are fine. It's a real treat any time to listen to 'em!"

The girl assented wearily.

"Yes, they sing well," she agreed, "but—after all—why shouldn't they? They're happy, and they have jobs, and full purses. They have families and friends, too. Why shouldn't they be happy?"

The woman seemed to be considering, for a moment. And then she spoke. "Lots of people," she told the girl, "who have all of those things aren't happy. Full purses and jobs aren't the only things. Of course," she sighed, "families and friends are more important. I know. I'm alone in the world myself!"

The girl felt suddenly drawn to the little woman. It hadn't occurred to her before that there were other lonely people in the world.

"Oh, I'm sorry!" she said softly.

The woman's wrinkled face had broken, all at once, into a smile of surpassing radiance.

"Don't you be sorry," she said, almost gaily. "I'm a happy person. I've got a room on the next street. An' I have th' cutest kitchenette you ever see. An' I have a canary bird that sings the same song that th' lady sang in church. Why," all at once she was faltering, "why don't you come home with me this noon? Sunday dinners are lonesome things alone!"

The girl was startled. It was quite evident even to the little old woman that she had had few offers of hospitality.

"Are you sure that you want me?" she questioned shyly.

The little old woman was laughing softly.

"We'll have hot biscuit," she said, "an' chicken. I got one on now stewin'. And I made cookies yesterday. Don't be silly, child—'course I want you!"

There in the sunlight of the side street, the girl stared at the old woman. And

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of The Baptist.

You Taught Me

By Mary Carolyn Davies

YOU taught me all I know of being glad,
And being loved, and smiling out at days,
Whatever they may bring. .Their friendly ways
Cannot deceive me now, nor their deceit
Dismay me, since you showed me how to greet
Joy and disaster. .That I never had Quite known before. Now you are gone away,
But these things with me stay:
Your courage, and your laughter, and austere
Grave joy in finding anything so dear,
In this so slanted world, as the holy ground
That we two, groping, found,
And that we stand on still; though you must be Shut from me by a sea beyond the sea.

—Good Housekeeping.

as she stared a tear trickled down the side of her nose, and another followed it. And another.

"Oh," she choked. "Oh—you don't know how you've made me feel! I—I didn't know where my next meal was coming from. I didn't think that any one cared whether I starved or not! But you do—you do!"

The little old woman had linked her arm into the girl's. Her voice was all sparkly with good nature.

"An' God does," she said gently, "don't forget him! What the lady sang, in church, was dead right. . . . . Say"—sudden excitement shone in her eyes, "my room's big, real big! You can stay with me, if you want to, till you get a job. It won't be so long before you get one! An' it'll be jolly to have a friend stayin' with me. . . ."

The girl's face was no longer colorless. Her cheeks were softly flushed, and her lips were warmly pink.

"All's right—with the world!" she murmured.

They walked off together, arm in arm.

—Christian Herald.

The Young Reserves

Things that Come Down the Street

THINGS that come down the street are great fun, aren't they? There is, for instance, the postman! Ours is named Mr. Baker, and, promptly at eleven o'clock every morning, he marches up our front steps, puts the mail in the vestibule and gives the doorbell a certain peculiar little ring that plainly says "Postman" to everybody in our house. We all wait around like hungry birds hoping there's going to be something special for each of us. There is! And here are some of the interesting things he has brought to me recently. (I think you may remember the name of Evelyn Ventres because she and her sister won prizes in our difficult Bible-title contest a year ago; just see what a splendid thing Evelyn is doing now:)

Rockport, Mass., 65 High St.,
Jan. 28, 1923.

Dear Miss Applegarth,

I am a junior endeavor assistant superintendent. I am a reader of Everyland, so I often read stories on missions from Everyland to the juniors. Two weeks ago I read them the story "As Easy As Rolling Off a Log." They were very much interested in having doubles. Eleven juniors would like one. Seven are girls and four are boys. We live in a small town on the seashore, so the children would probably prefer doubles in the city.

Evelyn Ventres.

(Doubles mean young foreign-born children to be "adopted" by American boys and girls who will write them letters and mail various little souvenirs to them. Can't you picture Evelyn's juniors mailing seashells to some little Italians, let us say, in Boston, who may never have seen the sea in all their lives?)

Kettle Falls, Wash., Box 9.

Dear Miss Applegarth:

I am sending you another poem. If I send too many you must let me know and I'll be good. I am sick in bed and wrote it while watching, through the window, the clouds roll back from the mountains.

I like drawing best, but it's nice drawing pictures with words, too.

I wish members of the club who like to draw and write poems would write to me. Your friend,

Lila Alborn.

Morning Mist

By Lila Alborn

The morning mist enveloping
Our path, we cannot see
For but a step, a tiny way,
Beyond, uncertainty.

Through changing, misty curtains
A passing glimpse we see
Of distant rose-tipped mountains
Our travel's end to be.

The rising sun dispelling
The clouds, we catch a ray
Of golden, conquering sunlight,
And brighter grows the way.

And see, the curtain's lifted,
Our goal is reached at last,
We see the mountains clear and fair
Uncertainty is passed.

And thus upon life's journey
Our narrow paths we climb,
We cannot see what waits us
Beyond the mist of time.

Through rended veil we sometimes,
Catch a glimpse of glory bright,
Reflections of that distant land
Of everlasting light.

Then Gertrude Bloede of Adell, Wis., sends us these two poems written by her eight-year-old sister:

Winter

It's nice to sit in the fire's glow
While outside the storm winds blow;
And know you need not outside go
In the frost and ice and snow.

Winter

The days are short and the weather is cold,
But the children are happy at play;
The cattle in barns, the sheep in their fold,
While the birdies are happy and gay.

Everything which comes down the street is not brought by the postman, however, for surely you remember the Boy-On-Our-Street who has already given us two splendid chapters of adventure in India. This morning he rang the doorbell and brought us chapter III, just in time to go on this page:

Exploits of Little Miss Missionary

By "Bud"

Chapter III.

The sun was way up in the sky when Little Miss Missionary awoke next morning, because you see riding in a bullock cart isn't very comfortable and it tires out inexperienced people terribly.

All at once as Little Miss Missionary was sitting there eating her breakfast she heard a loud wailing, she ran out of her hut and asked one of the men what was the matter. "Ah, Mem Sahib," said he, "Singh Pah, the richest man in the village has just died and these are his relatives mourning."

Little Miss Missionary knew that she couldn't do anything now and that she could not save the little child-wife from her terrible fate. She wondered what it would be like if this had happened in America and if one of the little white girls she knew had been the wife. While she was thinking there, a little brown Indian girl came out of the house crying bitterly. It took but one glance to show any one that she was the little widow. Her only garment was a plain white sari wrapped all around her in a disorderly fashion. Her beautiful black hair had been shaved off and she wore no jewels except a brass anklet. Little Miss Missionary spoke to her asking if she could do anything for her. She replied: "If you could only give me a little rice, and like me just a teeny bit. It seems days since my husband died but it is only a little while. They have taken all my beautiful jewels and my nice colored sari."

Little Miss Missionary replied: "How would you like to help me take care of the house and clean it while I am teaching school?" The little girl was delighted and she placed her hand on Miss Missionary's hand and said: "Mem Sahib, are you a god that has come from heaven?"

"No, Manoramma," for that was the little widow's name, "I am not a god but I have come here to teach you and all the people like you about a God who made heaven and earth, and who loves all people no matter how sinful they are."

"And does he love little widows like me?"

"Yes, Manoramma, every one in the whole world."

And then they went into the hut, the little widow's hand placed confidently in Little Miss Missionary's.

Rochester, N. Y.

Are You Collecting Foreign Postage Stamps?

If so, I have some to share with you, for my mail has recently brought me a number of stamps from India, China, Japan, Panama, Cuba, Egypt, France, Germany and Canada. Write and tell me which country you prefer, and enclose an envelope addressed to yourself with a two-cent stamp in the corner!—Margaret T. Applegarth.

---

Carleton W. Atwater, a member of the board of managers of the B. Y. P. U. of America, was the speaker for the rally of the Huntington (W. Va.) City B. Y. P. U. Mr. Clarence Taylor was elected advisor; A. G. Beckett, president and Miss Kathleen LeMaster, secretary.

Young People's Work

Topic for March 4

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS

(3) The Refuge Psalm. Ps. 91:1-16.

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

This psalm opens with a condition. In this it is like practically all, if not all, the promises of the New Testament. The man or woman who would secure the greatest good from the Christian life must meet the conditions. In this there is no injustice. If there is failure on the part of the individual to meet the conditions of the higher spiritual values, then that individual must be satisfied with lesser values.

Psalm 91 is known as the "Refuge Psalm" because it portrays the security of the one who meets the condition and the exaltation of those who put their trust in the Lord.

1. Retrospective. A great deal of the Christianity of the past generations has considered this world a rather bad place in which to live; that the great hope of the believer centered upon some day being delivered from this old sin-cursed world, into the glory beyond. Testimony after testimony have I heard along that line. And yet when there was the slightest possibility or prospect that the believer would have the opportunity to claim his home in heaven, the family physician was called in, with the hope that health might be restored.

2. The eternal now. We know that we have one life to live, and that we must live that life with folks. All sorts of conditions will have to be met and all kinds of adjustments made. Certainly the good God has placed us in this world for a purpose. We believe this to be true, even though we often question just what purpose could have been in mind when some folks we know were placed in the world. If, through Christ, salvation has come to young folks, some high and noble purpose was involved in that transaction. What a comforting hope is that of immortality, but the life beyond we can leave confidently in the hands of the God who gave to us life. Young people need now to get into the game of making this world a better place in which to live—a place in which their fellows may come into the full stature of a man, unhampered by the vices and injustices of the day. This naturally calls for the winning of those fellows to the standards of Jesus.

3. A trysting place. Even though we do our best, we will be misunderstood; our faults will overtake us and we will have our times of discouragement and despair. Then, in some quiet place, we find that refuge—the trysting place of the human spirit. We come away from that place refreshed and inspired, and with the feeling that there is One who understands. Like a little child to his earthly father, we have told him our troubles. He forgives, blesses and sends us back to our old tasks with a new faith and a new hope, and a determination to win.

"I will say of the Lord, he is my refuge and my fortress; my God, in him will I trust."

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

B. Y. P. U. European Extension Fund

The numerous requests from Baptist groups in Europe for information about our young people's work and for our help and cooperation indicate a growing Baptist world consciousness and a desire for a larger fellowship on the part of our brethren across the sea. They indicate, also, an unparalleled opportunity for service for our organization. After inspiring consideration, our board of managers unanimously voted to lend the support of our organization in encouraging and counselling young people's work in the countries that have already requested cooperation with us, to raise a of at least $2,000, which action has been approved by the administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion. A committee consisting of Messrs. Herbert Hines of Illinois, John R. Glading of Michigan, and G. Ford Porter of Indiana, was appointed to raise this fund by a special appeal to the local B. Y. P. U.'s and by private subscription. The committee desires all locals to take, for this purpose, a special collection equal to about 10 cents per active member and send it to

"B. Y. P. U. European Extension Fund"

Rev. Herbert Hines,
Kankakee, Illinois

Acknowledgment of all subscriptions will be made in the order received on the Young People's Page of "The Baptist." Will your society be among the first to make this small contribution for B. Y. P. U. missionary work? Send cash now or pledge payable on or before May 1, 1923. DO IT NOW as the time is short.

Detroit Baptist Bible Schools

1. We had a total enrolment of more than 12,000.

2. We had an average attendance of 9,000 to 10,000.

3. More than 33 per cent of those who joined our churches came from the Bible schools.

4. Two-thirds of our schools held teachers' and officers' meetings regularly.

We have adopted an educational standard for 1923, which suggests a minimum of attainment:

1. Teacher training—A class in every church.

2. Evangelism—Two decision days and pastor's instruction classes.

3. Missions—Study classes in every church.

4. Mid-week service—A school of missions or other educational work in addition to the prayer service.

5. Church vacation schools—"Every church officially interested in a daily vacation Bible school."

6. Expositions—An annual display of the work done by all departments and organizations of the church.

We believe that our Baptist educational program can be better correlated and be made of greater force when a larger number of people are vitally interested in its plans and management.

We have, therefore, organized a new body known as the educational commission. This body is composed of the superintendent and one elected representative from each church. Meetings will be held two or three times each year.

Detroit Baptist Church Vacation Schools

We had twenty-five schools—eighteen white, seven colored.

We had an enrolment of 2,841.

We had a daily attendance of 1,287.

We had as high as fourteen nationalities in one school.

Our watchword for Detroit schools is "bigger and better." We had thirty-two registrations in the bigger and better Bible schools campaign and we expect to live up to our agreement with the Publication Society.

Pennsylvania

Mr. A. G. Charles, 715 Columbia Ave., Lancaster, Pa., has been appointed as transportation manager for Pennsylvania.

---

MARYLAND has a Junior and Intermediate Leaders' Association. The purpose of this association is: 1. To promote the interest of local junior and intermediate unions by means of conference of leaders. 2. To develop new leaders. 3. To provide an agency whereby juniors and intermediates will be brought together in city-wide gatherings. 4. To foster extension work. Meetings are held monthly.

Religious Education

International Sunday School Lesson for March 4

JESUS TEACHING IN THE TEMPLE

Lesson: Luke 20:19-26; 21:1-4. Golden Text: Luke 20:25.

Introductory

This is the last week of Jesus before the crucifixion. Today's lesson follows by two days his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. The place is the temple at Jerusalem.

The Lesson

The parable of the husbandmen which Jesus had related (Luke 20:9-18) in which they "perceived that he spake against them," roused the anger of the scribes and the chief priests, especially the words: "He will destroy these husbandmen and will give the vineyard unto others." They wished at once to lay hands on Jesus, but "they feared the people." It was wiser for them to keep in the background, so they hired spies to watch Jesus, pretending themselves to be righteous so "that they might take hold of his speech so as to deliver him up to the rule and to the authority of the governor." They sought to bring him before Pilate as a man who should be condemned to die. So they asked: "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar or not?" By this question they thought they would catch Jesus whichever way he answered. If he said, "Yes" the people would be wrathful, for most of them resented the tribute which was a symbol of their subjection. If he said, "No," then indeed would there be excuse for bringing him before Pilate. But Jesus understood full well the intent of that question and asked for one of the current coins of the realm. "Whose image and superscription hath it?" he asked. "Cæsar's," they replied. Jesus answered, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's"—for the coin bearing the imprint of the ruler's face bore its unmistakable message. But Jesus did not stop with the tribute due the earthly ruler. He added, "and unto God the things that are God's." The words had in no way committed Jesus, so that the people could turn against him or so that he could be led before Pilate as an insubordinate.

The second part of the lesson is given to the widow's gift. The rich men were casting in their gifts, carelessly, generously for the most part, for the gifts meant no self-denial to them. Then Jesus saw (as he never failed to see the ailing, the needy, the poor) a certain poor widow casting in her two mites—not carelessly, for it was her very living she was giving. And Jesus said, "This poor widow cast in more than they all."

To Be Remembered

1. The Christian above all persons owes a duty to his country. 2. The man who is truly serving God cannot shut his eyes to the needs of his country. 3. "Giving her living"—if the widow's example were followed where would denominational debts be? 4. The very idea of the power and right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."—George Washington.

A Religious Education Campaign

In view of the fact that many boys and girls and young people were becoming members of the church and that many fathers and mothers and other adults were also joining, a special meeting of the advisory board had been called at the pastor's home for the purpose of discussing what adjustment could be made in the church life and activity because of the coming of these new members, the pastor gave the story of the campaign from the time of the first meeting of the church officers. Then he said:

"Whenever a baby comes into our homes we must make an adjustment of our home life so as to provide for the proper training of that new life. We do not ask the child to make all the adjustments. We cannot run our home after the babies come as we did before they came; nor as we will after the babies are grown up and have gone into homes of their own. We cannot come and go as freely as we did. We cannot spend all our income upon food, clothes and pleasures. The house does get cluttered up with toys and muddy from playing children. Furniture gets marred, dishes broken, and the wallpaper shows fingerprints of little children. We cannot manage our homes after the children get to be noisy juniors as we did when they were babies, when we could put them to bed and they would stay there until we took them up; nor can we have everything our own way when these children enter high school and have ideas of their own as to the management of the house. As parents of growing children we must constantly adjust our home life to the changing needs of our children. In the same way we must not run our churches simply from the adult point of view. We must constantly study the needs of our boys and girls and young people and make such changes as will help our boys and girls and young people to grow up with Christian habits, attitudes of mind, and a love for the church.

"There are four things which, as a church, we ought to do at this time: 1. The new members of our church should know that they are wanted. 2. They should come first. The baby in the home comes first. Can we do less for our new-born Christians? 3. There must be a loving atmosphere in our church. Children thrive best under love. 4. There must be a warm, genuine, spiritual life among us.

"As your pastor I am going to give much more attention to the youth of our church. I am going to be their pastor and adjust my program so as to include them. This is especially true of my preaching. I have been trained to preach to mature minds. Our services of worship have been formed with only adults in mind. This is wrong. Our services of worship should be for the whole family.

"For a long time we have taught our boys and girls to go to Sunday school but not to worship. Now there is something which comes into our lives when the whole family of God unites in a service of common worship that cannot come in any other way. Our young people need this spiritual uplift. I have been thinking of our morning service. It has little to interest our boys and girls because it is entirely for the adult mind. I believe this should be changed, that children and young people should have a part in the worship and that my own message should include them . . . . The junior age is the great habit-forming period of life. Our children over nine years old should be forming the habit of regular church attendance. It is absurd to bring up our children outside of the worship service and then expect them by some strange power to acquire habits of church attendance after their main habits of life have been set and after they have acquired the habit of staying away.

"It will take some time to work this out. The children will do exactly that which we expect them to do and that which they see the adults doing. The question of reverence and order on the part of the children is almost a wholly adult attitude. Let us set the proper example. Children can sit with parents or with Sunday-school teachers in the front of the church, never on the back seats or in the gallery. Some of the older members of the church should sit with them. Be patient with this experiment. Believe in this and stand by me in this important part of our church work.

"The excuse which is so often given for children staying away from the service of worship, namely, that the service is too long for them, is an adult excuse and never originated in the mind of a child. No child would ever think the two and one-half hours of the service of Sunday school and church too long if he had not heard some adults make it. The children are in the habit of a three-hour service in public school. We need, of course, to get the cooperation of the parents in this service. I am planning to write a personal letter to each parent, and just as rapidly as possible, I am planning to call upon the parents and explain our plans and secure cooperation."—From "Evangelism of Youth," by Albert H. Gage, published by the Judson Press.

Our Own Folks

Refugees from Russia in Germany

By F. W. Simoleit

The great camp for the Russians (Rueckwandererlager) on the Lechfeld is still over crowded. More than 250 Baptist and Baptist Mennonite families are there. We made an agreement with the Bavarian government that these families should be housed in a special section of the Lechfeld camp in barracks. In cooperation with the Red Cross we provide for the families. Provision is made in the following manner: We are having the vast plain, formerly used for the training of troops, plowed and tilled by five tractors and have already this year had somewhat of a harvest. Most of the men are occupied in this farm work. They earn in this way their bread and can earn a large portion of the keep of their families. When the whole of the enormous field will be under cultivation, which will take several years, we shall try to make possible the division of it into small settlements.

A group of families who could not come into consideration for farm work we took to Gronau, near the Dutch frontier, where they found occupation in a large cloth mill, which pays them well and they are provided for. We used considerable means in helping them to establish their modest households, built for them a barrack as a meeting-place and in other ways cared for them in every possible way. The expenditure for this was rather high.

Since on the Lechfeld there also are many widows with children, and girls who have no relatives, who cannot well be used for farm work, we established a home industry by ordering twelve large machines driven by electricity, and by appointing an expert to train women and girls in making underlinen and gowns, we have given these occupation also. This department was only completely established last month, and naturally, as can be seen from the accounts, considerable sums have been used for it. The investment of money in objects of material value is the most productive in Germany from a business point of view, and we have done everything humanly possible in this direction.

Besides this we are making plans as to how we can arrange an industry for old men and old women, who can be given occupation neither in agricultural nor home industry. I hope to be able during next week to complete the transaction of buying a large piece of ground on the Lech upon which willow trees are growing, so as to begin this industry of basket making.

So we are well on the way to secure for the various classes of these poor refugees occupation and livelihood. It will be undoubtedly to the merit of the Baptist alliance and of its commissioner to have undertaken this truly great work.

From information received I learn that in the twenty-two other refugee camps (Rueckwandererlager) which are to be found here and there in our country, there still are many Baptists who know but little about us and are leading miserable lives in loneliness and shy anxiety. We have, therefore, temporarily, engaged a pastor, for whom his church is no longer able to provide, so that he may visit these camps in order to look up Baptists and Mennonites and other Christians, and try first of all to bring them into membership with the churches nearby, and besides that recommend to us families suitable for transference to the Lechfeld.

In the name of the Lechfeld community, we thank the American and British Baptists very heartily for their magnanimous readiness to meet the need, and we wish all who have made sacrifices for this cause the gracious blessing of our heavenly Father.

The Assam Mission Conference

By Cecil G. Fielder

The annual conference of the Assam Mission, held at Golaghat, Dec. 6-14, will stand as one of the best in the mission's history. It was permeated by a fine spirit of brotherliness and blessed by the mellowing presence of several of the oldest missionaries. The feeling was widespread that all actions were taken with an eye only to the best interests of the work as a whole.

The reports from the fields showed that in point of interest in the gospel and conversions the past year has been one of the very best. The school reports also were excellent, and the solid progress being made at the Jorhat Christian schools drew forth a rising vote of appreciation and confidence.

Among the more important actions taken was the appointment of a committee to study in detail the method of transition from mission control to the independence and responsibility of the Indian church in our field, which committee is so to arrange the program for next year's conference as to bring out all phases of this subject. Plans were made for the establishment of funds to aid Christian girls and boys to obtain education of secondary or higher grade. The mission also determined upon a policy of concentration, by which we should try to staff as adequately as possible the territory long considered particularly ours before entering new fields. This entailed retrenchment in the plans which had been made on a basis of a successful outcome of the New World Movement, and led to a vote to abandon the Goalpara North Bank field as a residential district. This released Rev. and Mrs. A. C. Bowers for work further up the valley, and they were designated to Sibsagor.

It was voted to investigate the possibility of the establishment, jointly with the Bengal-Orissa Mission, of a treasury and business office in Calcutta, to be opened, if found feasible, for the beginning of the next fiscal year. The reference committee was also authorized to act with power in instituting a uniform accounting system throughout the mission.

Plans were laid for the establishment of rest-houses at Darjeeling and Shillong, and personal funds were subscribed to an amount of more than 2500 rupees for securing an option on land at Shillong.

Not least among the signs of progress in the conference was the evident interest in language work. The reports showed that a large number of the newer missionaries had passed their first examinations, the requirements were carefully reviewed and modified; and the rule regarding the relationship of language preparation to the power to vote in conference was given thorough consideration.

The conference was honored by a short visit from his excellency, Sir John Kerr, the new governor of Assam, who spoke appreciatively of some of our work that he had seen, and expressed the desire for closer acquaintanceship and cooperation in the future.

The above are but a few of the actions taken looking toward a better carrying forward of the Lord's work in Assam, and on the basis of what was done at Golaghat there is every justification for looking forward to the year 1923 as the best that Assam will have yet seen. Join with ours your prayers that it may be so.

Gauhati.

Sabbath Snow

By Eunice P. Wood

I AM watching the blessed Sabbath snow,
Fluttering, flying, above and below!
It is shutting me in with its comforting whiteness;
It is quieting me with its feathery lightness:
The wind moves it on with no moaning or shrillness,
So it comforts my soul with its marvelous stillness,
It is weaving a blanket to cover the roses:
And each mound in the garden its roundness discloses.
The trees stand in grace with their beautiful sweep,
Where close at their roots are spring beauties asleep:
It is shutting me in with rich memories of bloom,
And of nature's great heart to this little white room.
I've come back to its shelter with gratitude glowing,
To hearts that their tenderness always are showing:
To the home that embraces us kindly and sweetly,
And gives us the family feeling completely.

(Mrs. Wood is in the Baptist Old People's Home at Maywood, Ill.)

Our English Letter

By W. T. Whitley

At the missionary conference in Edinburgh thirteen years ago, great gain was had from the reports of several commissions which had been carefully studying one problem apiece.

One relates to elementary education. In England as in America, this was begun under religious auspices; two great societies vied with each other in promoting schools, the one non-sectarian, the other Anglican. There was also a third, devoting itself to Sunday schools which have long since specialized and no longer give ordinary elementary education. But the societies and the churches which also worked direct, could not do enough; fifty years ago the state had to supplement with other schools, and today these deal with more than half the children. The non-sectarian society fell much to the rear, and today the salient facts are that there are two great sets of schools—one largely under Anglican control, the other under public control. Besides these there are Jewish, Catholic and a few Methodists. To that extent the English conditions are not unlike American, and we well know the steady campaign you wage to uphold Baptist schools. But there is one feature here which gravely troubles us and may seem all but incredible to you; all the running expenses of both our sets of schools are paid by the public. For twenty years the Anglicans have had only to maintain their buildings, and for that trifle of expense they have the sole right to appoint all their head-teachers, the practical power of appointing all their assistants and the right to give their sectarian teaching to all comers. In rural districts they have all but a monopoly. Against this system we behaved as we too often have done—declared we would not submit, yet did submit from the first moment. Yet, curiously, it is now agreed that the dual system cannot go on much longer.

One reason is that the Anglicans will not even find the money to keep their premises in repair, so that their leaders see some fresh arrangement must be made. A second reason is that the teachers have formed a vast trade union, and are in a position to make their voice most effective. They find that any one who gets into Anglican schools has great difficulty in getting out again, so is likely to work under clerical influence, with poor buildings and few scholars for the rest of his life. Fewer and fewer teachers even profess to be trained so that they can teach Anglican doctrines. The third reason is that the county councils are restive about paying for schools whose premises are inadequate, and which they do not fully control. Therefore, for months past there have been conferences to see if a bill can be prepared with the consent of most interested parties—no one expects the Catholics to agree—and presented to parliament. At the end of the year it became evident that the Anglican leaders were asking what the teachers and the councils would not agree to; and a statement has been made through the Times. What the next step will be, is very doubtful. It is not likely that any new law will pass which is opposed by teachers and councils and all non-Anglicans, though it might be promoted by Anglicans and Catholics. It is clear that the rank and file of the Anglicans have no idea what giving means; they will not support the training of their ministers, much less will they raise millions to put their school premises into proper order. It may be that one set of trustees after another will lose heart and surrender, so that the Anglican schools will crumble rapidly away. But some great change must take place in a year or two. And there is no real demand for Godless schools such as some of your western states seem forced to administer.

Within our own circle, a number of questions have arisen as to the ministry of the word. This month a score of men have been giving very close and serious attention to the whole matter, and brought up to the Baptist Union Council an elaborate report. In the very forefront is the cardinal Baptist doctrine that all believers are priests and that the ministry is not a sacerdotal order. A capital illustration of that is in the fact that the head of our oldest seminary is not a minister, but an experienced school worker; he with five other laymen had been on the commission which reported. Proposals were brought forward which involve, and to some extent state, a positive doctrine as to the ministry, and these are among the matters yet to be discussed. There are also some proposals which must be scanned from the legal side because of trust deeds, and these hardly raise principles such as could interest you; but much was agreed upon for action next April. For instance, a new committee will probably be appointed, the duty of which will be to arouse the attention of the denomination to the importance of encouraging young men to offer for the ministry, and of adequately training them. The necessity for this is clear in that not half our ministers have been through a seminary, and the opportunities of study for the others have been meagre. Moreover, during the war, as the seminaries were closed, matters grew worse in this respect. The facts are in the future to be put regularly before the denomination so as to arouse a conscience. And plans will be prepared to fit men for the seminary and to aid them after they leave, both with books and with courses of study. Similar attention is being given to the needs of the lay preachers, since there are 900 places entirely dependent upon their services.

Stockholm is receiving increasing attention, and half the accommodations on the British steamer are already allotted. We look forward to meeting old friends from America, and to making new.

The proposed remodeled building of the First Church, Whitehall, Illinois, Rev. L. E. Ellison, pastor. The new addition extends over thirty feet to the south (left side of picture), and nearly the whole length of the old building east and west. When the work is completed, which will be about May 1, there will be an adequate plant for all needs, and a large auditorium, together with Sunday-school class-rooms and balcony. The seating capacity will be about 500. The cost will be around $18,000.

Dr. Geistweit Called to Dayton First Church

Dr. W. H. Geistweit, pastor for six years at the Third Baptist Church, St. Louis, tendered his resignation Feb. 4, to accept a call from the First Baptist Church of Dayton, Ohio, where he will take up the work on Feb. 28.

During the six years of Dr. Geistweit's St. Louis pastorate the Third Church has grown from an average attendance of between 600 and 700 to an average attendance of 1068; the support has been doubled and increased 100 per cent per capita, the church building has been transformed and a great memorial organ installed, the educational efficiency of the Sunday school increased, and in every department the church work has been greatly strengthened. The spiritual development of the church has been as marked as the material.

The church to which Dr. Geistweit is going is one of the old Baptist churches in Ohio. It has a large membership, including a number of men of wealth, whose generosity is indicated by the fact that last year the Dayton church's contribution to missions was $60,000. Trustees of the neighboring Denison University are members of this church. In the proposition made to Dr. Geistweit, the Dayton church committee made it clear that "no program would be too large" which he might wish to carry out for the church's advancement. This offer came after the committee had visited the Third Baptist Church and inspected all its workings.

Dr. J. S. Kirtley, a former St. Louis pastor, will act as pastor for a month or two, after Dr. Geistweit's departure. Dr. Kirtley performed a similar service six years ago for the Baptist church at San Diego, after Dr. Geistweit resigned that pulpit to go to St. Louis.

Dr. Geistweit is a leader in the religious life of St. Louis. His counsels in the Church Federation have been regarded as of great value, and he has been president of the Ministerial Alliance. He is one of the Executive Board of the Northern Baptist Convention. Mrs. Geistweit also holds a place on one of the boards.

Seasons of the Soul

The First Church of Galesburg has just had a large ingathering. Recently the pastor extended the hand of fellowship to nearly sixty adults and children, most of whom were received by baptism. Others have since been received and baptized.

Some time previous, arrangements were made to carry out a personal work campaign along the lines indicated in Albert Gage's new book "The Evangelism of Youth." For ten weeks the pastor met an earnest group in a personal work class. The objective was never lost sight of and the interest grew week by week. Teachers sought their scholars; scholars sought their friends. The work of evangelism was done by the workers themselves.

The second Sunday in December was decision day in all services. Mr. Gage was present and made the appeal. At the first invitation forty-six came forward and later many of them went before the deacons for examination and instruction. In some cases whole families came, mother and father coming with the children. Forty-five were baptized on Christmas Sunday, a beautiful candle baptismal service being held in the evening. Ten others have since been received. Of the thirty others who have made decisions, many more will be received. The church exercises great care with both adult and child candidates for membership. In the matter of instruction it appears very clear that in many cases the instruction is more needed by the parent than the child.

In spite of the inclement weather on New Year's Sunday the church was filled. With the hand of fellowship each new member received a letter from the church, a church manual, a baptismal certificate, and a packet of duplex envelopes. The pastor then explained the purposes of the Easter Club, of which those receiving the hand of fellowship are the charter members. Every member of the club is pledged to do four things:

1. Read the Bible daily.
2. Pray regularly every day.
3. Contribute proportionately to the church and missions.
4. Attend the church services.

Reports are to be made at an Easter breakfast. Meantime the club will interest itself in a quiet campaign of personal work for others who are yet to be reached and brought into the Christian life.

The new book by Mr. Gage carries to our churches some much needed words. It is plain and straightforward. It leaves no doubt about message or method. It should become in a great many churches the basis of an earnest study class as we move toward the Easter season. The Galesburg church has had another revelation of the moving Spirit of God as he works in the hearts of the youth committed to its care.

Stewardship month is being observed during January, and the denominational interests are being given thorough treatment. A good response is being made, literature is being distributed, and a campaign for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and Missions is being carried on with results coming in.

YOUR PRINCIPAL IS SAFE
YOUR INCOME IS SURE

An annuity agreement represents a gift made to the Foreign Mission Society in return for which the Society covenants to pay to the donor an annual income during the life of the annuitant. After death the net principal is used for the work of the Society.

Your principal is thus safe and is applied toward a noble purpose; your income is sure as long as you live.

Rates of income range from 4 per cent to 9 per cent for single lives and from 4 per cent to 8.3 per cent on agreements covering two lives.

This form of gift constitutes a financial investment in a spiritual enterprise to which our Lord gave his life, and enables the donor to furnish substantial support to the work of the Society and at the same time, in view of financial needs, receive an income on the investment as long as the donor lives.

For information write to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. All communications will be treated sacredly confidential.

AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

In all legal documents such as wills, etc., it is important that the full corporate name of the Society should be used.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

THE MID-WINTER RALLY of the New England District of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society was held in Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple, Boston, Jan. 25. The attendance was about 500. Mrs. E. C. Herrick of Fall River, president of the home mission society, presided in the morning, and Mrs. F. L. Anderson of Newton Center, vice-president of the foreign society, presided in the afternoon. The addresses were by Mrs. George W. Coleman, Rev. Hugh A. Heath, Rev. Arthur T. Fowler, and Mrs. Nathan R. Wood.

THE FIRST HIGHLAND CHURCH OF Springfield, has unanimously called Mr. Frank Benjamin Fagerburg of the senior class of the Newton Theological Seminary. Mr. Fagerburg is a graduate of the Illinois Wesleyan University in the class of 1920. He has had some experience in pastoral work, and gives the impression of maturity and power.

PROF. H. AUGUSTINE SMITH, of Boston University, is a pioneer in the field of a new evangelism. His theory is that the fine arts of religion and worship are a real evangelizing agency. The fine arts are congregational singing and hymns; choirs and special music; worship and ritual; pageantry; visualization. Professor Smith recently directed Kansas City's great civic celebration of Christmas. His most recent engagement is the call to set up a "fine arts program" for the International Christian Endeavor Society at Des Moines, in July. His summer ministry is six weeks' intensive teaching at the Chautauqua assembly, Chautauqua, N. Y., July 9-Aug. 18, in music, worship, hymnody, pageantry and visualization. The board of deacons of the First Church, Melrose, have engaged Professor Smith for a month of Sunday evening evangelistic services—Feb. 11, 18, 25 and March 4. In these services Professor Smith will make use of the fine arts. On the closing night there will be a pageant written and directed by Professor Smith himself, "The Commonwealth of God."

NEW JERSEY

AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE WHITE and Negro pastors of the Hudson, N. J., Baptist Association was held in the Salem Church, Jersey City (Negro), Feb. 1. The meeting was called by Pastor C. H. Rannels, president of the Hudson Association, for the purpose of discussing ways of promoting a closer cooperation between the white and Negro pastors of the association. Addresses were made by Rev. T. W. White, Negro, Rev. A. H. Stanton, white, and Rev. J. P. Jones, Negro. The white Baptists pledged themselves to continue to assist the Negro brethren in every way possible. The Negro pastors declared that the Negroes were not looking for social equality with the whites, but were only seeking a fair opportunity to earn their living as American citizens. The white pastors will visit the Negro churches more frequently and preach for them on special occasions.

FIRST CHURCH BAYONNE, C. H. Rannels. The work continues to prosper. Two were baptized during January and seven received the hand of fellowship at the February communion service.

DR. AND MRS. JOSEPH C. HAZEN came to Orange the first week in January, from Peoria, Ill., where Dr. Hazen had been pastor for seven years. The reception given them last Monday evening was largely attended by members of the church and community. Words of welcome were spoken by Mr. Sidney M. Colgate, chairman of the evening. Greetings and welcome were also spoken by Rev. R. M. Travor of East Orange, Rev. J. F. Patterson, of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. D. F. Diefendorf of the Methodist Church, and Dr. P. C. Wright of the ministers and missionaries benefit board. A fitting response was made at the close by Dr. Hazen. The Bible-school orchestra of the church entertained during the evening. Dr. Hazen has been greeted during the Sundays of January with large congregations in spite of the inclement weather. He and Mrs.

Hazen are settled in the new parsonage recently purchased by the church. Dr. Hazen is a member of the Executive Committee of The Northern Baptist Convention and is interestedly aligned with all the denominational efforts.

CONNECTICUT

THE BAPTISTS OF HARTFORD, and vicinity, had the pleasure of hearing Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, on Jan. 30, in the Asylum Avenue Church, when he spoke on, "An American in Czecho-Slovakia." Dr. Taylor made a profound impression upon his hearers, as he depicted conditions in the new republic, observed by himself and Dr. Carter Helm Jones in their tour of last summer as representatives of the A. B. F. M. Soc. His message will undoubtedly stimulate Hartford Baptists to greater devotion in the interests of the whole denominational task, as it relates itself to the work of the brethren in Europe.

MISS LINNIE HOLBROOK, OF ASSAM, was the missionary speaker at the woman's continuation campaign meetings in Putnam, Willimantic and Waterbury, Jan. 18-19.

MR. C. E. CHANEY OF BURMA, was the missionary speaker at woman's continuation campaign associational meetings in Norwich, New London, New Haven and Bridgeport, Feb. 6-9.

PLANS ARE IN THE PROCESS of formulation for missionary meetings in the New London and Stonington Union Associations, between February 11-25, with a view to reaching all the churches and stimulating interest in the New World Movement. A program has also been worked out for the New Haven Association, calling for meetings at New Haven, Deep River, Meriden and Waterbury, Feb. 27-March 2.

NEW YORK

WITH THE HELP OF A FORMER PASTOR, Rev. G. P. Beers of Park Memorial Church, Springfield, Mass., Calvary Church, Utica, Rev. F. L. Anderson, pastor, has closed a helpful evangelistic meeting. More than thirty decisions for Christ and for church membership came as a result of the work. About ten adults will at once unite with the church by baptism and experience. A class of twenty-five from the Sunday school will be formed, the pastor instructing them in church membership, leading up to a baptismal service at Easter. A splendid work is being done for the boys and girls in spite of lack of adequate room and equipment.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. MARGARET JOSHUA, UNION CITY, PA. spent two weeks in special meetings, during January, with the Calvary church, Taylor. The auditorium seating 500 was filled every evening and the gallery opened to care for the crowds. Fifty-four accepted Christ and are being brought into the church.

IN THE BIBLE SCHOOL OF THE CENTRAL Baptist Church, Wayne, of which Rev. John Wesley Elliott is pastor, there are three members whose perfect attendance totals forty-one years. Ralph Weadley has not missed a Sunday in eighteen years. His brother Albert has not missed a Sunday in fifteen years. The father of these boys, A. L. Weadley, has not missed a Sunday since the men's Bible class was organized eight years ago. Have any other father and two sons a better record than that?

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BUCKNELL University has adopted for a slogan "A million for endowment and a half-million for a stadium." Active work in the campaign has already been begun, with bright prospects.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

The Englewood Church, under the acting pastorate of Dr. Judson B. Thomas, has been taking on new life and vigor. On Wednesday evening, Jan. 17, the annual election of church officers and committeemen was held. This was followed by a dinner which brought together in a social way a goodly gathering of the members of the church, after which the time was given over to the presentation of reports from the various departments and activities. Jan. 24 the evening was given over to an "all-church night," beginning with a dinner and continuing in a missionary program, sponsored by the Woman's Union Society. Miss Alice M. Hefner spoke concerning her work with the Visiting Nurses' Association, Miss Alice H. Montague, upon the work of a city schoolteacher. A playlet written by Miss Alice W. S. Brimson, "Every Foreigner," was enacted by young women of the church, and the missionary message which was conveyed to those present was a convincing one. The evening closed with an address by Miss Brimson, upon "Christian Americanization."

Woman's Mission Society

The regular meeting of the board was held in Chicago, Friday, Jan. 26. Over thirty, including down-state members from Cairo, Decatur, and Galesburg, were in attendance. New circles were reported at Greenefield, Andalusia and Marion. Others at Clinton, Marissa and Hillsboro are ready for organization. Mrs. S. Schelie, state director, announced the new stereopticon lecture, "World Work of Baptist Women," ready to be secured for transportation charges. She urged that "Might boxes" be opened Feb. 15 and April 15. Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham, president of Training School, gave a talk on "What the Training School Expects of our Illinois Women by Sept. 1." Mrs. Boice, in charge of all Central District missionaries, told why we should have a worker in central and southern Illinois. The following recommendation, which was passed at the planning committee meeting Dec. 8, was read and approved: "That, in view of the conditions in the central and southern part of the state of Illinois, the large numbers of foreign-speaking peoples, and the fact that so little is done for them, we, the state board of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Illinois, urge the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and the Illinois Baptist State Convention, to cooperate in sending a general woman worker for Illinois." Dr. A. E. Peterson told of the great fields all ready for harvest around Moline and Alton and surrounding territory. He said a survey of the state was being planned to see what the conditions are and what is best to be done.

Mrs. J. D. Louderback urged all mission circle presidents to see that the pageant "Wait a Minute" or "For Want of Funds" be given before the Sunday schools on review Sunday in March, or at Sunday evening services. Mrs. E. W. Sundell was made permanent state reading contest chairman. Mrs. John Nuveen spoke on the continuation campaign. Mrs. E. S. Osgood represented the C. W. C. Mrs. C. W. Peterson announced the schools of missions to be held at Winona Lake, Ind., Geneva, Wis.—where Miss Jessie Burrell will teach—Dixon, and Greeneville, Ill. Central District will meet at St. Louis, April 24-25 with Mrs. Montgomery and Mrs. Caleb Moore on the program. Mrs. R. S. Knapp reported that the Morgan Park Church paid Miss Alice Brimson's expenses on her trip through Illinois in the interest of Christian Americanization. A candelabra will be given in Central District to the circle making the best Christian Americanization record.

The following resolution was presented and passed: "Resolved, that in view of the fact that, in comparison with the number of colored people and foreigners in South Chicago, we have not adequate help to push the work already started there as the beginning of a Christian Center, we urge our women of the churches to inform themselves as to this need, and urge the completion of the gifts to the New World Movement in order that we may accomplish this work." It was decided to hold the next regular meeting at Brooks House, Hammond, Ind., and that we seek an invitation from the National Board for this purpose.

Mrs. W. C. Rutherford, Secy.

Build Strongly Build Wisely

◆ ◆

It is wisdom to invest in the Annuity Bonds of The American Baptist Publication Society.

It is a strong investment in the Lord's work.

◆ ◆

Write today for full particulars.

THE ANNUITY DEPARTMENT

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

1701-1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

KANSAS

FOURTEEN YEARS AGO Dr. Stephen A. Northrop came to Kansas City First Church, for the purpose of erecting a central edifice in that city. The First and Third churches had united to help make it possible. The site was purchased and the start made. Dr. Northrup literally wore himself out trying to carry the work forward. After eight years of service he was no longer able to continue. Nearly six years ago Dr. Louis S. Bowman was called from Salt Lake City and took up the task. The World War compelled a "waiting period." The plans have been readjusted, the contracts let and the work is now in progress toward completing the auditorium and practically all of the edifice. In the meantime Dr. Bowman and his people are worshipping in the Masonic Temple.

THE LAWRENCE CHURCH has a field of unusual opportunity. Two hundred Baptist students at the state university and 200 Baptist students at Haskell Institute come under its ministry. Pastor Frank Jennings, and assistant pastor Forest E. Witcraft have taken active part in the organization and work of the school of religion at the university. Mr. Jennings is president of the board of trustees and Mr. Witcraft, member and secretary of the faculty. The Sunday school is making steady growth of a permanent character and the three young people's societies are in a flourishing condition. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond E. Stannard, members of the church and students at the university are preparing for medical missionary work. Three study classes—Bible, missions, and teacher training—are carried on in connection with the prayer meeting. One of the most significant phases of progress during the past five years is in the matter of finance.

MICHIGAN

THE BRIGHTON CHURCH has just passed through a successful revival meeting under Evangelists A. W. Littrell and D. L. Moody, Columbus, Ohio. The entire community was deeply stirred and a number of converts will soon unite with the church. The pastor, Rev. James F. Goodman, begins his second year March 1.

MISSOURI

REV. HAROLD GEISTWEIT OF AUBURN, N. Y., son of Dr. W. H. Geistweit, pastor of Third Church, St. Louis, will assist his father in preparation for evangelistic meetings, which are to open at the Third Baptist Church March 4, under a visiting minister, Rev. Dr. M. E. Dodd. Although Dr. Geistweit will have taken up his work at Dayton at that time, it is his purpose to make all preliminary arrangements for the meetings.

NEBRASKA

ON THE EVENING of Jan. 26 occurred the annual roll call of Second Church, Lincoln, Rev. Henry G. Smith, pastor. About 250 people sat down to supper, served by the women of the church. The supper and program costs were provided for in the regular budget of the church which did away with all soliciting and charges. Following the supper an entertaining program was given.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE CONvention met in the office Jan. 4, at which time it was decided to call a special mid-year meeting of the entire state board. This meeting will be held in Grand Forks at such a time as members of the national organizations can be present. The committee also took favorable action looking toward the joint summer assembly to be held with the Presbyterian churches of the state at Jamestown College, July 9-15. The joint committee held a meeting at Jamestown, Jan. 16, at which time plans were formulated and courses of study selected. Rev. J. G. York, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Grand Forks, is the secretary of the joint committee.

REV. A. G. ANDERSON began his pastorate of Sawyer and Guthrie churches Dec. 1. The church at Sawyer, where he makes his home, gave the pastor and his family a surprise fruit shower Jan. 9. Colporter C. J. Hill is helping in revival meetings

Want Ads

Wanted: Resident pastor, small city. $1000 and parsonage. Full time. Address, J. W. Foster, Troy Ill.

OLD JOE

And Other Vesper Stories

By SHEPHERD KNAPP

Sermons preached in story form by the author; a few of them were afterwards told to groups of American soldiers and marines in France.

Net, $2.00, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

IT IS A BURNING SHAME

that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation
Furnishes Protection AT COST

FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM

no assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.

Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured. No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 23 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager, 1500 Insurance Exchange, Chicago Ill.

Four Special Tours of Europe, 1923

including The Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm

Wide Choice of Routes through Europe. Comprehensive Program of Sightseeing.

Parties leave New York June 16, June 23, June 30, July 7, under experienced leadership.
First-class service. Moderate Cost.

These Tours under Management of
PROF. WILLIS A. CHAMBERLIN
Denison University, Granville, Ohio
in cooperation with Bennett's Travel Bureau, 500 Fifth Ave. New York

Complete Information Gladly Furnished.

BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE

STOCKHOLM, JULY 21-27
SPECIAL TOURS LEAVING NEW YORK
June 9, 16, 23, 30 and July 7.
Comprehensive itineraries, splendid steamers
Excellent hotels and experienced directors.
Send for folder.

BENNETT'S TRAVEL BUREAU
500 Fifth Avenue New York City

REVELL'S BOOKS
AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

Winifred Kirkland's New Book

The Easter People — A Pen-Picture of the Moravian Celebration of the Resurrection.

In a narrative of rare beauty, Miss Kirkland describes the great Christian festival as it is observed and perpetuated, year after year, by a simple, God-fearing community at Salem, North Carolina. Illustrated. Paper Boards. 50c.

Harbor Jim — A. Eugene Bartlett
Author of "The Joy-Maker" has given a fascinating picture of Newfoundland and the quaint lives of the fishermen. There's a seal hunt, a journey up the Humber for salmon and through it runs a story you'll not forget, original and tender. With frontispiece. $1.00

Between the Lines in Asia Minor — Mary Caroline Holmes recounts the chief events of the siege of Urfa during the winter and spring of 1920, and the part she and those associated with her played during the two years following. Illustrated. $1.50

Pandita Ramabai (Sarasvati) — Clementina Butler
Chairman, Executive Committee, American Ramabai Association gives the history of this movement for the child-widows of India. A deeply interesting record of missionary and humanitarian endeavor. Illustrated. $1.00

The Revival of Wonder — Dr. Malcolm J. McLeod utilizes apt illustrations drawn from every-day life, from the fountains of literature and from the commonly-shared experiences of humanity, giving them a moral and spiritual application of the surest kind. $1.25

The Gospel in the Ten Commandments — Dr. J. C. Massee has given us a series of sermons delivered on Sunday evenings in Tremont Temple. An unusually fine series of sermons, heard with large appreciation and spiritual profit, by overflowing congregations. $1.25

Learn to Live — Daniel A. Poling, LL.D.
Associate President and Citizenship Supt., The United Society of Christian Endeavor has a volume of Straight Talks to Young People. A bright cheery presentation of principles, which, when adopted, cannot fail to produce in any human being, old or young, "the fruits of good living." $1.50

Five Minutes with the Boys' and Girls' Congregation — William H. Walker new volume of talks to young folks. Straightforward and practical. Dr. Walker has a direct way of using his illustrations and applying them in an unstrained, understandable way. $1.25

The Problem of the Working Boy — William McCormick has a book of suggestions for workers among growing lads which aims to rid the work of the namby-pamby element which so often hampers its usefulness. $1.25

Gloria Swanson Edition

Prodigal Daughters — Joseph Hocking's story of the "Little Women" of today has an interesting Foreword by Gloria Swanson. With many illustrations. New colored jacket. $1.75

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
NEW YORK, 158 Fifth Ave. CHICAGO, 17 N. Wabash Ave.

at Sawyer. Similar meetings will be started at Guthrie about Feb. 20.

Rev. W. A. Weyhrauch became pastor of Valley City, Nov. 15. A number of persons have been received by letters and others by baptism. The Sunday school is growing and all services are well attended.

Miss Minnie Nelson, pastor of the Baptist Church of Henning, Minn., conducted a two weeks' series of meetings at the church. About fifty persons professed conversion. Pastor-at-large O. S. Jacobson baptized sixteen on Dec. 10.

Van Hook Church, organized last summer, held its first annual business meeting New Year's day. Reports show a Sunday school with an average attendance of thirty and a B. Y. P. U. with twenty-eight members. Pastor C. C. Hidenberg was presented with $100 at Christmas time, one-half of the amount being given by the business men of the city.

Rocky Mountain States

ARIZONA

Rev. C. H. H. Moore of Oakland, Cal., has become pastor of the First Church, Yuma. The church at this time becomes self-supporting.

Three pastors have recently gone from the state: Rev. E. H. Shanks of Phoenix First to Sixth Avenue Church, Tacoma, Wash.; Rev. Sam P. Gott to Anaheim and Rev. C. M. Northrup to Visalia, Cal.

Rev. Ramon N. Garcia, of Sacramento, Cal., has become pastor of the Mexican Church in Yuma. Rev. Carey B. Tooms, former pastor of the Mexican Church in Yuma, is now pastor in Glendale. The brethren are doing good work on their new fields.

Chapel Car Evangelist Driver has closed a meeting with the First Church, Mesa, in which there were fifty professions of faith. From Mesa the chapel car goes to Chandler for its next meeting.

Rev. L. F. Taylor of Washington, Pa., has become pastor of First Church, Glendale. Mr. Taylor is on the field and is getting his work well in hand.

The most notable event taking place in Arizona recently is the reuniting of First and Calvary churches of Phoenix. Both churches being pastorless, overtures were made and accepted, and the churches are now meeting together in common service. Rev. W. B. Percival, former assistant pastor of First Church, Pasadena, Cal., is the supply pastor. The spirit of the united church is harmonious and the prospects are encouraging. Mr. Percival is doing good work as supply pastor and laying the foundation for work in the future.

COLORADO

First Church of Boulder, has closed a series of meetings, conducted by the teacher-evangelist, E. S. Stucker of Ottawa, Kan., in which ninety-five confessions were made. The revival was strictly a Baptist meeting but all the churches, clubs and schools of the city were touched with it. Dr. Stucker teaches more than he exhorts. He is an ideal evangelist for a university center. The church was greatly helped by the meetings.

WYOMING

Baptist people are extending their work in Casper, a growing city. The Chapel Car, "Evangel," under the management of Rev. and Mrs. F. I. Blanchard, started missionary work in Casper last September. They found a mission had been organized on the west side by the First Baptist Church. Steps were at once taken to enlarge the work. As a result, on Sunday Jan. 28 the mission was organized into the Emmanuel Baptist Church. The organization has a Sunday school with an enrolment of 125; a B. Y. P. U. of about forty; a progressive woman's auxiliary; a brotherhood with profitable programs in view; good congregations and well-attended prayer meetings, a suitable building and is located in one of the best resident sections of the city. $1900 has been secured for a pastor's salary and steps will at once be taken to secure a good man for the field. Much credit for this success should be given to the First Baptist Church, the State Convention, and the people of the west side. A series of consecration meetings, conducted by the Chapel Car missionaries, began Jan. 31. At Evansville, three and one-half miles from Casper, where in July of last year there was nothing but sage brush, a piece of ground was secured by the pastor of the First Church and the Chapel Car missionary for a Baptist mission and now there is a cozy building with Sunday school and preaching every Sunday. The lot is being paid for by the State Convention. The property owners came to the rescue in paying for the building. The prospects for this Baptist mission are bright for before the year is over there may be, at least, 1000 people at Evansville and the Baptist mission is conducting the only Christian work in the town. The pastor of Emmanuel Church will also have this field in charge. The Chapel Car missionaries, with the car, expect to leave for Parkerton, Wyo., March 1.

UTAH

Burlington Church, Salt Lake City, laid the cornerstone of its new edifice on Sunday afternoon Jan. 28. Special services were held in the present church building after which the congregation went to the site of the new church just across the street where the formal exercises accompanying the laying of the cornerstone were held. Dr. L. A. Garrison, president of the Utah State Convention delivered the address. One feature

A Judson Training Manual

Evangelism of Youth

By ALBERT H. GAGE

Director of Religious Education, The Baptist Executive Council of Chicago. Author of "How to Conduct a Church Vacation School."

Mr. Gage bases his chapters on the fact of certain definite periods of youth —seasons of the soul—when responsiveness to the message of religion is as that of seed and bud to springtime. He writes to show the wisdom, and to outline the plan and methods, of an evangelism that takes careful account of this law of God. By choice of the narrative form, he has heightened the charm and effectiveness of his matter. The book is well adapted to use by study-classes. Suggestions for additional reading are provided with each chapter.

Cloth, $1.00 net

Order from our nearest house

THE JUDSON PRESS

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia
16 Ashburton Place, Boston
125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago
1107 McGee Street, Kansas City, Mo.
313 W. Third St., Los Angeles
439 Burke Building, Seattle
223 Church Street, Toronto

WORTH TELLING TO OTHERS

One who has enjoyed an income from the LIFE ANNUITIES of the American Baptist Home Mission Society for many years writes:

"Since my husband's death nearly my whole income has come from the annuities of The American Baptist Home Mission Society. I cannot tell you what a satisfaction it has been to me, in feeble health, to have the interest on these come so regularly, without any care or anxiety on my part. I have tried to interest others in this form of investment, and will continue to do so."

Many annuitants have been so well satisfied with this method of investing to advance the work of the Kingdom, that they have returned again and again with additional contributions representing savings which might have been otherwise invested.

ANNUITIES—ONE OR TWO LIVES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.
On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.
The rate always depends upon the age of the person when the gift is made. When the rate is once fixed, it never varies, but remains the same.
A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives. When you cease to enjoy its benefits the same income is continued throughout the lifetime of the relative or friend whose name follows yours in the agreement.
Samples of single and survivorship agreements will be sent to you on request.

FORMS OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society, formed in New York in the year 1832, the sum of $..... for the general purposes of said Society.
I give, devise and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society all the lot and land with the buildings thereon standing. (Here describe the premises with exactness.) All the rest and residue of my estate, of whatever form or character, I give, devise, and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society.

It is always best to consult a lawyer.
All those making wills, should remember that our corporate name is The American Baptist Home Mission Society.

For annuity booklet, sample contract, and survivorship rate tables and legacies kindly address Secretary Charles L. White, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

of the services, which was of special interest, was the presence of Deacon J. E. Berkley of Immanuel Church, who was one of the first Baptists to settle in Utah. Deacon Berkley, who is the father of Prof. J. P. Berkley, of Newton Theological Seminary, attended the dedication of the present church about thirty years ago. It was in Deacon Berkley's home that the first Baptist organization in Utah was formed.

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; New York. Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary. 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary. 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS
PULPITS
COMMUNION SETS
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY
1069 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Outfits, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMOULIN BROS. & CO., Dpt. 17 GREENVILLE, ILL.

CHURCH ARCHITECT
Wilson B. Parker 620 State Life, INDIANAPOLIS
Send for illustrated booklet.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

Pacific Coast

OREGON

CORVALLIS: Sunday Jan. 28, marked the end of the first five months of the pastorate of Rev. Daniel Bryant. During this period much progress has been made by the church along all lines of its work as well as loaning its pastor to assist in revival services at McMinnville and Independence. Eighty new members have been received, thirty-eight by baptism, making the present membership 402. Baptismal services have been held each Sunday since Dec. 3 and there are still many waiting to be baptized. The attendance at the prayer service has increased from twenty-five to 200 and the Sunday evening service has increased from an average attendance of 200 to 800. It will be necessary to place pews in the gallery of the church in the near future. Two extra weekly services have been added, on Friday afternoon and Friday evening. The evening service has had an average attendance of 800 for weeks. Finances are in the best condition, they have been for over two years, and the spiritual life of the church is the best since its organization on Dec. 25, 1851. The Bible school has increased from 130 to 330. It is studying the New Testament chapter by chapter, using a brief outline prepared by the pastor each week.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

FIRST CHURCH, EVERETT, REV. J. HARVEY Deere, pastor, and First Church, Yakima, concluded a Sunday-school contest Nov. 12-Jan. 28, in which the Everett school won by 390 points. Yakima's base was 297, while that of the Everett school was 372. On the closing day the school at Everett reached an attendance of 697, with 591 on time. Special interest centered in the contest because of the recent removal to Yakima of Rev. W. E. Henry after an eight years' pastorate with the Everett church. The Yakima saints did the challenging and the Everett people were doubly glad to do the winning. Much credit for the victory is due Mr. Ernest C. Clarke, superintendent, and his loyal corps of teachers and officers. The new pastorate is opening auspiciously at Everett, Mr. and Mrs. Deere having settled on the field the latter part of November, after a pastorate of a little less than five years at First Church of Pomona, Calif. The church is being completely organized and all hearts are turning toward the pre-Easter revival effort in which the pastor will be the evangelist and Lawrence Arlander, Seattle, the director of music.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. H. E. ORSBORN OF MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., has accepted the pastorate of the Community Baptist Church at Waterford. He comes well recommended as a teacher, preacher and musical director.

ON SUNDAY, JAN. 14, was held the dedication of the first unit of the new church in Vallejo, when the social hall, Sunday-school rooms, and basement were formally opened. The social hall has a seating capacity of about 300 and was full at all the services of the day. The building is one of the most beautiful in Northern California, being of the German Gothic type of architecture and built both for artistic beauty and for stability. The walls are solid brick. When the auditorium is finished, the building will have cost $60,000, the organ $7500, parsonage $7500, making a total valuation of the property of $85,000. The lot cost $10,000. The Home Mission Society contributed $5000 to this project and the Northern California Convention $5000. There are no wealthy people in this church of 175 members, but the perseverance and strenuous work of the pastor, Rev. L. P. Russell, together with the cooperation of all the members, made this building possible.

THE WORK AMONG THE JAPANESE IN Sacramento has been growing until it has been found necessary to appoint a woman missionary to assist Rev. H. Y. Shibata. Owing to the indebtedness, the woman's society was unable to make this appointment at the present time, but the Grace Church of San Jose generously offered to provide two months' salary for a woman worker on this needy field. Mrs. M. M. Smyser, who has spent twenty-five years in Japan and speaks the language fluently, was appointed to this position.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

SAN DIEGO. The dedication of the new building of the Ocean Beach Church, Rev. Rolla Earl Brown, pastor, occurred Jan. 28. It was an occasion of great joy to the members who have labored hard for the last eight months to erect the building. The edifice in mission style of architecture, cost about $20,000; its furnishings and equipments about $5,000 more. There is still a debt of about $5,000; but its payment has all been pledged. The church is grateful for the help from Southern California Convention of $2,500; from the Home Mission Society of $2,500; and of $1,000 from the San Diego City Mission Society. Among those who took part in the program at the dedication were Rev. F. D. Finn, of San Diego high school; Rev. L. P. Valentine, city missionary of the San Diego Mission Society; Rev. F. L. Bloweres, of the National City Church; Rev. W. J. Beaven, of Logan Heights Church; Rev. Joseph D. Page, of East San Diego Church, and Kenneth W. Crosby, F. S. Runyon and J. W. Jobes, of Ocean Beach Church. Rev. F. O. Belden, of San Diego First Church, preached the dedicatory sermon. Rev. Dr. W. F. Harper, of Los Angeles, secretary of the Southern California Convention, also made an address. A capacity audience of several hundred including a number of children, was present during the services. On the evening of the same day, Rev. George H. Holt, of South Pasadena, told a large audience at the First Church of San Diego about mission work among the Hopi Indians and exhibited fine photo plates showing the Christian Indians and missionaries at work.

Obituary

MRS. CHARLES CLOSZ

In the passing of Mrs. Charles Closz, Webster City, Iowa, Jan. 14, 1923, the denomination as well as the local church loses a most loyal supporter. Mrs. Closz was born in Oswego, N. Y. in 1851, moving to Webster City with her parents in 1854. Over thirty-seven years ago, Mrs. Closz, with her husband, united with the Baptist church of this place. They have been most devoted members.

Ten children came into the home: Katherine, wife of Rev. E. Jeffers; Mary; Irene; Carl; Irving, of Webster City, Iowa, and Dr. H. F. Closz, Muskegon, Mich. Cairo, Clara, Vivian and Eva were removed from the circle some years ago. A wonderful mother has been taken from the home, a blessed memory remains.

Never off the Press

(Continued from page 76)

that is wanting is money to finance the venture.

No phase of the church's task is so basic as that of giving the Bible to all men everywhere. It is probable that no other phase of the church's work produces so large a return for the same amount of money and service. And yet the church has never given as generously to this part of its work as it has to other branches of its missionary program. The percentage devoted to Bible work in the benevolent program of the church as a whole is not something of which the church may boast. If a great wave of generosity were to sweep the church in behalf of the Bible cause, it would bring a revival of spiritual life to its membership. This thing is fundamental to the church's success as a spiritual force in the world.

Nor have the stewards of great wealth seemed to realize the unlimited opportunity for far-reaching service presented by the Bible program. The really conspicuous gifts made during the first hundred years of this work could be counted in the proverbial way on the fingers of one hand. No one has come forward to create a foundation for Bible circulation as has been done in behalf of other worthy enterprises such as public health, education, music, literature and art. After a century of operation, the total endowment of the American Bible Society, which is second in importance to no other American institution, is less than $2,000,000 yielding an income of less than $100,000. May God stir the hearts of those whom he has richly endowed with material things to see this work as an opportunity fraught with vast possibility for human betterment and spiritual advancement.

Mass Movement Toward Christ

(Continued from page 78)

wards, will begin to attend church and school for Christian instruction. It is difficult to explain these movements; but the essential feature seems to be a belief, taking hold of an ignorant and superstitious people, that Christianity holds out better prospects than they could expect from their old heathen worship. The doctrine of the One True God, who made all things and who loves all people, first flashed upon some individuals in the tribe with the distinctness of a divine message, cleansing their thoughts and actions; and others have followed their lead, without quite realizing all that the change implied.

"One has to recognize, too, that converts won in this way do stand the test. . . . We came into contact with villages where, years ago, the people left heathenism and embraced Christianity, the converts, in some instances, uprooting and destroying the ancestral images of the tribe which had been worshipped from time immemorial; and they had remained true to their faith. Masses converted in this way throw a big burden upon the church, as they have to be evangelized and shepherded and taught the cardinal truths of Christianity. Some of the most active workers in the native church have been won in this way. Among them have been men literally devil-possessed. Into these men's hearts the Spirit of Christ has entered, the love of God has burned, and they have become powers for good in the community. . . . In the island churches, as in the churches of other lands, there are all sorts of Christians, but, taking them as a whole, they are very far from being a disgrace to the religion they profess. Many of them are men and women of really fine character, who adorn the doctrine of Christ, and are prepared to make sacrifices for his cause."

Baptist World Alliance

Stockholm, July 21-28

Tour Europe this Summer

Bennett's Travel Bureau

Economic and Serviceable
For full information write

Rev. W. R. Sloman
2631 E. Third St. Dayton, O.

TO BE BURIED BESIDE HER HUSBAND

An aged widow of a Baptist minister, for many weeks, because of critical illness, had been walking through "the valley of the shadow of death."

During these weeks, a great problem had been worrying her soul. If she died, could she be buried beside the body of her husband, who died years ago?

The modest grant made by the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board has made it possible to give an affirmative answer to her question, and thus solve her anxious problem.

She is one of the 1402 beneficiaries of the Benefit Board. These beneficiaries have given their best. Can we do less?

Ordinary justice requires an increase, not only in the number of beneficiaries, but also in the amounts granted to old and broken ministers, missionaries and widows.

You who made a gift to the Benefit Board, have had a part in this helpful ministry. Your continued support is needed.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

(Corporate name)

E. T. TOMLINSON, Executive Secretary

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

Next week — "Penniless Blindness."

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Margaret T. Applegarth's Missionary Stories for Children . . . .

INDIA INKLINGS

Illustrated. Net, $1.50

"When it comes to missionary stories for little folks, Miss Applegarth is inimitable. Her 'inklings' are as clever as her titles for chapters. No child will escape the lure of them."—The Churchman.

LAMPLIGHTERS ACROSS THE SEA

Library Edition. Illustrated. Net, $1.25

"Six breezy stories telling how the Bible was translated in many mission lands. The beautiful illustrations will attract the child's attention and the bright way in which the information is set forth will hold it to the very end."—Presbyterian Banner.

MISSIONARY STORIES FOR LITTLE FOLKS

First Series—Primary
Second Series—Junior
Illustrated. Each, Net, $1.75

"There is nothing on the market like these stories, which were the first to present missions to children in a consecutive and graded way, with a charm all their own. Teachers and parents have here a power of fascination that will vie with fairy stories."—Missions.

DORAN BOOKS

At Your Religious Book Store
GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY
244 Madison Avenue New York

The
CHRISTIAN CENTURY
A Journal of Religion

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON and HERBERT L. WILLETT, Editors

Published Weekly Four Dollars a Year

Distinguished by its Candid Discussion of Living Issues in the Light of the Mind of Christ.

Says Bishop Francis J. McConnell:

"I regard The Christian Century as the greatest journalistic force working for social and international righteousness coming from any press of the Christian church."

Mail Coupon today. Foreign postage extra

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY,
508 S. Dearborn St., Chicago.

Dear Sirs: Please enter my name (a new subscriber) for a year's subscription to The Christian Century at your regular rate of $4.00 (ministers $3.00). I will remit upon receipt of bill and you will please send me without extra charge a copy of [ ] "The Reconstruction of Religion," by Ellwood, or [ ] "The Crisis of the Churches," by Leighton Parks, or [ ] "The Mind in the Making," by Robinson, or [ ] "What and Where is God?" by Swain, or [ ] "What Christianity Means to Me," by Lyman Abbott.

Name _____

Address _____

(The Baptist)

A Winter of Content

By LAURA LEE DAVIDSON

"All provincial Canada is here for the reading, and much besides. There is humor; there is beauty; there is strength."

—Boston Evening Transcript.

Illustrated. Net, $1.50, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

Good Books

(Continued from page 79)

fessors most qualified to speak on the aspects of human belief in the future life. Dr. Franz Boas of Columbia University causes one to see the wholly inadequate conception of immortality among primitive tribes. Dr. Breasted tells of the strange conceptions of the Egyptians from whom Moses is popularly supposed to have gained his conception. Other equally competent scholars treat of India, the Assyrians, the Greeks and Persians. Dr. Paton's study of the ancient Hebrew conception will send many a reader to his Old Testament to discover with surprise that the Christian conception of the future life is as far ahead of the Old Testament as Jesus' ethics surpassed that of the laws of Moses.

It is a pity that the book was not conceived and prepared more for the popular reader. Many of the chapters are hard reading and over weighted with technicalities. Yet for one who will read and has the academic skill to sift out the essential facts, the volume will provide a digest of the most comprehensive sort.

The New Ten Commandments and Other Sermons, by Louis Albert Banks. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50.

Vital, virile, versatile, are these fifteen sermons from the famous veteran pastor-lecturer-evangelist. "Bill" Stidger of Detroit, one of the most brilliant of the younger preachers in Methodism, recently went through his library and counted up thirty-two of Dr. Banks' books, in all of which he had found inspiration. They well deserve a place in the library of every preacher. Dr. Banks draws from the Word, from classical and current literature, and from his own rich experience of grace, treasures new and old wherewith to feed the revival fires and quicken the passion for soul-winning and present Jesus more appealingly to the human heart. Among the titles of this volume are "Going on Adventures with Jesus," "Sun-Facing Lives," "The Folly of Meddling with God," and "When God Lives with Me."

Essentials of Christianity, by Rev. Henry C. Sheldon, D. D. New York: Doran. $2.

Having defined religion and stated the tests which Christianity must meet in order to establish its claim to be the final religion, the author names the religions which may be assumed to compete with Christianity, stating their merits and defects. He then states the historical basis of Christianity and its relation to the written biblical record. Then the fundamental doctrines of Christianity are discussed: Christ, God, nature and condition of man, perfecting of the individual and the social idea of Christianity. This latter deals with the kingdom and the church as representing Christianity at work in organized society. The final chapter is on the preeminence of Christianity as respects a rightful claim to universality and finality. "By the evidence of history, Christianity is a religion for every age." The easy style and the simple language make this book particularly profitable to the person who is not an expert in comparative religion and theology. It contains but little for the expert although it states its arguments convincingly. It is constructive and omits much of present day divisive discussion.

Midst Volcanic Fires, by Maurice Frater. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

Lovers of missionary romance who read a generation ago the life story of John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides, will need no coaxing to lure them to follow the story through in this recent volume, covering later trials and triumphs for that historic effort to evangelize a cannibal island people in the South Pacific seas. Typographically, pictorially, and in literary quality, the book ranks high; and the story it embodies is fascinating, full of "human interest" tales, graphic in its portrayal of heathen and Christian life in a remote corner of the earth, and abounding in usable material for preacher and teacher. We hope later to quote elsewhere a page or two of its vivid recital to whet the appetite of those of our readers who welcome fresh evidences of the presence and power of the living God working to redeem lost men and races.

The Reality of Jesus, by J. H. Chambers Macaulay, M. A. New York: Doran. $1.25.

This book is aimed to help those who are trying to establish a faith today that will stand the surging cross currents of thought and sentiment. By careful steps the author shows that the great realities of life are in Jesus Christ and in a masterful way sets forth the mind of Christ as the greatest fact with which the mind of man can come in contact. He shows how Jesus recreates belief in God and in man and how he, as Master of life, is ever shedding new joy into life itself. The author comes from a great line of Presbyterian ministers and is an Englishman. There is a deep spiritual note running through the book and a note of reality that convinces one that religion is a great throbbing power in human life. During the war Mr. Macaulay was brought into close touch with men and enabled to learn first-hand their deepest longings. He inspires you with his passionate faith in Jesus Christ and brings a message of hope as he declares that within the shadow of the world's restlessness there lurks the reality of Jesus and the demand for a religion adequate to life in that great quest of the soul for the reality of God. While the book lacks illustrative material, it is full of striking sentences that provoke thought and bring one into close fellowship with the great person and work of Christ.

"It Is to Laugh"

Two children were playing in a garden.

"I know a fine game," said Harold. "Let's be admirals and command all the ships in the navy."

His playmate, a little girl, began to impose conditions.

"All right," she said. "Only I must be the highest admiral and give commands to you."

Harold didn't like the idea and said so. The little girl thought for a moment.

"Then," she said, "let's play that I'm the admiral's wife. That will do just as well."

---

Members of the faculty of one of our universities tell a story of the days when a certain distinguished educator was a tutor in charge of student discipline at a New England college—a sort of proctor. On one occasion he was called out of his room by some midnight escapade. He was obliged as a matter of duty to pursue the disturbers, and with his long legs he soon found himself gaining rapidly upon them. His solemn voice rang out suddenly into the night: "Gentlemen, gentlemen, if you don't run a little faster, I shall be obliged to overtake you!"

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

MUSIC AND THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

In the multitudinous plans for community music one factor of vital importance has been little discussed: the music department of the public libraries.

A writer in the Philadelphia Press asserts that one essential to a musical community is that it have libraries of music proportionate to its needs. "In the very small community, where it is to be assumed there will be few musicians of serious attainments," continues that writer, "the library may well suffice if it contain volumes which deal mainly with the history and appreciation of the art. As the community increases in size it will need to add to this classification certain textbooks in the elementary stages of musical theory and bound volumes of music, perhaps piano music in the main. When we get to the larger communities, we add the need for more advanced and varied textbooks and orchestral scores. The final stage might be considered to be collections where the investigator in special branches can find all he needs, such a place as the music department in the Library of Congress, which probably stands by itself."

That the libraries themselves have not overlooked the opportunity of serving the community as the Philadelphian suggests is shown by the music collections in some of the larger cities. The music division of the New York public library contains the Joseph W. Dexel collection of about 6000 volumes and the Astor collection, and has recently been augmented by the books of James G. Huneker, which are valuable not only for the printed text but also for the marginal annotations by this critic. The entire collection of the New York institution now numbers about 13,000 books on music, 8000 volumes of music and 4000 pieces of sheet music.

As for modern opera scores, the Boston public library, which now owns the Allen A. Brown collection, surpasses the New York library, listing 5000 in its catalogue.

The music department of the Chicago public library boasts about 20,000 entries in its catalogue, 12,000 of which are sheet music and the remainder books of music. The books on the history and appreciation of music and the biographies of musicians are not housed with the music collection but are shelved in the general stackrooms.

The writer complains that in that city's library orchestral scores are not so plentiful as might be desired, there being "only one Bach, one Beethoven and one Tschaikowsky."

The true test of the service of the library to musicians is found in the number of those who use the collections. The records of the New York library show that 19,454 readers used 48,868 music volumes in 1920. In 1921 the number used in the Chicago library music division has varied from about 1000 per week during January and February to about 500 per week during July and August, the average being about 150 per day. The largest number of calls were for piano scores, with voice a close second, but the requests covered all fields of music from grand opera to ukulele.

From the testimony here collected it is evident the libraries of the large cities are doing their part in building up musical communities, and it is safe to assume that those of smaller places are likewise doing their bit.

The greatest need now in most places is for a person trained in music to have the music collections in charge and to direct the selection of material by music students who may need aid.

SPECIAL MUSICAL SERVICES

The Chicago North Shore Baptist Church, Berwyn and Lakewood Avenues, is making good use of the new organ just installed. A series of five special musical services has been arranged by Frank Parker, director of music, with the efficient aid of Frances A. Cook, organist. The dates and programs in detail are announced as follows:

Sunday, Jan. 28, 8 p. m.

Music by Russian composers. Cherubic Hymn, Gretchaninoff; A Legend, Tschaikowsky; Glorious Forever, Rachmaninoff; Bless the Lord O My Soul, Ippolitof-Ivanoff; Hymn of Praise, Tschaikowsky.

Sunday, Feb. 25, 8 p. m.

Negro spirituals. Listen to the Lambs, Dett; Swing Low Sweet Chariot, Arr. by Burleigh; Are You Ready to Walk with Jesus (MS), Stewart; Deep River, Arr. by Harris; We'll Go On and Serve the Lord, Stewart.

Good Friday, March 30, 8 p. m.

Cantata "The Crucifixion," by Stainer.

Sunday, April 29, 8 p. m.

Music by Gounod. Motet, "By Babylon's Wave"; Chorus, "Lovely Appear" (From "The Redemption"); Cantata, "Gallia."

Sunday, May 27, 8 p. m.

Music by Mendelssohn. Motet, "Judge Me, O God"; Chorus, "He Watching Over Israel" (Elijah); Cantata, "Hear My Prayer."

Organ Recitals

Miss Cook will give a series of monthly recitals on the new three-manual Austin organ. The first will be on Tuesday night, Feb. 20.

From the Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

Aspiration ..... Salter
Souvenir ..... Salter
Oriental Air ..... Fultoni-Eddy
Our Shepherd ..... Adams

Four practical, interesting numbers for the organist. The two pieces by Sumner Salter are real "organ music," written by a man who is himself one of our most prominent players and an authority on organ-playing. These two numbers, while simple and direct in statement, still show the practiced hand of an expert, both regarding the technical writing and in the musical elements present. The melodic interest will please the listeners just as much as the finesse of craftmanship will appeal to the player. The Fultoni air is a characteristic attempt at what we have come to regard (largely through lack of contact with the real thing) as "eastern music." It is effective in its way—musically it owes much to the deft pen of the transcriber. The Adams piece is simple—an amplified version of a sacred song. As a quiet offertory or prelude it will serve as a toothsome tidbit to the average congregation. The simplicity of the vocal original has been wisely kept in the transcription. A very modest registration is required, and there are no technical difficulties to count.

Lorenz's Easter Music

Easter Services (New 1923)

"Easter Bells," by Ira B. Wilson
"Joyful Eastertide," for graded Sunday Schools.
8 cents per copy, $6.00 per hundred, postpaid.
Samples sent free upon request.

Easter Sunday School Cantatas

"The Glory of the Cross," by Lorenz.
"The Lighted Cross," By Ira B. Wilson.
"Easter," By Ira B. Wilson.
20 cents per copy, net in any quantity.
Send 20 cents for sample each of the three.

Easter Recitations and Exercises

"Easter Treasury No. 28" (New 1923)
25 cents per copy, postpaid.

Easter Choir Cantatas (New 1923)

"Joy after Sorrow," Wilson. 60 cents.
"The Resurrection Story," Adams. 60 cents.
Sent on approval upon request.

Easter Anthems

Our ten most popular out of over 300 we publish sent on approval upon request.

Easter Solos and Duets

Our ten most popular out of 100 we publish sent on approval if you advance 10 cents for postage and packing. If you state voice desired, we will so limit selection.

Send for free catalog.

Sample and approval offers good only if the "Baptist" is mentioned.

Lorenz Publishing Company

216 W. 5th St., Dayton, Ohio
1711 Grand Central Terminal, New York
218 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

EASTER MUSIC FREE

HALL-MACK CO.

A postal from Supt., Pastor or Committee will bring a set of sample services. FREE.

* EASTER HELPER, NO. 9. 20c
Book of Songs, Recitations, Drills, etc.

FLAVIA, or THE MARTYRS. 25c.
A Song Story of early Christian Era. This and others sent for examination on request.

* PAGEANTRY
Two Easter Pageants and a Play—25c.
* These are not sent for examination.

SPECIAL—30c.
3 Services, regular edition, value ..... 21c
Pageant ..... 25c
Helper No. 9 ..... 20c
All for 30c in stamps. 66c

HALL-MACK CO., 21st & Arch Streets,
ADAM GEIBEL MUSIC CO. Philadelphia, Pa.

Fredericktown BELLS

Have Assembled the Masses for More than 60 Years
WRITE FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG
The J. B. Foote Foundry Co., 24 Front St., Fredericktown, O.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift

Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.

The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO

Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Fresh From the Field

(Continued from page 66)

son wrote to the office staff as follows: "In sending you herewith our treasurer's receipt for your Christmas offering, I wish to add a word of personal appreciation for this most thoughtful and appropriate gift to the great work which is being carried on by our denomination. At this time of the year when we celebrate Christ's coming to a needy world, nothing could be more fitting than to remember, as you have done, the needs of the world today. I wish to thank each one of you who participated in this offering, which, you may be sure, will be used of God in the spread of the Gospel and the furtherance of his kingdom."

Recently Dr. James H. Franklin gave an illustrated address on Japan at the First Church, Detroit. On Feb. 7 this church voted to raise a fund of $23,000 for an addition to its high school for boys in Yokohama. Of this amount, $15,000 is on deposit in New York. Rev. Mark F. Sanborn is pastor of the church.

A complimentary luncheon to Dr. J. J. Ross of the Second Church, Chicago, who goes this month to the Ruggles Street Church of Boston, was given by the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago at the Hamilton Club, Thursday, Feb. 8. It was a delightful and heartfelt expression of the love of his brethren in the ministry.

Mrs. Abby Gunn Baker, wife of William H. Baker, and well known as an author and denominational worker, died in Washington, D. C., Jan. 25. Mrs. Baker was especially interested in missionary endeavor and was a leader in the movement looking to the education of the women of the Orient. She was president at one time of the Women's Baptist Mission Society and at the time of her death was a member of the national board of women's missionary organizations. Mrs. Baker was also an authority on antique china and had almost completed a volume devoted to the history and arrangement of the White House collection. She was a member of Calvary Church.

At the regular executive board meeting of the Michigan Convention, Feb. 6, Grant M. Hudson, general director and executive secretary of the convention, offered his resignation to become effective March 1. Shortly thereafter he will take up active duties as congressman of the sixth district of Michigan. Mr. Hudson took up the convention work in January 1920, and in the past three years has rendered untiring service and has made large contributions through his wise counsel not only in state but in national assemblies. His strong personality, scope of vision and executive ability have made him an invaluable leader. He leaves a host of friends who regret his departure but send him on with a wish for success in the great work to which he has been called. In accepting Mr. Hudson's resignation, the Board of Managers adopted resolutions expressing their appreciation of the service he has rendered and of the progress made under his leadership. Dr. John E. Smith, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Spokane, Wash., will succeed Mr. Hudson, as general director. Dr. Smith's pastorate in Spokane extends over a period of six years. Previous to that time he served churches in Michigan.

THE WORLD TASK OF NORTHERN BAPTISTS

No. 1. MAKERS OF DISCIPLES

"Go ye into all the world and make disciples"

The year 1921 was a record year in evangelistic results on the foreign field. The ten mission fields of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society reported the baptism of 12,174 converts on confession of faith.

This is the largest total in sixteen years. Burma reported 3,674 baptisms; Assam 1,950; South India 2,431; Bengal Orissa 83; China 742; Japan 270; Belgian Congo 2,713; Philippine Islands 311.

Evangelistic results in Europe were equally gratifying, the records showing 6,189 baptisms, making the total for Europe and the non-Christian world 18,363. Preliminary reports for 1922 already indicate similar evangelistic progress.

The Foreign Mission Society has always emphasized evangelism as the primary aim in its work. The world task of Northern Baptists is nothing less than the evangelization of the non-Christian world.

You who made a contribution to foreign missions a year ago had a share in this gratifying achievement. Your continued financial support is needed to carry forward the momentum of this evangelistic movement in future years.

Checks should be sent to your State Collecting Agent or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Next week—No. 2. HEALERS OF MULTITUDES

AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

(Corporate name for use in wills)

The fiscal year closes April 30, 1923.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Volume IV February 24, 1923 No. 4

The Baptist

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
FEB 2 0 1923

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Conve

Univ of Ill Libr
Urbana Ill

What the Bible Means to Me

THE Bible is the one book thoroughly worth the whole love of the human soul because it is the record of the religious experience of men in their growing knowledge of God, or the story of God's progressive unveiling of himself as men were able to receive him; and, most of all, because it gives us Jesus Christ, the culmination of all revelations of the Father and the test of all religious experience. It is forevermore the book.

—W. C. Bitting

Fresh from the Field

The calendar of City Park Church, Denver, Colo. announces that during 1922 $2,418.22 was spent for missions. Rev. Wm. Ross Schoemaker is pastor.

Frances L. Leland, wife of Rev. H. C. Leland, died Jan. 30. She will be remembered by many as bookkeeper under Dr. C. R. Blackall in the Publication Society, then at 71 Randolph, Chicago. For forty-seven years she served faithfully as a pastor's wife, active in every good work. She is survived by two children and her husband.

The gain in membership in the churches of America in 1922 was greater than in any previous year. In the way of financial gifts, all records were broken. More than $60,000,000 was spent for new church buildings, ministers' salaries were increased, and $40,000,000 was contributed to foreign missions.

Evangelist G. W. Griffin assisted Rev. Frank E. Gray of Holyoke, Col., in a series of special evangelistic meetings recently. The pastor writes that the meetings have been successful in every way. Mr. Griffin is now engaged in a like service at the London Heights Church, Kansas City, Kan., of which Rev. J. K. Harris is pastor.

According to a Mexico City press dispatch the last easily accessible and unrestricted oasis for American drinkers—just across the border in Tia Juana, Mexicali, Juarez, and other Mexican towns—will be eliminated immediately if plans of the Mexican government do not go awry. A bill establishing a monthly license fee equivalent to about $2,500 in American money will be submitted to a special session of congress. It will apply to all saloons within about thirty miles of the American border.

After long negotiations following the original petition on Dec. 21, 1921, the Lettish Baptist Theological Society at Riga has finally received official recognition from the ministry of education of the government of Latvia. A recent letter from Pres. J. A. Frey brings this news. Mr. Frey states that the authorities needed all this time to find the proper law in their statutes which governs this recognition because, as Mr. Frey states: "Never in our country has there been such a school. So far, hallelujah!" Official recognition of the seminary is of great importance to the future usefulness of this Baptist training school in Riga.

Statistics concerning the number of women workers in Japan have recently been made public by the different departments of the government. These figures are for the ninth year of Taisho, or 1920. They are the latest statistics available. In private factories, 846,046; government industries, 49,133; mines, 108,300; business, 174,249; department of communication, 31,707; prison work as matrons, etc., 259; railroad bureau, 7,836; teachers of primary schools, 68,726; religious work, 12,098; gathering marine products, etc., 316,012; agriculture, 1,402,092; teachers of flower arrangement, koto and samisen, 11,711; writers, 47; chauffers, 21; conductors, 214; detectives, 4; doctors, 300. For some unknown reason the number of women employed as nurses and midwives was not given, but the totals of working women in Japan according to these figures approximates 3,000,000.

The Baptist Temple, Fairmont, W. Va. of which Rev. J. Walter Barnes is pastor, let a contract recently for the erection of an annex to the church building. The work will be completed by Easter.

The calendar of the First Church, Cambridge, Mass., of which Rev. William D. Goble is pastor, announces that last year the total amount of gifts was $25,130.49, of which sum $11,945 was spent on current expenses and $13,184.68 was given for missionary purposes and general benevolence. This is indeed a splendid record.

The annual meeting of the East Central District of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society will be held with the Fifth Avenue Church, Huntington, W. Va., Dr. M. L. Wood, pastor, May 2-3, 1923.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Hoyt of Belden Avenue Church, Chicago, conducted special evangelistic services at the Galilee Church, Chicago, Jan. 15-26. One hundred and twenty-three children from the Sunday school made a decision for Christ. Thirty-eight persons accepted Christ during the regular evening services, of which number thirty-five were grown-ups between sixteen and seventy years of age. Cottage prayer meetings and prayer groups were conducted by the pastor.

Rev. Thomas B. Marsh celebrated his first anniversary as pastor of the First Church, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Feb. 11. During the year the Sunday school attendance has increased and greater interest has been shown in the prayer meetings. Mr. Marsh has just completed a series of four sermons on, "How Do We Know?"

Dr. W. O. Lewis, European representative of the Foreign Mission Society, is in Russia distributing the clothing sent on the Second Ship of Fellowship. A report from him written at Athens, Greece, stated that he had found the steamship "Manitowoc" in port and was about to board her for the voyage to Odessa. En route to Athens, he stopped at Lausanne, where the important conference about the political situation in the Near East was in session. There he had the privilege of meeting Admiral Bristol.

Rev. John A. Howard, of India, writes that leprosy continues to be a dreaded disease and that only 9,000 of the 500,000 to 1,000,000 lepers are segregated.

Rev. Charles H. Masten, who turned aside from the pastorate long enough to assist in the campaign for the prohibition enforcement act known as the Wright Act, has accepted the pastorate of the Sunnyside Church, Los Angeles.

A Lutheran building for the students of Cornell University is to be erected as a Lutheran center for student work. The cost of the building and equipment is placed at $92,700. The New York and the New England synods are back of the plans.

The First Avenue Church of Toronto has built a unique memorial to its war heroes in the form of a Sunday-school hall. The memorial which was recently completed was dedicated this month. The enrolment of the school is 700 with an average weekly attendance of 500. Rev. W. T. Graham has been the pastor of this church for fifteen years.

The Baptist Institute for Christian Workers, Philadelphia, recently cancelled the mortgages outstanding on its property. This leaves a property valued at $250,000 entirely free of debt. In addition the institute has about $100,000 in invested funds. The property and the other assets have been the accumulation of the last eleven years. The school has been crowded this session and steps are being taken to complete the fifth story in the near future.

(Continued on page 100)

Going to Stockholm?

Join a small congenial travel group and add knowledge and fellowship to the inspiration of the Baptist World Alliance meetings.

Membership in two select parties limited to 25 each, now available.

The Temple Tours offer the following personally conducted parties at a remarkably low figure for the high quality of service rendered:

1. Stockholm, Berlin, Dresden, Switzerland, Rome, Paris, etc., under leadership of Judson B. Thomas.
2. Stockholm, Berlin, Munich, Switzerland, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, etc., contacts with the Mohammedan world and mission stations. Under leadership of Herbert Hines.

For itineraries and full information write immediately to

Judson B. Thomas or Herbert Hines
612 N. Pine Ave. 193 N. Harrison Ave.
Chicago, Ill. Kankakee, Ill.

STOCKHOLM EUROPE THE HOLY LAND

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., February 24, 1923 No. 4

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.
REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.
SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.
ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines) $125.00. No time or space discounts.
CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.
BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 98 |
| EDITORIAL | 101 |
| WHAT THE BIBLE MEANS TO ME: A SYMPOSIUM | 104 |
| BOARD, BIBLE AND MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, by J. W. Weddell | 106 |
| THE PROBLEM OF THE VILLAGE CHURCH BUILDING | 107 |
| THE MODERN SAILOR MAN, by a Navy Chaplain | 108 |
| MISSIONARY TEST TUBES, by Constance Jackson | 109 |
| A RECORD OF RECENT DENOMINATIONAL ACHIEVEMENTS | 110 |
| OPEN FORUM | 112 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 113 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 114 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 116 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 117 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 125 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 126 |

Budge It

"Do you recommend the placing of THE BAPTIST and Missions in the church budget and in this way provide for every family in the church?" What a foolish question to ask an editor. Who would not recommend any plan which brought about such desirable results? And quite aside from our selfish interests we do believe that any plan faithfully worked will bring lasting results to the local church. We do need denominationally intelligent church members. The denominational journal will keep you posted on the work of Baptists around the world. We are not sticklers for the budget plan, for any plan will work if you budge it.

Killam's Kollum

They Are Broadcasting

The woman's Bible class of the First Church, Wellington, Kan., sends THE BAPTIST to the public library of its city. The Blackfoot woman's union at Blackfoot, Idaho, is doing the same thing in its city. How about those native pastors in Porto Rico? We have the names of a dozen who read English readily, all of them vouched for by Missionary Ford. Six of them have been cared for by good friends—shall we forget the other six? Where can you spend $3 to better advantage? Fifty-two weekly visits from the states and twelve great inspirational visits of our missionary magazine.

We Recommend Burial

"Killam wrote about 'salt' being needed. It seems to me that he overlooks the fact that some animals care little or nothing for salt, and thus refuse to respond to 'salting.' I believe something else is needed."—Rev. E. H. Clark, Albion, Neb. This is the way of the world. We succeed in solving one problem and in so doing create another. We are like the doctor who cures one complaint and aggravates another. We felt that what most folks needed was to be given a little "salt" in the form of facts that thereby a thirst might be created for the things which refresh our lives. Now we find a Baptist genus who refuses "salt." No wonder the pastor thinks something else is necessary. What do we suggest? Burial. The church member who knows nothing about his denomination cares nothing about it. Why should he cumber the ground?

Disappointment

Ministers, like all men, meet with disappointment. We were asked to address a gathering in a well-known church in the Middle West. A few days after our acceptance of the invitation the pulpit committee asked us to meet with them. We could hear our own heart beats. Was the day of deliverance from bondage at hand? We met the committee on the appointed minute. We put on our most pleasant smile. We attempted to look wise. The chairman made a pretty little speech and we instinctively felt that the zero hour had been reached. It had. The secretary then handed us a list of the names of applicants and said, "What do you know about these men?" Our eyes ran down the list. Our name was found wanting. We took the midnight train for home. Some ministers are always telling about the number of calls they have and for full seven years no church has so much as winked at us. It is a bitter disappointment indeed.

A Distressing Disappointment

THUS far the response of the churches and individuals to the appeal for a special offering on Jan. 21 for European relief work has been a distressing disappointment. Only a small portion of the amount required to carry out the program of relief in Russia and Northern Europe during the winter and spring has been received. Indeed, as yet, not nearly enough has been forwarded to the Foreign Mission Society to enable it to meet the requirements up to this date. We have been on the point of instructing Commissioner J. H. Rushbrooke by cablegram to make no more expenditures on our account without further word from us. The thought of such a cablegram is in itself extremely painful when we consider the tides of suffering in Europe in the dead of winter, and in Russia especially. It is humiliating too, in view of the comfort which prevails in America.

But we were planning to send a cablegram to Commissioner Rushbrooke when several persons urged that a little more time be allowed for the remittance of funds contributed on Jan. 21 or later. Therefore the cablegram has been postponed for a few days, until church treasurers can be urged once more to forward immediately to George B. Huntington, treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, such funds as are available for European relief.

Not later than March 15, a cablegram must be sent indicating whether Northern Baptists have enabled the Foreign Mission Society to continue its relief work in Europe a few months longer, or whether it must be suddenly discontinued. A total of about $200,000 is required. The reports of Dr. W. O. Lewis, our own special representative in Europe, as well as those of Commissioner Rushbrooke, indicate that in Russia especially our utmost effort is required. It is hoped that not a dollar which is intended for European relief will be held back a day longer by churches or individuals. Once more, let us have fellowship with Him through fellowship with the sufferings of His children.

JAMES H. FRANKLIN.

New York City.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 98)

Dr. James Asa White, general secretary of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, was injured in the Aurora-Elgin wreck, Jan. 21. He spent several days in the West Suburban Hospital, Chicago.

Feb. 27—March 11 twenty Baptist churches in Cleveland will hold evangelistic services, and twenty visiting evangelists will assist the local pastors.

America exported to China 8,500,000,000 cigarettes in 1922 as against 641,000,000 in 1913, which amounted to $17,000,000 in 1922 and $1,000,000 in 1913. However, the demand for American cigarettes is decreasing in Japan. No 25 per cent decrease here.

Some ministers who are pastors of local churches might well carry the title, "pastors-at-large." Rev. James McGee of Calvary Church, New Haven, Conn., is one of these. He has been called upon to address in recent months fifty or sixty organizations, associations and conventions outside his regular duties as pastor.

(Continued on page 128)

THE WORLD TASK OF NORTHERN BAPTISTS

No. 2. HEALERS OF MULTITUDES

"Heal the sick"

Fifty-two physicians and 67 nurses, including women missionaries of our Woman's Board, are today carrying on a ministry of healing in the non-Christian world. These are assisted by 200 native doctors and nurses.

The first medical missionary sailed from America in 1821 and began work in Burma. Today there are 28 hospitals and 55 dispensaries in service.

During the year 1921 our medical missionaries furnished treatment to 206,930 patients. A clinical record of each patient showed that a total of 422,134 treatments were given during the year.

Medical missionary work is done on all fields except Japan. This healing ministry is deeply appreciated by Chinese, Indians, Burmans, Africans, who out of their poverty gave in fees $85,159 toward its support last year in contrast with $73,509 during the preceding year.

Medical missions also emphasize evangelism. Church services are conducted at all hospitals. Missionaries and native preachers engage in personal work among the patients. Many a patient has found Christ, the Saviour, by first coming to know him as the Great Physician.

You who made a pledge to the New World Movement and paid it had a share in this healing ministry. Your continued financial support is needed to maintain its service in the future.

Checks should be sent to your State Collecting Agent or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Next Week—No. 3. Teachers of Nations

AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

(Corporate name for use in wills)

The fiscal year closes April 30, 1923

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

New Americans and the Oldest Americans

SOME years ago at a meeting of the May Anniversaries a stalwart Indian chief, converted through the work of our Home Mission Society, was speaking of his own experience and of his interest in the work the society was doing for our country. Simply and hesitatingly he spoke, but with the eloquence of sincerity. At the close of his brief speech he paused, pointed at the great American flag which overhung the platform and in a half-deprecating way said, "I, too, am an American." The audience burst into wild applause as they caught the significance of this modest assertion of one who, more than any of the rest of us, could claim to be by virtue of an unbroken lineage of centuries, a son of America.

In the Survey three years ago there was outlined something of the work which the Home Mission Society sought to do for these oldest Americans, and now in the new manual, "On the March," the story is given of the three years of work under the unified plans of our Promotion Board. It seems that the work among the Indians, as in almost all departments, has had a gratifying advance. For example, our college at Bacone, Okla., has been developed until it is now the best school in the country for the Indians, with an enrolment of 225, representing twenty different tribes. The Indian orphanage has also been greatly strengthened. The striking fact however, is that this development has almost wholly been due to gifts from the Indians themselves, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The foregoing is but one of many indications that what we have hoped is already coming true—that our home mission investments are really insurance premiums on the life of America and are already paying dividends. No one can compute the value of our investment in Negro schools for the South, and of our aid to the churches of their race in our northern cities in handling the grave problems arising out of the great racial migration to the North during the late war. The steadfast stand for law and order of one great Negro church and pastor during a time of terrible race rioting, and the influence of our Negro Baptists in checking political and moral corruption in the black belt, would alone repay the investment of millions.

What our older immigrant races of Nordic stock have done for America is undeniable, though not sufficiently recognized. The German Baptist churches, who have their separate organization, are an example to us all in good management, generous giving, loyalty to the faith and general dependableness. But by the thousands they are represented also in our American Baptist churches, where one good German deacon or trustee, with his common sense, loyalty, generosity and reliability will often serve as a stabilizer for a score of our vivacious, enthusiastic native sons whose efforts are likely at times to be injudicious and discontinuous. Consider, too, what such names as Gleiss, Otto and Lipphard mean to the general work of our denomination.

And our Scandinavian Baptist brethren, of whom the Swedish Baptists are the strongest body, are a constant comfort and delight to us. What excellent edifices, what fine-appearing congregations, what cultivated and warm-hearted ministers, what singers, what splendid young people they have! In our cities where so many of our smaller churches struggle on under multiplied discouragements and often appear to be fighting a losing battle for existence it is unspeakably cheering to visit one after another of these newer American churches and to find them invariably well-filled with alert, virile, upstanding men, women and children, a cheerful, conquering army of the dawn and not a weary, discouraged rear-guard of the evening. And consider how much our American churches owe to them. Count the several Petersons in prominent denominational service, and Anderson at the head of our promising new International Seminary, Rasmussen in Minnesota and many another in general work or in the pastorate or a tower of strength in some one of our strong churches.

BUT it is not alone these newer Americans who are among the most valuable reinforcements of our American Baptist work, but there are elements of greatest promise also in our newest Americans, who are not of the Northern European stock which furnished our earlier immigration material and which was more readily assimilable with the original Anglo-Saxon stock. In a recent issue of THE BAPTIST it was pointed out by Dr. Charles A. Brooks, from his intimate knowledge of conditions among our foreign-speaking peoples, that a new and perilous spirit of independence and antagonism is manifesting itself among some of these foreign groups in our land, which is making our work at once more necessary and more difficult. He tells what he would do with a million dollars to meet this alarming condition. But the report of what the Home Mission Society and our city mission societies have begun so well, as related in "On the March" and more briefly intimated by Dr. Brooks in his article, shows clearly that these sources of peril may be made the media of our hope for America, if the condition is handled in a large way and in time. What our Baptist pastor, Kralicek, and younger Bohemian and Slavic preachers have done is promise of great things in future.

These newest Americans may in some crisis be the saving of America.

Painless Spirituality

WE LATELY had occasion to determine the knowledge of a group of local church members in regard to some vital Christian principles. The results were disappointing to us and equally so to them. They at once propounded the question: "Why is it that we do not know these simple facts about our relationships to the Lord Christ and the local church?"

That was a splendid reaction for them to give, and it bodes well for the future of our denomination if their reaction becomes that of all our local church members. So we propose here to give two reasons why the average local church member does not know some very fundamental things about his Christianity and church membership.

We are told quite confidently by one who has tried it that there is no such thing as painless dentistry if there is real work to be done, and it is quite as confidently stated that there is no such thing as painless Christianity or church membership where the work of the Lord is being done.

We therefore state frankly that many church members are ignorant concerning their duties because the processes of testing and receiving them were hasty and insufficient. To take any one into an organization which has a definite set of requirements, without letting the applicant know beforehand what obligations were involved, is not an exhibition either of Christianity or common sense. We beguiled the applicant with an implied promise of painless spirituality and then it turned out to be a painful process of forsaking sin and readjusting all of life under the will of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Just as plainly we state next that church members are ignorant concerning their obligations and opportunities because, after they have been swept into membership, no one informs them definitely and positively what is expected of them in their new relationship. We often hear some church leaders, who are wedded to precedents and rutted in unscriptural practices, say that it is all right to hurry people into the church because you can instruct them after they are safely in the fold. Yes, perhaps, but it is not done and has not been done. Too often, once they have been received, they are left to flounder along alone except for unwise and improper approaches for money. Many churches try to separate people and their money through numerous small demands in the hope that it will be a painless operation, then later they learn their error.

Our Lord never meant giving to be a painless operation, for it is part of the process of a sacrificial cross and must hurt to be glorious.

Conversion, regeneration, salvation and church membership all involve great and important interests and obligations, and should be carefully dealt with under the plans made by the one who planned them all for the uplift of lost souls and their redeemed lives. Conversion is not a painless experience for it involves breaking away from the tight bondage of sin. The act of regeneration is an act of God, and it must immediately be followed by growing pains as we undertake to grow in grace and in the knowledge and love of the Lord Jesus Christ. Be sure to notice that word LORD. Salvation is a life process, and only those that endure to the end shall be saved. The church was provided to help the redeemed along the path of salvation so that the weak could have the help of the strong, and the strong could have the help that comes from a ministry to the weak, and both together could help save the world. Neither helping nor being helped is a painless operation when there is a world to save.

To know is very often to do. Our people want to know and they are not doing the work of the Lord in their own lives or throughout the world because worn-out church practices and ignorant prejudices bar the way.

There is no such thing as a painless spirituality. The way of the Cross is a way of pain and weariness. Ignorance too often means death. Ah, yes; death, and surely that is not painless for there is a sting in it that lasts long. Knowledge is power and power is painful because it involves sacrifice, vision, service and production, or there is no knowledge.

We have too much ignorance and not enough knowledge in our local churches. Let us proceed to change the situation. It will be a painful process, but worth while for our own souls and for our Lord and Master. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Let Us Not Stop Now

ON ANOTHER page will be found a statement from Secretary Franklin of the Foreign Mission Society with reference to the failure of the churches up to this date to collect sufficient funds for the continuance of the program of relief work in Europe through the rest of the winter and into the spring. This is indeed a distressing announcement. Surely it must be due largely to the failure on the part of the churches and individuals to realize that their offerings are required immediately.

For the last two and a half years, our people have found much satisfaction in the thought that their large shipments of clothing and their special contributions for the purchase of food have done much to relieve suffering on the part of many in the war-stricken countries of Europe. It would be a pity if there were a failure in the last half of the last year of the three-year period for which the program was planned. With the Southern Baptists of America, and with the Baptists of England and of other countries our own people through the Foreign Mission Society joined in the three-year program. Let the churches heed the request that the remittance of funds contributed for European relief be made promptly.

Dr. W. O. Lewis, special representative of the Foreign Mission Society, is now in Russia, and Commissioner Rushbrooke has visited that country since he was in America a few months ago. Our own representatives are telling us that the suffering of multitudes is almost beyond description.

A Page of Opinion

An Appraisal and a Prophecy

IN THE Living Age during the past summer there appeared an article on "Coming Things" by Walter Rathenau. The article was copied from the Frankfurter Zeitung of June 28. This article was published shortly after the assassination of the great German statesman. Rathenau was a Jew. His article is a wonderful exposition of the primacy of spiritual forces. We regret that we cannot print it in full. The following paragraph which is an appraisal of the present world situation and the prediction of a better day, will indicate the character of the document:

"The uncertainty of our age, and the hesitation of its wise men to form appraisals and judgments, is without example. Never before has such a surplus of undisciplined intellects existed upon our globe, encouraging and justifying the haphazard and arbitrary opinions that their emotions suggest. Our æsthetic standards are wavering and uncertain; our affections and aversions shift from their poles abruptly; our ideas of what is proper and just and logical have no firm foundation. Since anything can be proved, contradictory opinions are demonstrated daily, and we accept each demonstration. None the less, a few are aware that even today the little group of men who incarnate the creative faculties of the race, because they draw their inspiration and convictions from the depths of their intuition —that these rare spirits, no matter what their origin and vocation, glow with the same faith and preach an identical message.

"We assume no miracle when we predict that a day will come when a majority of mankind will learn to search their own hearts and souls, and to form their judgment and conduct in respect to every-day affairs in conformity with their loftiest motives. It will not be a cold, mechanical life that we shall then lead, even though its dramatic and tragic motives of fear and emulation have vanished, even if many a delusive pleasure and secret joy is stifled. Our higher will will kindle higher passions; and the fact that this will no longer occupies itself with mere physical and animal necessities and desires will be its charter of freedom. The new age will not be one of indifference for our fellow men, of cold scientific charity and courteous aloofness; for when our degrading struggle for bread and position ceases, when competition and rivalry, envy and malice, fawning and arrogance have disappeared, their place will be taken, as it is today in the case of our noblest spirits, and during heroic crises, by a sense of responsibility and solicitude for the community, by mutual helpfulness and solidarity."

"Blessings in Disguise"

THE Lutheran is a high-class denominational journal, the organ of the Lutheran church in America. It is a stalwart defender of the Lutheran faith. We have had occasion to disagree with its utterances in a few instances, especially where the work of Baptists in Europe was referred to as the work of "interlopers." The interesting comment which follows does not deny that the 60,000 Baptists in Scandinavia have been a tonic to the predominant church.

"Our Baptist periodical, THE BAPTIST, on page 1465, issue of Dec. 20, defends Baptist missioning in Sweden. Dr. G. Arvid Hagstrom, of St. Paul, Minn., writes the article. He reports that his denomination's work in Sweden began seventy-five years ago; that one of the first "missionaries" was persecuted by the state church, was banished to Denmark, and there converted Andreas Wiberg, who came to America and founded several Swedish churches. He also states that Baptists are among the denominations—Lutherans, Mission Friends, and Methodists—who are invited to participate in the three-hundredth anniversary of Gothenburg. He says opposition is an incentive to faith. It is quite possible that Baptist agitation has warned the Swedish church as to the ever-imminent dangers of becoming mechanical. Dr. Hagstrom remarks that 98.+ per cent of the Swedes are Lutherans. It must be greatly satisfying to our Baptist friends to feel that only 60,000 are needed to keep the 98 per cent in line. In some sections of Christendom, it would require a much larger minority party. Possibly the Swedish church is not so bad after all. But speculation aside, if the Baptists are responsible for the present virile churches of Scandinavia, they can well be called blessings in disguise rather than interlopers. After all, a tonic has its uses, even though old-fashioned folk name it "bitters."

Lloyd George on America's Policy

SPEAKING recently before the Foreign Policies Association in New York City, Mr. Philip Kerr, former secretary to Mr. Lloyd George, quoted the latter as saying to him, in regard to the policy of America in withdrawing from Europe:

"I am afraid this is going to make the solution of the problem impossible. As long as the United States is represented in these post-war conferences, you have a power which is disinterested, which stands steadily for moderation and common-sense and good-will. Not only that, but you have a collective body in the room, a body representing all the great, or many of the great nations, and it is possible for every nation to yield its own national point of view to something which is manifestly for the collective advantage of the civilized world. But now the conferences in the future are going to be a trial of strength, a tug of war, between England and France. There is going to be no authoritative party which can help lift the discussions on to a plane which is above the purely national plane. Each side is going to proceed on a purely selfish basis, which alone will prevent a solution of every problem. You are going to get France and England more and more head-on, because there is nobody to help lift the thing above its being merely a collision between the interests of two nations on to a more collective and more world-wide point of view."

What the Bible Means to Me

In our program of activities for February the Bible has been featured. "The Baptist" sent to a number of ministers and laymen a post-card, upon which they were asked the question: "What does the Bible mean to you?" The result in part is to be found on these pages.

The Book of Power

FROM the day when I heard Dr. Edward Judson preach from the text: "Enter ye in at the straight gate," to this moment when I have just finished my devotional Bible study the Bible has held a central place in my Christian life.

I entered in and became a disciple of Christ on that never-to-be-forgotten night when I heard the text above mentioned.

As I was leaving the church an old gentleman, whom I did not know and whom I have never seen since, laid his hand on my shoulder and said, "Young man, you made a good start tonight. Remember Isaiah 41: 10 through 13." I looked that passage up and have given it to hundreds of young men in the years that have followed.

The Bible means everything to me. Through its blessed pages I came to know Jesus Christ. Through the study of the Gospels I came to love the One who loved me and gave himself for me. To me it is the Book of Power. I have found it the power of God in my preaching and have seen men turn away from sin and passion and prejudice under its searching truth. I have used it thousands of times when dealing with individuals, and when everything else has failed I have seen one text from this Book bring men to genuine repentance for sin and to faith in Jesus Christ. I have seen the anxious seeker after light come out of the darkness of sin and unbelief, through the reading of its pages. I have seen men at midnight in Chinatown, New York, and men in many universities and colleges listening to the same truths of this Book, and I have seen the college man and the wastral yield to the same message and find peace of soul, victory over sin, and life eternal. No other book in the world, that I know of, produces such results.

When I am called to minister to the sick, the afflicted and the dying I do not carry a copy of Browning or Tennyson or Shakespeare, or any of the writers of prose or poetry that I love. I carry a copy of the Book that never fails, and I have seen the twenty-third Psalm and the fourteenth chapter of John bring hope to the hopeless, comfort to those who can never have health and victory in the hour when the soul is passing into another world.

With the passing of the years I love it more and more, and when the hour comes that my ministry is over here I expect to pillow my head upon its marvelous promises and go to be in the presence of the One who gave it to us.

FREDERICK E. TAYLOR.
Indianapolis.

The Ever-New Book

THE Bible is God's revelation of himself and his great purposes for mankind. It is food for the soul. Like as we feed the body and culture the mind so the soul needs food and culture that it too may develop into Christlikeness after the pattern of the God-man. Finiteness can never comprehend Infinity but the Bible teaches us how to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. The Bible is the book—the ever-new book, especially when the Holy Spirit is our teacher and guide, as he will reveal to us the deep things, the hidden things. (1 Cor. 2:9-16.) The Bible is my constant companion, my treasure house with which none compare.

Detroit. ALBERT H. FINN.

The Book of Life

The Bible is to me a Book of Life. Here I find the way of life set before me in such fashion that I am left without excuse if I do not observe its laws and enter into its abundance. To me it speaks the ultimate word concerning those great spiritual realities which are the abiding concern of the whole race. It brings me face to face with the Eternal, the Redeeming God—the God whom Jesus revealed—and in the midst of human life shows God's way on. It is to me the one written record through which God speaks so clearly and directly to my conscience and my heart, that it is in very truth the word of God to me.

E. LeRoy Dakin.
Brooklyn.

The Book of Knowledge

EVERY one who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can, among Europeans and Americans, form a proper substitute. Western civilization is founded upon the Bible; our ideas, our wisdom, our philosophy, our literature, our art, our ideals come more from the Bible than from all other books put together. It is a revelation of divinity and humanity; it contains the loftiest religious aspirations along with a candid representation of all that is earthly, sensual and devilish. I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women; but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible. For in the Bible we have profound thought beautifully expressed; we have the nature of boys and girls, of men and women more accurately chartered than in the works of any modern novelist or playwright. You can learn more about human nature by reading the Bible than by living in New York.

The so-called Revised Version and modern condensed versions are valuable for their superior accuracy in individual instances; they may be used as checks and comments; but for steady reading, and in all public places where the Bible is read aloud let us have the noble, marbly English of 1611. When I hear any other translation read in church I feel as I should feel if I went to the theater to hear Shakespeare, and the actor should begin Hamlet's soliloquy something like this: "I wonder whether or not I shall exist after death? Is it finer to endure a continuous run of bad luck or to win out by suicide?"

I say frankly that one of the reasons why I love God with all my heart and soul and strength is because the beauty of the universe came from him. He made the sun and the stars, the mountains, the sea, the trees and the flowers. Joyce Kilmer said:

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

It is refreshing to hear a note of faith from a modern professor and it is always encouraging to see evidences of humility on the part of those who have much learning.

—William Lyons Phelps in Christian Index.

A Directive Agency

A PRICELESS possession. The revelation of my Saviour, Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The matchless, forgiving love of my Heavenly Father. The repository of men's touch with God, whereby through the Holy Spirit, without the destruction of their individuality, men were enabled to set down God's thoughts and their thoughts of God. A directive agency under the divine Spirit through its teachings to Christlike living.

R. W. Hobbs.

Fargo, N. D.

The Message of God

THE Bible to me is the message of our heavenly Father revealing his attitude toward men, his provision for their salvation and his will as to their lives. It is an infallible and all-sufficient message and no life lived in harmony with its teachings can be a failure. The greatest need of humanity is to hear, accept and comply with its teachings.

D. G. Garabrant.

Bloomfield, N. J.

A Message of Increasing Power

I HAVE spent thirty-five years of my life preaching and teaching the Bible. One of the most wonderful things about the Book to me is the fact that after all this time, it is still fresh to me and that its messages come to me every year with increasing penetrative power, convicting me of sin, displaying to me the holy, redeeming love of God in Christ, and encouraging me to believe in the final triumph of righteousness in my own heart and in the world.

Frederick L. Anderson.

Newton Center, Mass.

It Feeds, Builds, Satisfies

THE Bible to me is the Word of God in the most absolute sense. It leads me, feeds me, builds me up, satisfies me and makes me wise unto salvation through the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son. All this and more the Bible claims for itself, and all this and more the Bible accomplishes in every life where it has the right of way.

Wm. L. Pettingill.

Wilmington, Del.

The Book Divine

"LIKE a star of the morning in its beauty,
Like the sun is the Bible to my soul;
Shining clear on the path of love and duty,
As I hasten on my journey to the goal.

"It's a light in the wilderness of sorrow,
And a lamp to the weary pilgrim's way;
And it guides to the bright eternal morrow,
Shining more and more unto the perfect day.

"It's the voice of a friend that's ever near me
In the trials and the burdens here below;
As I walk through the valley it will cheer me,
Till the glory of his kingdom I shall know.

"It shall stand in its beauty and its glory
When the earth and the heavens pass away:
Ever telling the blessed wondrous story,
Of the loving Lord, the only living way."

"Holy Bible, Book divine,
Precious treasure, thou art mine;
I will ever cling to the dear old Holy Bible,
As I hasten on my journey to the Goal."

C. Edw. LaReau.

Detroit.

The Story of Jesus Christ

IT IS the record of the developing religious and ethical consciousness of the Jewish people. Its supreme value to me is in the story of the divine life of Jesus Christ among men; their reactions to him, their experiences of him and their organized purpose to "carry on" his teachings for the salvation of the world. It comes to me as a message of God; it inspires and commands me; it holds my mind, my spirit and my life and to give its truth to the world is my daily delight.

Charles H. Rust.

Scranton, Pa.

THE Bible is my comfort in times of discouragement and defeat. My inspiration and hope in my service, and my positive and unquestioned authority in my life.

George M. Vercoe.

Flint, Mich.

The Word of God

THE Bible means to me nothing less than what its writers affirm it is: the Word of God to man by men through the ministry of the Holy Spirit, witnessing to man of the matchless power, the inexorable justice and the unapproachable holiness of his Creator; revealing in sacrificial type, fulfilled in the suffering unto the judgment-death of God's well-beloved and only begotten Son, the incorruptible righteousness and the incomparable love of our God and Saviour, and exhibiting in the freeness and fulness of salvation by grace through faith both the wisdom and power of our glorious God.

Joshua Gravett.

Denver.

The Book of Truth

THE Bible gives me Truth untold in any other book in the world. Because every experience of mine verifies its statements I can trust its promises when they reach beyond the realm of my experience. It is the only uplifting power in dealing with lost humanity. The Bible offers the only solution of life's problems. It has upheld me in life, and it promises to lead me into eternal fellowship with the Master. Hence, the Bible is my guide for this life and for eternity.

John H. Chapman.

Chicago.

The Supreme Authority

I DO not hesitate to define the Bible as the word of God. It is to me the record of men's faltering quest for him and his redemptive quest for them in Christ. In the experiences which it depicts I find moral and spiritual guidance. And in the New Testament's portrayal of Jesus, with his promised spirit, I find an adequate dynamic and the supreme authority for my personal life and for organized Christianity."

Maurice A. Levy.

Pittsfield, Mass.

Board, Bible and Missionary Conference

By J. W. WEDDELL

FOUR days with the missionaries and the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Society—a great and notable company, and Chicago enjoyed the privilege of entertaining them.

The meetings began with the Sunday services of Feb. 11 on which day the churches, many of them in Chicago and vicinity, were permitted to hear most of the personnel in the Baptist pulpits. We heard Chairman Frederick L. Anderson at Morgan Park where he was student pastor for a year—several of us have had that joy following graduation. Dr. Joseph C. Robbins was at the First Church, Dr. James A. Francis at Englewood, and so on. Those present during the meetings were: President W. S. Abernethy; Vice-president Joshua Gravett; Chairman Frederick L. Anderson; Secretaries P. H. J. Lerrigo, William B. Lipphard, James H. Franklin, Joseph C. Robbins, Earle B. Cross; Treasurer George B. Huntington. Board members: Henry Bond, C. W. Chamberlin, James A. Francis, G. A. Hagstrom, Emory W. Hunt, W. A. Jameson, Carter Helm Jones, T. Otto, Carey J. Pope, Henry B. Robins, M. Joseph Twomey—a goodly fellowship. And besides these, Missionaries John T. Proctor, Clarence E. Chaney, Robert B. Longwell, Joseph Taylor, Henry B. Benninghoff, Lewis B. Rogers, O. Brouillette, Herbert W. Kirby, Seymore E. Moon, Charles A. Collett, George H. Waters and George J. Geis. All of these had some public part in the services, and in addition, the missionary recruits spoken of later. It was good to see the faces and hear the voices of these, and many availed themselves of this opportunity.

First Day's Sessions

It was ministers' meeting day and the pastors had provided Y. M. C. A. Hall for a mass meeting of all the people. Rev. Perry J. Stackhouse presided. Prof. F. L. Anderson outlined in a statesmanlike way the purpose of the missionary enterprise which he conceived to be to meet the world's ignorance, poverty and sickness with the panacea of the gospel. Rev. John T. Proctor of East China thrilled the company with his presentation of the problem of missionary administration. He dealt especially on the inspiration of work necessary for progressive development. Rev. Clarence E. Chaney in a swift, stimulating way spoke of the work marvelously climaxing in Burma, Karen and the hill country. Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo raised a laugh as he told of some experiences he and Mr. King had had with the white ants of Africa, and then enforced a sober lesson on cooperation and team work.

The noon luncheon at the Morrison hotel, which was headquarters during the meetings, was participated in by many from the churches. The speaking lasted until 3:30 p. m., Professor Anderson and Missionary Taylor giving the principal addresses, Secretary Robbins and others also took part. It was regretted that Dr. Aitchison could not be present. The budget committee and sectional divisions of the board held meetings during the afternoon, the day closing with a missionary rally at the First German Church in charge of the German young people.

Second Day

The Women's Mission Union was the hostess to our missionary visitors on the second day. Belden Avenue Church was filled to overflowing. All the churches were represented, with Oak Park, Austin, Englewood, Morgan Park, Woodlawn and Garfield Park leading. Two new foreign circles were received. All the missionaries and the pastors were given carnations by the ladies. The church, of which Dr. Hoyt is pastor, furnished a sumptuous lunch. It has three missionary members, nine preparing for the ministry and five others to go abroad. At 10 a. m. a missionary address on Waseda, Japan, was given by Dr. Benninghoff at the Northern Seminary. At 11 a. m. the Women's Mission Union was called to order at Belden Avenue by Mrs. R. P. Fales, president of the union. After brief announcements, Rev. Joshua Gravett gave a Bible exposition on Elijah and Elisha as typical respectively of foreign missions and home missions. He gave a particularly spiritual application of the crossing of the waters by these two great men. Mrs. Harper, of Burma, spoke about the work in Burma and said that the stations are waiting anxiously for helpers to be sent over, while a medical worker is especially needed in the north country where she and her husband labor. Rev. Clarence E. Chaney spoke further on Burma, his field also. The battle with Buddhism is acute today in educational lines; Christianity is winning. His picture of Rangoon 100 years ago as compared with the altered city of today was moving and reassuring. Dr. Henry B. Benninghoff naturally spoke for Japan. Japan, he said, is not racially militaristic. She learned war from our so-called Christian nations. For fifteen years Mr. and Mrs. Benninghoff have worked in our school at Waseda and they have found a welcome in all circles for peace and Christian evangelism. The Japanese government itself is assisting in Christian schools. At Tokyo our educational work is growing by leaps and bounds, and there is encouragement in all directions. Christianity has come to be seen as indigenous in Japan.

Vision

"BEHOLD, this dreamer cometh; let us slay him!"
From fields of Dothan unto Calvary's hill
Rang out the cry through long, prophetic ages,
And—God forgive us!—it is ringing still.
Dreamer of many names and myriad guises,
Men yet shall cry, who catch thy spirit's gleam.
Vanquished by thine eternal resurrection,
"This dreamer cometh; let us hear his dream!"
—Hazel B. Poole, in "British Weekly."

Dr. D. Joseph Twomey, of the Peddie Memorial School, Newark, opened the afternoon session very happily with a story or two and then proceeded to give a Bible exposition on "Missionary Heroes," taking Barnabas as his model and after that Mark, and first of all Saul of Tarsus, three men with a great enthusiasm and a full obedience.

Rev. S. B. Rogers, of Burma, was introduced to tell further of our mission to the Burmese. Judson, he said, has not been surpassed either as a translator or a preacher. There are 160,000 Baptists in Burma today. The Catholics come next and they have but half as many as we have. We are still mainly evangelistic in Burma, though not forgetting educational opportunities and requirements. The time has come to do something more for the more intellectual class who are coming to be more and more accessible.

Dr. Jas. H. Franklin, foreign secretary, expressed his joy at the overflowing house in the midst of Chicago's greatest snowstorm of the year. There are better days ahead, he said. In the countries recently visited, there is, as never before, a readiness for the gospel. As Dr. Cronkite says, people abroad are not born heathen; they are born just little children. Give them the gospel and give it to them early. The religious census of Shanghai College shows 100 per cent converted in the senior class of thirty-one students coming out one by one through the seven or eight years of their course.

Dr. Jos. Taylor put all in a good humor by his genial report of West China, from which he comes. He represents 119,000,000 people. "There is no limit to what God can do here and elsewhere with a church that links up with him. We are allotted 6,000,000 of these as our portion to evangelize. The Chinese are a social people and you can easily get at them with the gospel. At the West China Union University we aim to bring young people, 700 strong, into touch with men and women who know the Bible and thus they are exposed to Christianity."

Dr. Benjamin Otto, who had much to do with the success of the meetings made mention of the death of Miss S. E. Pickett, an active member.

Third Day

The third morning session held at Belden Avenue Church, was made notable by the presentation and designation of the missionary candidates. They were presented by Mr. Longman with a few words appropriate to the occasion. The young men and women came forward and each spoke a few sentences of personal consecration to the work abroad.

Rev. Frederick L. Anderson, as president of the board, addressed the candidates, placing emphasis on the silent but powerful influence of the given life as illustrated in the noble devotion of gifts and talents to the people of heathen lands. Dr. Emory W. Hunt made the prayer of consecration, followed by Dr. Joseph Twomey.

The personnel of the noble company of young people going abroad, twelve in all, is as follows: Mr. Wilfred Danielson, St. Paul, Minn., Minnesota University; going to Assam Joshat Christian schools. Mrs. Danielson, also of the University of Minnesota. Charles Edward Olney, Waterville, Mass., Denison University; going to Assam with his fiancée, Miss Ella L. Caul, also of Denison. Martin S. Engwall, Chicago, University of Chicago, going to Africa along with Mrs. Engwall also of the University of Chicago. Miss Lea Blanche Edgar, Colorado, Colorado College; going to East China, recommended by the women's board. Mr. L. T. Helfrich, Carthage, Ill., University of Chicago; going to China, business department of Shangai College. Bernard Wesley Armstrong, Iowa, Des Moines University; going to Africa with his fiancée, Miss Rhoda Broholm, likewise of Des Moines University. Herman D. Sorg, New Jersey, Northern Baptist Theological Seminary; going to South India. His fiancée, Miss Brueckman from the same seminary, is following a course at Kansas State University.

Those engaged in Chinese school work brought inside facts about developing native leadership in their respective fields. The participants were Messrs. Proctor of East China, Taylor of West China and Waters of South China. New native talent is being dedicated to the service of the Lord.

The National Christian Council of China, newly organized, was reported by Mr. Proctor. Its purpose is to unify the Christian propaganda of all denominations in China. The board voted the needed contribution to this work.

Dr. Rushbrooke sent word to the board of the desperate financial need in Russia.

Rev. O. Brouillette, director of the work in France during and since the war, gave an account of his successful labors there.

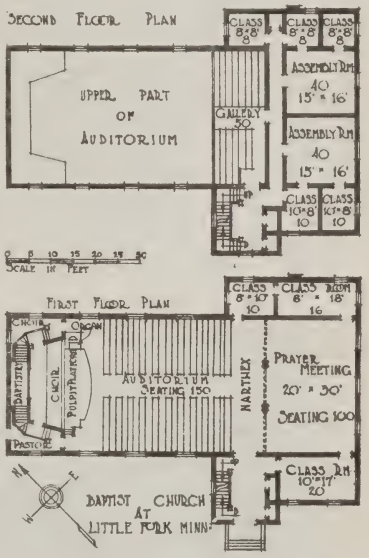
Mr. Daniel Lai, a student at Rush Medical College who is here to prepare for his work abroad, was introduced by Dr. Franklin. He spoke about the value of the preparation in this country for service abroad. Mr. C. S. Maiu, another Chinese student, spoke on some of his experiences.

At the afternoon session Sec'y W. B. Lipphard announced the election of Rev. Earle B. Cross to the position of professor of Hebrew and Old Testament studies at Rochester. Mr. Cross conducted the ensuing conference on the business of the board, followed by Rev. Joseph C. Robbins, who announced the conclusions and recommendations of the board on questions relating to the Burma Mission. He presented some interesting items of progress in India, and Assam.

To point the way of the future, this popular series of meetings closed with a Bible and missionary conference with Rev. G. Arvid Hagstrom presiding. Rev. Jacob Heinrich of the Northern Seminary gave an address. Rev. Herbert W. Kirby of Jorhat told the wonderful story of the building of the new hospital in Assam. He and his wife began the work by putting in their life insurance of $1000. The Lord gave it back in due time and the work has succeeded.

Rev. Seymour E. Moon of the Belgian Congo told the story of African missions, and Mr. Waters of South China brought the good news of how Christian education is seizing hold on the people. Rev. George J. Geis spoke for the Philippines.

The Problem of the Village Church Building



The village or rural church building presents a planning problem in some respects very different from the city church. This fact is well recognized and special study is being given the matter. At the solicitation of the late Dr. Pope, then executive secretary of the Minnesota Convention, our Home Mission Society's department of architecture prepared studies of the building planned for Littlefork, Minn. The architect chosen by Dr. Pope and the church for the work is Mr. Daniel D. Merrill, a native of that state, now removed to New York City.

The problem involved the erection of a building which would, at a cost of $8,000, take care of present needs and at the same time make easily possible the enlargement of the structure later, without, at that later time, having to throw away any of the building investment made today. The building must be a complete and pleasing structure in its appearance today, and it must be equally satisfactory in every respect when enlarged. How well this has been accomplished, the reader may judge by covering over that portion to the left of the tower.

The present structure includes the tower and the gabled end-portion to its right. Churchly in appearance, yet simple and inexpensive in detail, this structure tells its purpose to the growing community. It occupies an ample corner lot, 75x140 feet, on the chief thoroughfare with space reserved for a parsonage. The entrance is through the tower in which are stairs to an upper and a lower floor and, on each floor, are those overcoat closets so essential for a properly planned village or rural church building.

For the present the prayer meeting room will be the auditorium, seating 125. The future auditorium will seat 300; 150 on the first floor, 50 in the gallery and 100 in the expansion area. Choir space holds sixteen, and is raised six inches above the pulpit platform. The future baptistry is back of the choir with its floor on the same level. This insures a full view of the baptismal ordinance by the entire congregation, and makes possible an impressive handling of this occasion by the minister.

The ladies' parlor and prayer meeting room serves as a proper expansion for the auditorium since every auditor will be directly in front of the minister and since also this room is not occupied by a department of the church school. On the second floor we find assembly and class rooms in addition to the three class rooms below. These facilities make possible a departmentalized church school with the little children on the first floor. Social room, kitchen, furnace and other facilities are in the basement.

This simple and attractive building illustrates how it is possible to provide for the devotional, educational and social life of the church even when the amount of money available is relatively small, and yet have a pleasing and permanent edifice. The church is to be congratulated on the completion of this first part of its building program and we hope it may be but a short time when the main auditorium will be added.

The Modern Sailor Man

He wants to get along; he's full of fun; he's religious; he's an idealist

By A NAVY CHAPLAIN

FROM time immemorial it has been the fashion among many writers and speakers to depict the sailor as "a rough guy." The result is that today among most people he has that reputation.

The writer of this article offers no brief for the picturesque sailor man of the days long gone by. He did not know him. It may be true that he was a rough customer, deserving all the abuse heaped upon him. But from several years' experience with the modern sailor of the United States Navy, the writer does offer for him this brief defense.

Here are some of his characteristics:

1. He wants to get along. Eight out of every ten men with whom I talk tell me that they came into the navy to learn a trade. The navy is fast assuming the proportions of a great and large university. Courses in navigation, machinery (steam, gas and electrical), radio, clerical work, pharmacy, cooking and baking, music, carpentry, and common and high-school subjects are given. Any man has a chance to enroll. Competent instructors are provided and books are furnished free. The sailor studies in his spare time. Hundreds of men are enrolled in these courses. When the man's time of enlistment is up he knows a trade, and can go into any community and take his place and contribute his share towards its advancement. Some of them don't? It is true. But isn't it also true that there are some in civilian life who do not take advantage of the opportunities offered them? One hundred men are appointed to the Naval Academy every year, after competitive examinations, where the government spends thousands of dollars on each individual and then graduates him as a commissioned officer in the navy.

2. He saves money. That's a surprise to many people. He gets only $21 per month when he first enlists, and in all likelihood will get only $36 per month for the first year he is in the navy. Yet all that is clear money—for food, clothing and a place to sleep are furnished free. One bank alone in a large city has more than $150,000 in savings accounts for navy men. One of the vice-presidents of that bank told me that navy men were more consistent in saving than civilians. Let's change the phrase then, "He spends money like a drunken sailor," to "He saves money like a sailor!" The sailor who cares can know a trade and have $1000 in the bank at the end of his enlistment of four years.

3. He's full of fun. Who'd like him if he were not? Sometimes, without proper direction, his exuberance takes a wrong path and he runs amuck. And when he does—horrors! He's a rough-neck sailor! But haven't I seen a crowd of university men strip a street car, even to the straps, as they were coming home from a victorious basket-ball game? Haven't I seen a Pullman car robbed of everything in it by a crowd of young men going to a Christian conference? Haven't I seen the men in a fraternity house (maybe I was one of them) turn in fire alarm after fire alarm until several stations answered the fake alarm? Haven't I seen football teams come back from trips with good supplies of silverware? But these were just college pranks! Yet let a bunch of sailors do things like these and from all sides would come universal condemnation. Sailors aren't angels; don't get that idea. They're just normal, red-blooded boys, no worse than any other boys. I've had every kind of a person from a preacher's wife in a university town to my brother back in the sparsely settled regions of Frog Island, in Hamilton County, Illinois, say to me, "Well, they're a pretty rough bunch, aren't they?" The preacher's wife should have known better, for she lives in a place where she could have easily informed herself (she has since changed her mind); but I doubt if my brother ever saw a sailor in uniform. Like most people his authority was: "I've heard so!" They're not a rough bunch. They're just as fine a bunch of men as you will find any place. Morally, they're just as clean; and physically they're better, for they all have to stand a rigid physical test before they can get into the navy.

4. He's religious. I'm speaking comparatively. But he's not demonstrative about it. Hardly any fellow in his late teens is. Yet he can tell about it. In a crowded prayer meeting (it's the truth, it was crowded) in the First Church of a large city, among the dozen or so who talked two were sailors. One of them, Smith, said, "A year ago I was an agnostic, but since I've joined the navy, through the preaching of some chaplains, and the personal work of a consecrated religious work secretary of the 'Y,' I accepted Christ." I baptized him a short time after that into one of the churches of that city. Dunson stood up before his company at muster and said, "Men, the chaplain's Bible class meets just after muster. I'm going, and I'd like to see a lot of you fellows there." About fifty filed in. In the city the "Y" takes sometimes as many as two hundred to church on Sunday nights. I've had as high as thirty-nine men accept Christ in one service. They didn't just hold up their hands, or stand up; but before a crowded house they got up, walked down the aisle, took me by the hand, stood facing their shipmates and publicly, by word of mouth, confessed their Christ. There was no invitation hymn to help them along, no pleading, but just the plain and difficult way presented and the appeal made to their manhood. The visiting ministers and their young people's societies will testify to that.

5. He's an idealist. He enlists at the time of life when ideals are exalted. Navy lore appeals to him. He knows that it's the navy of John Paul Jones, that intrepid warrior of the Revolution, who when his old hulk of a ship was alongside the British ship, and when it caught fire and was about to sink, and when asked by the enemy commander if he was ready to surrender, said, "I have just begun to fight!" It's the navy of Perry, who, when his flagship caught fire in the Battle of Lake Erie, abandoned it, in an open boat rowed to another of his ships, and from that ship brought about the defeat of the enemy and sent that electric message, "We have met the enemy and they are ours!" It's the navy of Farragut, who lashed himself in the rigging of the old Hartford and started up the Mississippi for the forts. When he was told that there were torpedoes ahead, he said, "Damn the torpedoes; go ahead anyhow!" It's the navy of Admiral Dewey who drove from the seas the last despotic power that attempted to enslave men. It's the navy of Sims and 750,000 men who, during the last war, took the millions across and never lost a man! This man comes into the navy feeling that he will become a part of this organization. He goes to sea as a part of the first line of defense of the homeland. He's a policeman of the seas. He preserves peace just as much as your policeman, constable or sheriff.

Just the other day I stood on the dock and saw over 800 men start for sea for the first time. Clear-eyed, clean-bodied, sturdy-limbed, they were. "Well, so long, chaplain," they shouted, as the motor sailors shoved off to take them to their ships. "God bless them, every one, and keep them," I prayed silently. They're a fine bunch of men. I'm proud to work with the modern sailor-man.

Tell People What You Want

Extraordinary results have followed the advertising in our denominational press. In 1914, when there was an approximate debt of $300,000 on the various missionary societies, toward which Mr. Rockefeller made a conditional gift, the entire campaign of publicity was conducted by the committee of laymen, with Dr. Charles L. White serving as its executive secretary, through the denominational press in the form of advertisements, on which from time to time the editors ably and generously commented. The sum was more than raised.

The publicity fell within two periods. The first appeals were made in the early days of July, and believing that a continuation of the appeals until the early days of November would seriously interfere with efforts of the state conventions to raise sufficient funds to meet the maturing obligations of their annual years which stretched from the middle of the summer up to about the first of November, nothing more was said in the papers concerning debt campaigns during this interval. However, the early publicity given in June, following the convention in Boston, led to a steady stream of contributions for the debts. When the matter was called to the attention of the denomination again in November, advertisements and articles were carried weekly, with slight exceptions, until the last week in December. The churches and pastors were not circularized until the very end of the period, when a few hundred letters were written. The entire amount had been raised, in cash contributions or in guarantees, before Dec. 31.

During the succeeding months the stream continued to run, and at the next meeting of the convention in Los Angeles, several thousand dollars were in hand, which were supplemented by sufficient pledges made at the convention to meet the fresh debt of the Foreign Society re-

(Continued on page 124)

Missionary Test Tubes

By CONSTANCE JACKSON

"Often when we return to school Sunday evening after the week-end activities we find ourselves tired. Yet there is always an inward feeling of joy that comes from giving ourselves for others and not dishonoring the One whom we serve.

"I'm so grateful for the course we have had in our Spanish department. After one has studied the characteristics of a people, their language and the peculiarities of the land from which they come, it is fun to watch for these traits in truly live folks.

"The little group of houses in Santa Fe railroad yards sends forth its contribution of boys and girls to our industrial school every Saturday morning. They come clean and dirty, neat and ragged, smiling and crying—but they come! After our worship program they all go to their classes for the morning's work as smiling as the sun that floods our little two-room house.

"On Sunday afternoon the same group with the addition of mothers and an occasional father, gathers for Sunday school. How the boys and girls love the songs and stories and are reluctant to leave even after the benediction!

"Sometimes we feel very feeble because our vocabularies are so limited. When we find a mother tired and discouraged and we can only sympathize with a smile and a word or two, we wonder if, after all, we are helping any. But when these women open their doors to us for cottage prayer meetings, offer to scrub our little school building, or urge us to call on the "lady next door" to bring her the "good tidings," our work is always rewarded and we are thankful for the privilege of being co-workers with Him who went about doing good."—M. J.

This speaks for itself when it is known that the author of the letter is a student at the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago. Theory is useless without practice; it is only when we use our knowledge that it becomes real to us. For forty-two years this school has been graduating successful missionaries who have been trained on this principle. Chicago offers excellent material for such practice, since it contains so many foreign groups among whom the student may test out her theories, prove methods acquired from books and lectures, and actually speak the languages she has been studying in the class room.

The Santa Fe railroad yards represent a fine opportunity to work among Spanish-speaking families, while children of eight or ten nationalities flock into the clubs, classes and kindergarten at Raymond Institute, near the stockyards. Many of them come from very poor families, and their thin bodies and white faces tell the story of undernourishment and malnutrition. It is quite a study in contentment to see these babies eating their morning lunch of graham crackers and milk while the morning sun pours through the windows of the kindergarten room. Parkside Baptist Church presents interesting Sunday-school problems, and every Sunday morning sees students flocking there in large numbers to teach their classes. Practice work also includes surveys of various districts and house to house calls on the families. Classes are never dull with these interesting variations to make theory something real and vital. The girls themselves are glad to testify to that!

"The kind remarks of the Parkside pastor and members are sufficient to let us know that the church appreciates our loyalty. The good attendance and interest in our Sunday-school classes have been most welcome and encouraging rewards."—C. P.

"My practice work this term has been assisting in the kindergarten at Raymond Chapel on Saturdays. I had expected to see poorly dressed children, but they were so ragged and dirty that it was a shock to me. I resolved to help these children to the utmost of my ability to have a few hours of play and happiness and to feel that some one had an interest in them. I learned to take hold of their sticky, grimy little hands without flinching and teach them to play little games of which they had never heard. They were even afraid to take hold of the balls and play with them at first. It was

(Continued on page 127)

CHRISTMAS AT RAYMOND INSTITUTE, CHICAGO

A Record of Recent Denominational Achievements

The New World Movement's part in moving foward the work

Who Pays the Salaries?

There are now forty-one colporter missionaries engaged jointly by the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society. Six missionaries are employed in charge of chapel cars. The salaries of these forty-seven workers are provided through contributions to the New World Movement.

Fourteen New Baptist Churches

During the period of the New World Movement, there have been fourteen new Baptist churches organized in the state of Colorado and sixteen Sunday schools.

A Record Increase in Giving

The District of Columbia Association of Baptist churches reports that last year the churches made a record in giving, showing a comparison of 120 per cent with that of the preceding year. The executive secretary reports that there is every indication that the churches will show at least a similar record this year.

Foreigners in Connecticut

Of the total population of the state of Connecticut, 27 per cent represent foreign born and 30 per cent represent children of foreign born. Responsibility for meeting the spiritual needs of this great mass of people rests in large measure upon Baptists. This is not a local problem, but a national problem.

Five Hundred Students for the Ministry

During the period of the New World Movement, our home mission societies supported ten higher schools for the Negroes and helped to support six other schools. They have enrolled 7,000 students, of whom more than 500 are preparing for the Christian ministry; about 600 are in college departments and 3,000 in academy or high-school departments; the remainder are in special industrial and grade classes. About 300 professions of faith are made each year by students, and very few graduate without becoming members of a church.

Aggressive Evangelism

During the last year, the American Baptist Home Mission Society with twenty-two field evangelists serving the year round, and special evangelists engaged for temporary periods, conducted forty conferences in fourteen different states. The salaries of these twenty-two evangelists are made possible through gifts to the New World Movement.

Evangelizing the Jew

Through the stimulus of the New World Movement, the Baptists of Buffalo have undertaken a remarkable task in establishing a mission among the Jews. A building located in a district of 20,000 Jews has been acquired; it is worth $20,000, and its operating expenses amount to $2,000 per year.

The Best of Its Kind

The college for American Indians at Bacone, Okla., under the direction of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, is recognized as the best school in the country for Indians. During the last three years, ninety students in that school were baptized on profession of faith. At present it has an enrolment of 225 representing twenty different Indian tribes. A special department is now being developed for training Indians for the Christian ministry and for other forms of religious service. More than $300,000 has, in recent years, been invested in new buildings for this school, and for the Murrow Indian Orphan's Home, nearly all of this having come as gifts from the Indians.

Open Seven Days Each Week

The new Christian center at Hebard Street House, in a community of 20,000 Italians in Rochester, established since the beginning of the New World Movement, is open seven days each week. Sunday-school attendance now ranges from 150 to 200 and more than 150 boys and 100 girls use the gymnasium, club rooms, library and chapel during the week. This Christian center has changed the moral atmosphere of the entire community. Two more workers are needed, but no funds are available.

Continuous Advance

Illinois reports great progress during the period of the New World Movement. At the present time, twenty-two building enterprises, consisting of church edifices and educational plants involving a total of $1,750,000, are under way. There has probably never been a year in denominational history in Illinois, when a similar story has been told. The large increase in gifts for benevolences is accompanied by corresponding increases for local church expenses, the amounts ranging from $7,908.59 in 1920 to $12,802.03 in 1921 and $12,180.38 in 1922. The results of evangelism also show steady advance with reported baptisms of 3,948, 4,789, and 4,647 respectively for the three years.

"My friend, we never choose the better part,
Until we set the Cross up in the heart.
I know I cannot live until I die,
Till I am nailed upon it wild and high,
And sleep in the tomb for a full three days dead,
With angels at the feet and at the head.
But then, in a great brightness, shall I arise,
To walk with stiller feet below the skies."—Edwin Markham.

Thirty Churches Needed

In Southern California, twelve new churches have recently been organized. This section of the country shows an unparalleled increase in population since 1920. New towns are rapidly coming into existence and it is impossible to meet the urgent demands for new Sunday schools, churches and places of worship. Twenty-five or thirty churches ought to be organized immediately. Rev. J. B. Fox, superintendent of the Los Angeles Baptist City Mission Society, believes that more than sixteen new fields among a fine class of American people ought to have vigorous Baptist churches.

A Gain in Self-Support

Before the New World Movement began, there was one self-supporting Baptist church in the Latin-American fields of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Today there are nine such churches; five in Mexico, two in Porto Rico and two in Cuba. During this period of the New World Movement, the church membership increased from 6,322 in 134 churches to 7,168 in 139 churches. Their benevolences increased from $26,965 to $51,151.

After Eighteen Months

A year and a half ago a company of Baptists living in North Oak Park and the North Austin section of Chicago, met for the first time with a view to the establishment of a Baptist church. With the help of the Baptist Executive Council, property was secured and a portable chapel was erected. Dec. 1, 1921, the church was organized with seventy members. Additions since then have been at the rate of about one a week, bringing the membership to about 125. Steps are now being taken toward the erection of the first unit of a church building, the same to cost about $50,000 and the entire structure about $125,000.

After Many Difficulties

Several years ago the Detroit City Mission Society began a new Sunday school in the rapidly growing district on Grand River Avenue, one of the main thoroughfares. Lots were purchased and a church organized in 1922. In the meantime, two railroads built tracks and yards nearby, thereby changing the character of the neighborhood. The society then built a store-front tabernacle for temporary use, to which the neighborhood objected on the ground that it meant an infringement of building restrictions. After a legal fight through the courts, the society won a complete vindication and the church was able to worship in its new building on the first Sunday of 1923.

The First Lithuanian Baptist Church

Two years ago the Baptists in Chicago converted one of their chapels, in the vicinity of which the nature of the population had greatly changed, into a Lithuanian Christian center. The Baptist Missionary Training School cooperated, conducting a kindergarten, an industrial school, and boys' and girls' clubs. The work has developed gratifyingly. Several men have been converted and baptized. The Lithuanians, many of whom have broken with the church of Rome, are increasingly regarding this as "their church." The Sunday school maintains a weekly attendance of about 140. A church organization has not yet been effected, but good foundations are being laid for the first "Lithuanian Baptist Church" in the United States.

Progress in Central America

Recent missionary progress in Central America includes the following: A new mission school for girls in the city of San Salvador; increase in missionary workers in Central America; enlargement of school property at Managua; large waiting list of prospective pupils for the school at Santa Ana; establishment of missionary training department at Rio Piedras, Porto Rico; new schools at San Turce and Yauco, Porto Rico; a new Christian center at San Juan; and a new school and two new teachers in Mexico.

Evangelizing the Poles

Early in 1922, the Baptists of Detroit decided to begin a new mission to our Polish neighbors on the east side with Rev. A. S. Mörze as missionary. He has worked faithfully and already gained seventy-five or more faithful adherents, but there has been no regular place of meeting. Nothing could be rented advantageously. Encouraged by the New World Movement and the financial aid given, valuable property at the corner of Dubois and Harper avenues was purchased at a very low figure. It is being fitted out as a chapel, and will be occupied early this year. Since the great war, the Polish people are ready, as never before, to receive the gospel.

A similar forward step in the development of Polish work in Chicago was made in recent weeks. For several years the Polish congregation had been without a church house of its own. Numerous efforts to secure one had failed. The high cost of building presented a serious obstacle to the erection of a new edifice. However, by a peculiar combination of circumstances—providential they may be well called—the purchase of a German Methodist church was made possible. The building is a handsome edifice which could not be duplicated at this time for less than $40,000 to $50,000. It is situated in the heart of the largest Polish neighborhood of Chicago, and is completely furnished with pews, pipe organ, and Sunday-school equipment. The auditorium will accommodate about 400, and the Sunday school and social rooms as many more. A variety of religious and social activities are already under way.

Revivals on Several Fields

In Northern California, Rev. R. Q. Martinez, missionary among the Mexicans, reports an encouraging evangelistic revival with 272 confessions of faith and seventy converts ready for baptism. The six months' special evangelistic campaign, conducted by Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Peters in Cuba, is showing gratifying results. At the close of five days of meetings in Palma Soriana, twenty conversions were reported. Ten more decisions were made in a small country church off the beaten road of travel. In the large town of Manzanillo, the building proved too small to accommodate the crowds; ninety-one are now receiving instructions, preparatory to baptism. The Baptist church in Santiago reports more baptisms in 1922 than in any years of its history; nearly every Sunday night there is some response to the preaching of the gospel.

Who Will Volunteer?

The American Baptist Home Mission Society is earnestly seeking a man to become general missionary in Haiti, one of the newest mission fields of the denomination. In addition, a second man is desired, who has the knowledge of French and is capable of developing industrial education. A small farm of seventeen acres, near the city of Yackmel, Haiti, has just been purchased, and an evangelistic and industrial training school for Haitian young people is to be established here.

The Residence of the Governor

Due to unusual good fortune, the Woman's Home Mission Society has come into possession of a substantial residence formerly occupied by the Mexican governor at Pueblo, Mexico. This building furnishes adequate accommodations for the Girls' Mission School, which gives all the grades from the kindergarten to the sixth and includes also a missionary training department. With this splendid equipment a promising future lies before this missionary school.

The Will to Believe

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine.

"HOW can we know?" said the Jews. "Act," said Christ, for he knew that there is a realm where the mind fails and only the heart can know. Knowledge arises out of deed. Let a man come to these words of Jesus with a deliberate and honest intention to realize in his life the will of God, he will find a satisfaction which will convince him of the truth of the teaching. With a continued doing of the divine will as revealed in Jesus Christ, there will come a knowledge of the truth of that revelation. Christ is supreme in the realm of right doing, and he will prove in the increased spiritual power of his followers what he claims to be. The doing of the will of God—the taking of Christ at his word, will beget in the heart of the doer the satisfaction which is the real and vital witness. There are two elements in this will to believe. Enthusiasm, whole-hearted devotion. This willingness is not in the future tense but present volition. It means "entireness" and earnestness — the whole man acting together. It is the spirit of desire as illustrated in the Syrophonician woman when she came to Christ. I would to God that we were either better or worse, then there would be hope for us! It is complacent mediocrity, flint-like self-satisfaction that keeps us from knowing the deep things of God! There is unselfish service. Abounding in little kindly deeds. Doing good to others and being true to the duty as you know it. Christ did not spend his life trying to do no wrong. He was never guarding himself, but always seeking to invade the lives of others with his love and saving power. His sinlessness was positive. He was full of earnest longing to do right—to do his Father's will. In willingness there is also decision, that is act on what you know. The mere smatterer in any profession never has decision. We live great lives when we make great decisions. As there is a speed to an ocean-going vessel, below which she cannot be steered, so there is a moral momentum of the soul below which a life has no guidance—speed which calls for no decision. Decide now for obedience to Christ for your will is the rudder of your soul!

—Arthur T. Fowler.

Home and Foreign Missions Cooperate

Two evidences of how home and foreign missions cooperate may be found in the work of the Boston City Mission Society. The Chinese boys' work is at present in charge of Mr. Bernard Adams, a son of the late Dr. J. S. Adams, who for so many years served as a missionary in Central China. The Lettish Mission, in connection with the work of the Ruggles Street Church, is supporting its own missionary Bible woman in China. Thus China contributes to Boston and Boston contributes to China.

The Problems of the City

A comparison of census reports of 1910 and 1920 shows a remarkable increase in the population of our cities. In 1910 there were 91,972,266 people living in the United States, of whom 42,166,120 lived in the cities. In 1920 there were 105,710,620 people in the United States, of whom 54,304,603 lived in the cities. The total population thus increased 15 per cent, while the city population increased 29 per cent. This meant a vastly heavier responsibility for our city mission societies and is reflected in their increased expenditures. The city mission society of Buffalo reports an increase of 20 per cent; Chicago 33 per cent; St. Louis 50 per cent; New York 53 per cent and Cleveland 75 per cent. The Detroit city mission society spent $29,805 for missionary work in 1918 and in 1922 its expenditures were $46,416.08. The New World Movement through the city mission societies has thus endeavored to meet these larger missionary responsibilities in our American cities.

What Retrenchment Means

By actual count fifty-two fields of the Woman's Home Mission Society have been affected by the twenty-five per cent cut of which we speak so glibly and the equivalent in salaries of forty missionaries and thirty teachers has been withdrawn. This necessitates the closing entirely of some mission stations and the overburdening of workers at others. Splendid mission schools are having to discontinue some courses because of reduced appropriations, and this necessarily detracts from the standing of the schools in the communities which they serve. Meantime, administrative expenses have been reduced to a minimum, and there is one less secretary on the staff at headquarters.

An Impressive Dedication Service

As a direct outcome of the vision and achievement of the New World Movement, two well-arranged and completely equipped buildings have been constructed in Seattle, Wash., and were recently dedicated for Christian work among the Japanese and Chinese in that city. At the dedication service of the building for the Japanese, twenty-five new converts were baptized. The dedication took place in the afternoon, and the building was crowded to capacity. At the Chinese dedication service, the Chinese consul, who is a member of the church, made an effective address. The two properties represent an investment of $42,500 for the Japanese and $37,500 for the Chinese, respectively. Of this amount the Baptists of Western Washington have contributed $12,500 for each building—$25,000 in all. The Home Mission Society to date has contributed $20,000 and loaned $10,000. The Woman's Home Mission Society has received and paid in from designated gifts on the Chinese property somewhat more than $2,800. The Japanese church has pledged $8,750 and paid in, to date, $6,000. This achievement will rank as one of the most notable in the records of the denomination. There are 6,000 Japanese in Seattle and several thousands more in the rural regions and surrounding settlements.

The Open Forum

FEARS ROMANIST'S VIEW OF RELIGION

I have just finished reading Dean Eri B. Hulbert's article which you reproduce in your issue of Feb. 10. Thank you for this timely work. While it comes from a quarter of a century back it is timely and up-to-date.

What a fine insight is manifested! The constructive Christian spirit evinced is so rich and fragrant that it steals upon you like incense from hidden censers. Withal common-sense pervades it. Why may not all sensible Baptists of whatever school catch this spirit?

Christianity was a stroke for religious freedom. It could not be realized in a generation. Against this democracy of religion was the natural reaction of those who clung to the authority of tradition and the edicts of ancestry. Taking weak human nature as it is, it was to be expected that it would break into two schools. So we have the Romanist view of a religion of dogma. But why any Baptist who believes that the religion of experience is superior to the religion of dogma can hark back at the present time to the Romanist contention is difficult to see.

If the interpretations of Luther, Calvin, Wesley, or the creeds which are only men's interpretation, are to be made unchangeable tests of fellowship, what difference between this and the interpretations of popes and decrees of councils?

If we attempt to pass laws to fix the mental attitudes of men (as is actually being attempted now in some states) why not go over to the Romanist contention? What becomes of the fight for freedom waged by our Baptist fathers? Paul's magnificent conflict to save Christianity from being emasculated and turned into a posthumous edition of Judaism, passes for naught, if this view should prevail.

I must refrain, however, for I did not set out to discuss this matter but to commend you for publishing this article of Dean Hulbert "who being dead yet speaketh."

H. R. Best.

Des Moines, Iowa.

IN THE MEANWHILE, USE OIL

Some time ago there appeared in the columns of the Open Forum an article entitled, "A Cog Missing." Doubtless multitudes of Baptist ministers have given a hearty "Amen!" to the sentiments there expressed, yet it is a plain fact that the immediate outlook for such a bureau is not large with promise. We need not for that reason, however, continue as a denomination in the troublesome old rut. Education in proper and efficient methods in selecting a pastor, especially among the smaller churches, is the real need of the hour.

The present deplorable method is oftimes about as follows. The church appoints a pulpit committee with a chairman, and then, by inquiry among friends, leaders and others, a list of prospective candidates comprised of all varieties and types of ministers is secured. Meanwhile the congregation settles down to the apparently pleasant, but always disastrous routine, of sermon-tasting through hearing candidates. After candidates varying from two to a dozen have been heard, it is usually impossible for the entire church to determine with any degree of unanimity whom they do want. Result: Valuable time lost; backsliding and petty dissension in the church; and, finally, when a call is extended to one whom they heard many weeks previous, it is promptly declined. Can you blame him?

If some of our leaders, of long and sound experience, could be induced to set forth articles dealing with dignified and efficient methods of securing a pastor, it seems to me such would indeed be valuable in many instances. The churches, especially the smaller ones, are unversed in the best and proper ways of securing a pastor, and though they mean well, disastrous results come because of ignorance. If such a series of articles were published, they could well be put out in pamphlet form and distributed to the churches for a nominal sum.

I offer the following suggestions on the subject: 1. Secure a stated supply. 2. Let the church determine in general the type, qualifications, general character of the pastor-to-be in accordance with the requirements of the field. 3. Investigate and eliminate names found to be unsuitable, not permitting such to candidate and thus raise false hopes. 4. Cultivate friendship with the most desirable candidate in natural ways, if possible, and over a period of weeks.

Until the missing cog is established in the machinery, the above may possibly help to oil the machine.

Edward O. Clark.

Pitman, N. J.

BY ALL MEANS MAKE MORE

In The Baptist of Feb. 3 under the heading, "Our Own Folks" appeared an article discussing the men's class. The question is asked, "Should we make more of it, or less of it?" I wish to make a few comments on this, gathered from experience in going to different churches while visiting in towns and cities. I have found that the attendance of men at the preaching service is far above the average in those churches where they have a men's class that is functioning properly. In looking over a congregation today, as a usual thing you will find the men very much in the minority, and I warrant that upon investigation you will find that either that church is without a men's class or has one that is not alive. Again, I wonder if it occurred to the writer of the article what a great advantage it is to the church and pastor to have the backing of the men. We have trusted too long to the women's organizations alone backing the church and pastor. It seems to me if I were a pastor that it would increase my courage and put new spirit in me for my work to know that I had the men back of me.

As far as the benefit to the church of having an up-to-date men's class is concerned, I wish to make this statement: The work of the church is farther-reaching when you have men interested than it can be with only the interest of the women. In the first place a women's interest in a majority of cases does not go any farther than the home, while a man's influence has apparently no bounds—namely, the factory, shop, office, store, and so on.

Speaking of my own church, the First Baptist of Ansonia, I wish to say that we have a men's class of about fifty members, with an average attendance of thirty-five. Why do they come to the Bible class? Because we have an interesting and uplifting hour in the study of the Bible under the instruction of our pastor, Rev. W. C. Sampson, who as a teacher of the Bible stands second to none in the opinion of the men. I do not mean to imply that the standard of the class should depend solely on the teacher for I believe when one gets a good thing he should be willing and anxious to share it with others.

To sum it up: I believe it goes without saying that a church to be fully alive should have the interest of the men and the men's class is the means to that end.

A. A. Bridgeman.

Ansonia, Conn.

The Passing Hours

WHAT hast thou done today for God or man,
To prove thyself a part of his great plan,
Who sent thee forth some noble work to do,
Some cross to bear, a life to live that's true?

What hast thou done to ease another's load?
To help some wayfarer along the road?
What word of cheer from thee hath made the day
Less dreary to some toiler on the way?

From rise to set of sun the golden hours
Pass swiftly, but while passing they are ours;
Priceless as jewels in a monarch's crown;
Rightly improve them ere life's sun goes down.

—Helen A. Richardson, in "British Weekly."

Religious Education

Results of an Inefficient Sunday School

What happens to a church that has an educationally inefficient Sunday school?

Assuming that for the last twenty years this Sunday school has run about as now, more than half of the following statements will be found true:

1. Qualified teachers will be hard to find. Efforts to start a training-class will fail for lack of interest and students.

2. The same will be true of Sunday-school officers.

3. Where graded lessons and other educational measures are introduced, much opposition will be met; and in six months or a year determined effort will be made to go back to the old ways on the ground that we have tried the new methods and they do not work.

4. The young children of the congregation will learn very little religion at home.

5. Worldliness, materialism, and the use of Sunday for visitation and recreation rather than for worship and family life will be on the steady increase.

6. The proportion of church members who give regularly and liberally for church support and benevolence will be half or less than half what it ought to be; and the younger givers will not be coming on to replace those who die or move away.

7. It will be hard to find young men willing and qualified to take official church positions.

8. The women's societies will consist mainly of the older women, with a decided gap between them and the young women, even where these are studying missions and taking up some church activities. When new members enter the women's societies, they will prove as a rule untrained for service as officers and leaders of meetings.

9. While there may be a fine organist and quartet, the interest of the congregation in music as worship will be low, the congregational singing weak, and the material for a chorus scanty and undeveloped.

10. The church will be a parasite on its denomination as to trained workers, speakers, ministers and missionaries. It will receive and use more than it raises and sends into the field.

11. When through pastoral leadership the church faces some high and unselfish social task, many of the leading church-members, including those of the younger set, will take the ground that "charity begins at home," and will aid reluctantly or not at all.

12. Evangelistic effort, when undertaken at all, will need strong leadership from without the congregation: it will not prove possible to stimulate earnestness and awaken dead souls by work from within.

For the twenty years of parish life that have produced these conditions the church might have counted its school of religion as vital a need as its pastor. To get and keep the right man it has worked and prayed, contended, contributed, and cooperated to the full. Had it determined to spend as much for religious education as for pastoral leadership, it could have done it. It might then have organized a trained teaching ministry for its children, set new standards of Bible knowledge, character-training, home cooperation, and fitness for service, and in a few years seen the work of rebuilding the congregation and its ideals going steadily forward. Today, in every one of the foregoing counts, it might see conditions blessedly reversed. Nor would the efficiency, the leadership, or the support of the pastor in that congregation have been taken away, but rather established.

The inefficient Sunday school is not a joke. It is the spiritual tragedy of our generation.—E. Morris Fergusson in Sunday School Worker.

Negro Men and Women of Achievement

This is the B. Y. P. U. topic for Feb. 25, and will be of special interest as the subject for the home mission study this year throughout our churches is "The Negro." The General Board of Promotion has provided a number of interesting pamphlets which will doubtless be welcomed by the young people in preparing for the topic for that Sunday. Some of these pamphlets are: "Two Who Serve Their Race," telling of President Joseph A. Booker of Arkansas Baptist College, and Mrs. Helen Adams Moore of the Negro Center at Pittsburgh ($.03); "Schools for Negro Youth," an illustrated description of our schools in the South ($.05); "Olivet—A Negro Center," describing and illustrating the multiform activities of Olivet Baptist Church, Chicago ($.05); "Our Northern Negro," presenting the new Negro problem and methods of solving it ($.03); "Negro Melodies," ten of the best Negro spirituals ($.05); "Women of Achievement," sketches of Negro women who won success ($.40).

Any of this literature can be secured from the Literature Bureaus of The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

International Sunday School Lesson for March 11

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE

Lesson: Luke 22:39-48, 54. Golden Text: I Peter 3:18.

Introductory

Jerusalem was crowded at this time with those who had come from long distances to celebrate the Passover. Jesus spoke by day in the temple and at night went to Bethany to stay. With his disciples he observed the Passover feast, instituting the Lord's Supper. Peter's denial of his Lord is foretold. After the Passover Supper, Jesus and eleven of the disciples left the city for the Garden of Gethsemane on the western slope of the Mount of Olives. It was a grove, chiefly of olive trees.

The Lesson

Jesus went frequently to the Mount of Olives. He went now as he had often done before. "Pray that ye enter not into temptation," he said to the disciples, probably having in mind the temptation to desert him which would soon come to them. He separated himself from them a short distance and knelt down to pray—an unusual position for a Jew to take when praying, as devotions were usually offered standing. Possibly it was the human and the divine struggling in Jesus for supremacy as he prayed, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will but thine, be done." An angel appeared to strengthen him. "Being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat became, as it were, great drops of blood falling down upon the ground." It was more than a great mental agony that Jesus was suffering. "He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him." Although Jesus had forewarned his disciples of the approaching trial, he found them asleep when he returned to them—"sleeping for sorrow." "Why sleep ye?" he asked. "Rise and pray that ye enter not into temptation." Even before he had finished speaking, a multitude approached and Judas, erstwhile disciple, stepped from it and approached Jesus to kiss him. Jesus, reader of hearts, said: "Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" They took Jesus away to the high priest's house. "But Peter followed afar off."

Leading Thoughts

1. "Christ suffered for sins once that he might bring us to God." 2. Prayer always brings the strengthening angel. 3. "Blessed be he who, following Christ unto Gethsemane, follows him out of it by the same door—the door of a supreme consecration to his Father's will."—Lyman Abbott.

The Chimney Corner

Warranted Not to Shrink

[Only for the Gentleman-In-The-Chimney-Corner! Or possibly it may be wiser for the Lady-On-The-Other-Side-Of-The-Hearth to order "It," as herewith directed, and read it herself beforehand!]

Being the friendly fashion in which Mr. Yard-Wide Baptist inveigled his good neighbor, Mr. All-Wool Baptist, into sitting up until midnight. It all started at 8:09 a. m. when Mr. All-Wool came sauntering down his front walk as usual and espied this other gentleman—

All-Wool: "Well upon my word, Yard-Wide, you don't mean to tell me that you are walking down town! What's happened?"

Yard-Wide: "Eighty-five pages happened, that's all!"

All-Wool: "What d'ye mean—eighty-five pages?"

Yard-Wide: "Oh I just sat up till seven minutes past midnight reading 'em, my dear fellow."

All-Wool: "Oh, I see! And you're so seedy this morning that you're walking down town to blow out the cobwebs!"

Yard-Wide: "Seedy, nothing! Cobwebs, nothing! No sir, I feel so sort of elated that nothing but good brisk exercise quite fills the bill."

All-Wool (nudging him): "Look here, you've made a good investment! I know the symptoms! Yes, sir, wouldn't be a bit surprised if you weren't pouring over the report to stockholders: eighty-five pages would be just about the space needed to paint the golden legend. Think you really might let your poor old neighbor in on a good thing like this!"

Yard-Wide (cryptically): "All-Wool, you're a Baptist?"

All-Wool (surprised at this apparent digression): "Sure I am! Born and bred in the fold. A trustee down at the Old First Church. Usher Sunday mornings and all that. Sure, I'm a Baptist. In good and regular standing. But what's that got to do with brisk walks down town and letting me in on that yard-wide smile you're wearing?"

Yard-Wide (craftily): "Now look here, All-Wool, I'd have missed all this exuberance if it hadn't been for my wife; she staged the whole business—easy chair, open fire, nothing special lying around to read but this booklet, and hadn't she even been through those eighty-five pages with a blue pencil so that my eye just naturally picked out the biggest of the high spots, although I didn't skip in between times, either? So when it got to be midnight without my having made a single move toward bed, my wife laid down her knitting and said solemnly: 'Yard-Wide, do you feel the way you look?' And I said: 'Mary, I want to sing!'"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

All-Wool (whistling): "You? Well, all I've got to say is, Yard-Wide, what's the name of that book?"

Yard-Wide (selling the new idea by sheer indefiniteness): "I'm gently leading up to it, old man! For it occurs to me that if you're such an all-wool Baptist as you pretend to be then you've got the same treat in store, for I'm going to loan you my copy, blue pencil marks and all. But on one condition only."

All-Wool: "Sure! On two, if you like!"

Yard-Wide: "I'll take you up on that: on two conditions. First, that you read it straight through from page one to page eighty-five at one sitting; and second, that you recommend it to another Baptist, getting him to promise you the same thing."

All-Wool (deprecatingly): "I'll promise the first, all right, because you've got me guessing! But isn't that second condition a bit tough on the other fellow? Maybe he won't be so keen."

Yard-Wide: "He will be if you sell him the idea same as I've fired you. It's a case of warranted not to shrink, All-Wool. You'll positively want to sing, old man!"

All-Wool: "Oh not me!"

Yard-Wide: "You wait! There's something about this kind of an investment that gets you. Ten pages of that booklet and a fellow gets so expansive he thinks he was a perfect tightwad not to have invested a little deeper."

All-Wool: "Say, hasn't this thing a name?"

Yard-Wide: "'On The March.'"

All-Wool (nodding): "Sounds good. Lead me to it!"

Yard-Wide: "First thing when I get home tonight. Let's shake on it! So long!"

All-Wool: "So long! Mind your promise!"

Yard-Wide did.

And All-Wool did.

Moreover All-Wool got the other man, by his own thankfulness at being "in" on such a good thing.

So now the thing that's worrying us is: Won't you, too? For it's free; all you've got to do is to write for your free copy of "On The March" waiting for you at Literature Department, General Board of Promotion, at the nearest of these addresses: 276 Fifth Ave., New York; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

DO IT NOW!

We positively guarantee a mounting glow of delight which is warranted not to shrink as you progress from cover to cover.

Wait a Minute

By W. E. Henry

WAIT a minute, think it over.
Just a bit of calm reflection
May make sure the right direction
In the crucial future day.
Hasty words quite often cover
Hooks of steel that bind us tightly
Unto those who take life lightly,
Who will draw us from our way.

Hurried action stands forever
Just as much as any other,
And its fruitage we must gather
Soon or late, with joy or tear.
Wait a minute, think it over;
Wisdom walks a step behind us.
Ready always to befriend us
Can she whisper in our ear.

Instead of Victrolas Shall Come Up Pianos!

A VERY splendid and enthusiastic note from Mrs. Helen Adams Moore of our Morgan Community House for Negroes, in Pittsburgh, is dated Jan. 29, and states that on that day her stamp shower from Chimney Corner readers amounted to $5.25 in money, $29.01 in checks and money orders, $39.27 in stamps, AND one Victrola!

For a certain Lady-In-Philadelphia became so interested that she generously sent a table Victrola which is answering Mrs. Moore's purpose nicely; so now, of course, she is on the highroad to having her second big need answered—a piano, which you will remember we mentioned in our very first appeal for stamps, and toward which she can now save all of the stamp shower already received. Isn't this wonderful?

Mrs. Moore herself is delighted at the response, for she has had money from Cuba, Mexico, California and nearly all of the western states. But as we said in these columns two weeks ago—why the West? Is there no Lochinvar-out-of-the-East with an idle two-cent stamp to send to Mrs. Moore, Morgan Community House, 3 Fullerton St., Pittburgh, Pa.? For it would be a rare piece of genuine Christian service for us to surprise her with that piano. Pianos cost more than Victrolas, of course, but another friendly shower of two-cent red-coated messengers would net her a good piano, and if you have ever heard Mrs. Moore's beautiful voice singing Negro spirituals surely you will love to provide the piano to accompany her!

We venture to end this article with the same familiar remark that we used in the preceding dialogue:

DO IT NOW.

The Young Reserves

With the Compliments of Mr. Si and the Princess Si-Ling-Chi

TO BEGIN with, the princess was only fourteen years old when this story begins, and she was terribly lonely for she had recently been married to the emperor of China. Consequently she was always surrounded with the politest of court ladies, and I suppose that even if she wanted to cry (for surely she would want to, so far from home, in that great palace) she would have felt too much pride in the presence of these superior gossipy ladies. No doubt she felt so meek and so new and so lonely that she often went off by herself to gaze toward her dear old home. It was on one of these occasions that she saw Mr. Si. And when he was sound asleep, too.

He was very small, about four inches long; and he owned almost a hundred little feet with which he could crawl to his home at the top of a mulberry tree, where all he ever did was to munch mulberry leaves from morning until night. Eat, eat, eat. No time off for playing or even for sleeping, although once in every seven days he had to change his clothes. But it was a quick process—he simply shuffled off the old gray suit and went right on eating, for his new suit grew on his back underneath the old one. Did you ever hear of anything so beautifully convenient?

The Princess Si-Ling-Chi used to stand under the tree and watch him for hours at a time; then one day she saw a curious sight, for suddenly Mr. Si wanted to stop eating. He did stop! He wanted to go to sleep. He did sleep! But first of all he had to make his bed. Sleeping in treetops is rather risky business, so he got a little rope and lashed his bed to a certain quiet twig. You will be as astonished as the Princess to hear that he found the rope in his mouth! He fastened one end of it to the twig; then by slowly moving his head from side to side, he spun the rope longer and longer, and stronger and stronger. After which he proceeded to make his bed. The Princess could hardly believe her eyes when she saw that he found his bed clothes in his mouth, too! Again he slowly moved his head back and forth while soft silky thread came from the corners of his mouth; and from these silken strands he wove a coverlet round and round his body. Then he went to sleep.

The Princess had never envied any one quite so deeply.

"I am a great lady," said she to herself, "but my costliest clothes do not glimmer and glisten like Mr. Si's bed-clothes."

Therefore she never lost a day in watching Mr. Si and all his relatives, until, one never-to-be-forgotten day, she carried him into the palace, broke open his little white cradle and gently began to wind off the shimmering skeins of silk: "I too will have a silk dress," said she.

The court ladies went wild over the sheer loveliness of it. The court gentlemen begged for silk clothes, also. As for the emperor he made an edict that only the high and mighty people in the palace should ever wear silk, for by this time it had become quite an industry. Little Mr. Si's uncles and aunts and cousins and brothers and sisters were all kept hard at it making silk for the nobles. Every one was so grateful to the small Princess that she was called Si-Ling-Chi, the "goddess of the silk-worm," and to this very day in China there is a special time each year when her memory is honored by the most picturesque of quaint ceremonies. Moreover, they have been doing it for over four thousand years, for it was way back in the year 2640 B. C. that Si-Ling-Chi discovered Si and started the silk industry!

It was kept a state secret for two thousand years, but about the year 350 B. C. a certain prince in India succeeded in winning the love of another shy little Chinese princess. He carried her off to India with him, via the caravan route, and in her sandals she carried eggs of the silkworm and seeds of the mulberry tree, so that she could tell her lover the secrets and have silk in India, too.

Perhaps you have heard of the great conqueror, Alexander the Great? You will be interested to know with what diligence he tried to learn the secret until he finally succeeded. Still later, during the reign of Julius Cæsar, silk became the court dress in Rome; and all this time here you and I sit reading THE BAPTIST, never dreaming what romance is woven in Peggy's hair-ribbons and in the necktie of the Boy-On-Our-Street! Little we knew that it all started over two thousand years before Christ, when a certain lonely little Chinese girl looked up in a treetop. That is why, in February, we have a national silk week, to remind us of quaint old stories and—of course—to suggest that possibly our old hair-ribbon needs replacing or our old necktie is a bit frayed from too much tying, therefore: "Startling Silk Sale—best values in town—come early—this week only!" etc. etc. as you can read in any advertisement. But as for me, I prefer to say about every bit of silk:

"With the compliments of Mr. Si and the Princess Si-Ling-Chi."

When the Seamstress Came to Sew

By PEGGY

SPEAKING of silk reminds me that once when the seamstress came to our house to make a silk dress she had a slight illness which she loved to talk about, poor dear! But one day when Uncletim asked her how she felt now, she said: "Oh sew, sew! But I seam worse today and have stitches in my side." Uncletim hemmed sympathetically and, needles(s) to say, told her that she would mend soon!

Silks to Unweave

These are the names of various kinds of silk, all misspelled. Perhaps you can weave them into their proper patterns. The correct answers will be given next week:

1. Lafdrou
2. Efatfat
3. Nista
4. Iermo
5. Sniarogger
6. Lemul
7. Perce-ed-niche
8. Jhraa
9. Hacin
10. Teeterogg.

Silk Puzzles

1. My first means cracked; my second means a delicious summer drink; my whole an elaborate silk used in upholstering furniture.

2. My first is a simpleton; my second is grease used for frying; my whole a light silk popular in the summer.

3. My first is the past tense of a verb meaning to be seated; my second means among; my whole is a very shine-y, slippery silk.

4. My first means to get bigger; my second is what a farmer gives his chickens; my whole is a French word meaning a ribbed silk.

5. My first is a boy's name; my second is an improper word some persons use to say that they have just taken nourishment; my whole is the flimsy transparent silk so popular in light dresses.

6. My first means to clutter; my second means "one"; my third means the cord dangling from a fishpole, although in this case it is pronounced as if it meant thin; my whole is a popular silk for mothers.

7. My first means something extra; my second is a beam of light; my whole is a silk that looks watered.

---

A missionary from India, writes, "We face new conditions in India today. The gospel is now working in the midst of an awakened and aroused people. The old indifference to our message is gone. It is now either open opposition or hearty reception. Christianity is either welcomed as a friend and ally of national aspiration and acclaimed as the only power which can weld into one the antagonistic forces in the land, or it is regarded as a foreign product, alien to the spirit and life of the people."

Young People's Work

Topic For March 11

THE STEWARDSHIP OF SERVICE

Matt. 25:14-30; I Peter 4:10.

It may be that the time has come to distinguish between a "round of activities" and "service." The "faithful few," in a great many of our churches, have been so overloaded with tasks that life is just one activity after another. And yet there is no very marked advance. The great mass of our church membership goes on from year to year with no adequate conception of the meaning of service. The stewardship of service involves a number of things:

I. Adequate Preparation

Probably there was a time when "Ignorance was bliss," but that time is passed. In the popular phrase of the day: "Them days is gone forever." If our young people do not know the things which will make them efficient in church and community activity, there is every opportunity open to them for knowing. One cannot but help feeling that ignorance of these vital things almost borders on criminality.

When young people are given a specific task in the high school or college, they are supposed to go about that task in such a way as to accomplish it in a satisfactory manner. You will find them studying at home, in the library, at school. Yet these same young people will often go into a church task unprepared, and somehow stumble through it. There are hundreds of young people's presidents who are no more efficient today than when they began months ago. They have gotten through somehow, while the society has either marked time or "gone the round of activities." Perhaps the young people are not to blame. Older folks have set the example. Deacons, trustees, presidents of ladies' organizations have all been guilty of the same thing. A recognition of the task as a stewardship will correct this fault.

II. The Service Itself

What shall it be? Of course, if it were to be president of the United States or governor of the commonwealth, thousands would like to be counted in. But, there is no special halo about the ordinary humdrum tasks of life. The doing of such tasks does not call for headlines in the morning newspaper. The possibility of being misunderstood is very great. There are a lot of people in this old world who simply want to be let alone. They have always lived that way. They have not had a new theological or service idea in well-nigh fifty years. The man who has a burning desire to serve his generation is often discouraged when he comes up against such obstacles as these, and he often lets go, with the remark "What's the use?" In too many of our churches, we have the serv-ice conception with the result that men and women who desire to do something really worth while, pass up the church as an avenue through which they might do their best work. Then, there is the fellow who is "jack of all trades" and good at none. He serves on every committee in the church, and does everything from acting as janitor to that of filling the pulpit on Sunday.

The young people of our churches should select some few things, or possibly one thing which they can do well, and do that one thing. This business of attempting too many things is nothing short of intellectual and spiritual suicide. Young people must have opportunity to grow into the full measure of a man.

III. Special Privileges

Everywhere, there is need for young men and young women for the special tasks of the ministry, missionary work at home and abroad. The hearts of our young folks are burning within them as they walk by the way, for God is speaking to them. In large numbers they are responding. In the days of high-school and college preparation, young people as never before are facing up to the big question, "What shall I do with my life?" "Where can I invest it to bring the greatest returns for God and humanity?" As they listen, the answer comes in no uncertain terms, "This is the way." It is the way of privileged service.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

TO THE CHURCHES:

The Thirty-Second Anniversary Convention of the Baptist Young People of America meeting in Boston, Mass., July 4–8, 1923, will be one of the outstanding events in Baptist circles for the year.

The communications which have been received at headquarters indicate that the influence of the St. Paul convention has been felt in many places of the earth. Hundreds of the churches in the United States and Canada have been quickened as a result of the education and inspiration brought back to them by the delegates.

New England Baptists are eagerly looking forward to the coming of the great hosts of young people from all parts of the country. Boston is making great plans for the comfort and entertainment of the delegates. Massachusetts has set her goal for a total registration of 4,000. A number of special trains are being planned from various parts of the United States.

Societies everywhere are struggling with the problem of financing their delegation. The young people are a vital part of the church and should come in for some assistance by the church. Many churches will not be represented in this great convention simply because the young people have no money, and have no means of securing it. This situation can be remedied if the pastors and laymen of the churches, who have the welfare of the young people at heart, will come to their assistance by getting the whole church behind the plan to send delegates. The whole church will receive the benefit of this effort.

This open letter to the churches, therefore, is an earnest appeal in behalf of the young life of the churches. In these days when it is so difficult to hold young folks, and when it is so hard for them to be what they themselves would like to be, a concerted effort in their behalf, will, I believe, be of tremendous encouragement to them. We all love them and are back of them. Why not give them a demonstration of our love and our backing?

JAMES ASA WHITE,
General Secretary.

From the Bahamas

Nassau, N. P., Bahamas, B. W. I.

Mr. James Asa White, Gen. Sec'y,

Dear Sir:

After visiting our friend, Dr. Wm. M. Lawrence of Chicago in 1892, Mrs. Wilshere on our return started the Y. P. U. here and was president until her death in 1901.

It has been carried on ever since and now has branches at Mount Carey on this island, Governors Harbour, Elenthera, and Mt. Olivetto Church, Miami, Fla.; so that our union has interest therein.

Dr. Shakespeare wishes me to go to Stockholm to represent our union which is in the alliance, but I think the journey too long.

Therefore it has occurred to me I might be able to reach the B. Y. P. U. at Boston instead.

Will you please send me particulars?

The Simms Bible Class is not a Y. P. U. but is heartily in sympathy. Our church at Simms (one of the three on the island) is blessed with a great leader.

With cordial good wishes,

Faithfully yours,

(Signed) DANIEL WILSHERE, Supt. Bahamas Baptist Union.

Our Own Folks

In and About Chicago

By J. W. Weddell

The Chicago Baptist ministers, a great congenial company of them, had dinner together as the guests of Immanuel Baptist Church, Dr. Johnson Myers, pastor, on Monday, Jan. 29. The pastor laid before his brethren the proposition of the church to hand over the new building of Immanuel, a property estimated to be worth a half million, to the denomination as a center of Baptist work in this country. The conference by a rising vote unanimously commended the proffer to the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, which was to meet the Thursday following, and whose decision or recommendation to the body as a whole is being awaited. With the aid of Assistant Pastors Holt and Goodman and Mr. John Nuveen, the ministers were shown over the enlarged building with its new and elegant appointments.

Dr. J. J. Ross, about to retire from the presidency of the conference and take up his new work at Ruggles St., Boston, presented the results so far as secured, of the questionnaire, of the committee of fifteen regarding the new world program for the future. There were a variety of responses, 371 in all, indicating a desire for changes and abatements, but the large majority gave their voice for aggressive procedure under proper conditions. Such questions as these were proposed: Shall there be further sacrificial advance or shall we hold present gains without farther advance? Shall the existing cooperative plan be maintained? (To this almost all answered affirmatively.) Should all our educational institutions be included in financial grants? (The consensus here seemed to be largely in favor of the smaller denominational schools.) Can the secretaries of state conventions serve in a double capacity for missionary and promotional work? Should the pledges be made for one or more years? Will stewardship solve our financial problems? Live topics, all of them, resolutely grasped. It was a strong and interesting discussion. Ultimately the problems will be worked out and the great task finished. In counsel, general and fraternal, there is wisdom.

A Group of Churches

As time and opportunity allow, a glimpse is had of what some of our associated churches are doing. There are at least sixty within the city limits—half as many without, the latter including Oak Park, Evanston and Elgin, a huge cordon. The last Sunday or two it was the interesting and enterprising group in the vicinity of the University of Chicago on the populous South Side that was visited. At Hyde Park Church, Fifty-sixth and Woodlawn, Associate Pastor Crandall was preaching, Dr. Gilkey being the college supply at Yale. It is an efficient church plant. The writer recalls the days of small things in the eighties when a dummy engine brought the student pastor out from the heart of the city for transient services. But they were gracious times. Within a block is Mandel Hall of the University, and here long queues of people are waiting at the doors. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is the preacher for the day. Across the Midway on the same street at Sixty-second street, Dr. Melbourne P. Boynton is holding forth vigorously. And there is hearty and loyal attendance. (He always has it.) It is a fine family gathering you find at Calvary, farther west, 6026 Prairie Ave. Dr. R. N. Van Dorn has been father of this flock for eight years. It was Dearborn Chapel at Thirty-fifth St., out of which Calvary originally sprang, the place where several of us young theologues from Morgan Park got our feet under us, Leland Hobart, Henry, etc., though Henry later made himself heard at Forty-seventh, farther south. And J. Q. A. Henry, God bless his memory, never lacked a thronged hearing from the start. At Drexel and Fiftieth is the First Church, now under Perry J. Stackhouse's ministrations. It is hard to keep away from the old site, Thirty-first and South Park. There this "stickit minister" had ordination as mission pastor under Dr. Henson, and we naturally cherish the spot. There never was, or will be, a finer edifice than the Old First. The Negro folks are using it well. "How many members have you now?" I asked at the door as multitudes came and went. "They call it 10,000," was the answer. May God bless with the saving truth these new incoming throngs—they are mostly Baptists. You see their stations at almost every corner. Think on it—113 churches already, and more to come.

Baltimore and Vicinity

By O. C. S. Wallace

Does "vicinity" include Florida? From a friend who is spending the winter—Baltimoreans go "South" during the winter, just like Canadians—in Florida comes a clipping. It shows an advertisement which my friend says is "carried occasianally on any day of the week" in a Jacksonville daily paper. It covers a ten-inch space three columns wide. The form and substance follow:

Christianity

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16.

The religion of those who accept Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah, that is the Christ, promised of old to Israel. It is now the dominant religion in Europe, in North and South America, and in Australia, South Africa and many islands, and is making steady progress in other parts of the earth. It exists in the form of a large number of particular churches, sects and denominations, which may be classified in three large groups: the Protestants, the Roman Catholic, and Oriental churches, including the Greek Church. The aggregate nominally Christian population of the earth exceeds 400,000,000.

Christians hold that God in addition to his providential manifestations of himself in nature and in human history, makes a spiritual illumination in and guidance for individuals, the methods of which are revealed in the Bible.

The truth of Christianity is supported by different evidences, independent, but mutually corroborative.

SELECT A CHURCH AND THEN SUPPORT IT BY YOUR ATTENDANCE.

More significant than such an advertisement, whether inserted at the expense of the paper or not, are editorials of a decidedly evangelistic type which are appearing from time to time in certain daily papers of the South.

Does "vicinity" include Ontario? Toronto is a city of powerful preachers and many great congregations. Among the popular preachers is W. A. Cameron, pastor for fourteen years of the Bloor Street Church, and going stronger now than ever before. One of the great clubs of the city, which has a weekly luncheon, asked him to be the "after-dinner speaker" the other day, and expressed a preference for a sermon; and to 388 men he preached the gospel of Christ with power, not for a mere ten or twenty minutes, but for forty minutes. One of the great newspapers of that same Toronto is the Globe. Those who read the Globe will find prohibition supported wholeheartedly, and frequently will find on the editorial page an article full of the meat of the gospel. Recently, for example, there was a striking editorial on "Conversion" with Paul's conversion as the text.

The Baltimore Press

Passing from "vicinity" to Baltimore, no such pleasant things can be said about the newspapers. Our papers are dead against prohibition, and treat the subject and all relating to it with no apparent wish to be fair. One of the papers, influential and respected in former days, and welcome then in the homes of good people, has sadly deteriorated. Dr. A. C. Dixon, moved, as most good people are, with grief and indignation because of this deterioration, is undertaking to reform the paper, or at least to let the manager know what good people think of this type of journalism. He prepared a severe indictment of the present policy of the paper, and asked the members of his congregation to sign it. At the ministers' meeting he read the letter and stated that he intended to send a copy to each minister for use in his congregation. I heard something the other day, which, if true, may make this bold undertaking a failure. The statement was made in my hearing that the offending paper, for a while having a hard time financially, had greatly increased its revenues since it became "yellow."

That last word reminds me of what Walter H. Page, in one of his famous letters, said about the great English editor, Lord Northcliffe, who died recently: he referred to him as the "lord of yellow journals," and said that he did not think of Northcliffe as "an entity but as a symptom." A similar characterization might be made of two opposite types of preachers and teachers today: they are symptoms of a morbid mental and emotional condition. On the one hand are the radicals and on the other side a certain type of militant conservative. The radicals think that there are tares amongst the wheat in the field of truth: and out they rush, eyes flashing, hair flying, chins thrust forward, fingers itching for the uprooting task; and the havoc they make in the wheatfield is enough to make the angels weep as they watch the spoiling of the job which they had been appointed to attend to later. These radicals are not truth-seeking entities: they are "symptoms" and prove the presence of a serious sickness in the body academic or ecclesiastic. The other type of "symptom" is at the opposite pole. The ultra, militant, "fighting-mad" conservative bears not the slightest resemblance to Jesus Christ, and only a slight resemblance to the Apostle Paul. When one surveys "Baltimore and vicinity" he finds at least one of these radical "symptoms" whose former pupils, and there are many of them in this neighborhood, speak of him as an excellent and charming Christian gentleman. So far as I have learned he does not seem to have carried these pupils with him into the wheatfield; or if they went that far, they stopped short of destroying the wheat by recklessly radical activities. Another "symptom" of the malady of the present day is a quick, unthinking lining up with any person who is attacked if the said person has some excellent personal qualities. This was illustrated at William Jewell College when many professors, impulsively, and as they confessed over their signature, ignorantly, lined up in a sympathetic defense of one of their number. I have heard not a few speak resentfully of attacks on Prof. Vedder's much talked-of book who doubtless are strongly opposed to the radical utterances of that book. Only a few people, apparently, are making a serious attempt to think carefully, and then to follow consistently and courageously to the end. I believe that Baltimore and Maryland preachers have not been much weakened by loose views of truth. As a body they are preaching the great saving doctrines with fearless devotion, and are "watching for souls" with evangelistic zeal and care. Some of the Baltimore pastors, notably Dr. H. M. Wharton and Dr. A. C. Dixon, respond to many outside calls, the former being in great demand in the South as a leader of evangelistic meetings. Though nearly seventy-five years old, Dr. Wharton has carried great burdens of work lightly, and has been a wonder to many. At this writing he is laid aside on account of an operation, from which we are hoping for his early recovery.

Alberta C. Dickinson Memorial

Alberta C. Dickinson was one of the "one hundred and twenty" which brought about the original organization of the East Central District. Not only was she a constituent member but she became its first treasurer and held that office until her death in June, 1922. She was a business girl. Her days were "chained to a desk"; her evenings were given to her duties as treasurer. She carried the accounts of the women's circles of 1500 churches, and besides, the accounts of hundreds of those who made personal gifts. Toiling late into the night, frail of body and often mentally weary, this young woman invested herself, nor wavered in her courage and devotion. The East Central District wishes to perpetuate such a life; since the hospital work at Swatow, South China, lay nearest her heart, it proposes to create a memorial, the income of which shall be used for the maintenance of the work she loved. Any one caring for further information may communicate with Mrs. B. F. McCann, 315 N. Robert Blvd., Dayton, O. This memorial fund will be a specific in the E. C. D. Continuation Campaign.

A Tribute to the Memory of J. Bruce Evans

By J. E. Sherrill

Rev. J. Bruce Evans passed to rest from the Bondies Sanitarium, South Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 10, 1922, at the age of thirty-eight. For over a year his health had been failing. He was engaged in evangelistic work chiefly in California, Oregon and Indiana for over sixteen years, while in recent years he had been holding meetings in the Northwest. During his early ministry he had charge of the Union Rescue Mission in Los Angeles; so pronounced was his success that he was in great demand by the churches at large for revival services. It was during an evangelistic campaign in Bluffton, Ind., that he met Helen I. Cook who became his wife Feb. 9, 1916. He was a member of the Temple Church, Los Angeles, Cal.

J. Bruce Evans was a man of more than ordinary literary ability. Being of Welsh descent, he inherited to no small degree the musical genius of his people. He was the composer of a number of poems and of more than fifty songs and hymns, some of which have attained rank among the best; one of his songs "California" was sung by 1500 San Diego school children the day of the arrival of the Liberty Bell in that city. The man who could write a poem like the following deserves a place among the poets who will live:

To Flanders Fallen

"Brave brothers sleep while poppies grow;
The fight is finished with the foe.
Rest ye your weary heads today.
You died, but showed us first the way
To win, before they laid you low.

"Dead? No you live!
As long as God shall live and reign,
And sunset glow,
And larks shall sing and poppies grow,
Ye men shall live.

"We heard your call across the sea,
And saw your bleeding hearts, as on you marched.
We kept the faith with you,
And Freedom won her fight anew.
So sleep in peace until God calls
From Flanders' fields."

The funeral service was held in the First Church, Long Beach, and was in charge of Rev. George D. Knights.

Baptist Education Day

Several years ago the Northern Baptist Convention designated the last Sunday in February as Baptist Education Day and suggested that each year this day should have appropriate recognition in our Baptist churches. By this action the convention brought us in line with other great denominations, many of which have for years recognized this last Sunday in the month as Education Day. The previous Thursday is also the recognized Day of Prayer for Schools and Colleges in the calendar of the student movements.

It is altogether fitting that this day should have wide recognition throughout our denomination. We can certainly afford on one Sunday of the year to think specifically of the thousands of Baptist boys and girls who are away from home securing their education. We can also afford to think of the other thousands of our children still at home who ought to be preparing to secure a higher education.

It is therefore suggested that the day should be observed in the churches by special sermons or addresses on some phase of the subject of higher education. The question of whether thousands of our boys and girls are to secure a higher education is almost entirely in the hands of our pastors. There are many of these promising young people who are only waiting for a suggestion to put their ambitions into realization.

The Southern Baptists report that as a result of the emphasis which they placed upon this matter by sermons and addresses during the period of the taking of their pledges for their $75,000,000 campaign they increased the number of their students in schools and colleges from 28,000 to 42,000 within two years. This remarkable growth was due, in the judgment of their leaders, to the interest which the pastors took in placing the subject of education before the minds of their young people. A similar movement in the North would have marked significance for our future leadership.

The day may also well be recognized in the Sunday schools by short addresses to the young people; in the meetings of the young people's societies by discussion of various questions relating to education. With wise planning the day could be made a very fruitful one for the future of the young people in our churches.

The board of education has literature bearing on various phases of this matter which it will be glad to put in the hands of any one who will write for it. It is free of charge. Communications should be addressed to the Board of Education, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Among the Dry-Farm Homesteaders of Wyoming

By J. F. Blodgett

The colporter-missionaries in Wyoming have been and are the pioneer and forerunners of much of our established work. Of the twenty-one churches organized in the state since I came to this work in 1913, all except five or six owe their organization largely to the scouting of the colporter-missionaries. All the churches organized have not lived, but the net gain in churches whose life still exists is considerable. "Scattered" Baptists have been tied up to the denomination and the kingdom by the visits of these men. I received a gift of $20 yesterday to missions, sent in by a poor widow, member of a little church of ten members or less in a dry-farming district. This group is too isolated and small to have a regular pastor, but it has lived as a church for more than ten years with no steady preaching, visited occasionally by a colporter-missionary. These few dry-farm homesteaders subscribed $610 to the New World Movement and have paid $312.70. They bring their payments up to 100 per cent of the amount due, May 1 of each year.

Colporter Carl Fischer furnishes an instance of how a colporter can prepare the way. After we organized our church at Lusk, I went down to help secure subscriptions, amounting to about $10,000, in order that a house of worship might be purchased. Fischer and I went together among the farmers and ranch people living on dry land farms. He introduced me to three men, one a German like himself. The first man subscribed $500; the second one $C00; and then we went to the ranch of the German. He got down from his wheat stack where he was piling bundles. Fischer introduced us and then told him bluntly that we were securing pledges for our church building and he had to help. I took the lead in the conversation at what I thought was the right moment, telling the man finally that his neighbor a few miles away had subscribed $600. Because he believed in Fischer and any project he represented, he wrote his subscription for $600.

In a recent letter Brother Fischer writes as follows:

"The nature of a colporter-missionary's work is such that not much of it appears on the outside but some visible fruits are not lacking. A man, whom I had not seen since my first visit several years ago, showed me the well-read Bible I had given him and said: 'I prize this book more than I can tell you. I found God in it, whom I had forgotten. There is no better book in all the world.' He gave me $1 to be used in the Bible work of the Publication Society, saying: 'I wish I could give you more. I hope our crop will be better next year.' It remains true that 'they that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.'"

Rev. N. C. Coggin is our colporter-missionary in Jackson's Hole. Wherever he goes and stays long enough to be at all known he wins the hearts of the people, who soon find out that he is genuine and sincere. Out here, your old-timer may fight but it will be a fair and square stand-up fight, man to man. The people are simple, love fair play and hate hard deeds wrapped up in soft words. So, ere long, they find Brother Coggin to be a real man and receive him. Under date of Dec. 15 Brother Coggin writes:

"There are no expenses this month because it is impossible to travel by auto. All of my traveling has been on foot. The people say that the snow will stay on till next May. How I do dread to stay in so long! But I can keep busy in Jackson and nearby territory. The work here is encouraging. The attendance at church services is increasing and the interest is growing. Last night there was a very bad snow storm and yet we had about twenty present. I hope we can get an evangelist to come in here when the time is ripe for a revival meeting."

The following is from a letter dated Jan. 18:

"For the three years that I have been a colporter-missionary I have had many and varied experiences. I have traveled many miles, burned lots of gas and had a great deal of grief with 'Henry.' I have been pulled up and pulled out and lifted out, pulled in and snowed in. I have been where there was plenty of gas and no gas. But I have never been without God or without a friend. God has not failed me in his promise, 'I am with you alway,' but has repaid me many times for all my griefs and discouragements. My faith has been strengthened and others have told me that theirs has been. I have visited many homes, read the gospel message in them and uttered prayers before children who, no doubt, had never heard a prayer uttered before. I have preached in homes, school houses, churches, to individuals in the fields and open prairies. I have held evangelistic meetings and baptized the young and those who were the heads of families. I have organized Sunday schools in school houses, preached to young people who had never heard a sermon and did not know what a Sunday school was till the colporter came around. In one community a young girl almost shut the door in my face when I said I was a minister and calling to get acquainted with the people in her neighborhood. She said, 'I have no use for the church.' But before I left that community I saw her and her parents sitting as members of a Sunday-school class listening to the words of eternal life and joining in songs of praise to God.

"The colporter never stays in one place long enough to see the ripe fruits of his labor, but no one can calculate the good he may do with his Bible in hand and the Christian literature that he sows in the homes he visits. Many persons in the state of Wyoming would never have heard of the gospel message, perhaps, if it had not been for the colporter, and many others will never hear of it if the colporter-work is discontinued. Let us hope and pray that they can never say that they did not have a preacher."

Mr. Owl Joins Bacone's Faculty

Pres. B. D. Weeks, of Bacone College, announces the addition to the Bacone faculty of Henry M. Owl, twenty-three years old, who will be in charge of the school's manual training studies. As Bacone's model farm embraces 300 acres, Owl has one of the most important jobs at Muskogee's Indian university.

Mr. Owl is a graduate of the Indian department of Hampton institute, and has had post-graduate work at Columbia University in New York. His father is a North Carolina Cherokee, his mother a member of the Catawba tribe of South Carolina. His oldest brother is director of physical training at Haskell Indian school, and is said to be one of the most popular instructors in the history of the institution. Another brother is a student at Andover.

All of which goes to indicate that Henry Owl, having possessed the advantages of education for himself, will be an important factor in the training of hundreds of Indian boys and girls at Bacone.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

SINCE THE COMING OF Rev. L. G. Perry to Lake View Church in October, the little church has been filled at both Sunday services, and the Sunday school has been the largest in the history of the church. There has been a great interest in the Sunday evening services. The pastor has brought strong evangelistic messages. Twenty-one have recently made a public profession of faith in Christ. A Bible class of forty-five has been organized. The church is looking forward to a new building in the spring.

THE COLBY Y. M. C. A. is doing considerable gospel deputation work this winter under the direction of Prof. H. E. Newman, of the department of religious education. Mr. J. Leslie Dunstan, '23, is the student chairman of the work. Churches in Waterville, Oakland, Fairfield, Winslow, Clinton, Skowhegan, and South Portland have been visited by student deputations. At Oakland the students have conducted a series of six Sunday evening services at the United Baptist Church. Plans are under way for groups to visit Hebron Academy, Oak Grove Seminary, and the Good Will School at Hinckley. Prominent among the deputation workers are Mr. Percy G. Beatty, '24, son of Rev. Benjamin Beatty, pastor-evangelist of the state convention, and Mr. Marlin D. Farnum, '23, of Lynn, Mass., the president of the Colby Christian Association.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE NEW RELATIONSHIP OF PASTOR AND people by the coming to Lebanon of Rev. H. H. White the first of the year is proving most happy. Church and pastor seem to be fitted to each other. Before the coming of Mr. White repairs on the church and parsonage were made and the finances of the church are in good condition. While the benevolences of the church have lagged somewhat, the missionary committee in cooperation with the pastor hopes to bring the church up to 100 per cent efficiency in its benevolences. The congregations are increasing and the Sunday school is taking on new life. At a recent parish supper the largest number that ever attended such a gathering was present.

THE CHURCH AT LACONIA, which has been pastorless since December, when Rev. H. H. White went to Lebanon, has found a pastor in Rev. George G. Kincaid. Mr. Kincaid comes from Maine where he has held a pastorate and recently engaged in evangelistic work.

REV. W. W. HARRIS has resigned at Whitefield after a pastorate of about seven years. He has accepted a call to the church at Warner.

REV. J. K. MILLER, convention pastor-at-large, has been visiting churches with a set of nearly 100 slides and giving stereopticon lectures which inform and interest his audiences. Beginning Feb. 18, Mr. Miller will hold special services with the church at Farmington and at the close of the meetings there will go to the church at Milton for a series of meetings.

NEW JERSEY

Peddie Alumni Banquet

The annual banquet of the Peddie Alumni Association was held Friday evening, Feb. 2, in Hotel McAlpin, New York City, with 150 graduates of the school and their friends in attendance. The banquet this year was especially significant in that it celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of Dr. R. W. Swetland's administration of the school.

Dr. James A. Hamilton, '94, secretary of state of New York, presented to the gathering "An Optimist's Message," D. G. Garabrant, president of the board of corporators, spoke on "Peddie's Ideals," and Headmaster Swetland responded with "A Forward Look." The toastmaster was Clifford A. Morton, '94, president of the Alumni Association. The double quartet of the Peddie Glee Club, under the direction of W. Kenneth Sprague, of the school faculty, rendered several selections.

Howard V. Merrill, '93, was elected president of the association for the ensuing year. Following his graduation from Peddie, Dr. Merrill attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of New York, from which institution he received the degree of M.D. in 1898. He is a practicing physician in Brooklyn, N. Y. Joseph E. Bath, '14, will continue as secretary and treasurer of the association.

NEW YORK

RECENTLY REV. TILLMAN B. JOHNSON, pastor of the Salem Church, New Rochelle, N. Y. tendered his resignation because of ill health.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

A UNIFIED BUDGET TO cover the entire expenses of Central Church, Quincy, has been subscribed in full. The success in this enterprise will make it possible for the church to devote itself to spiritual, educational and social endeavors without being under the necessity of raising money to maintain the church. J. H. Brown, veteran clerk of the church, says that this is the first time the church has ever had all of its money pledged a year in advance. Naturally, Pastor Meigs is enthusiastic over the outlook.

REV. C. C. COLBY OF Taylorville led in a series of special meetings with First Church, Shelbyville. A number of accessions to the church will result. The influence of the meetings extended far beyond the membership of the church. Mr. Colby addressed Sparks Business College, the high school and two grade schools.

ENGLEWOOD CHURCH, ROCK ISLAND: After a two weeks' meeting conducted by the Northern District Superintendent, Rev. E. A. Gilmore, about 23 signified their desire to live for God. A farewell reception was held the last evening of the services.

MONMOUTH: Under the leadership of the pastor, George Sneath, First Church of Monmouth has been doing real service. Additions and contributions for the New World Movement have gone together. The pastor stands up strongly for all the better things in the city.

THE SECOND FOUNDERS' DAY of the Baptist Missionary Training School, Chicago, was celebrated Thursday, Feb. 1. At twelve o'clock the alumnae luncheon was served to forty-two guests. A small fishing-net occupied the middle of the table, carrying out the idea of the luncheon program, "Casting the Net." In the afternoon the program of the training school committee was presided over by Mrs. R. R. Donnelley. She gave an interesting account of the beginnings of the school. Mrs. Emma Marshall, former treasurer of the Woman's Society, read the Scripture and Miss Elizabeth Gemmell, a former member of the committee, led in prayer. Miss Clara E. Norcutt, missionary correspondence secretary, brought a word of greeting from the board in New York. Mrs. Smith Thomas Ford, of Wheaton, gave an address on "The Challenge of the Silver Christ." A fifteen minute song session was led by Miss Jessie Olin, instructor in music. The student session was an illustrated account of the practice work carried on at Raymond Chapel, Parkside Church, Mexican camps and Gary, Ind. Dinner was served at 6:30 to 250 guests. Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of Second Church, and Mrs. Ross were guests of honor. Dr. Ross was the speaker of the evening. Mrs. Charles K. Henderson gave two groups of songs. Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham, president of the school, presided.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1922, a new Baptist church was born in a tent on Cicero Ave., near Irving Park Blvd., Chicago. Soon after its organization it called Rev. Charles F. Fields, to be its pastor. Mr. Fields had held several pastorates in the East, coming from Grace Church, Trenton, N. J., to Chicago. In the five months of its life this new church has bought lots on Dakin St., in Portage Park, erected a tabernacle building for its work for the present, all of which has been paid for by the membership itself. There have been quite a number of baptisms and almost weekly members are coming into fellowship in other ways. There is a Bible school of almost 200, a live and thriving B. Y. P. U., Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society. Rev. J. Clarence Greene, an evangelist and a member of the church, has just closed a three weeks' campaign with the church which has resulted in a great spiritual uplift of the people and brought a number to accept Christ. Many of these will be baptized and brought into fellowship with the church. There is a great opportunity for Baptist work in this growing new section of Chicago. This new church has seen the vision and gone to its task with a will and full consecration. A religious canvass of the entire neighborhood has been completed by the membership of the church and many homes and families found who need its ministrations. Already larger building plans are being discussed as necessity drives the church to enlarge.

IOWA

THE FIRST CHURCH, BEDFORD, closed recently a series of meetings which were under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Burch of Kansas City, Mo. Forty-seven persons have taken a stand for Christ and a number will unite with the church by letter. Mrs. Burch is a singer of ability and rendered real service.

A SERIES OF FOURTEEN associational conferences were held throughout the state, Jan. 23-Feb. 23. The conferences were held in cooperation with the four field workers, Drs. Caul, Hutchinson, Moore and Lagerquist. They were presided over by Dr. Mitchell, executive secretary of the Iowa Convention, who presented the work of the convention; Rev. Witter, director of the department of religious education, who presented young people's work; and President Million of Des Moines University, who presented institutional education. The conferences were a cooperative effort to present to the Baptists of Iowa a complete program.

Des Moines

January 26 the evangelistic team of the Federal Council of Churches held a number of conferences in the city. Dr. H. F. Stilwell was the Baptist representative, and gave inspiring messages at the various meetings. The Baptists had the largest attendance at the denominational conferences held at luncheon that day.

The University Church is the youngest church in this part of the state, being a "yearling." Its services are held in the chapel building of Des Moines University, thus serving the students and faculty of the institution as well as the community. The evening service is in charge of the students entirely, and special programs are arranged for the different meetings. The last four Sunday evenings have been devoted to the consideration of the four departments of young people's work—education, extension, life service, junior and intermediate work. This young people's meeting is serving for a laboratory for plans and programs for the general work of young people in the state. The state program is being applied directly to the local organization with splendid results. There being no regular evening service of the church, the pastor, Chaplain J. Orrin Gould, is devoting his efforts to a constructive program for the students of Des Moines University. University students were very much delighted by a chapel talk by Rev. A. G. Lagerquist, one of the field workers of the Iowa Convention.

The life-service league of the University Church is perhaps the largest organization of that kind to be found in the denomination. The league meets for regular study and devotion at eight o'clock Sunday mornings. It is a part of the young people's department of the Iowa Convention, and as a department is helping to work out a general policy and program for young people's work in general.

Rev. Hal E. Norton has resigned as executive secretary of the Des Moines City Union. He will enter the pastorate again within the next few weeks.

INDIANA

ON SUNDAY, FEB. 4, THE hand of fellowship was given to twenty-seven people in First Church, Valparaiso. These were received as a result of a revival campaign held in January by the pastor, Rev. W. W. Ayer, and William S. Dixon, singing evangelist. Over sixty decisions were made during the campaign and many letters were dug up. The pastor has baptized thirty-one to date and anticipates forty baptisms from the revival and well over sixty additions in all. The church is thoroughly revived and all are praising God for a real outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

MISSOURI

O. P. BISHOP OF KANSAS CITY writes: "I have turned aside from my business life in Kansas City and spent fourteen nights with Rev. A. J. Rendleman, in Patee Park Church, St. Joseph. There were sixty-seven accessions to the church; the larger portion of them upon profession of faith and by relation. More than fifty of them were adults and will be an immediate asset to the Patee Park Church. Rev. A. J. Rendleman has been in Patee Park two years; many people are uniting with the church, and many other hearts are turning towards Patee Park."

OHIO

FIRST CHURCH, POMEROY: A sermon was delivered at the morning service, Jan. 28, by Rev. Carleton W. Atwater, pastor of the Lincoln Park Baptist Church, Cincinnati, which resulted in several decisions for Christ. At 3 o'clock Rev. H. A. Baldwin, pastor of the Baptist church at Hartford, W. Va., baptized fourteen converts in the Pomeroy Baptist Church, as a result of the special meetings conducted by Mr. Montgomery at that place.

The special meetings conducted by Rev. Carleton Atwater, resulting in thirty-four conversions and thirty-eight accessions, closed with the evening service. Mr. Atwater's coming meant much to Pomeroy, and would have meant a great deal more, had it not been for sickness among the people and continued stormy nights.

NORTH DAKOTA

FOURTEEN NEW MEMBERS have been added to the Rutland Church during the past year. Rev. W. A. Daniel, pastor at Minot, is assisting Pastor J. R. Spiller in a series of revival meetings.

FARGO FIRST CHURCH enjoyed a giving Christmas this year. The men of the church gave a ton of flour. Vegetables, fruit and jelly were among the gifts. Ten families were cared for on Christmas day. The poor of the city will be remembered during the winter. Mr. Harry Jones, of Minneapolis, conferred with the church, Jan. 24, with reference to its growing need of more Sunday-school room.

FARGO, IMMANUEL will observe its fortieth anniversary the last of March. The anniversary will be preceded by a series of meetings, in which Pastor Finwall will have the help of Rev. L. J. Anderson.

FARGO, SWEDISH: Conference Evangelist Erick Anderson is to help Pastor W. G. Holmberg in a series of special meetings.

REV. J. E. NAYLOR, state evangelist, assisted Pastor L. McKinnon of Page in a series of meetings the first three weeks of the New Year. Several conversions have been reported and some candidates baptized.

PASTOR J. M. HUPP finds the Jamestown church responsive to his leadership. All services are well attended. Several are seeking membership and baptism.

PASTOR L. R. JOHNSON, of Bismarck, is conducting the high-school Bible-study class this year, which is composed of eighteen boys and girls. Several have recently been received into the church by baptism, following the special meetings conducted by Evangelist Naylor.

REV. I. D. MCBAIN, of Bottineau, is giving half time this winter to the work in the church.

REV. J. C. BOTHIC became pastor of Minot, Bismarck and Devils Lake Negro churches December 1. He is making his home at Minot.

STATE EVANGELIST, J. E. NAYLOR is at present assisting L. M. Stolberg at Kenmare in a series of meetings.

PASTOR-AT-LARGE O. S. JACOBSON and Rev. P. O. Ekstrom began a series of meetings at Drayton January 14.

PASTOR E. MONNES, of Powers Lake, is being assisted in the special meetings in some of his preaching stations by Rev. Tom Thompson, Wyoming.

PRECEDING THE HOLIDAYS the prayer meetings at Grand Forks, were given over to a study of the mission book, "The Trend of the Races," conducted by N. J. Nelson. The "Triple S" class of the Bible school taught by N. R. Lincoln is studying "Building with India." The men's brotherhood gave a supper at the church Jan. 23; about 100 men and women were present. Pastor J. G. York is giving special attention to religious education matters in this state until a director can be secured. Mr. R. B. Griffith, president of the convention, and Mrs. Griffith, are spending the winter in California.

NEBRASKA

Lincoln

Dr. W. T. Elmore, First Church, is having congregations which fill the auditorium to capacity. Every department of the church is in vigorous activity. The Sunday school averaged 415 during January, which is probably the largest of any of the down-town Sunday schools. One of the notable features is the interest shown by the brotherhood. The Sunday attendance has greatly increased and the president, Mr. J. S. Bishop, is putting on a fine program of monthly events for the season. Dr. Elmore is in his fifth year as pastor. He has a large program in mind for the church during the next few years. A substantial and united membership will cooperate with him in his plans.

Rev. Henry G. Smith is having a good time at the Second Church. During the past year, sixty-nine members were received into the church, many by baptism. The Sunday school has an average attendance nearly equal to the membership of the church, which is far above a standard school. The primary and beginners' department has had an increase of over 200 per cent during the past two years. The church never has a deficit in its finances. In its characteristic way it paid its recent paving tax in a lump sum, and without soliciting subscriptions. Its per capita gift for missions the past year was $18, the largest per capita in the association. Among the young people of the church two are missionaries in Bengal-Orissa; one is in social settlement work; one is a student for the ministry in Denison University; and one is there preparing for foreign mission work.

First and Second churches are preparing for pre-Easter services. Four weeks prior to Easter services will begin in the Second Church and continue two weeks. They will then begin in the First Church and continue until Easter Sunday. The meetings will be led by the two pastors, they exchanging for the pulpit work. Already there is a rising interest in this evangelistic effort due to group and cottage prayer meetings, conferences and organizing of the members for personal work.

After six years of faithful service, Rev. F. W. Ainslie is closing his work at Temple Church to become executive secretary of the Nebraska Convention. This place has been vacant since Dr. Walter I. Fowle closed his work four months ago. Mr. Ainslie has many qualities which fit him well for this important task. He is already at work and will move to Grand Island in June. He has done a fine work in Lincoln. Taking a small mission church, he was able to unite it and the Holdrege Street Church, and for two years has amalgamated the two into a working body. He has been prominent in the city ministerial association and has been for all these years the outstanding authority in all the denominations on Daily Vacation Bible School work. His ministry at the Temple Church ends just after improvements have been made in the building, a W. W. G. has been organized, eleven new members have been received, seven by baptism, a young married people's club has been formed and other activities have been initiated.

Baptist student work at the university continues with a good degree of interest. The Bible classes are large. Some of the outstanding Christian leaders are in the university. Seven former students are now on the foreign field. Fifteen or twenty of the present group are planning for distinctive Christian work, both foreign and home. Money is coming in month by month from the New World Movement for the property, and it is evident that cash will be paid in full for it when the deed is acquired in June, 1924. Mr. Pope is now in the tenth year as university pastor.

MICHIGAN

REV. E. J. CROSS AND family of Imlay City are greatly bereaved by the death of their only son, Francis, who died Feb. 10 from pneumonia. Mr. Cross is one of Michigan's faithful pastors, and friends throughout the state will sympathize with the family in its sorrow.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

AFTER THREE YEARS and six months of successful ministry with Bethel Church, Denver, Dr. Edw. L. Krumreig tendered his resignation to take effect March 1. Doctor Krumreig has accepted the office of executive secretary of the National Literary Society, Washington, D. C. During the three and one-half years he spent with Bethel nearly 300 members have been added to the church, the majority of them by baptism. The church is in good condition spiritually and socially with a fine body of young people headed by Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Thomas, and a fine church organization. Mr. F. T. Houston, 1714 South Broadway, Denver, is church clerk.

WYOMING

ON A RECENT SUNDAY the new building of the West Side Mission, Casper, was dedicated. This mission was started just a year ago. It has been organized into an independent church and has a promising future.

UTAH

A REGIONAL CONFERENCE of western state secretaries was held in Salt Lake City, Feb. 6-7. Dr. A. W. Rider of California was chairman; Rev. G. Clifford Cress of Montana, clerk. The meeting was called by Director J. Y. Aitchison, who presented the promotion program for the closing months of this fiscal year. There was a distinct note of optimism in every session. Only two of the twelve conventions represented had any doubt about raising for the New World Movement an amount equal to last year. The secretaries were entertained at a banquet by Immanuel Church, whose pastor, Rev. Russell Brougher, took an active part in making the conference a pleasant one. Sec'y M. L. Rickman, of the Utah convention, was the host and received a vote of thanks for the many kindnesses shown. The conference endorsed the general program of the Board of Promotion and pledged the conventions to a complete and maximum participation in the denominational tasks. The following were present: Director J. Y. Aitchison, Assistant W. H. Bowler, Dr. A. M. Petty, Portland, Ore.; Dr. A. W. Rider, Los Angeles, Calif.; Dr. Hanna, Casper, Wyo.; Sec'y J. S. Stump, New York; and Rev. Bruce Jackson, Cheyenne, Wyo. The following state secretaries were present: W. H. Harper, Southern California; C. W. Brinstad, Northern California; O. C. Wright, Oregon; J. F. Wat-

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

Start an Adult Bible Class with
SELL'S Bible Study Text-Books
A QUARTER OF A MILLION SOLD!
Just Out No. 10—Bible Studies in the Four Gospels
No. 9—Bible Studies in Vital Questions
1. Supplementary Bible Studies 5. B. S. in Life of Christ
2. Bible Studies by Books 6. B. S. in Life of St. Paul
3. B. S. by Periods 7. B. S. in Christian Life
4. B. S. by Doctrines 8. B. S. in Early Church
Send for circular showing how to use them.
Each, cloth, 75c; paper, 50c
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y.;
17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

son, West Washington; A. H. Bailey, East Washington; W. S. Shanks, Idaho; J. B. Speed, Nevada; M. L. Rickman, Utah; H. Q. Morton, Arizona; F. B. Palmer, Colorado; J. F. Blodgett, Wyoming, and G. Clifford Cress, Montana.

REV. HARDIE CONNOR, formerly of Safford, recently returned to Arizona, to become pastor of the church at Willcox and vicinity. Mr. Connor has an important and strategic work on his present field.

REV. E. L. BARKLEY, four years pastor of First Church of Winslow, died in that city on Jan. 13 from cancer of the stomach. Mr. Barkley was loved by the people of Winslow both within and without the church.

SUPERINTENDENT OF EVANGELISM L. M. Darnell is aiding Pastor Vanderhoof, of Scottsdale, in a series of meetings. There have been a number of professions of faith.

MRS. CARRIE A. ROBINSON of San Francisco, district worker for the southwest district, has closed a month of appreciated work in the state.

DOWN TEXAS WAY, fourteen churches registered an attendance of 2,869 young people in B. Y. P. U.'s, Sunday, Dec. 3. Some of these churches have from six to fifteen B. Y. P. U.'s running at the same time. Bang!

TEN MILLION NEGROES IN AMERICA

Do you know that the majority of our black brothers in America are Baptists? During the great industrial expansion of 1917-1919, hundreds of thousands of these people drifted into our northern states, presenting an opportunity and a responsibility which was immediately recognized by our City Mission Societies.

Financing Negro Churches and Christian Settlements

Since then much time has been given by these Societies to the oversight of the Negro Churches. Much money has been expended in helping them to finance the purchase of suitable buildings. Special contributions have been made to establish such Christian Community Centers as the Morgan Community House at Pittsburgh, which is recognized as the pioneer of other such Centers recently established in Cleveland and Detroit, and in financing institutional work such as is now being conducted in the old First Church of Chicago.

Our Obligation Is Not Yet Discharged

Much still remains to be done in providing for these churches suitable leaders, efficient programs of Religious Education and holding before them high standards of home, society and recreational life.

Our future achievements depend upon the support of our churches to our great denominational program.

HELP SAVE THE CITY

THE ASSOCIATION OF STANDARD CITY MISSION SOCIETIES

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Pacific Coast

OREGON

REV. GEORGE H. YOUNG closed his work as director of religious education for Oregon Dec. 31 and began his work with the First Church of Hamilton, Ohio.

TWO CHURCHES HAVE BEEN ORGANIZED since the beginning of the new year. Brookings, an important mill town lying on the coast just north of the Oregon-California line, found that Baptists were in the majority and were requested to develop the field. The new church has about thirty members. The site for a new building has been donated by the mill company and a fund for providing a building is being collected.

IN A RAPIDLY GROWING SECTION OF NORTH PORTLAND a vigorous mission independently developed has united with the convention. A survey shows that 500 families in the neighborhood are favorable to having Baptists develop this field. Already candidates for baptism are awaiting membership.

DURING JANUARY ALL THE CHURCHES excepting those in and around Portland were visited in behalf of the New World Movement by Rev. and Mrs. O. C. Wright, Rev. A. M. Petty and Rev. J. C. Austin. Recently the campaign was extended to include the Portland churches.

THE ARLETA CHURCH has let a contract for the construction of a unit to cost $40,000. Rev. Owen T. Day is pastor.

IN SPITE OF THE DEVASTATING FIRE, the Astoria Church is continuing work on its $40,000 building. Rev. E. A. Gottberg is pastor.

THE CHURCH AT MEDFORD of which Rev. F. R. Leach is pastor, has let a contract for the erection of a new $40,000 house of worship.

THE MT. OLIVET CHURCH (Negro) Portland, expects to occupy its new building by Easter. When completed this church will have cost $25,000 and will be one of the best Negro churches on the coast. Rev. J. W. Anderson is pastor.

THE HILLSBORO CHURCH, Rev. Robt. Kay pastor, will occupy its new building, costing approximately $20,000, by Easter.

REV. S. L. BOYCE, the newly elected pastor of the Riddle Church will have the pleasure of seeing the task of building the $8,000 new church completed.

A NEW MISSION is soon to be opened by the convention in Northeast Portland in a section of Portland's resident district.

THE ALOHA CHURCH is using its new church building although it is incomplete. The site was donated by a realty company.

Rev. J. E. McGuire has labored with no stipulated remuneration. The Portland pastors in capacity of carpenters donated a "blue Monday."

THE FIRST SWEDISH CHURCH, PORTLAND, recently purchased a new lot for $15,000. It has completed the payments and has put its old property up for sale. It expects to begin soon to erect a new $50,000 building. Rev. T. J. Sjolander is the pastor.

SUNDAY, FEB. 11, the corner-stone of the new Bend Church was laid. Two years ago the old building was destroyed by fire. Recently the pastor Rev. F. H. Beard, assisted by Rev. J. C. Austin, secured $20,000 in pledges. The new building will cost $30,000.

OREGON HAS HAD a matchless team of general workers consisting of Dr. O. C. Wright, superintendent of missions, Dr. S. J. Reid, superintendent of evangelism, and Dr. Geo. H. Young, educational director. But the trio is broken by the removal of Dr. Young to the First Church of Hamilton, Ohio. The Hamilton Church has secured one of the most able and spiritual men in the state.

THERE SEEMS TO BE a deepening of spiritual life in almost every section of the state. Evangelistic meetings held in Albany have resulted in over sixty accessions and in a quickening of the life of the church in every way. Dr. B. F. Fellman is the pastor. On a recent Sunday evening Rev. Daniel Bryant baptized eighteen at Corvallis First Church. Corvallis is the seat of the Oregon Agricultural College with nearly 3000 students. The Baptist church is packed to overflowing on Sundays. Dr. S. J. Reid, State Superintendent of Evangelism, will assist Rev. Willis E. Pettibone at the First Church, Oregon City, beginning the middle of February. Rev. C. E. Dunham, pastor of First church, Eugene, is assisting Rev. Harold Proppe in special meetings at Independence. A general quickening of spiritual interest is reported, and large results will surely follow. The First Church in the capital and second largest city, Salem, looks forward to the coming of Rev. August Hunderup, one of the Oregon boys, to assist Dr. Milliken in special meetings. Mr. Hunderup recently closed successful meetings at the Arleta Church, Portland, Rev. Owen Day, pastor. There were forty accessions. Evangelistic meetings are now in progress at McMinnville, the seat of Linfield College. The pastor, Dr. C. L. Trawin, has been assisted by Rev. Daniel Bryant for part of the time. Deep interest in the meetings is reported.

DESPITE THE DISASTROUS fire which wiped out a major portion of the deepwater port, At Medford, Rev. F. R. Leach, and his heroic band of workers are going ahead with building operations. The Astoria church, when completed, will be one of the finest in the state outside of Portland. At Mewford, Rev. F. R. Leach and his people are planning a structure to cost $35,000 or $40,000. Rev. F. H. Beard of Bend is leading his people in the erection of what will probably be the finest Baptist church house in Eastern Oregon.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

FIRST CHURCH of Long Beach, has had one of the best years in its history. Rev. George D. Knights is rounding out eleven years as pastor. The membership is about 1400, three times what it was at the beginning of the present pastorate. One hundred and forty had been added up to Dec. 1. A meeting under Miss Amy Lee Stockton, closing in December, was helpful in increasing the additions by baptisms and otherwise. It was the best evangelistic effort in the history of the present pastorate. The church raised for all purposes more than $54,000 last year. Of this amount over $28,000 went to missions. Of the remainder about $10,000 was paid toward the new Sunday-school building. The Sunday school has the second largest attendance of any Baptist Sunday school in the state. The B. Y. P. U. organization has been graded, so that every age may have a B. Y. P. U. home. This organization is a source of great strength.

FIRST CHURCH, HOLLYWOOD, is prospering. Its Sunday school is growing so that more room is an absolute necessity and plans are well along to provide it in the immediate future. The pastor, Dr. S. J. Skevington, is scoring a success in what he calls "Pastor's Junior Conversations," somewhat different from the usual junior sermons, in that Dr. Skevington arranges to have a boy or girl on the platform and holds a "conversation," always using some object to emphasize his message. It is noticed that the adults also are wide-awake during these conversations. Large numbers of children attend. Eighteen new members received the hand of fellowship at the February communion service. Dr. Skevington has just retired from the presidency of the Union Ministers' Association of Los Angeles and is now chairman of the Southern California board of promotion.

CORONA, WALTER S. REED, pastor: Work in all departments is progressing. Congregations are large. Sunday-school attendance has greatly increased. Senior B. Y. P. U. is in flourishing condition. A junior B. Y. P. U. was recently organized with nearly forty members. Last year's report shows $12,000 raised for benevolence; local budget increased $1000 over last year; $800 spent on furnishings for church; pastor's salary raised $200. Many new members are being received. The Corona Mexican Mission, Rev. P. H. Pierson, pastor, is doing fine work among the Mexican population. Ten have been baptized in the last three months. Recently a prayer meeting with fifty-one present was held. Rev. P. H. Pierson and wife are greatly loved by their church.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, Pasadena, conducted its second annual Bible conference Jan. 21-Feb. 2. In spite of continuous rain the conference sessions were crowded day and night. Numbers were turned away. Last year Dr. Dean had fifteen speakers at the conference and the enthusiasm was marked. This year of the twenty-eight addresses of the conference, three were delivered by Dr. O. P. Gifford, one by Pastor Dean and the remainder by Dr. G. Campbell-Morgan. Dr. Morgan gave four series of addresses. During the afternoons of the first week of the conference he spoke on the general theme, "The Historic Christ." The evening series of the first week was upon "The Bible." The second week the afternoon addresses were on the theme, "The Teaching of Christ Concerning the Church." And the evenings of the second week were given over to the examination of "Some of the Superlative Sayings of Christ." Large numbers of Southern California's ministers were in the sessions.

DR. JAMES S. WEST, who recently came to San Francisco from Detroit, is making himself felt. Attendance is gradually increasing at all of the services, new members are being added both by letter and baptism, and San Francisco is beginning to find out that there is a First Baptist Church on Market and Octavia streets.

SUMMY'S CORNER

HOME SONGS

You Will Like to Sing or
Will Like to Hear Others Sing

IRISH ROSE O' MY HEART..... $ .60
By W. Franke Harling

THOUGHT FANCIES ..... .60
By Herbert Dale Jones

MEMORY'S GARDEN ..... .50
By J. L. Hoff

CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO.
Publishers
429 So. Wabash Ave. Chicago

THE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE AT STOCKHOLM

Private Party (Temple Tour) Through Sweden, Norway, England, Belgium, France. 52 Days. July 7—Aug. 27. Prices from $685. For particulars address Organizer and Conductor.
Rev. C. K. Newell, 87 Palisade Ave., West Hoboken, N. J.
And compare this tour with others.

Baptist World Alliance
Stockholm, July 21-28
Tour Europe this Summer
Bennett's Travel Bureau
Economic and Serviceable
for full information write
Rev. W. R. Sloman
2631 E. Third St. Dayton, O.

Baptist World Alliance!!
Stockholm, Sweden, July 21st-28th, 1923
——Other Tours to——
EUROPE, GREECE, EGYPT, and THE HOLY LAND
PERSONALLY CONDUCTED
Sailings in June and July
Write TODAY for ITINERARY and full information to
THE WICKER TOURS
Care Dr. J. J. Wicker, 1108 Mutual Bldg., Richmond, Virginia
LOWEST PRICES—HIGHEST SERVICE

Want Ads

Wanted. A pastorate in or near Chicago, by young seminary (Rochester) graduate; successful pastor; high pulpit ability; accept any church with good outlook. Address, Pastor, c/o The Baptist.

For Sale. The Northern California Baptist Convention will sell Hotel Surf, Twin Lake Park, Santa Cruz, Calif., sacrifice price $8,000. Site on Bay of Monterey—mild climate—equable. Site 80,000 sq. ft. —more available. Best location in California for a hospital. Splendid opportunity for physician or nurse. Address W. M. Pence, Sales Representative, San Miguel, Calif.

Pastors, book your Easter meeting with C. Alexander Jones, evangelistic singer and soloist. Union or single meetings. 3349 S. Paulina St., Chicago.

A HANDFUL OF STARS

TEXTS THAT HAVE MOVED GREAT MINDS

By F. W. BOREHAM

"Mr. Boreham has a natural instinct for the spiritual interpretation of both nature and man; and these sermons live up to the reputation which he has established for himself."
—The Christian Work.

Net, $1.75, postpaid.

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; New York. Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary. 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary. 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary. 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

Tell People What You Want

(Continued from page 108)

ported on March 31. The whole campaign proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that a very effective form of raising money was that employed by the committee through the denominational press.

Several years ago it was discovered that the average gifts on the annuity plan to the various missionary societies were amounting to about $125,000 annually. Thirteen articles were written by Dr. Charles L. White, of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, which were about to be given to the denominational press, to be supplemented by independent advertising for annuity funds for the Home Mission Society. In speaking of the intention to do this, to a representative of the Foreign Mission Society, Dr. White was invited to re-write the thirteen articles, bringing in all the different societies and making the appeal jointly. This was done. That year about $600 was spent in advertising in the denominational press and a standard form of advertisement was carried during that period, in each issue, and the thirteen articles, some very brief and some of considerable length, were published in the denominational press. It took about six months for the denomination to realize the situation and the receipts that year did not show much, if any, increase in annuity gifts.

The advertising, however, was continued the second year, when about $2000 was spent in these ways, either jointly or by the various societies separately. The second year of advertising, which was confined to the denominational press, the receipts increased from approximately $125,000 to about $330,000. The next year the amount more than doubled again to approximately $700,000, and the third year all the societies reported receipts in excess of a million dollars.

Advertising for annuities in the denominational press was discontinued at the beginning of the New World Movement as it was feared that stressing these matters would interfere with the campaign that was then in progress. The result was greatly diminished annuity receipts. Several months ago the societies began to advertise again jointly along the lines of legacies and annuities, and the increase in annuities is very apparent.

Evidently it pays the societies to advertise in the denominational papers which reach a large proportion of our denomination, among which are thousands of men and women who are so situated that they desire to make their investments while they live, by securing the annuity contracts written by the various societies.

It is interesting also to learn that the campaign begun some years ago by the Baptist societies, called attention of societies in other denominations and also interdenominational groups to the matter, until now most of the leading missionary societies North and South and many educational institutions, have also discovered new gold mines which it is safe to say during the last eight years have brought many millions of dollars into the treasuries of these different organizations.

At the last annual meeting of the Home Missions Council, the report of the committee on trusts, annuities and legacies developed keen interest and will be published in special pamphlet form. It goes into the matter in considerable detail, and will doubtless stimulate interest in all the denominations in annuities, bonds, legacies, trust agreements and special new attractive ways of giving, during the lifetime and after the death of those who desire to invest a part or all of their income and principal in the extension of the kingdom of God.

BOOKS THAT CONTINUE IN DEMAND

By CHARLES GORE, D.D.
Formerly Bishop of Oxford

Belief in God

This book lays a secure foundation for a rational belief in God. The simplicity of its style makes it readily intelligible. $2.25

Belief in Christ

A sequel to Belief in God. It surveys the various views regarding the person of Christ, his miracles and teachings; and aims to build up a reasonable faith on the basis of traditional belief. $2.25

The Carpenter and His Kingdom

By ALEXANDER IRVINE

This life of Jesus is inspiring, reverent, and as readable as a novel. From the beginning it arrests the attention and it holds the interest to the last page. $1.50

The Children's Bible

Selections in simple English by
Henry A. Sherman and Charles F. Kent
With 30 full-page illustrations in full color and duotone. $3.50

"'The Children's Bible' may be classed with that small list of modern books that may safely be called classics."—The San Diego Sun.

At all bookstores

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS
597-599 Fifth Avenue, New York

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS

We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent.
Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—
Special Easter Services—Just out.
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful.
Write for slide bulletins.
Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY.
27 years Supplying Churches.
Room B. 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

From a Daytona, Fla., newspaper we glean the following information: The Community Church at Daytona Beach on Feb. 11 closed a successful campaign for $100,000 for a new church building. The campaign was under the direction of Rev. F. H. Divine of New York. "The proposition of Smith G. Young made to give $2500, provided nine others would do the same thing, produced results most gratifying, and was the thing which made the scheme a success, for ten others responded." According to present plans, the new building will be constructed next summer.

Our Book Shelf

Regeneration and Reconstruction, by S. B. John. New York: Doran.

Highly commended by Dr. John Clifford as timely, "especially for the needs of our world civilization at this hour," this brief essay is weighty and intense in its seriousness. The book is an appeal for personal evangelism, grounded on the collapse of civilization, the divine basis of civilization (love), and the necessity, nature and fruits of regeneration. This is not "just another book on personal work," but something different.

The Apostolic Age, by William Bancroft Hill, D. D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $2.

This is a study of the early church, its methods and achievements, set forth with a wealth of detail. It is what might be considered an exhaustive study of this supremely missionary age of the church. The author believes that an understanding of the early life of the church is necessary to a comprehension of its later development as well as its present genius. The book is realistic and interesting, as the author has drawn considerably upon his intimate acquaintance with foreign mission fields and their problems. He understands the customs and ways of the people of that time and brings the reader close up to them. The work is a fine reference book for Bible study and sermon material and is made accessible through a table of contents and an elaborate index.

Evolution at the Bar, by Philip Mauro. Boston: Hamilton Bros. 75 cents.

Mr. Mauro's books have usually won our hearty commendation. He has frequently come dangerously near the zones reserved for "men of science," but in this volume he plunges into the subject. He does not here make pretensions to scientific scholarship; he writes as an observer and compiler of the tangible results of the present day inquiries into accepted facts of science. He gives wide berth to the "inferences," "probabilities" and "likelihoods" of the modern sciolist; he cross-examines the witness "at the bar" and compels him to confess, not to his guesses, fancies and deductions, but to what he has seen and knows of the great problems under discussion. We must admit that the average expositor of the results of evolution, the swivel chair doctrinaire, makes rather a sorry showing when pinned down to demonstrated facts and results. Many of the averments touching the origin of man and the limitations of evolutionary processes of the creation vanish into the thin air of fancies and perchances. While Mr. Mauro is easily recognized as in the conservative class, still his survey of the results and indisputable conclusions of scientific researches are as reliable as his own reputation for scholarship and fairness. We commend this little volume as a most convenient, readable and dependable primer on subjects that are so much mooted these days.

"It Is to Laugh"

Police inspector: Name?
Prisoner: Pat McSweeney, sorr.
Police inspector: Nationality?
Prisoner: Oirish.
Police inspector: Business?
Prisoner: Italian organ grinder, sorr.

Judge: "What's this man charged with, officer?"

Policeman: "Careless walkin', yer honor. He bumped into a truck and bent both fenders and the radiator." American Legion Weekly.

---

Mr. Smith always spoke of his recently purchased car as "my automobile." He tried many experiments with it, and was often seen reclining underneath it. The automobile became the joke of the neighborhood.

One day Smith was mowing his lawn when something went wrong with the mower. He sat down beside it to have a look at the machinery.

A wag, chancing to pass that way, paused.

"Good morning, Smith," he said; "is that your automobile again?"

"No," growled Smith. "It's my oughter-mograss—but it won't!"

PENNILESS BLINDNESS

One of the most pathetic cases coming before the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, was that of an aged Baptist minister who for many years had been a beloved pastor of a loyal people. He was doing faithful and efficient work for the Kingdom, when, in the midst of his labors, he was suddenly stricken with blindness.

Without financial resources, he is literally penniless. What could be more tragic than penniless blindness?

A modest grant made by the Benefit Board has enabled him and his wife to live with at least some measure of comfort. Will you not help the Board to meet other cases of need?

This blind minister is one of the 1402 beneficiaries of the Benefit Board. They have given their best. Can we do less?

Ordinary justice requires an increase, not only in the number of beneficiaries, but also in the amounts granted to old and broken ministers, missionaries and widows.

You who made a gift to the Benefit Board, have had a part in this helpful ministry. Your continued support is needed.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention
(Corporate name)

E. T. TOMLINSON, Executive Secretary
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

Next Week—"Youth and Tuberculosis"

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Lorenz's Easter Music

Easter Services (New 1923)

"Easter Bells," by Ira B. Wilson
"Joyful Eastertide," for graded Sunday Schools.
8 cents per copy, $6.00 per hundred, postpaid.
Samples sent free upon request.

Easter Sunday School Cantatas

"The Glory of the Cross," by Lorenz.
"The Lighted Cross," By Ira B. Wilson.
"Easter," By Ira B. Wilson.
20 cents per copy, net in any quantity.
Send 20 cents for sample each of the three.

Easter Recitations and Exercises

"Easter Treasury No. 28" (New 1923)
25 cents per copy, postpaid.

Easter Choir Cantatas (New 1923)

"Joy after Sorrow," Wilson. 60 cents.
"The Resurrection Story," Adams. 60 cents.
Sent on approval upon request.

Easter Anthems

Our ten most popular out of over 300 we publish sent on approval upon request.

Easter Solos and Duets

Our ten most popular out of 100 we publish sent on approval if you advance 10 cents for postage and packing. If you state voice desired, we will so limit selection.

Send for free catalog.

Sample and approval offers good only if the "Baptist" is mentioned.

Lorenz Publishing Company
216 W. 5th St., Dayton, Ohio
1711 Grand Central Terminal, New York
218 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

The largest book for the smallest price.
Manila $30. for 100. DeLux Boards $40. for 100
400 SELECTIONS
For all purposes. Sunday Schools, Churches, Praise Services, Young Peoples Meetings. Returnable sample or free specimen pages sent on request,
HALL-MACK CO. 21st & Arch Sts., Phila., Pa.

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

CHURCH BULLETINS
Every progressive church should use Winters' De Luxe Bulletin Boards. Dignified, refined, effective and economical. Over 7,000 IN USE. They increase attendance, interest and collections. Thousands of enthusiastic letters from Pastors. Write today for illus. Catalog B. H. E. Winters Specialty Company, Davenport, Ia.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

ON AUDIENCES

After a concert which my wife and I gave the other evening, a lady came up to me and said, "The great regret of my life has always been that God gave me a passionate love for music—but has made me but a wall-flower. I have no singing voice; my fingers won't work as they should to play the piano or violin; and I cannot create even the beginnings of a tune. So, years ago, I made up my mind that I would have to take it out in being 'audience,' and busied myself in studying everything possible to fit me for appreciation and understanding of what I hear!"

I answered her: "If you only realized how rare and precious the trained and appreciative listener is, you would not so underrate yourself. I, or a thousand performers, could be spared; but not one such as you. The great basic trouble with the musical situation in this country is that we have concentrated too much of our energy in producing performers—vocal, instrumental and creative—and have neglected the other necessary factor—the receptive element: the intelligent auditor! We are going to improve this weakness when we spread the knowledge of what is what in music through the rank and file of the laity. When we develop the knowledge and understanding of music there, the grade of performing and creative artists will take a sharp turn for the better. Hats off to the trained audience!"

This general lack of musical understanding, I firmly believe to be the basic evil in the music problem here, which affects the music of the church even more than it does the general field. What does the average member of our congregations know about the technical grade of the music he hears on Sunday morning? If the minister uses faulty grammar or confused rhetoric, this member knows it at once and properly takes offense. But how differently he evaluates the music! One per cent would be a high estimate of the proportion in an average group who would recognize the most criminal error in the workmanship of an anthem or a solo. A large proportion of the service music used today, both instrumental and vocal, is ethically and intrinsically on a par with the cheapest type of literature imaginable. It reeks with ungrammatical statements, clumsy craftsmanship, banal melodies, unimaginative harmonies and faulty structure. Take a novel of which such charges as these above could be honestly made, and figure what chances of success it would have, merely making the application by substituting story for melody, locale for harmonies, and plot for form! Any literary effort would be doomed to utter failure if handicapped by such vital weaknesses. And yet we generally and continually use musical numbers in which all these offences are rife.

To me the problem is simply one of education. The better will always drive out the worse by natural evolution, if the better is given the opportunity. I do not worry about the future of our music if only we hear, and by constant hearing, understand and appreciate the best. I know, and have proved in my own experience, that an audience which would show little or no response to a Bach Choral-Prelude when it was offered as such will welcome and enjoy it after a short informal explanation of its melodic foundation, its scheme of elaboration and purpose, and hearing the chorale in its congregational form first: in other words, when it is done efficiently to an audience ready to estimate it intelligently. I am a hearty devotee of the lecture recital if it is done without the too prevalent attitude of "I know what you don't." Some day I hope that our great donominational bodies officially will pay more definite attention to the musical situation in the churches. Perhaps some system of regional advisory branches, each equipped with and under the guidance of a tolerant, human (and humane!), competent church-organist and choir-authority, subject to call from any church requiring expert aid in arranging its musical program (both material and agents) will some day eventuate.

While awaiting this millennium to dawn, those of us who are in more fortunate positions—the servants of thriving, prosperous churches which enjoy the highest type of service music—should, whenever possible, do whatever offers in unstintingly giving of our efforts to these not so fortunately situated. And this not with the feeling of condescension, but of service and opportunity.

The sort of thing I have in mind is what we—my quartet of singers at First Church of Evanston—did recently. A few weeks ago, because of the personal connections of a pupil of my wife, we became interested in a small church on the outskirts of Chicago that was valiantly raising money to meet the debt on the church and also to encourage the work of the volunteer choir working under a volunteer director. We felt that such effort deserved whatever little aid we could render; so the quartet and I went out and gave them a special musical service, which netted them a goodly offering. Our reward came from the whole-hearted appreciation of the large audience, and the feeling that we had given a program of twenty numbers all of which were of the higher class of church music. Without any apologies or explanations, we presented some of the best examples of sacred music we could find in the most expert way we could. The response of the congregation to our efforts once more convinced me that if we can get good church music to the people in sufficient quantities to make them intelligent judges of quality and fit-

EASTER MUSIC FREE
HALL-MACK CO.

A postal from Supt., Pastor or Committee will bring a set of sample services. FREE.

* EASTER HELPER, NO. 9, 20c
Book of Songs, Recitations, Drills, etc.

FLAVIA, or THE MARTYRS, 25c.
A Song Story of early Christian Era. This and others sent for examination on request.

* PAGEANTRY
Two Easter Pageants and a Play—25c.
* These are not sent for examination.

SPECIAL—30c.
3 Services, regular edition, value . . . . . 21c
Pageant . . . . . 25c
Helper No. 9 . . . . . 20c
All for 30c in stamps. 66c

HALL-MACK CO., ADAM GEIBEL MUSIC CO. } 21st & Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

An Ancient Philosopher

has said that "A man's praise has very musical and charming accents in another's mouth, but it is very flat and untunable in his own."

Possibly a dozen recent gospel music books are advertised as the "best," but on the testimony of THOUSANDS OF CUSTOMERS

Hymns of Praise

contains the choicest collection of sacred songs that has been found in any one book during the past quarter of a century. A penny postcard will bring a free returnable sample copy.

This Splendid New Book Will Aid the Pastor Mightily in His Pre-Easter Meetings

The friendly business relations which we have established with our customers are the result of courteous and satisfactory service extending over a period of thirty years.

HOPE PUBLISHING COMPANY

5701 West Lake Street, Chicago, Illinois

By mutual arrangement the Biglow & Main Co., (publishers of the famous Moody and Sankey Gospel Hymns) and the Hope Publishing Co. will henceforth be carried on under one management at the above address. The New York office of the former has been discontinued.

ness, the mediocre, the cheap, the unfitted, decadent style of tin-pan alley trash will be driven out in a hurry. Music always has suffered from two elements—the ill-equipped, injudicious amateur who sins through ignorance, for the most part; and the hair-splitting doctrinaire, too busily engaged in windy battles of words to keep his feet on solid ground. One produces sentimental, badly written drivel; the other perfectly correct corpses. We must sweep out both factors and supply a plentiful stock of practical and ideal music fitted to the agents of performance. More good, simple, practical music and more people able to sing and play it as it should be sung and played is the crying need of the churches.

Missionary Test Tubes

(Continued from page 109)

surprising, however, how quickly they learned to enjoy the games. They always like stories and it is in this way that we hope to teach them to be kind and true as well as clean. We trust that through the medium of the kindergarten they may be interested in the Sunday school where they will be taught about Jesus Christ and God, their loving Father."—M. D.

"I have grown to love the children dearly because they have taught me more lessons than I have taught them. They have made me see the need of service and the need of love. My reward for my small services has been their smiles. When they put their little arms around me or ask to sit on my lap while I tell them a story, when they run to meet me as I get off the street car—then I know that they have no fear of me, but love me. I pray every night for my little boys and girls that I may help them to see the Christ in me, and that I may be more like him every day so that they may know him."—L. B.

In this practice work the student missionaries are themselves learning valuable lessons in humility, love and service which will save them many disappointments and heartaches on their fields in the years to come.

One-, two-, and three-year courses are offered at this school which is under the supervision of the Woman's Home Mission Society. It is the first actual missionary training school in America and has been the pioneer in progress and academic advancement. Its slogan for the year to come is: "Leadership in rank, scholarship, equipment and output."

---

Preparations are under way for celebrating next year the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of New York City. Civic, patriotic and religious bodies are planning to take part. The celebration will come largely in the spring of 1924, and the last Sunday in April of that year will be specially observed in honor of the Huguenot-Walloon pilgrims who, under the Dutch West India Company, made the first settlement on Manhattan Island in 1624. Plans have been launched to make the celebration nation-wide.

---

Two or three copies of the Free Baptist Cyclopedia could be placed at the present time where they could do some good in connection with our mission work. Correspond with Harry S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

---

The Detroit council of churches, representing 264 Protestant churches, has completed its plans for the pre-Easter services conducted each year under its auspices. The services began Feb. 18 and will continue until Easter. Among the speakers from outside of Detroit is W. W. Bustard of Cleveland.

FUNDAMENTALS OF FAITH in the LIGHT OF MODERN THOUGHT

By HORACE BLAKE WILLIAMS

"A well-written popular exposition of central aspects of the Christian religious experience in which disputed theological matters are excluded and the argument developed on the basis of undeniable spiritual values."—Journal of Religion.

Net, $1.25, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write

J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

South China Mission Annual Conference

Swatow, China, Dec. 6–13, 1922

By Louise Campbell

In former years our conference met in different central stations but for about ten years now, the main station at Swatow has been the only one able to accommodate our increased force. This winter, however, it seemed impossible that we could be housed where so many buildings had been wrecked by the typhoon, but the brave missionaries there invited the conference to come as usual. How to make seven houses already holding four families and thirteen single workers, accommodate nine more families and twelve single workers, was a puzzling problem to the entertainment committee, but it was so well managed that we were all comfortably accommodated.

Much had been done in the way of repairing and restoring, but the compound and vicinity still looked very bare and battered, and we were reminded on every turn of the destruction wrought by that fearful typhoon and wondered how long it would take to recover entirely from the effects.

Sun Yet Sen's forces are still at swords' points with those of his former general, Chen Chiung-ming, and their troops have been moving through our field in such numbers that travel and mail service has been very uncertain this fall and winter. Dr. Bousfield, from Chang-ning, the farthest of our stations, was delayed several days because, when only a comparatively short distance from his destination, the launch was seized and sent back up the river for troops. Then two of the young ladies from Kaying were obliged to stay a day and two nights at a Chinese hotel en route because all boats had been seized by the soldiers; finally, they secured passage on a charcoal boat, hoisted their American flag, and passed unmolested on to Swatow where friends were beginning to be anxious over their non-appearance. With the exception of four at Kaying, no one was absent. We were especially glad to get together, thankful that all had been spared, though all had suffered more or less on account of the typhoon.

During the conference sessions, a call came twice a day to consider our spiritual needs—more prayer, more Bible study, more humility and more love; we got inspiration in these quiet times together and help for ourselves and our people. There was inspiring music too, none more so than the singing of Miss Grace Sweet, (Kan En Vong) who is a welcome addition to our forces this year.

Among the reports given was one from a survey committee in regard to conditions existing in our native churches and the extent to which our mission schools are preparing to remedy these conditions. The report was not at all flattering, but it stirred us to greater effort. The chief reason given, where advance had been made, was "efficient preachers"; and the main reason for loss, "inefficient preachers." But aside from theological students, the report from the schools showed a very small per cent of students planning to do definite Christian work, so the need for more student volunteer work is very apparent. Dr. Jones of India, who has been holding meetings in China under the Y. M. C. A., was at Swatow during conference. It was fine to hear his clear ringing challenge to the students to put their lives at His service and so attain the only true greatness.

Several months previous, the conference had loaned two of its members to typhoon relief work at the call of the American consul, Lester B. Schnare, who was responsible for the dispensing of $10,000 from the American Red Cross; so now we listened with intense interest and sympathy to the reports of their work through the regions devastated by the storm and tidal wave. Mr. Baker told of the restoring of dykes and homes, while Miss Sollman told of her follow-up work with bedding and clothing. She had bought and superintended the making up of $10,000 (Mex.) of cloth. Both spoke of the hearty cooperation of the Chinese magistrates and village elders. Their work reached every class from the magistrate to the coolie, and there is now a wonderful opportunity for Christian work among these grateful people. Bibles with marked portions were prepared for many who welcomed them with new interest as containing the gospel which had impelled such unselfish giving. Funds were nearly exhausted; but their stories of conditions still existing and of areas still untouched were heart-rending. We determined to see if our own people who had been spared such suffering would not want to make a greater effort to send relief.

Our hardest task was to face the facts resulting from the heavy cut in our appropriations from the home boards. In the case of our woman's society, this amounted to a discount of 35 per cent. This meant closing of some work, reducing of teaching forces, shortening of school terms, less evangelistic travel, less time for language study, extra responsibilities for all. Every effort was made to lessen the burden by raising tuitions, combining classes, appealing to the people themselves—and here a ray of light gleamed through our cloud of difficulty, because in one instance many of the pupils offered to bring $5 each, over and above their tuition and board money. In another case the people rallied and did what they had thought they couldn't—raised enough money to make it possible to continue the school which was to have been closed for lack of funds.

Ungkung has long been without a resident missionary, and new opportunities there are demanding, so Mr. Lewis and his family are re-assigned to their old field.

Hopo sent an urgent request for a physician, because just as the people have completed a hospital building, Dr. Zwick has been obliged to return to the homeland for health reasons; but there was no one to send to them.

We rejoice to welcome Dr. and Mrs. Ashmore back, and it was a pleasure to greet Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hobart, Mrs. Lewis, and Miss Edith Dulin who came to join our ranks this fall.

We wished a happy furlough to Dr. and Mrs. Groesbeck, Dr. Everham, Miss Sanderson and Miss Foster who will be leaving this spring.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 100)

A revival in the Immanuel Church, Hamilton, Ont., resulted in the baptism of forty-five persons. Rev. J. G. Connors is meeting with success in his work as pastor.

Rev. George H. Thompson, the "harp evangelist," of Waterloo, Iowa, began a union meeting at Divernon, Ill., Feb. 11.

The Calvary Church, Salem, Mass., receives $5,000, the foreign mission society and the home mission society each $1,000 by the will of Sarah E. H. Balcom of Salem.

The First Church, Medford, Mass., celebrated the fifth anniversary of the coming of its pastor, Rev. D. J. Neilly. There were a number of gifts, one of which was a purse of $150 in gold.

"Some Needed Rediscoveries" is the subject of a series of sermons by Rev. W. D. Swaffield of Keene, N. H. We need to rediscover God, religion, Jesus, the Cross, sin and faith.

Rev. J. W. Granger, pastor of the Calvary Church, Bridgeport, Conn., suffered from a fall and has been confined to the hospital for some time.

The Montauk Ave. Church, New London, Conn., has called to its pastorate Rev. H. J. Chase of Preston City. He has accepted the call.

Rev. Zachariah Harrison, for twenty-six years pastor of the Pond Street Church, Providence, R. I., has accepted the call of the Messiah Church, Brockton, Mass. His service will begin in the early spring.

Since its enforcement on April 1, 1922, the juvenile drinking prohibition act, passed at the last session of Japan's imperial diet, has reaped fruitful results. Since the act became effective, it is reported that 99,146 members of the young men's associations throughout Japan have joined the anti-alcoholic league in support of the juvenile drinking prohibition movement. Good for the young men of Japan!

Dr. Judson B. Thomas, of Chicago, Dr. Herbert Hines of Kankakee, Ill., and Dr. Willis Chamberlain of Denison University, are arranging personally conducted travel groups in connection with the Baptist World Alliance meeting at Stockholm, which will be strictly limited as to number. The purpose is to have congenial parties under experienced leaders.

Rev. Theodore G. Erler, pastor of First Church, Geneva, Ohio, writes that the enrolment in the Bible school has been doubled during the last year and that the church membership has been greatly increased. Rev. Franklin W. Swift will hold special meetings beginning March 11. Mr. Erler says: "The Baptist and Missions are our good friends, mutually helpful to us and the denomination."

Fifty years of service will be celebrated by the Young Men's Christian Association of the University of Illinois, Feb. 23-25, at Champaign. Statesmen, educators and business executives from most of the English-speaking countries have been invited as speakers for this fiftieth anniversary. Sir James Aikins of Winnipeg, governor of Manitoba, and one of the foremost lawyers of Canada, will occupy a leading place on the program.

The list of delegates to the World's Baptist Alliance in Stockholm is growing. The new members of the party are: Rev. John Dussman, South India; Mrs. H. E. Goodman and daughter of Chicago; Miss Alice Hudson, New York; Mrs. C. H. Koster, Brooklyn; Miss Mable McVeigh, Miss Nellie Prescott, Daniel G. Stephens, Mrs. Katherine Westfall, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Tomlinson, Miss Ada A. Brigham, Rev. T. A. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hilton Jackson and F. W. O'Brien.

Volume IV March 3, 1923 No. 5 1923

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Bap... Convention

University of Ill. Library Urbana Ill.

Brotherly Kindness

Make this your prayer

IF from all thy good gifts, O Lord, I may ask but one, let that one be the spirit of kindliness! Let others have fame and fortune and jewels and palaces, if I may but have the kindly spirit! Give greatness and power to those that want them, but give me Brotherly Kindness! Make somebody else to be of comely visage if only I may wear a comely countenance.

May I never wound the heart of any faltering child of thine. Make me to do the little unremembered acts that quietly help without intending it. Grant me to bear about the unconscious radiance of a life that knows no grudge, but loves all men because they are children of my Father, who loves them enough to send his Son to save them. Amen.

—Ashland Ave., Toledo, Church Calendar.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. H. M. Wharton of Baltimore is critically ill. He is slowly recovering from a most serious operation in one of the hospitals of his city.

The Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, has extended a call to Rev. Rollo C. Spear of Bloomington, Ind. He has accepted and will close his work in Bloomington, April 1.

Rev. Arthur Cooper, of Dunkirk, Ind. has accepted the call of the First Church, Noblesville. He is now on his new field. The Dunkirk Church has a good building and parsonage. J. E. Lewis, Dunkirk, is a member of the pulpit committee.

Rev. F. W. Boreham, pastor of the Baptist church at Armadale, Australia, well-known because of his essays, was the last student to be accepted personally by Spurgeon for the Pastors College. Mr. Boreham is about to publish the thirteenth volume of essays, the sale of the earlier issues having reached nearly 100,000 copies.

The author of "Onward Christian Soldiers", Rev. S. Baring-Gould, recently celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday anniversary. Many congratulations were received by the veteran rector.

John C. Penn of Camden, Ind., has turned over to the Indiana Baptist Convention two splendid farms on the annuity plan. These farms are valued at $50,000.

Rev. William C. Bitting, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., will deliver March 13-15 a course of six lectures on the Samuel A. Crozer Lectureship Foundation at the Crozer Theological Seminary. The subject of the course will be "The Pastor as a Bible Teacher." The six lectures delivered will be published in book form.

Rev. B. S. Hudson and Mrs. Hudson of Portland, Me., are spending the remainder of the winter in California. They will return some time in April, when Mr. Hudson will again enter the pastorate. He resigned recently as the pastor of the Free Street Church, Portland, after a pastorate of six years, in order to further the plan for the union of two churches. We understand that several churches have been looking his way. The details of his plans we do not know.

The "Epworth Herald" asks: "Do you know that during the three years—1920, 1921 and 1922—the Methodist church invested more in foreign missions than it has during any previous fifteen years? Two hundred and seventy new missionaries were sent to the fields. Two hundred and twenty new churches and missionary residences were built and the sites for seventy-five more were purchased. Forty-two colleges were either founded or enlarged. A new mission was opened in Siberia and Manchuria, with 1,200 church members, 6,911 adherents, and 5,730 Sunday-school members. One hundred and eighty-one new churches were organized in Korea last year. And, during the last two years, the membership in Mexico has increased 100 per cent. Our foreign Christians are giving the church just twice as much as they gave three years ago. Has the centenary been worth while?"

Rev. G. H. Young, who has served as director of religious education in Oregon, has resigned to accept the call of the church at Hamilton, Ohio. He has served eight years in Oregon. The years to come will still bear the fruit of his labors in that great state.

J. B. Lippincott Co., publishers of Dr. W. W. Keen's book "I Believe in God and in Evolution" have published the second edition, the first having been exhausted. It contains a few pages of additional material, but is otherwise the same.

Mr. S. D. Gordon, author of "Quiet Talks" will speak daily at noon at the Olympic Theater, Chicago, February 26-March 30, under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation. Mr. Gordon's books have been printed in twenty-six languages and have already run into millions in circulation.

In the calendar of the Immanuel Church, Rangoon, Burma, Gerald La Val, Church clerk, reports: "God has prospered us in the matter of increased membership. We have added twenty-nine new members to our roll, of whom seventeen were received through profession of faith by baptism while twelve have come to us from other churches. One member was transferred to another church and another's name was removed from the roll at his own request. The Lord's work among the Chinese is continuing to bear fruit, there being thirty-eight conversions and baptisms among them this year." Rev. V. W. Dyer is pastor.

The churches commonly known as those of the Disciples of Christ have combined their missionary activities under one organization known as The United Christian Missionary Society with its office in St. Louis. The report of this society for the year ending June 30, 1922, indicates a growing consciousness of the world mission, of the strength and the closer cooperation of all of the parts of this great group of Christians. The total receipts of the society for all purposes during the year were $2,702,730.76. There were reported 3,131 baptisms on the foreign field; home mission churches started by the society had 2,734 baptisms; 1,891 other additions, making a total of 4,625 members added to these aided churches. Loans from the church erection funds amounting to $224,700 were made to thirty-three churches; and 292 aged ministers, missionaries and dependent families are reported as receiving financial assistance. From January to Easter 2,177 churches report 64,945 additions.

The dedication of the new five-story community house of the Church of All Nations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at 9 Second Ave., New York City, acclaims that the Rev. John R. Henry has stood the test, and has made good. And now that his dream of a building adequate for the needs of the community has come true, this six-footer who did much to make the football team at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., win victories during the late nineties, the while he edited the college newspaper, may well look forward to years of even greater success as he builds on the foundation which character, personality, a broad sympathy for folks of all tongues and every condition have laid during the days when he had no decent place to house his flock and dug up the support for his work where he could. The Methodist Centenary made possible this great building. This pastor has stayed on the job twenty-five years.

Evangelist E. M. Steadman closed a meeting at Alamosa, Colo., resulting in the addition of thirty-five new members to the church. He is now conducting special meetings at Hooper.

Under the auspices of the Temple Tours, Rev. Charles H. Sears, Rev. Kenneth C. MacArthur and Rev. William G. Towart will conduct post-convention parties in Europe.

Beginning Sunday morning, March 4, Dr. M. E. Dodd of Shreveport, La., will lead in special evangelistic services in the Third Church, St. Louis. He will be assisted by W. P. Martin and a large chorus choir. From March 4 fifteen simultaneous meetings will be held in all of the Baptist churches of the city.

The Whosoever Bible Class meets Sunday afternoons in the Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit. The international lessons are taught one week in advance. The class is interdenominational as its name indicates. Its slogan is "Whosoever will may come." Its object is Bible study, evangelism, Christian growth and service in the largest possible measure. Through its work many have accepted Christ and united with Woodward avenue and other churches. It is interesting in going through the extended annual report of its general secretary, F. F. Griffin, to note the remarkable growth of the class, a gain of more than 100 per cent in attendance during 1922. Its total attendance for forty-one sessions was 9,520. Its receipts were $1,099.

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, of the Temple Church, Los Angeles, says in the calendar for the first Sunday in February: "Today I begin the fourteenth year of my pastorate of Temple Church. The record of the past thirteen years is not pefect. With the text, 'For to me to live is Christ,' as a motto, there has been limitless opportunity for growth. Year by year, in every way, Temple Church has been growing better and better. It has been a joy to me to face the large congregations that have regularly met in our auditorium and bring to them a gospel of salvation and good cheer. I have rejoiced in the growth of all the departments of the church's various activities. I am thankful today for the spirit of harmony and loyalty to be found in the Temple membership. I am happy and grateful for the many good things and the host of friends God has given me and mine during the past thirteen years. I am not satisfied and I thank God that the church is not satisfied with its past achievements. With the new program that I have adopted for the future I hope to become a more inspiring preacher and a more helpful minister. Together as pastor and people we must go forward—forward into a continuous personal evangelism for winning young and old to Christ; forward into a greater Bible school; forward into a greater educational program; forward into a more effective social service; forward into a world-wide missionary program; forward to the accomplishment of all that God has given

(Continued on page 132)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., March 3, 1923 No. 5

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 130 |
| EDITORIAL | 133 |
| OUR COUNTRY, BY GEORGE E. BURLINGAME | 136 |
| A WOMAN WITH A MESSAGE | 138 |
| FIRST CHURCH, ASTORIA, OREGON | 139 |
| A REVIVAL OF CONCERN, BY FREDERICK E. TAYLOR | 140 |
| THE STORY OF A REUNION, BY BISHOP S. P. SPRENG | 141 |
| WHAT DO WE READ? | 142 |
| EVANGELISM IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL, BY ALBERT H. GAGE | 143 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 145 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 146 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 148 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 149 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 158 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 159 |

Note the Sea Shells

"Ever since the advent of THE BAPTIST I have been hoping that some one would interpret the significance of the flanking illustrations on your editorial page. (He refers to the sea shells). A guesser of my acquaintance thought there might be a 'suggestion of deep water' in them; but there being no other kind of Baptists, that solution was discredited. Another friend ventures this: 'The Baptist (the genuine, true-blue sort) shells out.' As the rebus appeared at the beginning of the New World Movement, this may be a good guess. And it seems appropriate at any time." Now, kind reader, what do you think it means? We rather like the latter interpretation—"Shell out!" Is your subscription paid? Shell out, brother!

Killam's Kollum

Personal Attention Wins

Henry Harstine of New Philadelphia, Ohio, set to work to secure the renewals of the old list of subscribers and succeeded in renewing them all. Many, if not most of us, would have been satisfied since the list was a good list for the size of the church. Not so Mr. Harstine. He found that there were a number of families which did not have THE BAPTIST. He has already secured ten new subscribers and adds, "I have a number to see yet." That is the idea—he "sees them." He is not satisfied with a notice on a bulletin board or in the church calendar to the effect that he will "receive" subscriptions. He "sees" the folks. He talks the matter through with them. He gets results. So would you. The importance of having our church people informed will warrant your personal attention. Is your church adequately represented in the subscription lists of THE BAPTIST and Missions?

Old Santa Plays Old Nick

"I will ask you to stop sending the paper as you still uphold Santa Claus and I won't take a paper that does for I believe that it is something that every follower of Christ should condemn."—Margaret Hanna, Fallen Timber, Pa. Has not the poor editor (underscore poor) trouble enough without old Santa playing old nick with the subscription list? How it makes us wish we had lived in the days of the apostles before this heresy came upon us. Old Santa has had a grudge against us personally for several years. He has taken our cash until a Christmas club is the only safe financial method. We never thought that he would carry his peeve quite so far. Our departmental writers must share in his wrath. They say, however, that the editor is responsible for everything! It is a cruel world.

Leave It to Ben

"I am enclosing fourteen subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and Missions. We are asking for one new subscriber to THE BAPTIST and Missions for every twenty-five members in our Detroit churches. This will give us better than 500 new subscribers."—Ben. T. Leonard, director of religious education. Do you get that title? The day is at hand when the scores of directors of religious education in state, city and local church will all do as the livest of them are now doing. They will accept the task of getting Baptist periodicals into Baptist homes because of their value in training church members for church work. A Baptist ignoramus should be as rare as an Egyptian mummy, and he should be an object for the curious to gaze upon.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 130)

Temple Church and pastor to do. Let us all strive to realize a little nearer the ideal that Christ has put before us.

Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, of New York, president of the Baptist World Alliance, died on Feb. 23 at his winter pastorate at Daytona Beach, Fla. Dr. MacArthur, aside from his activities in the denomination, was widely known as a lecturer and was the author of a number of books. He was born in Dalesville, Quebec, July 31, 1841. He became pastor of Calvary Church, New York City in 1870 and remained there until 1911.

The Board of Managers of the Northern Baptist Convention passed a brief resolution expressing appreciation of the courtesy of the Belden Avenue Church, Chicago, and of the hearty cooperation of Dr. Benjamin Otto and Dr. A. E. Peterson in arranging for the meetings of the board in Chicago and in providing pulpit appointments for the missionaries, secretaries and other members of the board in the churches of Chicago and vicinity.

Miss Sarah Ellen Pickett, active promotor of Chinese welfare and mission work for fifty years, died recently at the home of her nephew in River Forest, Ill., at the age of seventy-five. Fifty years ago, Miss Pickett and her father organized the Baptist Chinese mission in Chicago, Miss Pickett had been a devoted worked until her death. She was a member of the First Church.

Miss Cornelia H. Fulton, daughter of the late Sarah E. and Justin D. Fulton, died Feb. 13 at Catonsville, Md. She is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Reuben Mapelsden of Philadelphia and Mrs. Augustus Trowbridge of Princeton, N. J. Miss Fulton was a teacher of rare ability. She had been associated with Miss Irwin's School in Philadelphia, the Brooklyn Heights Seminary, and was at the head of the English Department at St. Timothy's when she died.

Rev. C. B. Althoff, pastor of the Lorimer Memorial Church, Chicago, conducted a series of revival meetings at the Wentworth Avenue Church, Chicago, Feb. 4-18. The Mayflower Congregational Church joined with the Wentworth Avenue in these services. One hundred and two made a profession of faith, of which number between fifty and sixty will join the church.

The income (from home sources) of the Baptist Missionary Society of English Baptists for 1921-22 was, according to the Christian World, £190,500 and the expenditure £203,500, leaving a deficit of £13,000; this, however, was cleared off within a few weeks. The estimated expenditure for 1922-23 is £193,500, towards which there has been received in subscriptions, up to December 31, £35,680, a slight reduction as compared with the previous year. Apart from subscriptions, however, the society has realized in the way of legacies the largest sum that it has ever received in one year. It is being greatly hoped that the result of the gift and self-denial week will (added to the unusually large receipts from legacies) enable the accounts for the present year to be closed without a deficit. For next year the budgeted expenditure is about £190,000.

The World Task of Northern Baptists

No. 3. TEACHERS OF NATIONS

"Go ye therefore and teach all nations."

During the year 1921 substantial progress was made in educational work on the foreign field. In 2,898 schools of all grades, 103,260 pupils were under instruction. Of these schools 1,025 were self-supporting. Many have good buildings and modern equipment. Others are still doing their work in rude huts or temporary structures.

Years ago missionaries realized that the young men and women would be the leaders of the future. In order to have Christian leadership they began educational work under Christian auspices. Now the missionary teachers from America are assisted by 2,975 native men teachers and 1,499 women.

Northern Baptists today have 29 theological seminaries and training schools in non-Christian lands with 663 men and 583 women students. In the 4 colleges there are 263 men and 41 women.

The pupils paid $249,950 in fees last year, in contrast to $238,135 the previous year. In addition the native population contributed $33,699 toward educational work.

Evangelism receives primary emphasis. The pupils are constantly under strong Christian influence and many of them join the church every year. In Shanghai Baptist College, for example, forty students were baptized last year. Hundreds hear the name of Christ for the first time in these schools.

You who made a contribution to foreign missions had a share in educating these future Christian leaders. Your continued financial support is needed to carry on this vital and far-reaching evangelistic agency. Checks should be sent to your State Collection Agent or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Next Week—No. 4. Followers of the Carpenter's Son.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

(Corporate name for use in wills)

The Fiscal Year Closes April 30, 1923.

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention

The Baptist

One Hundred Per Cent Efficient

WHO of us is, strictly speaking, 100 per cent efficient? Are you? Who of us never slips a cog, is always at his best, never misses a chance, makes an actual hundred out of every possible hundred bull's-eyes and does it, not merely at the annual shooting-match but every day and under all circumstances, does it with a crowd of onlookers or alone, does it when the result does not particularly count or when everything hangs tremulous on the moment's achievement?

What student has an unbroken string of hundred-marks for four years and in all studies? What farmer has the top yield for each of his crops for all of the years? What doctor saves all his patients? What lawyer never loses a case? What merchant has a complete turn-over of his stock at the full calculated profit and within the calculated time and has it every year? Probably no one except Dickens' Micawber or Mark Twain's Colonel Mulberry Sellers has dreams of such a thing, and theirs are what are colloquially termed pipe-dreams. We are all of us under the tyranny of General Human Frailty and Mr. Unforeseen Contingency.

Christ himself appeared to recognize the fact that even among the faithful there would be varying achievement, for the thirty, the sixty and the hundred-fold yields, and the two-talent, the five-talent and the ten-talent profits appear alike to have his hearty approval. But that is a very different thing from assuming that mere good intentions will excuse carelessness, blunders and laziness; or that mere enlisting in the campaign will serve as well as fighting it bravely to the end. Christ did not include in his approval the cropless thorny-ground or stony-ground hearers nor the servant who hid his Lord's talent. Nor will he include in his commendation the church-member who has done no single stroke of work since he entered the harvest field; who appears to think he was called into the vineyard not to cultivate the vines but merely to eat grapes; who is in the church with the naive assumption of a lodger who wishes his society to be considered an equivalent for his board.

What is true of the individual is true also of the churches. Probably no church may expect to be 100 per cent efficient "every day in every way." If any young pastor is thus optimistic, older ones would caution him to stock up his library in advance with a few volumes of "Consolations for the Disappointed." The roll of the New Testament churches, from those so affectionately but frankly depicted by the Apostle Paul to the seven typical churches of the Revelation, shows none with such a record. The nineteen centuries since then, with their millions of churches in all lands and amid all racial diversities, fail to reveal the ideal church, functioning up to its full efficiency. But shall we continue inefficient lest we fracture this time-honored record and dishonor an immemorial precedent? God forbid! There is no alibi for the church with half its membership inactive, nor for the member who is inefficient because another or many others are so, or for part of a denomination which sags to a low level because the average of the whole body is low. The model for a Christian is never other Christians; it is Christ; and the goal of a church is never merely to be as good as the average; the goal is perfection, and we must fling our hearts ahead of us and follow after them toward that goal.

BUT the splendid thing is that in certain fields and along certain lines the one hundred per cent record is being attained. We will be specific: In the difficult task of securing a tithing church one church at least, and there doubtless are others, reported not long ago that its members had subscribed the full amount of the tithe of their total income. It is the church at Bethlehem—auspicious name—in Pennsylvania, F. R. MacArthur, pastor. Then, there was a goodly number of churches in every state that raised or exceeded the seemingly impossible allotment of the New World Movement. Criticism has been made of our foreign mission schools because of their many non-Christian students, but Dr. Franklin tells us that the latest report from Shanghai College shows an increase in the number of Christians in each class until of the thirty-one members of the senior class every one has become a Christian. Still more remarkable is the report of Dr. Benninghoff, who has been given free-hand to do Christian work among the students of the great Waseda University in Japan, that every one of the more than one hundred students who can be accommodated in the Baptist hostel becomes a Christian before he leaves the university. These are all 100 per cent records. You and I and a multitude of us might be in that shining honor roll.

Efficiency is cultivable to an indefinite extent; there is no limit. The crucial sign of success common to all of these cases is that the workers expected nothing but success. They planned wisely, they worked sweetly and persistently, but above all, as our Salvation Army friends used to say, they "believed for it." Mr. Moody's words come back through the years, "O, brethren, let's you and I go in for being 100 per cent Christians!"

How Shall We Reach the Goal?

THE writer of Ecclesiastes tells us in a sentence. "When thou vowest a vow unto the Lord, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasures in fools; pay that which thou hast vowed." There is the answer.

Northern Baptists had, up to April 30, 1922, obligated themselves by personal pledges to pay to the New World Movement fund $49,023,958.88.

The grand total of receipts during the first two years after the pledges were taken was $12,596,694 for the year 1920-21, and $9,897,805 for 1921-22, a total for the two years of $22,494,499, or an average of $11,247,249 per year.

The amount due on pledges for the year 1922-23, the year which closes April 30, is approximately $13,449,816.

The goal for 1922-23 is but $10,000,000 distributable money in addition to and apart from payment on designated pledges made after Nov. 15, 1921.

The case is perfectly clear. Making due allowance for individuals here and there where financial conditions have been and are adverse—for example, in certain agricultural sections in the newer states—the financial condition of the country is greatly improved over that of a year ago. The automobile and steel industries are fair samples of business activity. Making, we say, all possible allowance for individual cases, the question we face is whether or no those of us who have vowed a vow unto the Lord will defer payment.

The past two years have been unprecedented in the number of new members received into the churches. There can be little question that these new members, together with those who have made their pledges from year to year will offset any and all cases where financial reverses make impossible the payment of personal pledges. Are we fools?

Four Engagements

THE last engagement we contract as we gather about the sacred table of the Lord is intended to close the back door of our churches, through which so many members slip out into statistical and spiritual oblivion, and is expressed: "We moreover engage that, when we remove from this place, we will, as soon as possible unite with some other church where we can carry out the spirit of this covenant and the principles of God's word."

It is appalling how many church members in good standing and activity will, upon taking up residence elsewhere, especially upon going to a large city, drop utterly from covenant responsibilities. They do not do it deliberately, but through gradual neglect and drifting indecision. The old social warmth of church friends, responsibility for some work and constant pastoral oversight kept them in the fold, but the removal of such social restraints resulted in spiritual anæmia. Had they been constant readers of denominational literature they would probably have been quickened to new responsibilities. When people move to a new community their individual loyalty to the church is put to the test; left utterly to themselves, they will make it obvious whether their church relations depend upon a heart loyalty to Christ or upon environment, social relationships and habit. These help to hold people in the fold, and should not be discounted in church work, but they should never be tolerated as ultimates, such as secret devotion and loyalty to Christ, which removals to other localities show up. The advantage of making new contacts in a new community with church people of like faith and order ought to be a consideration, but it does not seem to be in hearts grown cold to the call of the Cross. In other words, this engagement means nothing if the others are broken, and, conversely, if this be unkept, the others will be forgotten.

Another loyalty exposed by this tail-end covenant agreement is the loyalty of the church to its responsibility in holding its moving membership; its "on-the-jobness." If a church is alertly shepherding it will know when a member has moved away and will send two letters in his direction—one to the pastor of a nearby Baptist church. This means a lot of extra work for the pastor-typist. It will crowd him, but it is distinctly his job; others he is doing may not be, but he cannot delegate this—a shepherding duty. Now, this is not the whole story. The pastor who receives the communication should make the call himself and reply to the letter received, giving the facts discovered in this pastoral visitation of the newcomer on his field. If this is not done and done promptly, it musses up the whole situation terribly. We know of a number of cases where such inquiries have been utterly disregarded by city pastors.

Since there are these three factors—the individual moving away, the home church and the new field—it is a delicate matter to fix responsibility except to say that if one item is missing, the responsibility of the others is heightened, not cancelled. It is time the churches faced systematically this leakage of membership so admirably put in the closing sentence of our covenant.

A Step in the Right Direction

ELSEWHERE in this issue is the story of the union or reunion of two religious bodies. About thirty years ago in the denomination known as the Evangelical Association there was a controversy and an unfortunate division. There were no essential differences in doctrine or doctrinal standards but certain differences in organization and polity.

For several years there has been an agitation for reunion and this has been effected. All of the conferences of the Evangelical Association, numbering more than 1,400 at home and abroad, voted for the get-together plan, and all save one of the 490 conferences of the United Evangelical group were favorable to the union.

This is a move in the right direction. It was a question of administration. Similar movements might well be made in other directions. The coming together of the Baptists and Free Baptists has been accomplished without friction of serious loss on either side. On the whole we believe the Baptist cause has been strengthened.

A Page of Opinion

What Else Could One Expect?

IF our family quarrels could be kept within the family circle the case would be bad enough. As a matter of experience we know that any sign of discord within the ranks of the churches is at once taken up as a delicious morsel by those outside the membership of the organizations involved. The "heresy" which hunts publicity as well as the "heresy hunters" must share in the responsibility for conclusions and implications drawn by those outside the pale of the Christian family. The American Israelite's editorial comment is a typical example of the conclusions drawn from our theological controversies by outsiders. Mark especially the statement "with all that this implies." The comment is as follows:

"If the editorial utterances in many of the Israelite's Christian exchanges can be taken as a test, Protestant Christianity is ready to drop from its theology the dogma of the virgin birth of Jesus with all that this implies. The controversy arising from Dr. Grant's utterances has elicited expressions of opinion from Protestant religious journals that are rather favorable to him than otherwise. It is a sign of the times, whose importance can hardly be over-estimated."

Japan Has Her Troubles

JAPAN is apparently entering a period of great economic distress and disaster," says Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, a noted authority on the Near East and secretary of the commission on international justice and good will of the Federal Council of Churches, in a statement received here. He has been spending some months in China, Japan and Korea in consultation with government officials, business men, missionaries, native Christian leaders and men of all walks. In his article he says:

"Japan is seething with discussion and ferment. Deflation of wages and prices has not taken place to any considerable extent; in consequence Japan's position as a manufacturing nation and as a large exporter to China is seriously menaced.

"Japan is apparently entering a period of great economic distress and disaster. Her insecured loans to China of $100,000,000 (gold), or more, are generally regarded as total losses, and it remains to be seen whether her tardy recognition of the need of friendly and honorable relations with China will remove the deep prejudices and enmity felt by practically all Chinese who take interest in China's internal and international relations.

"It is not difficult to foresee what is to happen in Japan. The militarist elements in Japan are by no means without their influence and, to their own ultimate injury, are making exceedingly foolish as well as unrighteous proposals. But the liberal leaders are determined to do the right thing in international relations, convinced that only so can Japan weather the storms of an economic and social nature that are undoubtedly coming to her."

The Outcome of the Arbuckle Case

THE protest which has arisen all over the country, and especially through the churches, concerning the possibility of the return of Roscoe Arbuckle to the screen, has had a clear and unmistakable effect. According to an official communication to the Federal Council of the Churches from the committee on public relations, which was appointed by Mr. Hays to advise with the motion picture producers and distributors of America, Mr. Arbuckle will not resume work as an actor, nor will the existing Arbuckle films be released. That Mr. Arbuckle has found other work has already been announced in the daily papers, but the statement that the existing Arbuckle films are not to be exhibited is a fresh announcement of special importance.

Character Is in the Subconscious Self

REV. CARL M. GATES, in the Boston Transcript, says that character is in the subconscious self.

"Is it not true that no one can be a real master of the art of living until he has reached the point where right conduct is instinctive?

"He does not have to debate with himself over the performance of some recognized duty. Seeing it means doing it automatically.

"What we call character is really a matter of the subconscious self. A man is honest when the deepest impulses of his being urge him toward honesty without his realizing it. He is not conscious of any special act of will deciding for honesty instead of graft; the possibility of a crooked deal never enters his head.

"No one has ever reached the real goal of moral character until righteousness is not second nature but first nature. It must go down below the plane of conscious decision to the deeper levels where the whole subconscious self is stamped with a passion for righteousness."

Evangelism

FROM all sides we hear reports of religious revival and accessions to our churches. These reports are reflected each week in the news sections of the paper. It has occurred to the editor that it would be the means of encouragement and uplift if every week for the next few months we might have brief reports of special meetings, accessions to the churches and other items which would fairly indicate the widespread interest of our churches in evangelism. Send reports direct, addressed Evangelism, care of THE BAPTIST. These reports will be grouped under one heading.

Our Country

BY GEORGE E. BURLINGAME

> "O Thou who keepest in Thy ken
> The times of flowers, the dooms of men,
> Stretch out a mighty wing above—
> Be tender to the land of love!"
> —JUSTICE STAFFORD in Atlantic Monthly

AMERICA—the word stands for certain definite ideals and vital principles which are essential to the very life of the nation; civic fundamentals, indeed, which constitute the foundation upon which the Republic rests, and apart from which it falls.

1. Ours is a nation founded upon the constitution—"The American constitution is, so far as I can see, the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."—William Ewart Gladstone.

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."—Preamble of the Constitution.

2. Ours is a government of laws, not of men—"Whatever breeds disrespect for the law of the land, in any particular department of our community relations, is a force tending to the general breakdown of the social organization. . . . . Our only safety will be in inculcating an attitude of respect for the law as on the whole the best expression that has been given to the social aspiration and moral purpose of the community."—President Warren G. Harding.

3. The people themselves enact the laws—"This is a democratic government, and the voice of the people, expressed through the machinery provided by the Constitution for its expression and by constitutional majority, is supreme. Every loyal citizen must obey. This is the fundamental principle of the government."—William Howard Taft.

4. Obedience to the laws is required of all the people—"The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government." —George Washington.

"We, whose names are underwritten . . . covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic. . . . to enact, constitute, and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions, and offices from time to time as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the Colony, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience."—The Mayflower compact.

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the laws is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty.

"Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice, and, in short, let it become the political religion of the nation."—Abraham Lincoln.

> WE must teach future citizens what America stands for and encourage them to help to carry out her great purposes. Obligations of the next generation will be even greater than our own, and the sacred duty of training that generation is in our hands. Our efforts to build up material wealth and prosperity and idealism are useless if we are to leave all to an untrained and irresponsible generation under conditions which promise only social and financial destruction.
> —GENERAL PERSHING.

"Our strength rests in our patriotism. Anarchy flees before patriotism. Peace and order and security and liberty are safe so long as love of country burns in the hearts of the people. It should not be forgotten, however, that liberty does not mean lawlessness. Liberty to make our own laws commands a duty to observe them ourselves and enforce obedience among all others within their jurisdiction. Liberty, my fellow-citizens, is responsibility, and responsibility is duty, and that duty is to preserve the exceptional liberty we enjoy within the law and for the law and by the law."—William McKinley.

"The attempt to frame a just order of society is the most tremendous task to which man can ever address himself." —Rev. William E. Orchard, of London.

Our Country's Peril

"The United States is the most lawless nation on the globe, barring only Russia under Bolshevist rule."—Charles Frederick Carter, in Current History.

The American Bar Association in its annual meeting, 1922, unanimously adopted committee reports based on extensive investigation of existing conditions in the United States, from which the following extracts are culled:

"The criminal situation in the United States, so far as crimes of violence are concerned, is worse than that in any other civilized country. Here there is less respect for law."

"On every hand is manifest open revolt against authority."

"All around us is evidence of loss of faith in the fundamental principles of our institutions."

"Particularly since 1890 there has been, and continues, a widening, deepening tide of lawlessness in this country."

Ex-Justice John W. Goff, ex-recorder of New York, stated to the committee: "In the history of this country we have never before been confronted with anything like the criminal conditions we have today."

Crimes Against Life

"At the present time murder prevails in this country to an unheard-of extent in the experience of civilized mankind."—Dr. F. L. Hoffman, statistician, Prudential Insurance Co.

"The number of murders committed in these United States annually is not only increasing, but it is increasing proportionately faster than the population. . . . Records show that this country still leads the civilized world in the number of crimes of violence committed within its borders."—Editorial in the New York Evening Mail, Dec. 8, 1922.

In the seven years, 1912-1918, there were 59,377 murders in the United States. American soldiers killed in battle in the World War numbered 50,327, or 9,505 less.

In 1920 there were 352 murders in Chicago, an increase of 121 per cent in twelve years.

In 1917 Los Angeles had ten more murders than London with twenty times the population.

New York City had six times as many homicides (murder and manslaughter) as London in 1916.

More than 9,500 murders occurred in 1921 in the United States: 85,000 in the past ten years.

Crimes Against Property

"The evidence before us shows that there has been since 1910 a steady and terrible increase not only in homicides, but in burglaries and robberies."—Bar Report.

"Evidence that crime is increasing in the United States in a most alarming way is so abundant and conclusive that it cannot be controverted."—Carter.

Burglaries have increased in this country during the past ten years 1,200 per cent.

Burglary insurance losses have increased 543 per cent in the past five years.

"Thefts from railroads, express companies, steamships, trucks, lighters and piers aggregate $106,000,000 a year." — Detective William J. Burns.

For every $8,000 cleared through the banks last year, one dollar was stolen by forged or raised checks the total loss being $50,000,000.

Losses by theft in 1921 are estimated at $302,799,000, not including losses through fraud.

"One automobile out of each thirty registered in New York was stolen in 1920; one in each twenty-two in Chicago; one in each thirty-one in Detroit and Cleveland."

"The tendencies now bearing their perfect fruit began long before the war. . . . For thirty years at least the increase in crime has been the subject of public comment. In 1908, six years before the war began, Chief Justice Taft, in an address before the Civic Forum in New York City, said: 'The administration of criminal law in this country is a disgrace to our civilization. The prevalence of crime and fraud, which here is greatly in excess of that in European countries, is due largely to the failure of the law and its administration to bring criminals to justice . . . . as murder is on the increase, so are all offenses of the felony class; and there can be no doubt that they will continue to increase unless the criminal laws are enforced with more certainty, more uniformity and more severity than they now are.'

"The administration of justice has been growing steadily worse in the fourteen years since Chief Justice Taft characterized it as a 'disgrace to our civilization.' It follows, then, that the American people, not the war, are to blame for what amounts to a breakdown of the whole system of administering justice. . . . It would seem as if the encouragement of crime had become a national cult."—Charles Frederick Carter, in Current History.

"It can hardly be doubted. . . . that in the United States at least the violation of law has never been so general nor so widely condoned as at present. This is a fact which strikes at the very heart of our system of government, and the young man entering upon his active career must decide whether he too will condone and even abet such disregard of law, or whether he will set his face firmly against this course. The effect upon his own character of the decision which he makes, as well as upon the community in which he lives, is of the most critical importance."—President James R. Angell, Yale University.

> EVERY college graduate is a center of influence in the community in which he lives—a center of influence for good or evil. And whether such influence be for good or evil depends largely upon impressions gained during college days. The schools of America should no more consider graduating a student who lacks faith in our government than a school of theology should consider graduating a minister who lacks faith in God.
> —HON. ROBERT E. L. SANER.

A Crusade for America

"If we fail, the cause of free self-government throughout the world will rock to its foundations."—Theodore Roosevelt.

To counteract, and if possible overcome, the prevalent and increasing lawlessness in America, the American Bond has been organized for a nation-wide crusade to continue at least ten years. The American Bond is a new educational department of the Anti-Saloon League of America, whose executive committee has general supervision of the work of the new department. The national headquarters are at Detroit, Mich., where the movement had its origin. Mr. Sebastian S. Kresge, one of its founders, is chairman. Dr. Howard Hyde Russell, the founder of the Anti-Saloon League of America, is the general secretary.

Groups of competent and experienced public speakers will carry the message of the crusade across the country, speaking in churches, clubs, schools, mass meetings, and wherever else a hearing can be secured for the message of warning and appeal. The American Bond seeks to unite and enlist all loyal Americans in a "new Mayflower compact," wherein obedience to law is pledged, and fidelity to American ideals and principles is recorded. These ideals and principles are set forth in the classic confession of faith for Americans known as "the American's Creed," and those who hear the message of the crusade are asked to enroll as members of the American Bond by signing the pledge of loyalty to flag and law.

A Woman with a Message

"One lesson is written on every page of the Gospels. Throughout His life our Lord was using powers that are here now in the world."

A FEW weeks ago Miss Maude Royden came from England for a two months' lecturing tour in America. That she has a message—one which is her very life or more—no hearer can for a moment doubt. It flashes from her spirit-lighted eyes and her frail body thrills with it, until she and her message seem to become one. To each individual in her audience—or in private conversation as well—she gets across the fact of her love for humanity and her love for God. She loves people—more than a little, and second only to God. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself"—this, the first and greatest commandment, seems personified in Maude Royden. If anything, however, she loves her neighbor even better than herself.

Perhaps the shadow of her early childhood had something to do with that intense love and sympathy for all humankind which she manifests. She was born with dislocated hips which caused an incurable lameness. Thus she was set aside from the ordinary ways of a child's life.

She is the daughter of the late Sir Thomas Royden, M. P., and former lord mayor of London. The family was one in which education was considered of paramount importance. She went to Oxford and forgot the religious tendencies which had manifested themselves in the home life. Then one day she heard a sermon which suggested to her that Jesus was a Teacher—greater perhaps even that Plato or Aristotle. Her curiosity and admiration were aroused and she began to study His life and words. She became aware that she had been missing the greatest power in life. That is what Christ stands for to her—Power. Power to transform sinful lives; power to heal sick bodies; power to eliminate the evils of a very-much-wrong social system, power to do anything.

Wrong Must Be Righted

Never has her clear mind been blind to civic or national evils. Things were wrong and they must be righted, and she would do her share toward righting them. She identified herself with any movement that meant a step toward uplift. Especially has she been tender and helpful toward other women. She has preached and lectured and written, and always underlying every message whereever delivered is the thought of Christ as Power.

The cities which she has visited in the United States have felt her influence. Everywhere she has met interested audiences and left them inspired. Miss Royden was formerly assistant pastor of the City Temple, London, and is co-founder, with Rev. Percy Dearmer of the Kensington Fellowship Service.

An acquaintance with the woman, even by so slight a sketch, makes more potent the words she utters. A sermon on changing the history of the world which was preached by her in the Brick Presbyterian Church, during her recent stay in New York City carries the force of her personality and the power of her message. She speaks on "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do.—John 14:12.

"The real miracle of Christ's life, behind all his mighty works, is that this one man, without name, wealth or influence, so changed the life of the world, that history is not understandable, if Christ is left out of it. You and I could be dropped out, but without him civilization is unintelligible.

"However we lag behind or misinterpret him today, the coming of Christ actually did alter history. It is precisely that power to deflect from its course the world now at the crossroads that you and I would give all we dream of to possess.

The Task of Happiness

IF I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain:—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!
—Robert Louis Stevenson.

"The world is at the crossroads, perhaps on its downward path. But, if it were possible to arrest its mad and evil course and turn it into new paths, that is what we should desire. The world is so great, and we are so small. Jesus of Nazareth was so great he did what we cannot do? Yes, it may be so. But we may believe him, and he said: 'Greater works than these shall he do.'

"One lesson is written on every page of the Gospels. Throughout his life our Lord was using powers that are here now in the world.

"When his disciples asked him why they couldn't cast out the demon from the epileptic, he did not reply,'Because you are not God.' He said: 'Because of your unbelief.'

" 'If thou canst believe!' He exclaims to the anxious father. It was as if he said: 'These powers I use, God has put into the world for all. He that believeth in me shall do these works and others.'

"I believe the thing we must concentrate on today is to discover how to use the powers Christ used.

"If you would take the first three Gospels, wiping out of your mind what you have heard of Jesus Christ, and trying to get an idea of what Christ is like, you would find him so full of power, so attractive, so scientific, so human and divine, that it would be impossible not to love him.

"Those saturated from childhood in the literature of the Bible have been told that the fourth Gospel is the greatest. But in one sense its picture lacks the powerfully moving appeal and attractiveness of the picture in the first three. Only to persons familiar with these, can the majesty and sublimity of the Christ of John's Gospel appear. The human Christ should come first. Then the austerity of his divinity becomes real.

"In the earlier years, your first impression is that of power.

"Our deplorable modern art has represented a man who couldn't possibly make anybody well. So false a conception makes me wish that every picture of Jesus of the nineteenth century could be consigned to the flames. Go back to the earliest representations. Remember that the early church had a conception of its Lord, not of sentimentality but of tremendous power.

"Those of you who don't believe in miracles should learn something from the sort of story told about Christ. The same sort of story is not told about St. Francis as about Theodore Roosevelt. Even if the miracles were not true as recorded—what sort of man do you think men would believe could stop wind and wave? Of what kind of teacher would men say that he could bring from the jaws of death a man dead four days? Of what sort of man would stories be told of wondrous healing?

Christ Never Refused to Heal

"Remember there was never a single instance of his refusal to heal one sick person, though in the magnificent sincerity of the Gospels we are told that once he could heal but a few sick folk because of their unbelief.

"In one synagogue on a Sabbath day was a woman ill eighteen years. The Great Physician was there, and all eyes were fixed on him. Every one in public life knows that gaze with the desire to find some flaw. If the woman had been healed after a time, it would have been an unbelievable joy. Our Lord waited not. At once he set her free. . . .

"Most adorable of his characteristics I find this swiftness of love. When he saw the hungry, he fed them. He was moved with compassion. When Peter on the water faltered, in that moment to him so frightful, straightway Jesus put out his hand and caught him.

"You remember that other moment, when the Lord turned and looked upon Peter. I used to think the look was in reproach: 'There, what did I tell you?' Now I know better. It meant: 'You will come out, Peter on the other side. And, when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.' Is there anything in all history diviner? If your best friend had put his dagger into your back, could you have thought of his agony to follow? That look saved Peter from going out to hang himself. This is the man who turned the world out of its course. This is the sort of person we must become to influence the world.

"How can we use such power when we haven't it? How can we get it? Only by loving him. We are created in the image of God. When we love God, we become like what we love.

"I believe future generations will call Coué blessed, because his teaching is that imagination is greater than will. Imagination makes you what you are. Set your imagination on what you love, and the process is begun of becoming like it. I have seen boys grit their teeth when they were thinking of Roosevelt. I have seen girls imitate unconsciously the teachers they loved. This may have a comic side; but it is not comic. St. Francis, pondering night and day on the wounds of his Lord, might produce in his body the signs of his Lord's passion.

"I do not believe it is possible to know him and not love him. I defy anyone to saturate himself in the literature of the Gospels and not love him. There is no more moving figure in literature than the founder of our religion. To know him is to love him. To love him is to be like him.

"I beseech you, in facing the problems of the world, not to forget that the trouble is not lack of power, brains, or wealth. It is simply and solely because we are not good enough, not brave, not trustworthy. If we were finer, we could take the world in our hands and make it what we would. Let us dwell on the life, the nature of him whom agnostic and skeptic admit to be the most appealing figure of history. For to love him is at last to bear his image.

"America has everything in the world but one. She has wealth, power, brains, efficiency, and a thousand other things. In one only is she poor—in time. You cannot understand Christ in a hurry. It takes hours, days, years. Give yourself this time. Take it by force, if need be. Thus at last you will find it possible to make the world believe that the works of Christ his followers indeed shall do."

First Church, Astoria, Oregon

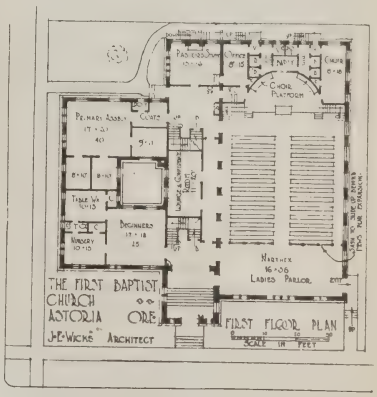
NOTWITHSTANDING the $20,000,000 fire catastrophe which recently visited this thriving city on our west coast, the noble body of men and women of this church, under the guidance of their pastor, Rev. E. A. Gottberg, are determined to carry through to completion the church building here shown. The foundations are well advanced and the superstructure will follow as rapidly as conditions permit. Speaking comparatively, the financial loss sustained by this city exceeds that which befell San Francisco. This church is worthy of financial assistance from those who have at heart the best interests of our denomination.



As we come to the postoffice and court house we find, facing upon their square, this church building site, the best corner lot in the city. Truly the Baptists are determined to occupy their rightful place in the community. The day of the side-street location has passed. Mr. Gottberg, ever on the job, greets us with the drawings under his arm for the new church and church-school building. Let us examine them under his guidance. J. E. Wicks is the architect; the department of architecture, consulting architects.

We see a building, Gothic in feeling, and unmistakably churchly in appearance. We see at a glance the portion wherein the Word will be preached, and recognize without question the provision for church-school instruction.

Figuratively speaking, we pass with him through the tower into the building, entering a hall from which we turn to the right into the sanctuary. We find an auditorium so planned that when the main floor is used by the average congregation it will be well filled and so arranged that by occupying the gallery and by sliding up the interior sash into the narthex, 175 additional sittings are obtained, all directly in front of the minister. We note the baptistry directly back of the pulpit with its floor on the level of the platform, and the choir banked on either side. In addition to the choir room, pastor's study and office we find an unusual provision in a centrally located conference room, so placed as to give seclusion from all outside disturbances. We find a light court providing light and air for centrally located rooms.

Noting the ample halls with stairs front and back, to provide easy circulation when the building is filled to capacity, we turn to the left and view with appreciation the choice provisions for nursery, beginners and primary children. What a delightful thrill will always be present in their lives whenever reference is made to the house of the Lord.

On the second floor we discover special provisions for the students in the junior, intermediate, senior and young people's departments, also for the men's Bible class all in addition to the church gallery. On this floor, too, is a housekeeping suite, completely separated, yet easy of access.

A high basement contains social provisions—a church dining-room seating 280 at tables with kitchen centrally located for convenient service; also recreation rooms for boys and girls in addition to the usual furnace and toilet provisions.

As we take our departure, and compliment Mr. Gottberg on the excellence of the plan arrangement, he gives a warm hand grip and, with joy in his eye, says he agrees with Dr. G. H. Young, Oregon's Baptist director of religious education who, when he had looked the plans over said, "They are the finest I have ever seen."

---

How have I done so much? By tithing of my time, and I have told to all the audiences I have spoken to in the past weeks of the personal help and blessing each one receives if he will tithe of time—use two hours twenty-four minutes each day for the Lord—in study, self-education and in the Lord's work where he leads. Many women have been impressed to try it. The Lord blesses greatly the remaining hours of the twenty-four.

A Revival of Concern

A message from the president of the Northern Baptist Convention

By Frederick E. Taylor

ONE of the greatest needs of our churches today is a revival of concern. In recent years this good old word of our fathers seems to have become almost obsolete. There was a time in the past when the word concern was frequently heard in connection with the work of the pastor. If the weeks rolled by and no one seemed to be seeking the way of life the pastor became deeply concerned for souls. He felt that the presence of a large audience or the payment of bills or even a raise in salary did not mean success if souls were not seeking the Saviour. Indeed, I have known men to gather together and spend hours in prayer because of their concern for the spiritual welfare of their respective fields.

A Pastor's Concern

In our present day methods of doing church work, is there not a danger of eliminating from the pastor's life, this thing called concern for souls? We ought to be concerned about the finances, about the Sunday school and its efficiency, about the attendance upon the morning and evening service. Any genuine pastor becomes anxious about his members who happen to be seriously ill and he usually visits them and prays with them and brings their cases before the prayer meeting for united prayer; what we need is the same concern about the unconverted people connected with the congregation. I remember the time when a pastor of a large city church of another denomination said to me: "I have come to the place where I can not stay here any longer if souls do not come to Christ. I have prayed, I have searched my heart, and I have told God to take me away from this church if souls are not going to be saved." And I saw that church thronged with people night after night for three weeks and scores, yes even hundreds seeking the way of life. The pastor's concern touched the hearts of his people and they became concerned and the spirit of revival broke out in that church. God heard his heart cry for souls and although ten years have gone by he is there yet and his ministry has been fruitful.

Similar concern is needed in the hearts of fathers and mothers for their children. In our modern way of living nearly all of the religious training of the children is left to the Sunday-school teacher; and the parents never mention Jesus Christ to their children. The family altar has gone from our homes. Indeed, in thousands of homes it never was erected, and the only time the boys and girls ever heard anything about God was in their childhood when they were taught to say their prayers at night. In thousands of homes even this beautiful custom is no longer taught the children. The thought of having God in one's daily life or the study of God's word is hardly ever suggested to the boys and girls of the present generation. In a few years they are away from the Bible school and the house of God and adrift on the sea of life without a pilot. There was a time when parents would become deeply concerned about their children if they did not confess Christ and unite with the church. I remember meeting a lady well along in years who stood before me one day on the street and started to say something; suddenly her voice choked, the tears came, and finally she managed to say, "O pastor, you know!" And I did know. Her heart was burdened for her son, a man very successful in business life, and a good father and husband, but not a Christian. I said to this good lady that day, "I believe he will come." He did come, and his brother-in-law and two children came with him; they were all baptized on the same Sunday morning. I should like to see a concern like that in the hearts of parents everywhere. Their greatest ambition should be to lead their children to Jesus Christ.

We have many Sunday-school teachers who really become concerned for their pupils. I know some of them and have seen the anxiety in their faces when, after months of faithful teaching, none of the pupils had accepted Christ. I have had them come to me and ask me to join my prayers with theirs. Whenever this happens, I always feel that we are on the eve of an awakening. But alas! Too many of our teachers and officers are satisfied to have a big school or a big class, and they never become genuinely concerned for the salvation of their pupils. Indeed, I think one of the dangers of big classes is that the one thought of the officers is to keep up the attendance.

Whenever there is concern on the part of the teacher or on the part of any one connected with church life results usually follow.

Many years ago I was in a little New Jersey village holding a meeting with a Presbyterian church. The pastor and his wife had been a blessing to that village and to the country round about for nearly forty years. The meetings in the little church were well-attended and a great many souls came to Christ. But the wife of the pastor was not satisfied. She kept telling me about the principal of the school who was an agnostic, and openly voiced his views although he did come to the services. There were four young men for whom this dear old saint was deeply concerned. They came to the meetings but they did not come to Christ. I was a guest at the parsonage. One night I was awakened after midnight and heard a voice in the room above mine. I listened, thinking some one was ill. In the silence of the night I heard this pastor's wife pleading with God for the principal of the school and for the four young men of whom she had told me. I shall never forget the passion of the plea of that old lady that night. I dropped off to sleep and was awakened again just as the sun was rising. In the stillness of the early morning I again heard that voice. All night that woman had been pleading with God for these men. The meetings closed and not one of them had confessed Christ.

A Telegram

I went back to my own pastorate; a few days later I received a telegram saying, "Will you not come for one night more?" The telegram was signed by the pastor's wife. Although I felt that I could not spare the time and that it was useless to speak again after the meetings had closed, I could not resist the appeal of that telegram. So I went back for one more service. As I entered the church that evening with the pastor and his wife, I saw her look around and then heard her say to her husband that they were here and that she believed they would come tonight. I preached the best I knew how and gave an invitation; a number stood up confessing Jesus Christ. Then one of the young men for whom the pastor's wife had prayed rose to his feet; then, one after another, the other three men arose and I was greatly delighted to see the agnostic principal also standing. In that one night the pastor's wife received the answer to her prayers for those five young men. It was a night never to be forgotten by those who were there. The preacher and the preaching were merely incidental. The victory was won because one saint of God had enough concern for the souls of men to remain awake all night pleading for them. When we have real concern for souls, then the church will have a revival.

Sometimes I wonder why it is that we do not have more concern for the souls of the pupils in our schools and colleges. The real reason for a denominational school is to enable the students to attain their education in a Christian environment. Unfortunately there are schools and colleges where a more or less perfunctory chapel service once a day seems sufficient, and where such a thing as concern for the souls of the students is almost unknown. As long as the students behave themselves and give the faculty no trouble, the religious life of the institution occasions no anxiety. I am con-

My Today

By Mary F. Garrison

TOMORROW may have storm and stress
Or friendly sun may shine.
I do not know. I will not care—
For this today is mine.

And I would make it thine, dear Lord—
How can I make it thine?
For homely round of life's dull care
Must still today be mine.

Yet these are tasks that thou hast set.
I'll do them with a song.
I'll earn the bread, I'll tend the sick,
I'll teach the right from wrong.

Whatever pain, or grief, or cheer,
Whatever toil be mine,
I'll do for thee with joy and song
Then will today be thine.

fident that hundreds and even thousands of students could be won for Christ every year if all of our schools had among the faculty members men and women who had the desire to see their students confess Christ.

Over and over again when discussing the problems of the students at the summer conferences I have had them tell me that it was exceedingly difficult to get the faculty vitally interested in the spiritual life of the students in some of our American colleges. Fortunately it is not always so. There are college presidents who are deeply concerned if there is no growth of spiritual life in the college year. I remember one college president who, within two months after he accepted the presidency of a large university, wrote a pastor saying, "The first thing this college needs is a revival of religion. Will you come and preach for two or three weeks." That president had a concern for the souls of those students. I think of the principal of a great academy who came into my room and buried his face in his hands and wept over the condition of affairs in his school and I saw nearly every unconverted boy in that academy confess Christ during the next few weeks. It would be a great thing to see a faculty or a college on their knees before God seeking the salvation and spiritual development of the boys and girls entrusted to their care. Is this too much to ask of a Christian college or its leaders?

I remember one college president who asked me to come and spend an evening with the senior girls of the college and answer questions. I went with fear and trembling. I was afraid they would ask questions about science and philosophy and I should not be able to help them. I spent over an hour with that group of girls. Not a foolish question was asked. They wanted to know about prayer and about the will of God for their lives. They wanted to know whether God would lead them to a place of real service in life and how they could understand when God was leading and when he was not. It was a wonderful hour and I shall never forget it. That college was a school where the religious life of the student was a matter of concern to the president and faculty, and I believe there are many like him. Every college should have that spirit.

As we go toward the Easter season in our church life shall we not pray for a revival of concern—a deep concern on the part of the pastors, a concern in the parent's heart, a concern for the spiritual lives of our students? We shall only be following the life of our Lord in so doing. He was concerned about men. He wept over Jerusalem. He was sorrowful when the young man "went away." He spent nights in prayer. He felt that he must work for the night was coming. Even on the cross when he was suffering great agony, he was concerned for the soul of a thief and spoke words of assurance of salvation to him.

Shall we not pray for a spirit of concern in all of our churches, in all of our schools and colleges, in all of our homes that Jesus Christ through us may see a great harvest of souls?

The Story of a Reunion

By Bishop S. P. Spreng

The church world during the last three months has been watching with great interest the results of the organic union of two religious bodies with an aggregate membership of nearly a quarter of a million persons and a Sunday-school enrolment of more than 400,000 children.

These churches have their greatest strength in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Iowa and West Virginia.

Bishop S. P. Spreng, of this union of communions, known as the Evangelical church, tells of the merger and its significance in the following article.

CHURCH union and cooperation are making marked progress. Through the Federal Council of Churches thirty-one Protestant communions with a membership of 25,000,000 persons have worked together for years.

Two of these bodies have recently united. In fact, it is more of a reunion than a union, for they separated less than a generation ago.

Such marked progress has been made that the story of their reunion is of special interest at this time.

About thirty years ago the church founded in 1800 by the Rev. Jacob Albright, known as the Evangelical Association, experienced an unhappy division. Two bodies were formed out of the one. One continued to be the Evangelical Association, the other organized as the United Evangelical Church. There were no divergencies of doctrine or doctrinal standards, but there were certain divergencies in organization and polity At the time much feeling was engendered and the two bodies drifted apart. But about fifteen years ago the desire for reunion began to manifest itself, first among the young people of both denominations, which found its first expression in enthusiastic meeting of the two young people's societies in the city of Chicago, where the sentiment expressed for speedy reunion found joyous response.

The agitation thus begun could not be quenched or checked, and so the general conferences of both bodies at their quadrennial sessions appointed commissions on church union and federation, with instructions to negotiate terms of union between the two bodies. These commissions were renewed several times. Many important meetings were held. Sub-commissions were appointed from time to time. The greatest care was taken by both commissions to conserve what they felt to be essential and fundamental matters. These negotiations were necessarily slow and extended over a period of at least three quadrenniums. But all difficulties were gradually removed and agreements reached which in January, 1921, were finally adopted in a joint session of the two commissions amid great rejoicing and mutual felicitations.

The new Discipline and the Basis of Union were adopted on that occasion and submitted to the annual conferences of both bodies for approval. The voting began in the fall of 1921 and continued until the fall of 1922. When all conferences had had a chance to vote, with the following noteworthy result: All the conferences of the Evangelical Association, including those in foreign lands, Europe and Asia, voted unanimously for the merger. There was not one negative vote in a total of over 1400. In the United Evangelical group all conferences except one voted, and with a total vote of about 490 only 38 were recorded against it.

With such unanimity of action, it was agreed to call the two general conferences to meet in joint session in Detroit in October last. The combined voting strength as made up by the records was 241. On Oct. 14 came the great day. The members of the two bodies met in joint session. An opening service of extreme impressiveness was held and the organization effected. The new draft of the Discipline for the reunited church was submitted together with the Basis of Union and voted upon by roll call, and every member, ministerial and lay, voted in the affirmative. It was unanimously adopted. The scene which followed beggars description. Long pent-up feelings broke over their bounds. The entire body rose to sing hymns of joy and praise in which the vast throng of interested visitors joined most heartily. It was a joining of hearts as well as of denominations. The union took place in the fervor of a great outpouring of the Spirit of God. No one present can ever forget the experience of that day.

The new body adopted the name of the Evangelical Church, as the only name by which its perpetuity, its genius and traditions and historical continuity could be expressed. The Evangelical Church represents the following statistical summary

| | |
|---|---|
| Ministers | 2,431 |
| Members | 260,000 |
| Organized congregations. | 3,000 |
| Enrolment in Sunday Schools | 420,000 |
| Members of young peoples societies | 63,000 |
| Valuation of church property | $28,500,000 |
| Conversions and accessions in the last three years | 75,000 |
| Amount contributed to missions in three years | $ 2,375,000 |
| Amount contributed for all purposes | $20,000,000 |

The Evangelical Church operates under nine flags, in America, Europe and Asia, and has representatives in Africa as well. It has 30,000 members in Europe. It has missions in China and Japan. It maintains two publishing houses—one in Cleveland, Ohio, and one in Harrisburg, Pa. It has two orphan homes, six old people's homes, three colleges and three theological seminaries. Two deaconess' societies are maintained, one in America and one in Europe, with fifteen hospitals. A full list of denominational periodicals, Sunday-school helps and young people's journals are being published.

There are five bishops. Six were elected, but in less than a week after the adjournment of the general conference, one of the men elected, Bishop G. Heinmiller, who had been assigned to the European conferences, died. The five remaining bishops are: Bishop S. C. Breyfogel of Reading, Pa.; Bishop S. P. Spreng, of Naperville, Ill.; Bishop L. H. Seager, of Le Mars, Iowa; Bishop M. T. Maze, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Bishop J. F. Dunlap, of Cleveland, Ohio.

In this merger one outstanding fact should be noted in addition to those already mentioned, namely that this is the first instance in the history of American Protestantism when two church bodies reunited after a separation in the lifetime of a generation, in the life time of those who witnessed and experienced the separation. The new church looks hopefully into the future with high expectations of prosperity.

What Do We Read?

American Baptist Publication Society

By H. E. Cressman

WHAT books have been the best sellers? "Christianity and Progress," H. E. Fosdick; "Lord Teach Us to Pray", Alexander Whyte; "Reconstruction of Religion", C. C. Ellwood; "What Jesus Taught", M. G. Evans; "Honest Debtors", O. P. Gifford; "The Victory of God", J. Reid; "The Pilgrim", T. R. Glover; "Type of Preachers," New Testament, A. T. Robertson; "Spiritual Energies in Daily Life," Rufus M. Jones; "God's Better Thing", A. D. Belden; "Jesus of Nazareth", J. A. Barton; "Preach It Again", B. C. Clausen.

Is there any increase in the sale of books bearing on religious education? Yes.

Which of the several series of books being published by the Publication Society is meeting with the most hearty reception? The Judson Training Manuals.

Will the information that you give cover the whole field including the several branches? No with the exception of data on our own books. The best selling books will vary in different localities.

Do you find that certain books sell better in one section of the country than in another? Yes, and this is accounted for in several ways. The author may be known in a certain locality and the question of theology may be very vital in one section of the country and not so vital in another section and as you know in the different sections of our country we find different types of people. Here in Philadelphia we could not begin to sell some of the books that our branch house at Kansas City will sell hundreds of and the reverse of this is also true. We have sold for instance in Philadelphia a considerable number of Dr. Keen's book "I Believe In God and In Evolution"; likewise our Boston house has. Our Kansas City and Los Angeles branches have sold scarcely ten copies. The author of this book is a noted Philadelphian and Baptist and is known throughout New England.

The Westminster Press

By Walter S. Lewis

THE best sellers in our depositories during 1922 were:

"In His Image," Bryan; "Bells of the Blue Pagoda", Cochran; "Education for Successful Living", Clarke; "Church and Sunday School Publicity", Herbert H. Smith; "Handful of Stars", Boreham; "Victory of God", Reid; "Training of Children in the Christian Family", Weigle; "Meaning of Prayer," Fosdick; "In the Breaking of the Bread", Vance; "The Honor of the Church", Brown; "Reconstruction of Religion", Ellwood; "The Approach to the New Testament," Moffatt; "Disciplines of Liberty", Sperry; "Prayers of Gunsaulus", Gunsaulus; "The Mind in the Making", Robinson; "Evangelistic Talks", Gypsy Smith; "Christianity and Economic Problems", Kirby, Page and others; "Return of Christ", Erdman; "A Brief Bible History", Boyd and Machen; "Our Reasonable Faith", Miller; "Eagle Life", Jowett; "Friend on the Road", Jowett; "Proposal of Jesus", Hutton; "Gentleman in Prison," Macdonald; "The Home God Meant", Luccock; "Belief in God", Gore; "The Prophetic Ministry for Today", Williams; "Student's Philosophy of Religion", Wright.

We note a generous increase in the demand for books on religious education both in relation to the week-day church school and Sunday school.

I should say there is no great interest shown in the books which feature the controversy between the so called fundamentalists and modernists. There is much talk among the ministers and laymen, but as near as we can judge very little money is being spent on the books themselves dealing with the controversy.

There are two fundamental things that the denominational press can do to create an interest in and encourage the purchase of good books:

First, Conduct a progressive up to-date, thoroughly competent book review department.

Second, Urge, constantly, in every possible way upon the ministers of the denominations, that they urge their people to read and own good books. This may be done in their pastoral work and also from the pulpit; and it can be done and should be done much more generally and generously than it is done. Ministers could frequently name books that they have found desirable for members of their congregations to read. When this method is consistently and discriminatingly pushed it is astounding to note the results in the sale of the book mentioned.

> IT has been from the first the policy of "THE BAPTIST" to cooperate with the publishers in an effort to get good books into our Baptist homes. Religious book Week is March 4-10. With this fact in mind we wrote to the publishing houses of various denominations asking for information on the following queries: What books have proved to be the best sellers during the past year? Do you notice any considerable increase in the demand for books on religious education? Is there much interest shown in books which feature the controversy between the so-called fundamentalists and modernists? What can the denominational press do to create an interest in and the purchase of good books?

The Pilgrim Press

YOU ask what can the denominational press do to create an interest in and to encourage the purchasing of good books. I answer that papers such as THE BAPTIST can have a most salutary influence in this field. Again and again we have noticed a sudden spurt in the sales of some particular book hitherto moving slowly and have traced it to an enthusiastic mention of that book in some editorial.

I would say, therefore, with emphasis, that one of the most desirable features of a high-grade denominational weekly is a book section whose editor will magnify his office and get the best men available to write reviews. Do not have everything reviewed as a matter of hack work, but give the really outstanding books the attention they deserve. Your readers will welcome this service. We of the denominational publishing societies feel that our work is not merely a matter of commercial profits, but that we have a real mission vitally connected with the growth of the kingdom of God. Our best supporters in carrying out this work will be such sympathetic and farsighted editors as yourself.

You asked what books have proved to be the best sellers during the past year; there is one book which stands far ahead of all others as the best seller in our stores and that is "The Reconstruction of Religion" by Ellwood. There is no other single work which belongs in the same class with it since "What and Where is God" by Swain, which came out two years ago.

You also asked about the interest shown in books which feature the controversy between the so-called "fundamentalists and "modernists." The Pilgrim Press stores are to some extent identified with the "modernists." We do not feature in either of our stores the type of book which sells in such quantities in the Moody Bible Institute stores and similar headquarters. The interest with our people seems to be veering away from purely theological issues toward vital social questions in the light of their religious implications.

The Methodist Book Concern

By A. F. Stevens

THERE is a steadily increasing demand for books on religious education, both those treating of the subject and of texts prepared for study. I feel that the denominational papers can largely stimulate interest in good books by giving special reviews rather than by so frequently quoting publishers' comments that appear on the jackets of books. A book-reading public is more apt, in my judgment, to subscribe to religious papers than a public that is not interested in good books.

Evangelism in the Sunday School

Every Sunday School is an Evangelistic Opportunity for the Church, Second to None

By Albert H. Gage

THE Sunday School is the most productive field of the church for evangelism. There are three principal reasons for this. (1) The Sunday school has people in the time of their life when it is easiest and most natural to win them to the Christian way of living. Youth is the golden hour for evangelism. (2) The Sunday school uses the Bible as its great textbook. Whenever people study the Word of God it is comparatively easy to win them to the Bible way of living. (3) The Sunday school is organized and equipped for effective evangelism. The courses of study (especially the graded lessons) form a good foundation upon the basis of which an intelligent decision of life can be made. The plan of departmental organization and division into smaller classes under consecrated trained teachers gives opportunity not merely for intensive instruction but also for personal work. Every Sunday school is an evangelistic opportunity for the church second to no other. It should therefore be the purpose of the Sunday school to win its scholars to personal allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ and into actual service for him.

How Organize a Sunday School for Evangelism

The whole organization should be filled with an evangelistic spirit. Of course it is evident that Sunday-school evangelism is of the educational type and not of the highly emotional type often used in adult evangelism. It thinks in terms of all of life rather than a single emotional experience. It seeks to interpret to the scholars in terms that they can understand in the stage of development in which they are living the Christian way of living, to secure acceptance on their part of the Christian way of living as their own and to give practice and experience in this Christian way of living.

Teachers should be selected who have the evangelistic spirit. Every Sunday-school teacher should be a teller of the good news. This "good news" should radiate from the life as well as be spoken by the lips. Every teacher teaches a little by what he says, more by what he does and most by what he is.

There is a law of teaching which says "Without learning on the part of the student there is no teaching on the part of the teacher." If this be true, then a teacher who is presenting the Lord Jesus Christ should expect that the scholars should know the Christ, accept him as personal Saviour and reproduce his life here on earth. If a teacher in the Sunday school is not doing this, he is not teaching. Replace him with some one who will really teach.

Know the "seasons of the soul." Although youth is the time when most people are won to Christ, it is also true that in the period of youth there are seasons or periods when the soul is more sensitive than others to the Christian message. If one will remember his own experience or observe carefully any group of young people he will know the truth of this statement. Every teacher should know the religious crises of youth.

The "Seasons of the Soul"

There are four periods of deep religious interest in youth. These "seasons of the soul" are indicated by the following diagram:

The Nine Year Old. For the child that has had good home training and a good spiritual Sunday school there is often a beautiful religious awakening at the age of nine or ten. This should never be forced but when it comes naturally it should be treasured by home and church as one of the loving gifts of God.

The Twelve Year Old. Every boy and girl around the twelfth year is religious and can be easily won to the Lord Jesus Christ. Was not Jesus twelve years old when he had his religious experience in the temple? This is God's marvelous plan to prepare the soul first for the enlarged and adult body which is soon to follow. In other words God wants Christian bodies. So before the body grows the soul awakening comes. Many conversions come in this period. If we were doing our work as we ought to do it we would win practically all at this time.

The Fifteen Year Old. There is a religious interest around the fifteenth year. When the body is growing so rapidly all other interests are in the background including religion. But when the bodily growth is somewhat completed and the new powers are functioning, and just preceding or accompanying the great social awakening, there is a religious awakening. Many conversions come at this time. Many reconsecrations are made and many life decisions are formed. It is very evident that God gives this religious interest for the purpose of Christianizing the social life of youth.

The Eighteen Year Old. There is a period of religious interest around the eighteenth year. Both social and physical forces are strong but the dominant faculty of life is now the intellectual. It is quite evident that God's plan includes not merely the physical and social forces of life but also the intellectual. God wants the brain power of the world Christian. Hence the appeal must be made in terms of the intellect.

There are plenty of statistics to show that fully 85 per cent of all additions to Protestant churches come through the Sunday school. A survey of thirty-four Sunday schools showed that fully 60 per cent of these Sunday-school teachers and officers were won to Christ and became members of the church by the time they had reached their thirteenth year. Many others around the fifteenth or sixteenth year, and others around the eighteenth or nineteenth years, while only 10 per cent became Christians after their twentieth year.

Rev. F. F. Peterson, Baptist director of religious education for Massachusetts, has charted 2800 cases of decisions on Sundays in services conducted by him. He has found that 72 per cent were between the ages of nine and sixteen. He says "Win for Christ while in the grammar school,"

Secure life decisions in high school,
Train for life service in college."

Between nine and sixteen there are two principal methods, (1) the personal work of parents, teachers and pastor and (2) a well conducted decision day.

For those seventeen and over the personal interview method is absolutely the best method.

There are seasons of the year which lend themselves naturally to a decision day—such as Christmas, New Year's, Easter and Children's Day. Every teacher and every school should give the pupils an opportunity from time to time to decide for Christ. This should never be sprung upon the school. There should be weeks of careful and prayerful preparation.

Workers' Conference on Evangelism

Every good Sunday school has a regular monthly workers' conference. Without this conference there is either inefficiency or autocracy in the school. The only way to secure the cooperation of the teachers and officers in planning and administering the school is through frequent workers' conferences. Two months before the proposed decision day service there should be a workers' conference on the subject of evangelism in the Sunday school. There could be presented three brief messages, one on: "The Sunday School a Field for Evangelism," another on "Seasons of the Soul," and a third on "The Teacher an Evangelist." The pastor or superintendent could outline the preparation for decision day in the Sunday school. Four things would be expected of each teacher in every class above the primaries—that is, nine years and over—(1) A survey by each teacher of every member of his or her class. It is better not to ask the information of the scholar but of the parent. A card like this can well be used:

Name .....
Address .....
Class in S. S. ..... Age.....
Christian?.....Member of Church?.....
Growing in the Christian Life?.....
Father Christian?..... Member what church? .....
Mother Christian? .....Member what church? .....
Chum Christian? .....Member what church? .....
What is greatest obstacle to Christian life? .....
What the most natural approach?.....
Who has most influence?.....

(2) Each scholar is put on a prayer list by each teacher and prayed for daily by name. Sometimes the teacher will ask the Christian members of the class or some one else to join in a prayer league for the unsaved members of the class. A good prayer list is as follows:

My Class

1. Name .....
   Address .....
2. Name .....
   Address .....
3. Name .....
   Address .....
4. Name .....
   Address .....
5. Name .....
   Address .....
6. Name .....
   Address .....

My Purpose: The Spirit helping me, I will pray and work for the salvation of the above-named persons. Join me in this service.

Name .....

(3) After the teacher has prayed daily and by name for his scholars he is to see each one personally about becoming a Christian. This personal interview ought not be before other members of the class or even before parents. The parents should be visited and their cooperation enlisted.

(4) A 100 per cent attendance of every class on decision day.

A Decision Day

For many of the scholars this will not be a decision day but rather a declaration day. The plans as outlined above should be followed carefully by every school no matter how large or how small. The actual conduct of a decision day will differ with the size of the school. In the larger schools it should be by departments, that is, the juniors by themselves, the intermediates by themselves and the young people and adult sections by themselves. This can be done simultaneously on one Sunday or on successive Sundays. The superintendent of the department, the general superintendent, or some well known and experienced worker in religious education should conduct the service. Care should be taken not to subject the school to an unknown person or to wrong methods.

In the average small school of 100 or less good results can be secured by combining the entire school above nine years of age. Never attempt a decision day without weeks of careful preparation as outlined above. Never spring such a service upon the teachers or upon the pupils.

Have a spiritual period of worship. Make all announcements. Take records, offering, etc. Arrange with the pastor to take as much time as may be needed. If church service is at eleven o'clock and you are not through on the minute, let the church service wait. Let nothing interfere with this decision service. Do not attempt a lesson. Let some one present the claims of Christ, simply, directly and challengingly. The biggest appeal is this "It is the right thing to do." Not to accept Christ is not the right thing to do for any one. Do not talk long, ten or fifteen minutes is long enough.

There are two general methods in use. (1) Signing of cards by classes, (2) coming forward.

(1) If cards are used by teachers it is a good plan for the one who is conducting the service to ask the teachers to come forward. Sometimes a few of them can be asked for their personal testimony telling when they became Christians and the value of the Christ to them. Each are then given cards and after special prayer sent back to their class. The decisions are secured by each teacher in his or her class. This is a good form for a card.

My Declaration for Christ and the Church

I do now accept Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour and Lord.

I desire to be baptized, in obedience to the command of Jesus and according to his example.

I do reconsecrate myself to Jesus Christ and dedicate myself to some definite form of Christian Service.

I desire to join this church by letter or experience.

Name .....

Address .....

Date .....

(2) Public declaration. After the leader has presented the claims of Christ and of the Christian life he asks each to bow the head and tell the heavenly Father what he is willing to do. Then one by one he calls to his side several men and women and young people, well known to the pupils, who give a brief statement of when they became Christians and the help it has been to them. They always say that they became Christians in their youth or if they did not that they are sorry that they did not begin to follow Christ when he first called in youth. After these have given their personal testimony the leader asks that the room be very quiet, that each listen to the voice of God, and that all pray. Then he asks those who have accepted Christ recently or those who will now accept him to come forward and publicly confess him saying "I take Jesus Christ to be my personal Saviour." Everything is very quiet. They come one by one as God's spirit speaks to them. There is no urging except from within. But an opportunity is then given for those who have been won through personal work and for all others to publicly declare allegiance to the Saviour.

After those who are ready have come (do not rush—take time) the leader asks all members of the church present and all teachers who will pledge to the young converts their help, love and encouragement to come forward and stand back of them.

Those who have taken their first step go into another room where a record of each is taken. They are all sent home to tell their parents the important step which they have taken for Christ.

These are followed up by letters from pastor and teachers, special classes are found by the pastor for definite instruction in church membership and Christian living. Each teacher follows up each member of his class, helping that one to grow as Jesus grew "In wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

A decision day will secure splendid results in every school especially for the ages nine to sixteen. After sixteen it is better to depend more upon the personal interview method. Good results can be secured by the use of a card such as given above if used by the teacher or if used in the school as a whole. In the larger schools where the young people are by themselves splendid results can be secured by giving each a blank card and asking each one to put on one side his name and address and on the other a statement of just that which he is willing and ready to do for Christ. Of course this information is strictly confidential between the teacher and the scholars or between the pastor and these young people.

Every child is a key to some home. Do something for a boy and you have gained the interest of his father. Do something for a girl and the mother is your friend. Do something for a little child and the grandparents will call you blessed. Adults can and ought to be won for Christ. Every church that has young men and young women and older men and women in Bible classes wins year by year many of them to the Lord Jesus Christ. In addition to this every child in the Sunday school opens some home for his pastor, the teacher or some friend to enter with the personal message of Jesus Christ. If that child is won to Christ, it is natural for the pastor or Sunday-school teacher of that child to talk with the parents, securing not only their cooperation but also their own decision for Christ. If a boy becomes a Christian his father can be won more easily than under any other circumstance. Win a girl and it is easy to win the mother. A little child shall lead them. Many parents have been won into the Christian life through a child. Follow up every home until the entire family is united in Christ and in the church.

(This article appears in "Church School Objectives." A fuller discussion is in Mr. Gage's book "Evangelism of Youth.")

At the European Door of America

"BUT this towering, thundering, congested city, with such a torrent of traffic and such a concourse of peoples as I have never seen before is, after all, the European Door of America," said H. G. Wells recently, of New York City.

Think of the streams of peoples which have flowed through this door! Rivulets from Albania and Greece, from Latvia and Esthonia; streams of peoples from Poland and Czecho-Slovakia; a veritable flood from Italy and Russia. This side the door a city virtually controlled by earlier arrivals, with Irish-Americans and German-Americans in the ascendency, largely determining the kind of reception given these more recent arrivals!

Consider what has been brought through that door and left in huge deposits on this side—old world racial antipathies, class prejudices alien to the New World, religious preconceptions, confirmed customs of family life and social standards. All these piled so high as to shade earlier American conceptions of race, class and religion, resulting in a city not American, not Irish, not German, nor Italian, but a strange complex, the biggest challenge to homogeneity, to unity of thought and to definiteness of action which has ever confronted any city in the history of the world. Here we have a New World Movement all of our own with all the complexity and perplexity to be found in foreign missions and in home missions.

The significant thing is that New York is the European door of America. The floods that flow through this city wash through every interior city and hamlet, leaving its peculiar European deposit.

The door which opens in also opens out. Through this door hundreds of thousands of one-time Americans return to their old time haunts and millions of communications from new Americans go back like an ebb tide over the steppes of Russia, the fiords of Norway and across the Danube and the Po, carrying conceptions strange to the old world and revolutionary in their effect. Here is another new world movement of huge portent, far more significant than the literature of missionary societies.

Through this doorway hands touch hands across America, reaching to every city and widely through country plain and hamlet; but backward from this European door hand touches hand from sunny Italy to Jugo-Slavia, through Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia to the frozen bounds of Northern Russia. What an opportunity for a New World Movement!

Religious Education

Training of Workers in Week-Day Religious Education

The securing of a sufficient number of ideally trained and qualified teachers for the work in week-day religious instruction is an impossibility at the present time. The securing of adequately trained teachers is the biggest problem in public schools as well. In spite of the large number of training schools in this country, the number of teachers trained is far short of the demand for them and always will be until inducements in the way of salary increases are in proper proportions.

Our problem of securing a teaching force is linked very closely with the public-school problem. The situation has been especially difficult during the last five years on account of a lack of numbers of teachers properly trained. Where the finances will warrant and the time of holding classes will permit the employment of teachers for full time, the problem becomes largely one of scouting through the community and finding people—married women for the greater part—who have had both training and experience in the public school. These, with a few additions from the ranks of the ministry and a few persons with good experience in Sunday school, constitute the teaching body in the community in which the writer has directed this work during the last four and a half years.

All of us realize, of course, that much temporizing has been done in these schools. But the time is fast approaching when much larger plans must be made. The institutions already established must devise a system of training workers for this field, or new institutions must be started which can do this very essential work. In my opinion, based largely on my own experience and that of others, the future workers will come from the ranks of those trained for public-school teaching, with this training supplemented by courses in Bible study and other kindred subjects. It is to be hoped that some time in the near future the church will get a true vision of the importance of the educational side of its work, and prepare its teachers as it does its ministers and missionaries.

In the meantime no ground should be lost. This new department of religious work is causing even the most conservative church directors to begin to realize the necessity for a trained teaching force if this part of the work is to be done effectually.

If I were to propose a program relative to the supplying of teachers for this work, it would be something like the following:

(1) Develop the work in any community only just as rapidly as a teaching force adequately prepared can be secured. To go beyond this spells failure in that community and a set-back for the whole movement. It occurs to me that the securing of sufficient number of teachers to carry on a week-day program for either individual churches or even a denominational program will be next to impossible at present.

(2) Use the existing agencies to train for the immediate future. The technique of the class-room is common to all kinds of teaching in the same grade.

(3) Arrange, where possible, supplementary courses to those given in normal schools and educational departments of colleges and universities which would enable students to specialize in religious subjects. This could be done for regular credit even if not given under the direction of the institution itself. Many Christian colleges already have this arrangement in their program.

School people are watching this movement critically, as they should. The character of the work must meet their approval or else we cannot and ought not to expect their cooperation.—From "Week-Day Religious Education" by Chas. M. Brunson, published by Doran.

The Gift of Understanding

WITH all my getting, Lord, to you
I pray, grant understanding, too,
That always I may see the light,
Nor deviate from paths of right;
That in the hurrying rush for fame
I may have pluck to play the game,
Cleanly to live, nor crawl, nor shirk,
And know the joy of honest work.

Oh, may this blessing come to me
To be the man I wish to be!
To help whenever help I can
Some lesser lucky fellow-man;
Nor ask reward, but this alone,
That you have seen, that you have known;
That favored in the world of men
I stand not outcast in your ken.

Lord God of Workers, hear my prayer—
To play the game and play it fair;
To conquer, win; but if to lose,
Not to revile nor to abuse,
But, understanding—start again.
Grant me this strength, O Lord.
Amen.

—Edmund Leamy.

International Sunday School Lesson for March 18

JESUS CRUCIFIED

Lesson: Luke 23:33-46. Golden Text: Isaiah 53:5

Introductory

Upon his arrest Jesus was taken before the Sanhedrin, under the charge of claiming to be king of the Jews. Thence he was taken to Pilate, who sent him to Herod; but Herod ordered that he be taken back to Pilate. Pilate, shifting responsibility, let the people decide that Jesus should be crucified.

The Lesson

They took Jesus to Calvary or Golgotha—both words meaning the skull. There they crucified him between two malefactors—thus seeking to make his humiliation complete. Death by crucifixion was not primarily a Jewish punishment, but a Roman. The Romans thought little of crucifying a Jew since he was a member of a despised race. Jesus said, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." The mob had had its way and was little concerned for the sufferings of the Son of Man. The soldiers mocked at him, the rulers scoffed, the people stood looking on, and a few cast lots for his discarded garments. Above him was the derisive superscription "This is the King of the Jews." The undercurrent of all the mockery was: "He saved others; let him save himself," little understanding that a Jesus who sought to save himself could not have been the Christ, the Saviour of the World. One of the men, who hung beside him took up the cry of the people, taunting: "Art thou not the Christ? Save thyself and us." The other rebuked him saying, "Dost thou not even fear God? We receive the full reward for our deed, but this man hath done nothing amiss." To Jesus he said, "Remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom." Such faith was answered by "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Then, though only mid-afternoon, darkness came over the land and remained for three hours, and the veil of the temple was rent. "And Jesus, crying with a loud voice, said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: having said this, he gave up the ghost."

Leading Thoughts

1. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." 2. A shifting of responsibility—Pilate-like—does not make the shifter guiltless of the consequence. 3. "He saved others"—what a meed of praise the priests unwittingly gave.

—FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE.

The Chimney Corner

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Mrs. Doubtit Reads It Through

(And becomes a Mrs. Shoutit-From-the-Housetops.)

MRS. THOMAS DOUBTIT lived in the pretty stucco house with gables which stood between the homes of Mr. Yard-Wide and Mr. All-Wool, about whom you may have read in last week's issue. And because of the conversations between these two gentlemen and their respective wives, Mrs. Doubtit became hopelessly exposed to that most fatal of all infections—curiosity! Nothing for it but that she must see for herself this booklet which was arousing such friendly commotion among her Baptist neighbors. The mere fact that she did not suspect that at least two-thirds of this commotion was for the sole purpose of catching her unawares, is a credit to her neighbors' ingenuity. For when she finally demanded the privilege of seeing this booklet, the words in which the request was couched spoke volumes: "You forget that I'm a Baptist, too. Why shouldn't you share this find with us?"

"Oh—share?" asked Mrs. All-Wool, vaguely.

"Share?" echoed Mrs. Yard-Wide, with surprise. Instantly into Mrs. Doubtit's mind leaped the recollection of three remarks she had made in April, 1922—First: "Now, my dear, don't ask me to contribute to your old Continuation Campaign! I haven't a cent to spare." ("To spare?" Mrs. Yard-Wide had murmured.) Second: "Besides, I'm just sick and tired of being asked for money, money, money! What do they do with it all, anyhow? I'm sure I don't know! No more perfectly good Doubtit dollars are going to be sunk into such doubtful enterprises." ("Doubtful?" Mrs. All-Wool had murmured.)

Third: "And then, too, money isn't everything, the way some people seem to think.

"But aren't you making it seem a mountain instead of a mole-hill, then?" asked the neighbors in a duet.

All this a year ago. She suddenly remembered every word of those futile conversations; yet here she was demanding her booklet. "Give it to her by all means," the Yard-Wides smiled.

"Indeed, yes!" chuckled the All-Wools. "Only, surely she should observe the conditions we observed, and read it through at one sitting!"

"Undoubtedly!"

So the doubting Mrs. Thomas Doubtit received her copy. She had rather expected something in gold covers and Maxfield Parrish illustrations after all the enthusiasms she had been overhearing. But the plain tan cover and the globe illuminated by a light-that-never-was-on-land-or-sea was a preparation for the straight-forward contents, with actual pictures and actual facts to prove to every "Doubt It" in the denomination exactly where and how and why their dollars had been spent. Page five she loved—"how soft the music of those village bells!" Oh yes, that caught her! That took her back over a decade or so to a certain church in a certain village.

She was perfectly astonished to glean (from pages eight to twenty-one) what very definite and practical things her Doubtit dollars had actually been accomplishing from Maine to California in state-convention and city-mission work: dozens upon dozens of new churches and chapels and centers. "I'm awfully glad they did this!" she chuckled when she read on page eleven both the top and bottom paragraphs about California, and the middle paragraph about Colorado. (You see, she had relatives in each state!)

Being exceedingly proud of a touch of Indian blood in her husband's family, she liked what she read on pages twenty-two or three about these original Americans, although the following paragraphs about the black men who are Americans by compulsion thrilled her also. Oh, the new churches which Doubtit dollars had helped to put up! She read straight to the end of page twenty-eight and told herself that she, like the Home Mission Society, was certainly having an "invigorator"! For on pages thirty-one and two, when she read that compelling list of new Christian centers she felt like hiding her head in the dust to think she had helped so little, or like touching the very clouds to think she had given enough to buy even one nail to make possible those twenty-one splendid buildings!

And then, on page forty, the same thrill was repeated, when the poor, doubting woman read that nearly seventy absolutely new buildings had been erected by the Foreign Mission Society upon its ten fields.

"Seventy!" she gasped, and read with sheer joy about the nine churches the twenty-seven homes for missionaries, the sixteen schools, the six dormitories, the five hospitals, the dispensary, the hostels and so forth, which completed the list. "Fine! Fine!" sang something in Mrs. Doubtit's heart.

"Thine? Thine?" asked her conscience, beginning to think she was gloating almost too much over this that her few dollars had helped do.

"Yes, mine! mine!" nodded Mrs. Doubtit to herself. For however little she had given, she wanted to feel that she had a share apiece in every one of those seventy buildings.

And then, on page forty-five, when she read that 125 new recruits had gone out to the field under the general foreign board, her heart missed a beat. "Mercy on us!" she gasped. For here was

God Is Working His Purpose Out

BY H. C. AINGER

GOD is working his purpose out, as year succeeds to year;
God is working his purpose out, and the time is drawing near—
Nearer and nearer draws the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
As the waters cover the sea.

From utmost East to utmost West, where'er man's foot hath trod,
By the mouth of many messengers goes forth the voice of God.
Give ear to me, ye continents—ye isles, give ear to me,
That the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
As the waters cover the sea.

What can we do to work God's work, to prosper and increase
The brotherhood of all mankind—the reign of the Prince of Peace?
What can we do to hasten the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
As the waters cover the sea?

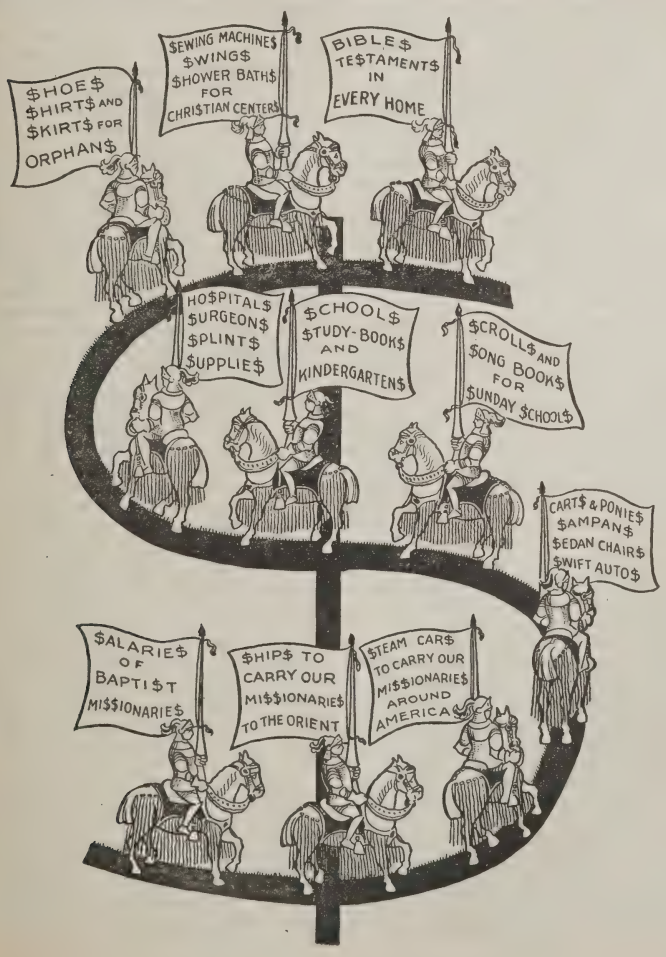
March we forth in the strength of God, with the banner of Christ unfurled,
That the light of the glorious Gospel of Truth may shine throughout the world.
Fight we the fight with sorrow and sin to set the captives free,
That the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
As the waters cover the sea.

All we can do is nothing worth, unless God blesses the deed,
Vainly we hope for the harvest, till God gives life to the seed;
Yet nearer and nearer draws the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God,
As the waters cover the sea.

another statistic concrete enough to make the Doubtit dollars cease to be quite so doubtful! And when she read on page forty-six that wonderful, wonderful letter from Sadiya, Assam, she got out her handkerchief and did something to her eyes—you can guess what! She read the summary on the foot of that page and it sounded like a Magnificat in her ears.

The top of page forty-eight was such good hard sense, so feelingly expressed, that she grew very thoughtful.

"What an eye-opener this booklet is!" she exclaimed." I must hand it on to Mrs. Nothelp and Miss Whyshouldi—they will see the vision I'm seeing, of new buildings but no doctors and teachers to man them, of preachers and evangelists but no chapels to preach in, of schools without equipment. You can't doubt any longer with good hard facts like these in your hands!" (She was scanning pages forty-eight to fifty-two, just then.)



On and on she read, devouring even the statistical pages, and when she finished with page fifty-five she laid the book down with a sign and said words which were a challenge to several of us:

Every Baptist worthy of the name ought to read that book through.

Aren't you a good Baptist? Have you read it yet? Did you know that your copy of "On the March" is waiting for you in the rooms of the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion, at the nearest of these addresses: 276 Fifth Ave., New York; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

It is free! It is fine! It is challenging! It has answers to all your doubts! Send for it! Do it now! And then read the pages Mrs. Doubtit read. You will always be glad you did! Who knows but you, too, may long to shout it from the housetops.

The Young Reserves

If Wishes Were Horses!

(A New Poetry Contest)

PROBABLY you remember that a year ago we announced that every once in a while we would devote Our Page entirely to the work of the Crusaders in our denomination. We have already had four or five such pages, and now comes the nicest of all, which is going to be a complete surprise to Miss Mary Noble, the secretary for the Children's World Crusade. For imagine her surprise if she ever happens to see her own dear knights, each on his nice prancing steed, plodding faithfully up Dollar Hill!

Oh, if wishes were horses! If wishes were horses! Then every single banner would have a silver dime tucked inside its folds. Why not?

For did you know that lovely big cardboard Dollar Hills are being distributed to every Baptist boy and girl who asks for one? The pattern is like this, only larger, and in colors; there are slits in every banner so that those who own Dollar Hills may begin the fascinating climb, up, up, up, putting a ten-cent piece in the banners as they go. It occurred to me what fun it would be to have a poetry contest about it, with these rules:

I. All Young Reserves and Crusaders may compete.

II. Your poem may be called, "The Crusade Up Dollar Hill," or any other title you prefer.

III. Your poem may:

(1) Urge Baptist boys and girls to fill the banners with dimes at once; or

(2) Tell how one particular boy or girl earned money to get those dimes; or

(3) Explain what the dimes in the various banners will do around the world; or

(4) In other words, you are free to write your jingle to suit yourself, provided you do your very best to interest us all in giving our dollars!

IV. Every poem (mailed on or before April 1 to Miss Applegarth, care of The Baptist, 417 South Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.) will be printed in our page.

V. A prize will be given for the best boy's poem and another prize for the best girl's poem. State your age, as well as your name and address.

VI. April 1 the latest date for mailing the poem.

VII. Any of you wishing to climb Dollar Hill with dimes may write for a colored cardboard container to Miss Mary Noble, Dept. of Missionary Education, 276 Fifth Ave., New York.

Answers to Silk Puzzles

(Given last week.)

1. Foulard. 2. Taffeta. 3. Satin. 4. Moire. 5. Grosgraine. 6. Mulle. 7. Crepe de chine. 8. Rajah. 9. China. 10. Georgette.

1. Brocade (Broke-ade). 2. Foulard (Fool-lard). 3. Sat-in. 4. Grosgraine. (Grow-grain). 5. Georgette (George-et). 6. Mess-a-line. 7. Moire (More-ray).

Young People's Work

Topic for March 18

FACTORS FOR MAKING THE WORLD BETTER:
How Can We Help?
Matt. 5: 13-16.

"Ye are the light of the world"

The church, the public school, the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. public libraries, community centers, women's clubs, men's organizations, such as the Kiwanis and Rotary—are all factors for making the world better. The big question is "How can we help? The answer is not an easy one. The larger number of young people in our Baptist churches will find an outlet for their activities, primarily through the local church. There are four things absolutely necessary if we are even to partially answer the question:

1. Adequate knowledge. Such knowledge should include information as to the history and principles of the denominations; knowledge of church polity and program. To stop with this would lead to a rather selfish life. There must be a knowledge of community conditions and of the burning needs of that part of the world in which the young person is located.

2. Adequate expression. The knowledge gained by a study of all situations involved in the above paragraph must somehow find expression either through the local church or community activities or both. By this we do not mean simply a round of activity.

3. Adequate fellowship. The great tendency in human nature to be selfish must be overcome. Racial relationships is one of the burning problems of today. This problem and others like it, cannot be solved unless there is an understanding and appreciation of human values. Simply because a man is black is not sufficient reason to dub him a "nigger" or because a man is from Italy that he should be called a "dago."

4. Adequate service. Programs of activity are so often limited to persons within the church while the big burning problems of the folk outside are never thought of. There must be a ministry to the deepest needs of human hearts wherever these needs are found whether inside the church or out. "Go ye into all the world" does not simply mean the sending of missionaries to Africa but a ministry of sympathy and understanding to the black man in the home town. The great appeal to send missionaries to China should find an answer in service to the Chinese in the homeland; an appeal to assist poverty stricken peoples in all parts of the earth must be met without lessening our interest in the poorly clad and undernourished children of the big cities and industrial areas.

MEET US AT BOSTON, JULY 4-8

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Fresno, California

Dr. J. A. White,
Chicago, Illinois.

I well remember and am sure that others remember also, of your visit to us in November. It was quite a blessing to the First Church of Fresno, because by your talk to the intermediates of B. Y. P. U., several folks have changed their views and are now working well and boosting for B. Y. P. Y.

Not long after you left, the intermediates (what were, though they belonged as seniors) disbanded. Likewise, the seniors. Then we all went together one night and organized a B. Y. P. U., senior, of the church, elected new officers, made a new constitution, and a new budget, and started things rolling properly. DeArnol McLean is now our president. We are going to have a business meeting Friday night and get some plays started. Mrs. McLean (Baron's and DeArnol's mother) is the church's new young people's director under the correlation plan. I think she is going to direct our plays for us. She is very good at that.

The Valley young people had the biggest rally that we've had in years, in Dinuba, last Friday night. We had a stereopticon lecture on "Changing Changeless Palestine."

Our B. Y. P. U. sure is working better since our reorganization; before it was practically the seniors in two groups, under two names and working against each other. Now we are all working together for lots of good things. One is Asilomar. We sure have a better Asilomar spirit this year. Last year there were about four or five of us really enthused, but this year the whole society is the limit, not a half dozen.

Jan. 12 we had a big banquet down at the church for the whole young people's department. We had some very good toasts and dandy eats, and oh! everything a lot like the Asilomar banquet, only not so many people there.

The San Joaquin Valley C. N. V.'s had a meeting before the rally at Dinuba and elected officers for our Gamma chapter and adopted a constitution for same.

The young people of our church sure think a lot of our pastor, Rev. T. B. Frizelle. I don't hardly suppose we could have gotten a pastor that suited us any better. He sure is a man to work with the young people.

We are having a very good church night program at our church now. We have had two evenings of it and they sure were splendid. Mr. Frizelle is teaching a class on Baptist beliefs and doctrines. Most of us young people are taking that one.

Well, no doubt you have something else to do besides read this bit of scribbling so I'll close, hoping you are enjoying good health, (Signed) Lena Zug.

Jacksonville, Ill., Church School of Missions

With the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds," by the nations of the world in the missionary play, "Wait a Minute," the second church school of missions conducted by the First Church of Jacksonville, Ill., closed a six-weeks session, Feb. 11, 1923. Six Sunday night sessions were held, the study hour being 6:30, and the lecture period one hour later. Three classes—adult, senior B. Y. P. U. and intermediate B. Y. P. U. completed the study of three mission books entitled, "Building With India," "India on the March," and "The Wonderland of India," taught by three teachers, Mrs. C. O. Swift, Mrs. A. B. Williamson and Prof. George Poage. During the lecture period, two stereopticon lectures were given on "The Ship of Fellowship," and "Mexico Breaking the Fetters." At the latter lecture the male quartette of the Illinois College Spanish Club rendered several selections in the Spanish language. The Baptist Board of Education motion picture, "Men of Tomorrow," met with popular approval. Dr. J. F. Langton delivered an instructive address on "Religious Education in Mohammedan Countries." An Americanization play, "Help Wanted for Miss Liberty," was ably presented by the intermediates, and the missionary pageant, "Wait a Minute," by the Senior B. Y. P. U. completed the program. The pastor, Rev. A. P. Howells, acted as principal of the school and Miss Eilzabeth Long as secretary. The school of missions seems to hold its popularity, for the attendance this year exceeded that of last year by 174. The report shows that the study class attendance reached a total of 509, while the attendance at the lecture period reached a total of 1,040, making a grand total in all departments of 1,549.

The study of India has been especially popular with the church this year, as one of the senior B. Y. P. U. members, Wayne Gard, is in his second year of teaching in Cushing High School, Rangoon, Burma. Two-thirds of the students in the Jacksonville School of Missions were young people of high school and college age.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

Father and Sons Night

This is a popular annual feast at the Social Union. It comes in February, and the boys like it, and are there in force. They fall upon the "spread" with noticeable enthusiasm, and the caterer usually has them in mind. Also President Wilcox recalled his own boyhood, and acted accordingly. He had some especially kindling jokes—also the exquisite and rollicking Harvard Male Quarette, and a speaker who had sufficient adventure in his lecture and pictures to enchain both the boys and their daddies. The speaker was a magnetic and attractive English engineer, Mr. Carveth Wells, F. R G. S. He took us upon a surveying expedition through the Malay Peninsula from Singapore to Bangkok, where he had been commissioned by the British Government to go through the Malay jungle. The lecture and the pictures were the product of six years in that environment, and we had incidents, insects, animals, and adventures galore. It was evident that no sons were more fascinated than their fathers were.

A Humorous Superfluity

Whether the re-union of the Christian sects is imminent or not, there is one thing that excites our risibles. That is the amplitude of Episcopalian condescension on the subject. We are assured, too, often that they may so far stretch the point as to "concede the validity of non-Episcopalian ordination." Really there are so many thousands of ordained ministers who decline their "validity" and smile at their "concessions," that the whole matter of valid ordination in the discussion of re-union would better be dropped. Too perceptibly does it lower the temperature of non-Episcopalian ministers on the subject. "Apostolical Succession" amuses us as much as it did Phillips Brooks; and the only "validity" that we want to know about is that which made him the servant of God and man that he was. That is so big, broad, and scriptural a brotherhood, we ought all to assume its all-inclusive reality.

Yet here is Dr. Samuel McComb, speaking for the Episcopalian concessionists, solemnly asserting that "With the recognition, formally and officially pronounced, of the validity of non-Episcopalian ordination, the most serious obstacles to re-union will be swept out of the way!" Put yourself in our place, dear doctor, and you would be the first one to put the question in this form: "All in favor of conceding the validity of Episcopalian ordination will say 'I'—the ayes have it!"

Mrs. Donald McKay

The announcement of the passing on of Mrs. Mary Cressey McKay, the widow of Donald McKay, the famous clipper shipbuilder of East Boston, will be of interest to many. Mrs. McKay was the daughter of Deacon Litchfield of the East Boston Baptist church. In the old days that district was the home of many prosperous Protestant families, and the churches were strong in leading ministers and laymen. About forty years ago, after her husband's death, she came to live in Arlington, and was a member of the First Church there. Latterly she lived with her daughter, Mrs. Edward P. Bliss of Lexington, where she died, February 6, in her ninety-second year.

Mrs. McKay was a type of the best nineteenth century womanhood. Her accomplishments were varied and substantial, and her manner faultless. She was a radiant and competent gentlewoman. Her sensitive and brilliant temperament made her out-looking and out-speaking, and her Christian principles and mental interests kept her in responsive touch with the Kingdom and all of its causes, and greatly engulfed her rare spiritual quality. She was singularly broadminded, hospitable to all religious reality, and thus inclusive in her charity. Always she seemed to live within the truth-circle of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. The memory of such a radiant and chastened soul is precious in church and family, far beyond any mere estimate in words

"Journalism"

The reportorial end of our Boston journalism is alike the despair of editors and readers. Now and then it is the despair of ministers, when some loose and reckless reporter makes a day's sensation, and gets his money, by misreporting what the minister says, or by putting words into his mouth that sound like the frothings of a fool. There seems to be no redress. A minister can only limp after a racing lie in despair of overtaking it. How strange it is that some people who glibly talk about the "lying newspapers" will swallow their stuff without qualification. Also singular it is that newspapers seem to delight in giving the impression that Protestant ministers are heretical, discordant, and reckless. How is it that the Roman Catholic priesthood is so secure and is continuously kept so sacrosanct in the newspapers? Always that is an interesting question.

Local Happenings.

Dr. Curtis Lee Laws, your genial editorial contemporary, has been visiting us. After giving him one of our specimen Sundays for his opening services with the First Church, Brookline, we varied the program with an incipient blizzard on Monday night. This winter the weather is surely "out of hand," and the minister steadily on his diet of weather. expects visitors smilingly to fall into line. Dr. Laws does it.

Abraham Lincoln's birthday grows annually greater as Lincoln does. This year the ministers celebrated it. Dr. W. Quay Rosselle was the speaker. His address was such as to put us all into the Lincoln atmosphere Dr. Rosselle has the humor, the practicability, the logic, the sympathy, the power of expression, that make him an admirable interpreter of Lincoln and delineator of his character. A pair of "old-timers" who had seen and heard Lincoln also contributed in brief speeches to the birthday party.

"Labor and Capital" was the subject on the twelfth. It seemed like a home thrust of Lincoln's massive human philosophy. Charles Krowl was the speaker. He having been a laborer, and an employer of labor could hold the jug level between both sides. And he did. Rarely have we had a speaker who kept pelting the golden center of things as he did. Natural it was that he should arrive in his conclusion at the Golden Rule as the one basis of agreement. How blind we are in all our disputes to the gospel plan of cooperation

Immortality

Pres. George E. Horr, of Newton Seminary, has been appointed by the Harvard Corporation to deliver the Ingersoll lecture on immortality. The lecture comes April 3, and by provision of the foundation is always published in book form by the University Press. Previous lecturers have been Professors William James, Josiah Royce, William Osler, Charles R. Brown, Kirsopp Lake, W. W. Fenn, and Dr. C. F. Dole. It is the first time that the appointment has come to a Baptist. The lecture will be awaited with appreciative anticipation.

Melrose

The story of the First Church, Melrose, under Dr. P. H. McDowell's pastorate, is one of continuous achievement. On every side has the work been broadened and intensified. At the outset, every organization was, by a new by-law, made a functional part of the church, and by a working plan, all separated and together aimed at building up the Body of Christ. The tabulated results, speaking in figures, show that the church and Sunday school membership is greater by over 200, and the giving has much more than doubled. The great expansion is in the direction of developing the youth in the parish, educationally and spiritually Dr. McDowell believes in leading and winning childhood and youth for the kingdom, and devotes himself to that endeavor with gratifying success.

A Pleasant Eruption

A delightful outburst of pastoral sunshine has broken out in spots that is in danger of becoming general. In Dudley Street church it has lifted Pastor Brooks' salary $1,000 higher; in West Somerville it has expanded Pastor Swaffield's figure $500; in Winchester, Pastor Walcott is in like felicity; in First Medford, Pastor Neily and his house has been weighted with gold and kindred delights. What wonder that there is doubt in many a parsonage whereunto this thing will grow.

Let Us Put It on Its Feet

By Walter J. Sparks

THERE is no doubt about the value of the student volunteer movement, but to deduce from this that a college is the only place from which God calls men for the ministry or for missionary work would be a most disastrous blunder. God's way of calling men has not changed. Sometimes as of old he sets apart the ardent disciple of a great scholar or some wonderful and spiritual physician but still more often he comes to the man at the plough, the humble fisherman or the business man sitting at his desk.

While we have been making frantic efforts to turn college men to the ministry, all over the land there have been just such men as Jesus called, feeling their responsibility, yearning for a chance. They know they have heard God's call too late in life to take a course of study spread over many years. Well, do they need it? Already they possess a knowledge of men and of practical things which some college men can never get. Is this equipment of no value? Add to it a thorough but reasonably short course covering essential training and watch the result.

What Is Education?

What is education? These men may never sound the depths of philosophy. To them the grace and beauty of the dead languages may forever remain a sealed book; but to mechanics, to industry, to modern business methods they are no strangers. They may have to be taught theories of sociology, but of actual throbbing human life they have learned by hard experience. As a business man recently said, "They are leaders chosen from the herd."

Because their practical experience among men has taught them that nothing less than the gospel of repentance has power to save mankind, these men are as old-fashioned in their religion as the apostles. They have minds capable of vigorous thinking but these minds need training. They have somewhat of the fire and passion of the old prophets but this needs directing.

In all parts of our country are such men as these and not hundreds but thousands. Many are trying to educate themselves. Some will give up. Others with a very superficial training or with none at all will find their way into the ministry. How are we going to provide adequate training for this great and scattered host whose help we so badly need in our sore fight against sin? This host of eager men, so willing to obey the call of God and make any sacrifice necessary for the privilege of preaching the gospel?

The Northern Seminary is gathering just such men together and giving them adequate training. So many are coming that the work of the seminary has almost assumed the importance of a new movement.

What becomes of these men after they are trained? The answer to this question reveals the value and importance of the movement. It is this:

They go back to the neglected places and they open up the springs. Our rural and our village churches have been dying for lack of efficient pastors. Our city churches weaken daily because they have not been fed. The springs are stopping up.

Last year the Northern Seminary had nineteen graduates. Some of these became successful pastors of small churches which had been considered beyond help.

In addition to the seminary-collegiate course intended for practical men who have not had a college education the seminary provides a regular theological training for college graduates. These are coming in increasing numbers and the mingling of the two classes is proving a source of strength to both.

Detroit Doings

By Albert H. Finn

Detroit has not gone Catholic although fully half of its peoples are Catholic in affiliation or leanings. It does observe Lent by a campaign of evangelism that includes the majority of the Protestant churches, under the general direction of the Council of Churches. While the Baptists do not claim to be Protestants, having never been within the confines of the Roman church and therefore did not join in the "going out"—the protestations against the apostasy in the Catholic church, yet we are quite willing to join in a great city-wide endeavor to win the lost. Evangelism is really one of our distinctive principles—we stand for a regenerate church membership. It is quite appropriate, therefore, that this year's campaign should have been inaugurated by a foremost Baptist—Dr. W. W. Bustard of Cleveland, Ohio, in Woodward Avenue Baptist Church on Sunday, Feb. 18. Following Dr. Bustard comes Dr. Floyd Tomkins, leading Episcopal rector of Philadelphia. Beginning March 5, Dr. John McNeil, the well known Presbyterian divine of New York, comes for a week, concluding with Dr. M. S. Rice, the popular pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church of Detroit. Noon-day meetings are held in the Garrick Theater building, evening meetings in down-town churches, to conclude with four great theater and many church meetings from twelve to three on Good Friday. It is truly remarkable, the extent to which stores, offices and factories close during these hours on Good Friday. This plan is not a new thing for Detroit. Each new year shows a distinct advance in the fine spirit of cooperation and spiritual devotion.

Dr. Agar's recent visit was highly appreciated by the Detroit Baptist churches. Specific visits were made to the Northwestern (Hudson Avenue), Temple, Highland Park churches, with a dinner with the official boards of the Royal Oak Church. The mass conferences were held in the Woodward Avenue Church. These were well attended, and the speaker held the keen interest of his audiences throughout the conferences. I am confident that far-reaching results will follow in all our English white churches. Dr. Agar also spoke to a great mass meeting at the Second Church, Negro, on Friday evening. Our Negro brethren were eager to learn better methods of church administration and finance. Dr. Agar approaches all these problems from the spiritual standpoint. The church in all its lines of work is spiritual, but that is no reason why it should not perform its tasks in a sane, common-sense manner, using the same laws of physchology that modern business is using so effectively. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to the General Promotion Board for Dr. Agar's splendid services.

Detroit has lost a great constructive factor in righteousness in the sudden death, Feb. 14, of Bishop Charles D. Williams of the Protestant Episcopal communion. He was a broad-visioned, visible Christian statesman and the churches under his charge were rapidly developing into that catholicity of spirit and fellowship that their aggressive leader exemplified. He had a nation-wide and even international reputation for practical Christianity, which some called Christian socialism. He certainly was a progressive spirit and unafraid of the reactionary influences in the great church of which he was a member and bishop.

Another great migration of Negroes from the Southland is already at its flow. Detroit, which received a greater percentage of increase than any northern city four years ago, is bidding for these able-bodied men to come and take places in its great industrial institutions at wages that the Negroes of the South look upon as almost fabulous. In addition, there are no Jim Crow cars in the North, there is no discrimination among children of school age, every man and woman can vote without hindrance, there is an air of liberty and an opportunity for advancement that has a strong appeal. To us in the North, the influx of any race or nationality brings social and evangelizing problems of serious portent. How to house these peoples is a most serious matter, with Detroit nearly two years behind in its normal housing. How to assimilate these great masses into the complex environment of a great city out of the almost primitive conditions from which they came, is a staggering problem. Inasmuch as these southern Negroes are very largely Baptist—some say that 85 per cent of the church going elements are Baptist—the responsibility of the Detroit Baptist Union in the situation is one that challenges the imagination. Detroit is one of the very few northern cities of the first class that has not suffered from a race riot. As to the future, we cannot say, but the officers of the Detroit Baptist Union are alive to the tremendous problem that is already straining our every resource. God alone knows how this larger task can be adequately handled. Social organizations in Detroit recognize that the Baptists alone are doing a successful work among these people. Our trust is in God as we go forward. Detroit already has over forty Negro Baptist churches.

Polish Church Dedicated

Sunday, Feb. 18, the east-side Polish church was dedicated. The building is located at the corner of Dubois and Harper avenues and was built for a bank, a substantial building of stone and steel. It has been altered for church purposes, affording a pleasing auditorium, Sunday-school rooms, residence for the pastor and another suite for a janitor. It is in the midst of a large Polish community and very near a great Polish Catholic church. The building was crowded. Rev. M. S. Lessik, of Toledo, preached in the morning. The dedicatory services were held at 3 p. m., President Power, of the Detroit Baptist Union, presiding. Rev. A. S. Morze, the resident pastor, read the Scripture and offered the dedicatory prayer. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, of New York, Dr. H. C. Gleiss, Rev. Jos. Rzepecki, pastor of the First Polish Baptist Church, and others addressed the audience that crowded the seating and standing room. The choirs of the Birkett Memorial and First Polish churches rendered choir selections, and Mrs. B. T.

Leonard sang the "Holy City." A profound impression was made on the community. A church has not as yet been organized, although there is already a splendid constituency and an organization will follow very soon.

Dr. John Y. Aitchison, general director of the General Board of Promotion, spent Sunday and Monday, Feb. 18-19, with the Detroit Baptist churches. Sunday morning he preached at the First Church and at the Temple Church in the evening. Monday morning he addressed the Baptist Ministers' Conference, at the Woodward Avenue Church. At 2 o'clock, he met with our faithful women at the First Church and at 8 o'clock, in company with others, gave a heart-to-heart talk to a mass meeting in the First Church of representatives from the churches in the metropolitan area. The New World Movement was the general theme throughout the two days. Sunday, all the churches were visited by minute men, outlining the plan to bring the giving of the Detroit churches up to par. Dr. Aitchison was greatly cheered by what he saw and heard and we in turn were immensely heartened by the reports which he brought from the states he had recently visited. "On the March" is gripping our people as nothing else ever has. As Dr. Gleiss rehearsed something that had been accomplished in Detroit and Michigan, he assured Dr. Aitchison that he was sure that the denomination will have raised the $100,000,000, even though the full amount has not flowed through the treasury of the General Promotion Board.

"On the March"

"On the March" is altogether too modest in its claims of accomplishments. I quote from the February issue of Detroit Baptist Union Messenger: "Do you realize that more than twenty churches (including nine colored churches) were aided into new places of worship? Do you know that the property held by the Detroit Baptist Union has increased from $36,500 in 1916 to nearly one million in 1923? This does not include properties which have been deeded to such churches as have come into position to take title to their properties. Look at these figures:

| | |
|---|---|
| Receipts from churches in 1919 | $10,497.19 |
| Receipts from churches in 1920 | 18,719.50 |
| Receipts from General Board of Promotion from same sources in 1921 ..... | 54,469.51 |
| From General Board of Promotion in 1922 ..... | 70,339.35 |

"These figures do not take into account any of the funds raised for new churches, payments of debts or improvements. Do these figures show growth or do they look like failure?

"If we would get a fuller view of the tremendous progress made let us take the total receipts of the treasurer of the Detroit Baptist Union for a few years. These figures deal only with the money handled by the treasurer:

| | |
|---|---|
| "Total receipts reported—1916 .....$ | 8,366.21 |
| Total receipts reported—1919 | 43,873.63 |
| Total receipts reported—1920 | 205,622.13 |
| Total receipts reported—1921 | 238,696.33 |
| Total receipts reported—1922 | 262,052.14 |
| From May 1 to Dec. 31, 1922 | 222,462.85 |

"Of course it must be remembered that a portion of this money was borrowed on mortgages. Nevertheless, it marks a distinct progress and each separate church property is heroically bearing its own burden and in a few years all of these mortgages will have been retired."

In other words, the figures of the General Promotion Board show $70,339.35 contributed to the work in Detroit in 1922, while the treasurer of the Detroit Baptist Union shows $262,052.14 received from all sources. These figures do not attempt to cover current and individual expenses of the local churches. It is this contrast that warrants Dr. Gleiss in saying we Baptists will have raised $100,000,000 in the five-year period because other cities and other states have also been progressive in kingdom building in a manner and in a volume that the receipts of the General Board of Promotion do not reveal.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

CALAIS SECOND: This strong church is moving steadily forward under the leadership of Pastor Wallace S. Boardman, who has the constant assistance of Mrs. Boardman, an earnest and energetic body of women and a force of strong laymen. At the annual meeting all bills were reported paid. The Women's Association had paid $200 on an obligation of long standing, and a good contribution had been made to the New World Movement. The Sunday school is now using the Keystone lessons. The Christian Endeavor Society held forty-five meetings during the year with an average attendance of forty-nine. A World Wide Guild has been organized with Mrs. J. H. Paul as leader.

MILLINOCKET: For several months repairs and new construction have been in process on the church building. Rev. Raymond W. Cooper, pastor, has had heart and hand full of this enterprise. The size of the audience room has been enlarged, both to afford additional Sunday-school facilities, and to accommodate the audience that gathers on Sunday evenings. A large room for social purposes in the basement will be divided by rolling partitions so as to furnish twelve class rooms. About $22,000 has been spent in these improvements. This has been provided for by subscriptions covering a period of three years. The rededication services occurred Feb. 11-12. Pastor Cooper brought a pastoral message as to the meaning of the work that had been done. In the evening Secretary Mower brought the greetings of the state and spoke of the significance of a rededicated church building. Dr. Whittemore spoke of a Rededicated Church Membership. The service closed with the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. On Monday, Sunday-school Director Henderson met the Sunday-school officers and teachers at a special banquet. In the evening former Pastors Chas. E. Young and A. C. Berrie were present and brought greetings. The final address was by President Arthur J. Roberts, of Colby College, who spoke upon Christian Education.

COLBY COLLEGE: Under the direction of Professor Newman a large amount of deputation work is being done by the students. From ten to fifteen of these students are out aiding pastors, Sunday schools, or young people's societies, in evangelistic services every Sunday.

HIGGINS INSTITUTE: The mid-winter meeting of the trustees of Higgins Institute occurred in Bangor, Feb. 10. The school is in a prosperous condition, with a larger number of students than ever before and a faithful and able faculty that is looking well to the standards, both educational and Christian. Dr. Ramsdell's work in the courses in the Bible is greatly appreciated.

FORT FAIRFIELD CHURCH, under the lead of Rev. G. J. Gilbert, has had a successful year despite the financial depression that has been over the whole county. Two young people were recently baptized. At the annual meeting all bills were reported paid with a small balance in the treasury. The Sunday school is increasing and is already handicapped for room. A new club for Missions indicates sustained and increasing interest in the world work.

IN SPITE OF COLD AND SNOW the advance work of the pastor-evangelists, missionaries, and evangelists of the state convention has been significant and successful. Missionary Davis with Pastor Hunt has had old-fashioned revival work in the smaller fields of Waldo County. Pastor-evangelist Beatty has closed a series of meetings with Pastor Hartley at the Houlton Free Baptist church with greatly quickened interest and resultant baptisms. Pastor-evangelist Hamlen has been nursing some neglected fields that must not be abandoned. Evangelist Taylor and his daughter Ruth have had significant meetings with the federated church in Garland and both branches of the church are receiving new members by baptism. The evangelists are now at Bluehill with Pastor Robison. Pastor-evangelist Evans, in aid to Rev. B. H. Tilton at Kennebunk, has seen a great awakening of the people and many conversions. He begins work with Pastor Bishop at Brunswick immediately. Many pastors, either singly or together, are giving the service of a real evangelism and with excellent results.

THE MILLINOCKET CHURCH on Feb. 11 rededicated its new house of worship. The cost of the building is covered by three-year pledges of which one-third has already been paid. Rev. I. B. Mower and Rev. E. C. Whittemore spoke at the services, and the president of Colby College gave an address on the value of the Bible in education.

RHODE ISLAND

EAST PROVIDENCE: Second Church recently elected six new deacons, making twelve in all. The pastor and wife gave a dinner to the deacons and their wives.

Jan. 16. Rev. A. W. Cleaves of the First Church, Providence, gave an address on "The Deacon and His Work." The church membership has been divided into groups with a deacon at the head of each group. Rev. F. L. Cleveland has just completed the second year of his ministry with the church and during this time 110 have been received into membership.

WOONSOCKET, FIRST: Dr. Frank Rector, of the First Church, Pawtucket, conducted a series of evening meetings during the week of Jan. 14. At the close of the evening service on Jan. 21 a purse of $65 was presented to Dr. Rector in the name of the parish by Mr. W. S. Preston, chairman of the board of deacons, as an expression of appreciation for his services.

EAST PROVIDENCE: The annual meeting and roll-call of First Church took place Thursday evening, Jan. 4. A number gathered for supper at 7 p. m. Reports showed the church in a prosperous condition, and the workers enthusiastic for future service. Forty-two members have been received into the church during the year. The work of the new social rooms and gymnasium is already in progress and a new oil-heating plant is being installed.

EAST GREENWICH: A new Estey pipe organ has been installed at the church, the gift of the ladies' society. The approximate cost was $5,000.

PROVIDENCE: The Plainfield Street Church is conducting a series of Chautauqua programs with supper and social hour, devotional period, classes and special features. The classes are devoted to the study of the current mission study book.

PROVIDENCE, UNITED: Annual meeting and roll-call was observed Jan. 18 with 150 present. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid and a good balance in the treasury. Following the business session an informal reception was given to Rev. and Mrs. H. R. Collins who have just come to the church. Mr. Collins was made the recipient of a sum of money and a bouquet of flowers was presented to Mrs. Collins.

PROVIDENCE, MECHANTICUT PARK: Rev. W. W. Hackett returns from West Wardsboro, Va. for a second pastorate in Rhode Island. The congregation of Mechanticut Park has called him. Mr. Hackett is the father of the energetic young minister at the Elmwood Avenue Church, Providence.

CUMBERLAND HILL: The faithful few who have held the fort at Cumberland Hill for years have been encouraged by re-enforcements. Rev. Maurice Dunbar of Pleasant View Church is preaching to congregations four and five times their former size. Colporter Watt spent a week visiting the homes of the parish and holding religious converse with the people. A woman's society and Sunday-school will soon be organized. With these activities under way the state convention has agreed to bear half the expense of renovating the church property which is in a sad state of dilapidation.

ARLINGTON: Rev. A. E. Kenyon, formerly minister of Trinity Church Arlington, Mass., is serving the Arlington, Rhode Island, Church in a three-month's engagement. The members are hoping that he will decide to enter into a permanent arrangement with the church before the present engagement terminates.

PROVIDENCE, CENTRAL: A school of missions is being held at Central Church on Sunday evenings. After a brief devotional service there follows a study period using the current mission study books. The classes then return to the assembly rooms where Dr. Frank L. Wilkins conducts a forum on Babson's latest book, "New Tasks for Old Churches."

CONNECTICUT

THE WORK IN FIRST CHURCH, PUTnam, is moving along most encouragingly under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. S. Stoddard. All services are well attended. Baptisms are frequent. The interior of the church has been redecorated. The enlarged calendar features many activities. The pastor is in demand as a speaker in neighboring churches.

REV. F. F. FOSHAY, recently of Fairfield, Maine, assumed the pastorate of First Church, Willimantic, Jan. 7. The annual meeting and roll-call was held Feb. 15. Rev. E. E. Gates, pastor-at-large, was the speaker. The people are rallying whole-heartedly to the new pastor's leadership. The new pastor at Willimantic is a brother to Rev. M. R. Foshay, pastor of the First Church, New Haven.

REV. HERBERT JUDSON WHITE, pastor of First Church, Hartford, was the speaker at the Newton day of prayer for colleges and religious institutions. He was the preacher at the afternoon session.

THE MEN OF First and South churches, Hartford, held a men's "get-together" on Lincoln's birthday in the parlors of First Church. There was a large attendance. F. S. Thompson presided and welcomed the men from South Church. C. A. Gilbert made a fitting response for the men of South Church. An interesting program consisting of music, readings and addresses was carried out. Dr. White gave an address on "Honest Abe."

DR. J. N. LACKEY, who has been seriously ill, is now well on the road to complete recovery. He and Dr. White with their respective committees are tireless in their efforts carrying forward the extra work, consequent upon the merger of First and South churches. George E. Merrill, architect-secretary of the A. B. H. Society, has been retained as consulting architect.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Danbury, has expressed its appreciation of the pastor's leadership by making a substantial increase in his salary. Mr. Gilbert is now in his sixth year as pastor. He is chairman of the associational board of promotion and thus a member of the state board.

THE WOMEN OF THE HARTFORD ASSOCIATION held their continuation campaign rally in the Parish House of the Center Congregational Church, Hartford, on Tuesday, Feb. 13. Mrs. E. R. Hitchcock, first vice-president, presided. The speakers were Mrs. J. H. Morsehead, state campaign director; Mrs. F. P. Campbell, Boston; Miss Margaret Suman of the Philippine Islands; Miss Sigrid Johnson, India, and Miss Shivers.

FIRST CHURCH, Bridgeport: Rev. Charles A. Decker, formerly of Pittsburgh, Pa., began his pastorate Jan. 7. In the midst of the service two unusual incidents occurred: Dr. Brown of the Olivet Congregational Church, representing the Pastors' Association of the city, appeared and presented the greetings of the association to the congregation. He had just left the building when two laymen of the United Congregational Church came in and read a resolution that had been passed at their church, signed by themselves and Pastor Day. Mr. Decker has been appointed

Want Ads

Free Trip to Europe for Baptist Convention at Stockholm will be given an organizer of a party of five. Price $750 to $1,300. No extras. Established 1900. Babcocks Tours, 13 Halsey St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

IT IS A BURNING SHAME

that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department

Mutual Insurance Corporation furnishes protection AT COST

FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM

No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock company.

Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured. No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager, 1509 Insurance Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

5,000 CHRISTIAN WORKERS WANTED

to sell Bibles, Testaments, good booklets and handsome velvet Scripture Mottoes. Good commission. Send for free catalogue and price list.

GEORGE W. NOBLE, Publisher
Dept. "K." Monon Building, Chicago, Ill.

AUNT MARY'S CHOCOLATES

1½ lbs. only $1.00

We send parcel post to any part of the United States, these

Superb Hand Dipped Chocolates

Equal or better than chocolates sold for $1.50 a pound.

A pleasing variety of centers: nuts, fruits, nougats, caramels, velvety creams or all peppermints if desired.

Made fresh daily. Sent direct to you. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Address

Aunt Mary's Chocolate Co.
310 West Superior St. CHICAGO, ILL.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

CHURCH ARCHITECT
Wilson B. Parker 620 State Life INDIANAPOLIS
Send for Illustrated booklet

director of the Christian Union. One feature of the work opening up is the Every Man's Bible Class, organized Dec. 15, with twenty-five members. It meets at 9:30 on Sunday morning. Feb. 5 a supper was served for seventy-eight men. The membership of the class has reached 100. The speaker at the supper was Rev. T. Johnson Bolger, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Elmira, N. Y. The class is divided into two armies, red and blue, with the regular staff of officers from generals to lieutenants. The teacher of the class is Mr. W. N. Norcutt, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and a member of the First M. E. Church, and the president of the men's brotherhood of that church. The M. E. Church brotherhood and the Every Man's Bible Class of the First Baptist Church are engaged in a wholesome competition for membership.

AT FIRST CHURCH, Southington, Rev. G. C. Laudenslager, pastor, a school of missions and an institute in trained leadership opened Feb. 15. The pastor was assisted by Rev. W. T. Thayer, director of religious education and Rev. H. B. Sloat, director of promotion.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE DORCHESTER TEMPLE, Boston, closed its year without debt. Over $11,000 was contributed for benevolences, not including several hundred dollars raised by the Bible school and other organizations of the church. The church expenses were over $10,000, all raised by voluntary offerings. Forty were baptized during the year, nineteen received by letter and four by experience. The church membership went over the 1,000 mark. There are over 1,100 in the Bible school; two troops of Boy Scouts and a Girl Scout troup; four C. E. societies. The church is sometimes called the young people's church. On a recent Sunday when the pastor, Rev. Otis W. Foye, was sick the morning service was carried on by a high "Y" secretary, and four high school boys from the church. The evening service was conducted by two college students of the church who are preparing for missionary service. The pastor's nineteen-year-old son, a medical student, preached the sermon. There are two young ladies from the church preparing as nurses for the foreign field, two students in medical college preparing for medical missions, one young man preparing for the ministry, and two young ladies in college taking the religious education courses. The pastor recently baptized a father, mother, and two grown sons. On Feb. 25, Mr. Ernest Gellatly and Mr. L. C. Voke begin a three weeks' evangelistic campaign. The church has been getting ready for these meetings, holding three or more cottage and group prayer meetings each week.

THE WORK OF Dudley Street Church, Rev. Arthur T. Brooks, pastor, known all over New England as the "singing church", continues to gain impetus as it enters the one-hundred and second year of its service. The annual meeting, recently held, disclosed the fact that the year had been the greatest in all departments in the history of the church. For the first time in its history Dudley Street leads New England Baptist churches in net increase in membership and is second in accessions by baptism. In the two years of Pastor Brooks' service the church has received 309 new members and has raised over $100,000 for all purposes in cash. No outside aid of any kind has been used or special evangelistic services held. The church membership is now 1,512, over 1,100 being resident members. At the annual meeting Pastor Brooks' salary was increased to seven thousand dollars. The pastor and Mrs. Brooks have just returned from their mid-winter vacation of three weeks in Florida.

The End of Financial Campaigns

Missionary Education will ultimately make financial campaigns unnecessary

Did You Know—

That last year we had 5,567 Mission Study Classes, an increase of twenty-five per cent in one year?

That 3,253 other groups used the Mission Study books?

That 332 churches conducted Church Schools of Missions, an increase of sixty-nine per cent?

Do you know what a Church School of Missions is? It would be worth-while to find out.

That the Reading Contests increased fifty-three per cent?

That there is a plan of missionary education adapted to every group in every department, in every kind of a Baptist church?

That we have secured fascinating books on Missions for people of every age, and mission stories for all the children?

That you can get all kinds of material for mission study, missionary address, missionary meetings, and even costumes,—real costumes from the Orient—for missionary pageants, by addressing

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

276 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY

Help the Department of Missionary Education Make Financial Campaigns Unnecessary

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention

UNSELFISH GIVING FOR THE world-wide work of Christ and a thoroughgoing program for the education of youth are the outstanding objectives of First church, Melrose, Dr. Philetus H. McDowell, pastor. A comparative study of the reports presented at the annual meetings on Jan. 18, 1915, and Jan. 21, 1923, reveals that the church has increased its gifts to benevolences from 1 to 4 as compared to current expenditures in 1915 to approximately dollar for dollar in 1923 when $12,848.64 was raised for current expenses and $11,929.80 for missions. In 1915 the Sunday school became the church school and a board of religious education began to direct and unify the work of Christian instruction and training. Another step in the program of enlargement came in the electing of a pastor's secretary and later in the increase of paid workers by the appointment of a pastor's assistant. In the success of the church vacation school it has been demonstrated that money put into trained workers is one of the best investments a church can make. The next constructive movement came with the year 1922 when the four departments of the church were organized; the juniors, the intermediates, the seniors, the young people of the church. Emphasis is placed on week-day religious instruction and it is felt that the day is at hand for home, church and public school to unite for constructive work in this direction.

CHARLOTTE M. SPRAGUE BARNES, wife of the late Rev. Joshua Barnes, died Feb. 18 at Sheldonville. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. Chester Hyde. This good woman and her faithful husband served the churches for many years and under his ministry he himself baptized more than 700 persons and a number of men entered the ministry through his influence. Mrs. Barnes will be buried beside her husband at Oak Point, New Brunswick, where Mr. Barnes spent the last six years of his life.

NEW JERSEY

MT. PLEASANT CHURCH, NEWARK, Rev. W. Powell, pastor: Owing to the coal situation, Mt. Pleasant is experimenting this winter. The church is open for all services on Sunday, but Tuesday is the only day through the week when it is open. Tuesday afternoons the Women's Guild meetings and missionary meetings are held; from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. a church supper is served. Following this, committee meetings, meetings of deacons or trustees. From eight to nine p. m. the regular devotional service, prayer meeting or some special service. The hour from nine to ten is devoted to social affairs. This plan is meeting with success, and many favorable comments are received regarding its being carried on indefinitely. Mrs. A. B. Strickland recently gave her monologue, "Italiana Redeemed."

RELIGIOUS BOOK WEEK

March 4-10

Place of Jesus in the Life of Today
HENRY KINGMAN 1.25
A reappraisal of Jesus for the men and the women of this generation.

Faiths of Mankind
EDMUND D. SOPER 1.15
A complete elementary handbook on comparative religion—human, vivid, and readable.

Manhood of the Master
HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK 1.15
Vividly sets forth the personal qualities of the Master. Brilliantly written.

Modern Problems as Jesus Saw Them
HERMAN HARREL HORNE 1.15
Deals with the qualities of character which Jesus showed and which must be developed in the individual for the salvation of the social order.

Meaning of Faith
HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK 1.35

Meaning of Prayer
HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK 1.15

Meaning of Service
HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK 1.25
Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick has won renown and gratitude as the author of these books. Popular theology, ethics and psychology—the deepest things of life are presented convincingly, suffused with a true religious atmosphere.
The THREE books uniformly bound in cloth, with morocco ridge, gold stamped, gilt top, with silk marker, encased in an attractive carton, 5.00 postage paid.

Facing the Crisis
SHERWOOD EDDY Paper Edition, .50
Dr. Eddy has poured out the very soul of the message which he conceives to be the Gospel of Christ for our age.

Social Principles of Jesus
WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH 1.15
Original and vivid studies of the social principles enunciated by Jesus.

Teaching of Jesus and His Apostles
EDWARD I. BOSWORTH 1.40
The great subjects involved in the teachings of Christ and His apostles. Thirty lessons.

Comrades in the Great Cause
OZORA S. DAVIS 1.15
This study of St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians is "especially timely now, when Christian comradeship means more than ever before in practical living."

Under the Highest Leadership
JOHN DOUGLAS ADAM 1.15
A book to make you feel the inspiration of close comradeship with Christ.

Thirty Studies About Jesus
EDWARD I. BOSWORTH .95
Dr. Bosworth throws new light on the meaning of life and its possibilities.

Meeting the Master
OZORA S. DAVIS 1.15
Our Lord's conversations with individuals, showing various traits in His character.

At your bookstore or from us

ASSOCIATION PRESS
Pub. Dept. Inter. Comm. Y. M. C. A.
347 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK

BOOKS WITH PURPOSE AP

Opportunity Week at Newark

The week beginning Jan. 28 the churches of Newark and vicinity had the privilege of the largest institute for Christian workers they have ever had. This was held at First Peddie Memorial Church, Dr. M. Joseph Twomey, pastor. The registration of nearly 500 workers taking one or more courses and the granting of sixty-three certificates for work done, indicate that the week of opportunity for preparation for better service was appreciated. The average daily attendance was 227. Twenty-four different courses were presented, two of them being given for the first time in an institute. These were the courses on church architecture by Architect-Secretary Merrill of the Home Mission Society and that on religious publicity by Rev. C. A. McAlpine. Appreciation to those who helped to make the work a success was voiced at the last evening session and embodied in resolutions adopted.

Without the help rendered by the instructors furnished by the Publication Society the institute would have been an impossibility. Not many years ago the mission of a state convention was not considered to be related to the problem of religious education. Today one of the chief interests of a state convention is its educational work.

Two libraries were given as prizes; one for the highest percentage of pre-registrations and the other for the highest percentage of attendance in classes. Fairmount Church of Newark was awarded the first and Grace Church of Belleville the second. A prize was also given for the best poster announcing the institute, made by local church or Sunday-school representative. This was won by Miss Marion Brewer of the Emmanuel Church, Newark.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

PASTOR C. G. LANGFORD and the Calvary Church, Taylor, are rejoicing in the result of two weeks of special meetings held in January by Rev. Margaret Joshua. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, the pastor baptized twenty-seven; others are awaiting the ordinance.

REV. C. O. FULLER has resigned the pastorate of the church at Parsons and accepted a call to Sykesville, where he will begin his work April 15.

STATE SUPERINTENDENT of Evangelism Arthur B. Strickland recently held a two weeks' meeting in Tunkhannock. There were forty conversions.

THE GLEN RUN CHURCH at Atglen devoted the evening service on Feb. 4 to the recognition of pupils of the Sunday school who made a record of 100 per cent attendance in 1922. There were fourteen of these, 15 per cent of the total enrolment. Brother Nelson K. Crossman made an appropriate address. The presentation of the rewards was made by the pastor, Rev. J. Evans Balerson.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

PASTOR W. A. WISSINGER closed his work March 1 at Olive Branch after three years' service. During this period a number of accessions have been made to the church and the contributions for current expenses and benevolences have reached new high levels. Rev. Wissinger will be available for supply work for an indefinite period. Any church desiring his service may address him at Greensburg, Pa.

WEST VIRGINIA

WITH THE BEGINNING OF Rev. Clarence W. Kemper's pastorate, at the Baptist Temple, Charleston, Jan. 1, the church undertook to underwrite a generous unified current expense budget of $500 per week. More than $420 per week was promptly subscribed with additional loose plate offerings running at $60 per week and pledges still coming in. Dr. Agar had been with the church in its preliminary work. In the six weeks since the beginning of the present pastorate twenty-seven new members have come and baptisms are frequent. Pastors Kemper and Ostergren are happy with the outlook and expect to come to Easter with great ingathering. The worship of the church is largely attended and the church school attendance is running at the 600 mark. The church is busy with plans to begin the new building just as soon as the weather will permit.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

Cleveland

ON JAN. 20, Rev. F. E. Taylor spoke to a large company gathered under the auspices of the Social Union, on the subject "An American in Czecho-Slovakia."

DR. J. Y. AITCHISON addressed a group of leading business men Feb. 16 at the Union Club at the noon hour, held a conference with the pastors in the afternoon and spoke at the Euclid Avenue Church evening prayer service. Dr. Aitchison's resume of what has been accomplished during the period of the New World Movement, is a convincing story.

THE EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE of the Cleveland Association was fortunate in securing the services of Rev. A. H. Gage, to lead in the discussion of Sunday School Visitation Day, Sunday, Feb. 11. Representatives from all of the Baptist schools of the city visited the school of the Church of the Master to observe and learn. At the afternoon conference, these vistors, under the leadership of Dr. Gage, studied the Sunday school and the value of the work which it is doing, criticising where criticism seemed necessary and eulogizing where eulogy seemed warranted. Dr. Gage also addressed the morning congregation on "The Evangelism of Youth."

CEDAR AVENUE CHURCH, which has been worshiping in a frame building, accommodating 300 people has bought a splendid auditorium, with modern Sunday-school equipment, from the Bolton Avenue Presbyterian congregation. This will give the congregation now under the able leadership of Rev. J. C. McCaulay, an up-to-date working place in a semi-down-town district. The Cedar Avenue property has in turn been purchased by the East Mt. Zion Baptist Church, a Negro congregation. This will be a great forward step for that congregation. The pastor, Rev. B. K. Smith, is leading his people into standards of worship and service that not many of our churches have as yet obtained. The association has now commenced a temporary building for the new congregation at West Park. The Baptist constituency in this location is small but the future is bright, in that there will be during the present year a great influx of people and a splendid opportunity to build up a Sunday school as a foundation of a future church.

TWENTY CHURCHES ARE on the eve of a great simultaneous evangelistic campaign, when twenty pastors, assisted by as many visiting pastors, will lead in this great kingdom effort. There is an attitude of expectancy in most of the churches.

ILLINOIS

REV. C. E. RIDDINGTON of Louisa Center, Iowa, has accepted the call of the church at Diverson, and will begin his new pastorate at once.

ON JAN. 29 at the First Hungarian Baptist Church of West Pullman, the ordination of a new pastor, Mr. E. L. Kautz, took place. Rev. John Fazekas of the Detroit Hungarian Baptist Church delivered the ordaining address. J. W. Weddell, Benjamin Otto, Charles Holman, Charles Kessler, and Charles Osborn, of the Chicago Baptist Association, also took part in the service. Mr. Kautz accepted the call to this church from Vernon, N. Y., last September.

REV. WILLIAM H. DICKMAN, who has been pastor of the Damascus and Lena churches for nearly four years, has accepted the call of the church at Plano. He began work there the last of February.

EVANGELIST GEORGE R. STAIR was with the First Church of Elgin three weeks in January. He leaves the church in a better spirit than that in which he found it. Following his visit are no bad reactions. His attitude on personal finance is ideal.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING of the Foreign Missionary Society was held in Chicago, Feb. 11. The presence of the board members, all the secretaries, and a large number of missionaries, was made an occasion for carrying the missionary message to churches in Chicago and nearby towns. About 125 appointments were filled and the story of what God is doing through the work of the foreign society, was thrillingly told by many, and eagerly heard by many thousands. A treat is in store for all Baptist churches in the state. Each of the four district superintendents will spend a month, accompanied by a missionary, going from church to church and groups of churches here and there, to tell the story. In addition, Mr. T. O. McMinn is arranging an itinerary in the Southern Association to cover a period of two weeks or so. He will be accompanied by Rev. Wallace St. John, of Judson College, Burma. In the Eastern District, Superintendent Merrill will have Rev. G. H. Waters, of China, as his associate to March 4. Another missionary will be assigned for the remaining two weeks. Rev. A. E. Bigelow, of the Philippines, will accompany Mr. Gilmore in the Northern District for the first half; another will be assigned later. Dr. F. P. Lynch, medical missionary from the Belgian Congo, will give the whole month to the Western District with Mr. Hopkins, and Wallace St. John and A. C. Darrow of Burma together will give a month in the Southern District with Mr. Hilton.

THROUGH the Mounds Park Sanitarium, beautifully located at the Indian Mounds Park, the Midway Hospital and the Merriam Park Hospital, a complete Baptist hospital service is offered to the Northwest.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK SAINT PAUL

The Use of Art in Religious Education

By ALBERT EDWARD BAILEY

This book will come to many teachers as a revelation of a new world of source materials and a vital contribution to the subject of how to teach religion.

Illustrated. Net, $1.25; by mail, $1.37

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE
STOCKHOLM, JULY 21-27
SPECIAL TOURS LEAVING NEW YORK
June 9, 16, 23, 30 and July 7
Comprehensive itineraries, splendid steamers
Excellent hotels and experienced directors
Send for folder
BENNETT'S TRAVEL BUREAU
500 Fifth Avenue New York City

SEIZE THE OPPORTUNITY

offered by the Stockholm Convention of the Baptist World Alliance to see Europe

The Midnight Sun, the majestic fyords, the Continental centers of Baptist interest, cities associated with the Protestant Reformation, grand Switzerland, pathetic Rheims, the heroic Argonne.

Choice of three different routes, possible independent sailings. Auspices Temple Tours.

MAY WE SHOW YOU?

Rev. Chas. H. Sears, D.D.
276 Fifth Ave.
New York

Rev. K. C. MacArthur
12 Sacramento St.
Cambridge, Mass.

Rev. Wm. G. Towart
301 Pleasant St.
Bennington, Vt.

SUNDAY NIGHT CLOSED ONE of the greatest series of evangelistic meetings in the history of The Tiskilwa church. Rev. Lee McLendon, former pastor of Calvary Church, Cleveland, was the evangelist; Mr. Walter Main of Moody Bible Institute, the singer. Christians were quickened, and a splendid foundation laid for a future work. There will be a dozen additions to the church.

THE MANLIUS CHURCH has closed a successful evangelistic campaign with Evangelist A. W. Littrell and soloist D. L. Moody of Columbus, Ohio, assisting the pastor, Rev. W. A. Nickerson. Forty-three persons have united with the church. This is a strictly rural church, three miles from the nearest town.

THE BUILDING OF THE First Church, Amboy, was completely destroyed by fire Feb. 9. It was caused by an overheated furnace. The members of the church have already made plans to rebuild as soon as the weather will permit. Rev. Fred Baldus, of the University of Chicago, is the pastor.

THE EAST PARK CHURCH of Decatur, Rev. Russell A. Rapson pastor, has received a number of new members since the first of the year. Special meetings under the direction of Rev. F. M. Dunk began Feb. 22. Christian service week was observed Feb. 4-9. A religious education week will be observed just before Easter.

MICHIGAN

EVANGELIST H. P. HOSKINS, 276 Fifth Ave., New York, and his singer, H. H. Vigneulle of Cleveland, closed a union service in Mason in which the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches participated. The evangelists are now engaged in meetings at Mount Morris.

EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO less than twenty people from the Grand River Avenue Church, Detroit, formed the Hudson Avenue Church. In six weeks 320 people will form the new Northwestern Baptist Church at Grand River and Clarendon avenues. To meet adequately the challenge of the new district, the church called Mr. Magnus Burgess, formerly of the Temple Church, to assist the pastor, Rev. Robert White. The new property is valued at over $100,000. This work has been made possible by the aid of the New World Movement through the Detroit Union under Superintendent H. C. Gleiss.

JEFFERSON AVE. CHURCH, Detroit, has set as its membership goal 100 new members by Easter, fifty by baptism and fifty by letter and experience. Careful plans are being prayerfully followed to gain this end. The church members are expecting results to follow their efforts. Rev. A. V. Allen is supported by a group of real church workers.

REV. JOHN E. SMITH, for several years pastor of the First Church, Spokane, Wash., preached his farewell sermon on Feb. 18 to come to Michigan as director of the state convention, succeeding Hon. Grant M. Hudson, who will take up his work as congressman on March 4.

MICHIGAN

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the First Church, Detroit, the mortgage on the property was burned. Upon recommendation of the trustees a committee was appointed to prepare plans for a new unit to the building, with additional Sunday-school rooms, a gymnasium and other facilities for educational and social work. The membership is 1,243 and the property is valued at $250,000. This is the church which recently called Rev. Mark Sanborn of Minneapolis as its pastor.

KANSAS

AT THE MEETING OF the First Church, Lawrence, the report of the pastor, Rev. Frank Jennings, reveals a remarkable development in the finances of the church. The annual meeting was one of the best in years. It was an optimistic, forward-looking meeting. There was encouragement in the reports and, while no radical plans for change in the future plans were announced, there was a general feeling of entering into a year from which many good things may be looked for. The following table, showing the improvement in the church's feeling of responsibility in the matter of stewardship, is presented:

| | 1918 | 1922 |
|---|---|---|
| Total budget | $3,962.40 | $12,473.40 |
| Local expense | 3,092.40 | 6,600.00 |
| Missions | 870.00 | 5,873.40 |
| Av. per year per member for all purposes | 9.90 | 31.18 |
| Av. per year per per member for local expenses | 7.70 | 16.50 |
| Av. per year per per member for for missions | 2.20 | 14.68 |
| Av. weekly income of church—local expense | 59.45 | 126.92 |
| Av. weekly income of church — missions | 16.75 | 112.94 |

MISSOURI

AT THE PATEE PARK CHURCH, St Joseph, the pastor, Rev. A. J. Rendleman, baptized thirty-two persons Feb. 18 and about half as many the following Sunday. The church has large plans for the future.

THE ST. LOUIS BAPTIST ministers' conference at its meeting Feb. 16 adopted resolutions expressing regret that Dr. W. H. Geistweit was no longer to be a member of the conference and a fellow worker in the city. He began work as pastor of the First Church Dayton, Ohio, March 1. These resolutions were signed by H. C. Combs, R. K. Kelly and S. E. Ewing.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE MEN OF THE Twenty-third Avenue Church, Oakland, recently gave a banquet in celebration of the sixth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. John Newton Garst. Dr. Garst is a member of the board of trustees of Redlands University and sustains close relations with the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School. He recently lectured before the student body on "Our intensive every-member attendance campaign"—a campaign which has attracted nation-wide attention of church people, reformers and others.

THOUSAND OAKS CHURCH, Berkeley, celebrated its first anniversary Sunday, Feb. 11. Pres. C. M. Hill and Prof. A. S. Phelps, of the Berkeley Divinity School, Rev. Elijah A. Hanley, of First Church Berkeley, Rev. F. S. Brush, of the Community (Presbyterian) Church, Rev. C. E. Tingle, of the San Francisco Bay Cities Baptist Union, participated. This church begun a year ago with sixty-seven members, has added twenty-seven

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: New York. Rev. P H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS
PULPITS
COMMUNION SETS
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY
1669 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Outfits, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMOULIN BROS. & CO., Dpt. 17 GREENVILLE, ILL.

COOK ACADEMY
A boys' school under Christian influence, open to students of all religious beliefs. Academic and College Preparatory courses with training for business careers. Graduates admitted without examination by colleges admitting on certificate. Music advantages. A fine school spirit prevails and healthful sports are encouraged. Gymnasium. Athletic Field. Basketball court. For catalog address by letter, two by experience and thirteen by baptism; has dismissed seven by letter, two by death and now has a membership of 100. It sustains three Sunday schools including two missions. During the year it gave in cash $975 for the New World Movement. For the present it must worship in the auditorium of the public school, but the much needed church building will be forthcoming within a few months. Rev. Albert Ehrgott is pastor.
The Principal, Box B, Montour Falls, N. Y.

WHEN THE ORGAN CYPHERS

One of the most frequent occurrences causing trouble in any organ is a cypher. Usually, in modern organs having individual valve sheets, the cypher is confined to one pipe. Sometimes if any of the valve springs are a little rusty or weak, several touches of the key controlling the pipe will stop the cypher till a tuner can be reached. Sometimes the temporary disuse of the stop of which the misbehaving pipe is a member will end its noise till a repairer can be called in. Often neither of these two methods of procedure will avail. Then the usual method resorted to is removing the offending member. Sometimes this is a good thing to do, but often, especially if the pipe is a large one, the noise of the wind escaping through the pipe hole will be almost as annoying as the cypher itself. A better plan is to lay several thicknesses of paper or card-board over the pipe hole, then set the pipe in place, the weight of the pipe keeping the paper in place and preventing the escape of wind.

As a rule, these things happen just at a time one would wish they did not—while the picture is in progress or during an important musical number. The writer recently heard of a New York organist who improvised for fifteen minutes around a cypher as an "organ-point," keeping the interest of the music up all the while.—The Console.

Obituary

PROFESSOR T. M. BLAKSLEE, PH.D.

Thomas M. Blakslee, son of Marcus Blakslee and Mary Martin Blakslee, was born near Harpersville, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1854, and died at Ames, Iowa, Jan. 30, 1923.

Doctor Blakslee was an ardent supporter of Baptist doctrines and gave the larger part of his life to work in connection with Des Moines College, where he occupied the chair of mathematics. He was a graduate of Yale and had taken post graduate work at Johns Hopkins and Chicago Universities and in Germany. Death came quickly although for a number of years his activity had been greatly restricted on account of heart trouble. The body was laid at rest beside that of his sister, Mrs. W. D. Elwell, at Ames, Iowa. Friends wishing further information may address Dr. F. N. Elwell, Live Stock Exchange, Wichita, Kans.

MRS. ANNA McMASTER

Mrs. Anna McMaster, beloved wife of Mr. John McMaster, on Feb. 12, changed her earthly home for an heavenly, to receive the reward of a life of loyal service to her Master and Lord.

Anna Carkner was born in Ormond, Canada, in 1850, and in early childhood gave herself unreservedly in faith to Jesus Christ, and through all the years that followed evinced her true conversion by a life of devoted service.

Both of her parents were devout Christians, and this daughter, the eldest of nine children, set the loving example for the younger members of the household and joined the Ormond Baptist Church, and has kept a church membership for more than sixty years.

In 1874 she married Mr. John McMaster, now so favorably and widely known in business circles as the leading shingle manufacturer in the state of Washington.

Mrs. McMaster has always been a student and reader, keeping fully informed through our religious paper and "Missions" of the work of her loved denomination both at home and in foreign lands.

While of a retiring disposition, yet of cheery temperament, she made and held fast many personal friendships.

For two years she has been a constant sufferer, confined to her home, yet through all her anguish her faith burned brightly, and she was an inspiration to family and friends, showing what a boon is an unwavering faith in the goodness of Jehovah.

For thirty-one years, with her husband, she has been an active member of the First Baptist Church of Seattle, and leaves a host of friends who will mourn with those of her household, though not without confidence that her reward for a faithful life has met its fruition.

Mrs. McMaster leaves as her immediate family bereft a husband, Mr. John McMaster, and her children, Mrs. Theodosia Terry, W. C. and E. J. McMaster, Mrs. Clara Neimeyer, Mrs. Ella Fiedler, and Mrs. Jessie Lamont.

We sorrow, not as they without hope, for we believe fully that "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Youth and Tuberculosis

Tuberculosis, the great white plague, is no respecter of persons or age. It strikes old and young. A young Baptist minister, who had worked for his education and had given promise of great usefulness to the denomination, was suddenly stricken with tuberculosis.

Although in the ministry but a few years, the disease compelled him to retire. Today his wife is endeavoring to support him and herself by teaching.

A modest grant made by the Benefit Board has enabled him to receive treatment at a tuberculosis sanitarium in the mountains in the hope that he might be cured and return to his work.

He is one of the 1402 beneficiaries of the Benefit Board. They have given their best. Can we do less?

Ordinary justice requires an increase, not only in the number of beneficiaries, but also in the amounts granted to old and broken ministers, missionaries and widows.

You who made a gift to the Benefit Board, have had a part in this helpful ministry. Your continued support is needed.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

(Corporate name)

E. T. TOMLINSON, Executive Secretary

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention

Our Book Shelf

Do You Know Them? by Kitty Parsons. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

A collection of thirty-five "Brief Stories of Famous Lives" told for young folks, including many interesting people living off the main highway traveled by writers of collected biography. Reynolds the painter, Bill Cody the scout, Carmen Sylva the Queen, Ito the statesman, Morse the inventor, Wagner the composer, Richelieu the Cardinal, Edith Cavell the martyr, and Roosevelt the American, are among those whose life stories are told with brevity and skill.

The River Dragon's Bride

By LENA LEONARD FISHER

"Dramatic, humorous, with sudden and startling glimpses of strange folk-lore and strange customs."
—The Hartford Courant.

Illustrated. Net, $1.25, postpaid

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

Evolution a Witness to God, by George Craig Stewart. Chicago: The Witness Pub. Co., 35c.

This is the fifth of a series of religious publications which this company has issued. In this fifty-five page book, Dr. Craig has not shied at self-evident truths. He looks back through the ages, accepts what appears to him as truth wherever he sees it and counts evolution but one more witness toward the power and glory of God. A book well worth reading.

The Gospel of the Sovereignty, and Other Sermons, by J. D. Jones. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.75.

This is a book in which you get full value for your money. There are 328 closely-printed pages of the best pulpit work of "Jones of Bournemouth," who needs no introduction to readers of published sermons. Of the twenty-three solid sermons, one of the finest is on "Authority and Freedom": "In our Protestant emphasis on freedom we have neglected the complementary principle of authority. . . . In a country like this, where freedom is a tradition and is in danger of becoming a fetish, it is the other truth that we are under authority, that there is an authority outside of us which we must reverence and obey, that needs insisting upon. . . . The Lord Jesus Christ is the authority—the divine and supernatural Christ who has revealed himself to and verified himself in the history of the church—that mighty and redeeming Lord of whom we can be quite sure because he lives amongst us and does his divine work upon us to this very day." These sentences indicate the key note of the series of sermons: The Sovereign Lordship of the Risen and Ever-living Lord. "The Christianity we know, the Christianity of the apostles and of the holy church throughout the world, can only live as it is built upon a supernatural, divine and living Christ." On this substantial foundation the preacher has built this collection of sermons with versatility and breadth. The painstaking perusal of them may avert the "spring sag" which comes to the hard-working pastor toward the end of his winter's campaign.

Every Teacher's Problems, by William E. Stark. New York: American Book Company.

A very interesting and suggestive presentation of upwards of 240 problems confronting the teachers in our schools, with the discussion of about a quarter of them, generally in an imaginary conference of teachers, principal, superintendent and others concerned. The principles deduced are applicable to religious education. Parents who read this book will have a more adequate appreciation of the teacher's task.

Don't Deny Yourself a New Religious Book

THE WORLD'S GREAT RELIGIOUS POETRY
Compiled by CAROLINE MILES HILL, Ph.D.
Cloth 12 mo. 876 pages. $5.00.

"What more elevating and broadening exercise could a writer or speaker on spiritual themes desire than the habitual study of such a book? It will be of the very greatest spiritual service to people of all religions and of no religion. It meets a well-nigh universal need."—New York Christian Advocate.

"I congratulate you on its publication. It is an admirable work."—Wm. Lyon Phelps, (Yale).

"Do not see how any minister can get along without it."—Dr. Frank Crane.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION
By Robert H. Thouless (Manchester)

The God revealed by religious experience shown to be identical with the God required by the moral consciousness and the God required to explain the world and the God revealed in historical Christianity. $2.50.

CHRISTIAN WAYS OF SALVATION
By George W. Richards (Lancaster Seminary)

Eight historic "ways" that Christian salvation has been successfully presented and in addition a tremendously helpful exposition of the present creed of the United Free Church of Scotland. $2.00.

THE BOYHOOD CONSCIOUSNESS OF CHRIST
By Rev. Patrick J. Temple.

"A remarkable book. If preachers would avoid slovenly and superficial work let them meditate upon its message and workmanship."—Hugh T. Kerr, D. D., Presbyterian Banner. $3.50.

CHRISTIANITY AND LIBERALISM
By J. Gresham Machen, D. D. (Princeton)

Holds liberal religion and historic Christianity are two distinct religions proceeding from altogether separate roots. $1.75.

OLD TESTAMENT LIFE AND LITERATURE
By I. G. Matthews (Crozer).

Follows a good method; holds a modern point of view without becoming radical. $2.50.

HE OPENED TO US THE SCRIPTURES
By B. W. Bacon (Yale).

Jesus better way of using Scripture explained and recommended to our own practice. $1.00.

ANGER: ITS RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SIGNIFICANCE
By George M. Stratton (California).

A study of how anger has been treated by the various religions and the part it has played in their development. Shows the bearing of these results on the war against war. $2.25.

ITEMS FOR YOUR NEXT ORDER

Hertzler: The History of Utopian Thought ..... $3.00
Haas: Freedom and Christian Conduct 2.25
Jones: Religious Foundations ..... 1.00
Pratt: Matter and Spirit..... 1.50
Wood: The Religion of Science..... 1.50
Beckwith: The Idea of God..... 2.50

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
64-66 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

"It Is to Laugh"

"What do you think of my library?"

"I was just looking it over and I notice that you were visited by the same book agents who visited me."—Detroit Free Press.

---

Four-year-old Joan had been in mischief and her mother prepared to apply a much-needed lesson. Her indulgent father protested vigorously that he would not have his baby's tender feelings hurt by punishment.

Joan settled the matter herself. Turning to her champion, she said:

"Now, daddy, you don't understand. Mother is trying to make me a good girl when I grow up."

---

At the club vacation yarns were going around. There was a semicircle drawn up in front of the fire.

"I fished with three hooks at a time," stated the man on one end. "Frequently I caught two fish at a time, sometimes three, and I don't want any alleged humor about it, either. It's the truth."

The man at the other end said he didn't doubt it. "In fact," he went on to say, "I have seen it done. Now my case was quite different."

"Well, what was your case?"

"The fish knew I had bait and they just jumped into the boat."

LESTER STUDIOS
426 Fine Arts Building, Chicago, Ill.

Special Training for Church Work
Definite work in Voice, Piano and Composition
MARGARET LESTER, Soprano
and
WILLIAM LESTER, Pianist-Organist
Available for Concerts and Special Services
Manuscripts Revised and Corrected
Organ Dedications a Specialty

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

CONCERNING JAZZ

What is the future of jazz? Can it be driven out? These are questions that are hard to answer, and various answers to which will be diametrically opposed. While the Augusta (Maine) Journal carries the headline, "Jazz Music Here to Stay," the Mobile (Ala.) Register announces "The Early Death of Jazz."

The first based its opinion on the testimony of the conductor of the Island Park Orchestra, who stated that out of 130 requests for selections, 98 were for popular numbers. The second, though admitting that a local dealer sold twenty jazz numbers to one other, says that new publications contain less jazz, evidently because the publishers believe it is doomed, for they furnish what the people want. The Register also cites phonograph records and music in moving-picture and vaudeville theaters to prove its point, saying:

"Phonograph dealers are of the opinion that jazz has gone. Better music is being found in all of the new records produced, they say, and the public is accepting it eagerly. All classes of people are asking for the better music, popular ballads being the most demanded, with classical and other types also desired.

"Musicians in theaters have begun to leave out the jazz numbers, very few being played at the present time whereas at one time the orchestras became fairly well 'jazzed up.' Some leaders have even attempted classical music with the movie shows and have attained a marked degree of success. The majority of the others have invariably sought melodies far removed from jazz. And to the chagrin of the unrelenting advocate of jazz who still clings desperately to the wild, noisy, unharmonious music, these orchestras are gaining favor with the public, not only in the theater but elsewhere.

"The vaudeville and stage have modified their songs. The fact has been noticeable that jazzy numbers are rarely heard and the ballad and comic-melody, with plenty of pep, is being substituted."

The distinction made by the Register between jazz and popular music is the same as that made by Edward P. Kimball, music editor of the Deseret News, who complains that "much popular music is branded in certain quarters as, and most all popular dance tunes are contemptuously labeled, jazz music. There is much popular music that is no better and no worse than the popular fiction of the day and such a tune if played properly should have no more baneful influence and will do more good than an ordinary story. Each is written to amuse and, having fulfilled the measure of its creation, is quickly forgotten, and the real distinction between such music and real jazz music should be borne in mind."

Dr. Henry Van Dyke points out the difference between jazz and popular music in his recent address before the Music Teachers' Association in Philadelphia in the following words:

"I attempted, the other day, to find a definition of jazz which has received some opprobium and some abuse, but at all events considerable publicity. I was misquoted as speaking of jazz music—there is no such thing. There is music and there is jazz. There is syncopated time in good music of course, but that is not jazz. I have said that jazz was invented by demons for the torment of imbeciles, but I did not mean that jazz was a modern invention. I refreshed my memory before I left my home.

"I found it in Plutarch in a description of a banquet that was given in Athens by Calistratus, an Athenian gentleman of more wealth than taste. Plutarch says as much, and this Calistratus introduced a piper, name not given, who played effeminate and lascivious tunes and the guests leaped from their seats and danced, showing that music is more intoxicating than wine, to those who will only use it. Now if that was not jazz, I do not know what jazz is. Plutarch goes on further to say, in an indisputable passage, which I commend to you to read generally because it is full of good stuff—he goes on to say that it is worse than the intoxication of wine because it begins to affect the soul."

Mr. Kimball thus defines jazz: "Jazz is the digression from the correct. It is no more or no less than this digression from the correct. There is a world of content in that little sentence, and it goes far beyond music." The cure for jazz is to be found in education. Mr. Kimball believes that "if every performer and singer would continue his efforts to what is written, there would be an end to this unmitigated cacophony, this combination of disagreeable sounds in complicated discords, because most of the effects we call jazz are not written, they are faked. Our present notation is entirely inadequate to record them. They are an expression of the most primitive characteristics of the race, and these characteristics reveal themselves in the primal manner, by exaggerations upon the instruments of percussion, the most primitive of all musical instruments, and by whoops, slides, moans, and groans upon any instrument that can be made to produce a willful ugliness. Students must be taught to love and cherish the instrument they choose to learn to perform on, and they must confine its use to the noble literature given to the world by the greatest performers on this instrument if the misuse of instruments which makes jazz possible is to cease."

The music department of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs has taken up the fight against jazz, adopting as its slogan "to make good music popular and popular music good."

With so much agitation against the disagreeable jazz, that form of music seems doomed, though its demise probably will not be sudden and may even be some years distant.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

Lorenz's Easter Music

Easter Services (New 1923)
"Easter Bells," by Ira B. Wilson
"Joyful Eastertide," for graded Sunday Schools. 8 cents per copy, $6.00 per hundred, postpaid. Samples sent free upon request.

Easter Sunday School Cantatas
"The Glory of the Cross," by Lorenz.
"The Lighted Cross," by Ira B. Wilson.
"Easter," by Ira B. Wilson.
20 cents per copy, net in any quantity. Send 20 cents for sample each of the three.

Easter Recitations and Exercises
"Easter Treasury No. 28" (New 1923)
25 cents per copy, postpaid.

Easter Choir Cantatas (New 1923)
"Joy after Sorrow," Wilson, 60 cents.
"The Resurrection Story," Adams. 60 cents. Sent on approval upon request.

Easter Anthems
Our ten most popular out of over 300 we publish sent on approval upon request.

Easter Solos and Duets
Our ten most popular out of 100 we publish sent on approval if you advance 10 cents for postage and packing. If you state voice desired, we will so limit selection.

Send for free catalog.
Sample and approval offers good only if the "Baptist" is mentioned.

Lorenz Publishing Co.
216 W. 5th St., Dayton, Ohio
1711 Grand Central Terminal, New York
218 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

EASTER FREE
HALL-MACK CO. MUSIC
A postal from Supt., Pastor or Committee will bring a set of sample services. FREE.
* EASTER HELPER, NO. 9, 20c
Book of Songs, Recitations, Drills, etc.
FLAVIA, or THE MARTYRS, 25c.
A Song Story of early Christian Era. This and others sent for examination on request.
* PAGEANTRY
Two Easter Pageants and a Play—25c.
* These are not sent for examination.
SPECIAL—30c.
3 Services, regular edition, value . . . . . 21c
Pageant . . . . . 25c
Helper No. 9 . . . . . 20c
All for 30c in stamps. 66c
HALL-MACK CO., ADAM GEIBEL MUSIC CO. } 21st & Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

Fredericktown Bells
Write for Illustrated Catalogue

"SACRED SELECTIONS"
(28) pages, solos, duets, quartets and choir numbers, just off the press. "How Can I Help But Love Him?" and "The End of the Road," are among the list. Prices, 25c each. Rates on quantities. Address Elton Roth, 3727 Shady Court, Ft. Wayne, Ind.
Do not send stamps.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Looking for a Missionary!

From the snow-bound fastnesses of Alaska to the sun-warm sands of India, little ones are hungering and thirsting for the One who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

THE CONTINUATION CAMPAIGN

is helping to set missionaries a-sail on the high seas, keep teachers in mission school rooms, substitute the Christian Center for the Slum in our great cities, and tell thousands every year the glad story of Jesus.

You Can Help By filling that Might Box paying that pledge giving up that new dress increasing that old pledge telling that new friend about it

Get behind the Campaign—"tel-e-graph, tel-e-phone, tell-a-woman"—and let's raise $2,000,000 by April 30. (Part of the $10,000,000 Goal of Northern Baptists this year.)

The Continuation Campaign
of the
Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society
Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

The Evangelistic Association of New England

General Secretary B. T. Livingston, of the Evangelistic Association of New England, in response to a desire expressed by many pastors in New England, is planning a series of conferences, to begin the middle of April and arranged with the idea of stimulating churches to greater efforts along lines of constructive evangelism.

Various centers will be chosen and the time given will depend upon the size of the place and the number of churches taking part. The afternoon sessions will be devoted to subjects relative to the deepening of the spiritual life and the organization of church departments for evangelization. The evening themes will be such as to attract the general public; emphasizing church loyalty, and closing with an evangelistic message. On Sunday the speakers of the conference will, if desired, occupy the local pulpits in the morning, and in the evening the churches may unite for a general evangelistic serrvice in the largest church.

Music will be made a feature of these gatherings. In addition to the other speakers Secretary Livingston will be accompanied by Evangelist Lewis E. Smith, known throughout New England as a preacher and singer. The church choirs will be invited to unite for the Sunday evening meetings.

The work of the Association is interdenominational. Interested pastors and churches in cities or small towns are urged to write for particulars at the earliest moment, so that the itinerary may be completed. Address General Secretary, Evangelistic Association of New England, 519 Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

Church News

(Continued from page 157.)

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE WORK AT CALVARY CHURCH, Pasadena, is moving along splendidly and a hearty spirit of cooperation is noted everywhere. There is a steady increase in membership. The church is in the midst of a prayer and personal work campaign of evangelism leading up to Easter. Miss Clara Mayhew has been secured as a paid assistant, especially for office and field work. Miss Mayhew has had years of experience in this kind of work. Work has already begun on the new church building. It is to be an up-to-date plant in every particular and will afford greatly increased facilities for much larger work. The Sunday school part is one of the special features of the building, each department having its own assembly room with plenty of smaller rooms for class work. The approximate cost of the building will be $100,000 above the lot, which is valued now at $25,000.

MR. JOHN SCHNEIDER, a graduate of Brown Univerity in the class of 1922 and assistant there in biblical literature and philosophy during the present year, has accepted the pastorate of the German Baptist Church in Lennox, and will begin his work immediately. The church offers a fine opportunity for one speaking, as does Mr. Schneider, both English and German.

Two presidents, a king and a queen, will join in celebrating the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of New York city in 1924. They have promised to serve as honorary chairmen of the Huguenot-Walloon New Netherland Tercentenary Commission, which has been organized by the Federal Council of Churches to see that the occasion is fittingly observed. The four heads of governments are President Harding, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, King Albert of Belgium, and President Poincare of France. In accepting honorary chairmanship of the commission, President Harding wrote to Dr. John Baer Stoudt, the director as follows: "It is with much gratification that I have received your notification regarding the forthcoming tercentenary celebration of the setting of the Huguenot-Walloons in America, and of my own selection as an honorary president of the commission which is arranging for the observance. I have the greater pleasure in accepting this most honorable position because of my deep appreciation of the contribution of this splendid people to the founding, the development and the present state of our common country. It was the fortune of our America to have blended in its beginnings a number of the finest stocks of the world; as it has also been our good fortune to have afforded opportunity and inspiration for the best services which they were able to render in making the nation. It is good for us to be reminded of so great a debt to those who laid the foundations of our nation, and we cannot too much honor them on occasions of this sort.

0.05

Volume IV March 10, 1923 No. 6

The Baptist

Univ of Ill Libr
Urbana Ill

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS Library
MAR 13 1923

Who Is Lost?

By Franklin W. Sweet

WORDS are like wagons. They carry ideas. From time to time they need to be repaired to continue useful. Today religious words must be strengthened to carry simple, weighty truths men must know. The word lost is such a word.

What does lost mean in the Christian religion? Dare our generation be satisfied with what it meant to Dante, Bunyan, Edwards or Moody? Must we not find what Jesus meant when he said, "This, my son, was lost?"

Jesus took the relationships of the family and made them universal and permanent for all humanity. To him a man was lost who was unbrotherly to man and unfilial toward God.

These two are essential. Brotherhood must be crowned by sonship and the sense of sonship will grow faint without brotherhood. Both or neither is the spiritual law. To Jesus, the man was lost who was either unbrotherly to man or unfilial toward God.

Jesus wept over Jerusalem. Would he weep over you? Are you unbrotherly to man or neglectful of your Heavenly Father? If so, are you not lost?

Fresh from the Field

Rev. John E. Arblaster of the Springdale Church, Marysville, Ohio, has accepted the call of the Allison Avenue Church, Washington, Pa.

During the first six months of the pastorate of Rev. F. W. Wightman of the Central Church, Olympia, Wash., forty-five members were added to the church roll. The pastor is preaching a series of evening sermons on "The Ten Commandments in Modern Life."

Rev. George A. Gordon of the Old South Church, Boston, celebrated recently his seventieth birthday anniversary and his fortieth year in the ministry.

Rev. A. G. Lagerquist, field worker of the Iowa convention, was elected a delegate to the World's Baptist Alliance in Stockholm, at a recent meeting of the convention board.

It is reported in the secular press that Rev. F. B. Meyer, well-known English preacher, has accepted the principalship of an All Nations Bible college for the training of men for mission work. The college is to be interdenominational and will be run on fundamentalist lines.

Rev. D. C. Holton has recently published "The Political Philosophy of Modern Shinto, a Study of the State Religion of Japan." The book has attracted considerable attention. Dr. Holton is a member of the staff of the Japan Baptist Theological Seminary at Tokyo, and has been a missionary in Japan since 1910.

Rev. Francisco Sabas, pastor of our church in Cristo, Cuba, and vice-president of the Los Colegies Internationales, was recently awarded the degree of doctor of divinity by the University of Havana. In addition to his duties as pastor of the church, he holds the chair of professor of natural science in the mission school at Cristo.

The March issue of "Home and Foreign Fields," the missionary magazine of Southern Baptists, has an unusual discussion of the country church. It calls attention to the 18,000 white Baptist and 16,000 white Methodist churches in the open country of the South, with once-a-month preaching. In spite of their drawbacks these churches are a vital force in the life of the denomination. This issue has an interesting array of facts and figures.

This item in the calendar of the Mt. Morris Church, New York, is of passing interest: "After preaching to the passing throngs for three months, the Wayside Pulpit had its first accident. The glass covering the north face was broken Friday night, Feb. 16. We were just thinking what a fine testimonial it is to the innate goodness of people who pass our church that it has had no accidents before this. Not many preachers could stand in such a prominent place as the pulpit holds and cry some truths to the hundreds of passerbys day and night for three and a half months without having something thrown back at him. And there was an interesting incident connected with this accident. A certain person, who is not a member of Mount Morris, last Sunday evening, after the crowds had passed out, said to the pastor: 'I think that Wayside Pulpit is wonderful. It is doing an enormous amount of good. I notice the glass has been broken, and I should like to contribute this little money toward a new glass for it.' She handed the pastor her contribution. A small matter, but it has a meaning."

Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Moody have given thirty-three years of mission service in Belgian Congo in the heart of Africa. Mr. Moody says: "I am glad that God brought me here to see this great revival. It is a glorious privilege to have a part in it."

Rev. Adolph Bredy has resigned as pastor of the East Street Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., to accept a call from the Second German Baptist Church of Detroit. He will take up the new work April 1.

Rev. Arthur D. Hilton, pastor of the First Church, Wheeling, W. Va., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Marietta, Ohio.

There are many tours from which one may select an itinerary; the cost is not large and it will be a life time instruction. In this issue appears the advertisement of the Wicker Tours of Richmond, Va. Dr. Wicker, minister and evangelist, will accompany personally his tours to Stockholm, assisted by his son, J. J. Wicker, jr., an experienced tourist traveler. Readers will do well to write for copy of their itineraries. They also have tours in connection with the Baptist World Alliance, taking in the Holy Land and Egypt.

> JOHN WESLEY'S place in history is the place of the evangelist who is also a master of affairs. The evangelization of the world will always be the road to fame and power, but only to those who take it seeking, not these things, but the kingdom of God; and if the evangelist be what John Wesley was, a man poised in spirit, deeply conversant with the natures of his fellow-men, studious of the truth, sober to think, prompt and yet not rash to act, apt to speak without excitement and yet with a keen power of conviction, he can do for another age what John Wesley did for the eighteenth century. His age was singular in its need, as he was singular in his gifts and power. The eighteenth century cried out for deliverance and light, and God had prepared this man to show again the might and the blessing of his salvation.—Woodrow Wilson.

Arrangements are being perfected at the University of Chicago for the holding of the annual institute on World Christianity, for the benefit of those interested in foreign missions and in the improvement of world relationships. The sessions will be held on six Thursday evenings, April 12 to May 17, inclusive. During the first hour two lecture courses will be offered; one on the "History of Missions," by Dr. H. H. Walker of Chicago Theological Seminary; and the other on "Christianity and Other Agencies of World Advancement," by Dr. A. G. Baker of the Chair of Missions of the Divinity School, University of Chicago. These classes will be followed by a general assembly, addressed each night by recognized leaders, on the subject: "The Golden Rule Between the Nations." Fuller particulars will be announced later.

Dr. John Y. Aitchison addressed a mass meeting at the First Church, Detroit, Feb. 19.

Under the auspices of the Detroit Council of Churches, Rev. W. W. Bustard held a series of noon-day meetings at the Garrick Theater, Detroit, Feb. 19-23. In the evenings he spoke at the Woodward Avenue Church.

The Baptist ministers' conference of Washington, D. C., passed resolutions expressing deep appreciation of Dr. Robert S. MacArthur and of his useful ministry. These resolutions were signed by E. B. Jackson and Walter C. Scott, president and secretary of the conference.

Mrs. Justin A. Smith, known to the older readers of the Standard as "Aunt Mary," was pleasantly remembered on Feb. 10, her eightieth birthday, with a surprise reception and gifts of flowers and blossoming plants by relatives and friends in Morgan Park where she has lived for forty-five years. Feb. 4 was the twenty-seventh anniversary of the death of Dr. Justin A. Smith, for many years editor of the Standard.

The Chicago Christian Industrial League has announced a campaign for $400,000 to take place the second week in April. For more than thirteen years the league has conducted workshops and rescue missions for the rebuilding of Chicago's destitute men and boys. Its purpose is to reclaim broken lives to Christian usefulness through work and the religious influence offered within the institution. Rev. Leslie Willis Sprague has been appointed campaign manager with headquarters at the central Y. M. C. A. building, 19 S. LaSalle St.

Poland has its first Baptist hospital, which has recently been purchased with the aid of the Golden Jubilee Fund of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. This Peabody-Montgomery Hospital, with its eighty beds and well-equipped operating rooms, is situated at Lodz, the industrial center of Poland. Baptist deaconesses, under the leadership of Miss Martha Wenske, will manage the hospital. It will be not only self-supporting, but will probably be able to give help to needy people at reduced rates. Through this hospital a new and large field is open for medical-evangelistic work, and the new Baptist center has aroused great interest in this city of half a million people.

A neat folder of the Upper Alton Church, Alton, Ill., carries brief information concerning the officers and scheduled meetings of the church and follows with a straightforward statement of the aims and ideals of the church which commends itself to the reader. "The Upper Alton Church is a church of Christ. Personal faith in him for life and eternal salvation is required of members. It confesses him as Lord and master, and it is organized to secure the accomplishment of his great purpose in the world. The church is concerned about so manifesting his spirit and ideals that he will be commended to all mankind. It seeks to instruct and train the young that they will take up their cross and follow him. The church invites you to become a personal follower of Christ, and then unite with his people in serving him." Rev. David T. Magill is the pastor.

(Continued on page 164)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., March 10, 1923 No. 6

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.
REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.
SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.
ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.
CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.
BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 162 |
| EDITORIAL | 165 |
| WHY I BELIEVE IN THE BIBLE, BY SAMUEL JOHN SKEVINGTON | 168 |
| THE TOMB OF PHARAOH TUTANKHAMEN | 170 |
| WHAT THE INCREASE ACCOMPLISHED | 171 |
| WHAT THE CUT MEANS | 172 |
| A VISIT TO CENTRAL AMERICA | 173 |
| THE FORGE OF VULCAN | 174 |
| COLUMBIA AND YALE, BY GEORGE E. BURLINGAME | 175 |
| OPEN FORUM | 177 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 178 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 179 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 180 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 182 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 188 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 190 |

It Has Our Approval

The First Church, St. Paul, Minn., is observing a series of special weeks. There is "Golden Rule Week" and "Appreciation Week," etc. Dr. Earl, we believe the plan is a good one but, like Lent, should be observed the year around. We make a further suggestion that editors be included in the observance. What better use of "Appreciation Week" could be found than that which would increase the already commendable list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and Missions. We recommend general observance of "Appreciation Week," at which time an every-family canvass shall be made for denominational journals.

Killam's Kollum

What Is Your Experience?

Dr. Charles H. Sears says: "A pledge paid regularly is a moral tonic; a pledge paid in advance is a thing of joy; a pledge long past due is an irritant and if too long overdue is a positive deterrent to action and may become a moral repulse." What is your experience? Brother, a delinquent subscription to your denominational papers will have just as bad an effect.

It Is Dignity

"We like THE BAPTIST and it is growing better all the time. We especially like Killam's Kollum and always read that first. I fear you have allowed some of the real dignified folks to hold you down. Of late it seems you have been under restraint. It was your way of saying things that we liked."—Mrs. H. L. Rodgers. This good woman lives in a great city. She must be by calling a mind reader. What she says of the restraint of dignity is not half the pathetic story. One dignified person standing on our idiosyncrasy seems to weigh a ton. It has held us down. But truth crushed by dignity may rise again.

Personal Attention Wins at 80

Rev. George R. Holt, of Hilton, N. Y., is eighty years old, but each year since THE BAPTIST started he has had a list the equal of any for the size of the church presented. This year he sends in twenty-four new annual subscriptions. This does not happen. Personal attention will also win at seventy-four as well as at eighty. R. P. Stephenson of Arvada, Colo., secured the renewal of the old subscribers and added four new ones for good measure. You can get results if you will give the work some attention —personal attention.

Journalists Have a Saint

The pope, in an encyclical on the tercentenary of the death of St. Francis of Sales, who was bishop of Geneva, proclaims St. Francis as the patron saint of journalists. In this document Roman Catholic journalists are urged to promote and advance "Christian doctrine" which, of course, means and properly so, Catholic doctrine, in all their publications. And they will do it or need speedily the help of their patron saint. THE BAPTIST and Missions have been projected by the denomination to promote and advance Christ's cause through the Baptist denomination. Reader, you are our patron saint. We need you if our work is to be most effective. What are you doing to advance the circulation of these journals? St. Francis is helping to place Catholic journals in nearly all public libraries and reading rooms. Are Protestant saints as effective as a Catholic saint? Baptists saints should serve.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 162)

The Board of Directors of the Western Washington Baptist Convention has voted to send Secy. J. F. Watson to the World's Baptist Alliance, Stockholm, Sweden, next July.

The young men of the King's Highway Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh have installed a $10,000 broadcasting station in the church, from which the regular services are now distributed every Sunday. This is said to be the first church to install its own broadcasting outfit. Tune in to W. M. A. Y.

In order to increase the number of students in the Baptist Missionary Training School, letters have been sent to each state assigning a quota with the request that this quota be secured by June 15. There are doubtless many young women in our churches who would gladly dedicate their lives to Christian service and take the necessary training to fit them for this service. The quota for the central district is twenty-seven, Michigan, ten; Illinois, fifteen, and Missouri, two. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest.

Only four states in the Union have never had a lynching, according to a statement issued today by the commission on the church and race relations of the Federal Council of Churches. They are Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont. There are only three other states that have had no lynchings since 1889—New Jersey, Utah and Connecticut. Nine other states have had a clear record during the last ten years. They are Nevada, Colorado, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Delaware and Pennsylvania. This means that only 33 per cent of the states in the Union have not had a lynching in the last ten years. At the same time it is pointed out that eighty-three women have been lynched since 1889. The churches are engaged in a nation-wide campaign against lynching and facts are being gathered.

In Kobe, Japan, there are a number of Sunday schools which are financed by individuals and conducted under their special direction. Rev. J. S. Armentrout, who is now on a special Sunday school mission in the Orient for the World's Sunday School Association, wrote of some of his experiences in Kobe and told of seeing a young laborer, who with a friend rents a room and conducts a Sunday school. He also related some interesting facts about a Sunday which was spent in Kobe. "In the morning I had the privilege of preaching in English in the Union church. In the afternoon I spoke to the men of the two seminaries located in Kobe and to some of the Sunday school teachers who were free to come. In the evening I visited one of the Southern Presbyterian missions. This work is in charge of one of the young men from the seminary. As it was time for the service to begin, the benches filled with those who were believers; and all around the front was the group of people who had been passing and stopped to see what was going on. It was one of the most inspiring services, as well as one of the most interesting I have ever attended."

(Continued on page 191)

The World Task of Northern Baptists

No. 4—Followers of the Carpenter's Son

"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

Industrial missions are proving an effective means of evangelization. Economic conditions and the problem of poverty in many heathen lands demand practical industrial training to develop self-supporting Christians and assure the permanency of Christianity.

Theodore Roosevelt during a visit to Africa noted in his diary: "There is full recognition of the fact that industrial training is the foundation stone in the effort to raise ethical and moral standards. Industrial training must go hand in hand with moral teaching."

In 1905 American Baptist missionaries started an industrial school in the Philippine Islands. At that time the prejudice against manual labor was extreme. Now the people thoroughly approve of industrial education. In December more than thirty students were baptized at this industrial school.

An agricultural mission school is projected for Pyinmana, Burma. The National Missionary Council, representing all the mission boards in India, heartily commends its development and says: "Agricultural missions are an integral part of the presentation of the gospel to India."

In our industrial school at Balasore, Bengal-Orissa, every year students break away from Hinduism and accept Christ. Boys who have failed in academic work become strong Christian leaders after attending the industrial school. At Kavali, South India, under missionary Bawden's direction a thousand criminals are being transformed into law-abiding citizens through the Christian Gospel of Industry.

You who made a contribution to foreign missions helped develop these self-supporting Christians. Your continued support is needed in order that the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society may meet the challenge of the day. Checks should be sent to your State Collecting Agent, or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

(Corporate name for use in wills)

The fiscal year closes April 30, 1923

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

I Commend Unto You Phoebe

WHAT the apostle said about Phoebe, ministrant of the church at the port of Corinth, might well be said of a multitude of ministering sisters in modern churches: "Phoebe our sister . . . servant of the church . . . a helper of many . . . receive her in the Lord, worthily of the saints."

She is the bigger as well as better half of the church, for two-thirds of all Baptists are women. She is great in burden-bearing; she is the mainstay of attendance, of Sunday-school teaching, of voluntary visitation, of relief-work and of missionary intelligence and inculcation. She is all that keeps the breath of life in some of our churches—the Baptist submerged tenth. When no man is in sight except a "doless" deacon and a quasi janitor, a handful of faithful, and even cheerful, women will stand between a church and dissolution. It has been so since the mother of Mark opened her house for the meeting of the church in its crisis of persecution, as Priscilla did hers to the discouraged Paul, and Lydia hers for the apostle's first little church in Europe.

But we do not care to sound the loud timbrel for our women, nor are we responding to the time-honored and saccharine toast, "the women, God bless 'em!" We wish merely to point out some of the methods which the women have followed with marked success, which might perhaps be adopted in the more general work of the denomination.

Our Northern Convention has been increasingly, throughout its fifteen years, recognizant of its woman-constituency, and this not merely to do justice to the majority of our membership but in order to utilize its values. Later, in the functioning of our boards of promotion, state and general, the fine efficiency and devotedness of our women have been still more evident. On all committees and boards they have served with singular faithfulness and effectiveness, and a woman whom the denomination and the Christian world delight to honor has served for a term as president of the convention. Never again will so splendid a resource be merely static; it is permanently listed among the dynamics of our denomination.

But there is more than simply this recent recognition of women in the general service. For more than a half-century our women have had their continental missionary organizations for home and foreign mission work; indeed, it was woman's missionary work which first passed beyond local limits. It is amusing to read the disclaimer of forwardness in their modest effort to secure a union for prayer and inspiration among the "female cent societies" of New England one hundred and twenty years ago. Our women's organizations have developed marvelously since that day. The latest record of their achievements in America and in foreign lands as given in the fascinating pages of "On the March" is proof of that.

One distinctive feature of the women's work is that voluntary, unpaid service is the rule and salaried service the exception, though some of this unpaid service could command in other lines large remuneration. Not so fully would this be possible in our general organizations, yet the beginning which has been made of volunteer retirement from successful business in order to devote oneself to denominational work can doubtless be carried much farther. We need what the government got in its "dollar-a-year men" during the war, in addition to our valued salaried force.

THEN, the women take their work seriously. When our society budgets were raised separately by themselves, it was noted that among the societies it was the women alone who seemed to feel it a disgrace if their apportionment was not met. Should some one foolishly suggest that it is the novelty or publicity that makes the work so attractive, remind him that women have today a new world of opportunity in literary clubs, business, educational and professional work, social service and reformatory and even political activity, yet that our women's missionary work is being taken in a more serious, practical, statesmanlike, enthusiastic way than ever before in its more than one hundred years. Invite our suggester to guess again.

Perhaps the most important of the distinctive successes of the women's work, however, is their approximate solution of the associational problem. They alone have secured unbroken continuity of function from national headquarters down through district, state and associational organizations to the local church. Our general organizations and even our state conventions as a rule lose perfect connection at the associational junction-point. The association, though the oldest and most characteristic Baptist general organization, is not an efficient intermediary between the local church and the general organizations. But the women's headquarters is, through the associational secretaries, in touch with every little somnolent church in every association.

Also, their remarkable District Plan, like Lincoln's rat-hole, will bear looking into.

Brethren of the Northern Baptist Convention, we commend unto you—Phoebe!

Cost and Value

THERE is a direct relation between cost and value in practically every proper realm of life. The merchant who fails consistently to keep a direct relation between the prices that his customers pay and the values they receive is headed straight for failure. The student who is really seeking to secure an educational equipment that will help him to succeed in life must be quite certain to make such an investment that the cost to him of securing the education will denote its real value in the plans and pursuits of his life. No professional man can continue to charge fees without giving back to those who pay them some substantial values, for cost and value are closely related in all such interchanges.

We want to draw attention to the fact that what is true about cost and value in other realms is equally true concerning Christianity and the spiritual life.

The abiding values of Christianity are not to be obtained without relation to its high cost. Nor can we predicate its values to us upon the basis of what it cost Jesus Christ to give those values to us. Our part of the cost begins the moment we seek after him to secure his great gifts of grace. This cost continues until the whole race of life has been run and as we make progress along the way the need for our investment does not decrease but constantly increases.

The failure to adhere to this common-sense axiom of life is costing the local churches dearly today. We fear that in the effort to make Christianity attractive and compelling we have made it so cheap and easy that many of its values have disappeared.

Let us stop a moment at this period of our denominational history and remind ourselves that if all our churches had led their membership up the cross-bearing hillside there would have come a conception of Christian brotherhood and service that would have produced them as willingly facing today's world opportunities so that even in hard and trying commercial times the production of resources for gospel purposes would not be on the decline but would be on the increase. It must be remembered that, taken as a whole, the members of our churches have more possessions than ever before. The tendency of years to make it easy to join and cheap to remain in the membership of the church is now bearing fruit. When the glamour of a big campaign is over and the tug of hill climbing begins to be felt it is not the automobile, the fine clothes, the pleasures or the savings account but the Lord's money that is cut down. We fear that the implication is not to be avoided that such a result is due to the fact that spiritual values are secondary to the other values enumerated and that the fault lies directly with our past easy assumption of great things on as cheap a basis as possible. Let us, therefore, if we really intend to build a tower, sit down as directed by our Lord and count the cost—whether we have sufficient to finish it, lest haply having laid a foundation we find ourselves unable to finish it and then men will begin to mock us saying, "This man began to build and was not able to finish."

No great values are ever obtained in Christian living without making a proportionate investment of our personal resources in behalf of the cause of Christ and his church.

Doctor MacArthur, Preacher

ELSEWHERE in this issue there is an extended account of the life and work of the man, whose name has been a household word throughout the Baptist world. His service to the denomination and the kingdom has been unique.

At the time of his death he was the president of the Baptist World Alliance, having been elected to this high position in 1911. He was making great preparations for the coming meeting in Stockholm when his plans were cut short.

While he has served in many capacities and always served well, his greatest contribution was that of a minister of the gospel. He was a great preacher. For forty-one years he served Calvary Church, New York, going to that remarkable work from the seminary. After his retirement from the regular pastorate, he continued to preach the gospel with increasing vigor and power. In a letter to THE BAPTIST, Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturer's Record, says:

"Let me emphasize the one dominant thought of many of Dr. MacArthur's friends who have been hearing him for years, and who have been in Daytona this winter; and that thought is that never in his whole life had he preached with such tremendous power, apparently of direct inspiration from God, as during the last few weeks. I have heard him for many years. I had heard some of the sermons which he has recently repeated at my request. But far and away beyond anything which I have ever heard from him or from mortal lips was the delivery of two or three of these sermons during the last few Sundays. This was the universal expression of opinion Sunday after Sunday as he seemed literally to surpass himself. Thus he closed his career with a power of preaching not only undimmed by his years, but tremendously increased."

Neither Chinese nor Japanese

THAT the Christian heart knows no national or racial bonds is seen clearly in the action of the Japanese Sunday school of E. San Pedro, Cal. This school recently sent a check to the Woman's Foreign Society with the explanation: "This is a special gift from our Japanese mission, our Christmas contribution, which we wish to give toward the restoration of the mission buildings at Swatow, China. This is all from the Sunday-school pupils and teachers. We pray that God's blessing may go with the gift as our love and sympathy goes out to those in need."

Wherever there is human need the Christian heart is anxious to meet if possible that need. Are we becoming more Christian? Let our own heart answer the question. Are we becoming more sensitive to the world's need, or is the heart becoming calloused?

A Page of Opinion

Baptists Will Back This Act

THE Seattle council of churches is active in advocating legislation providing for the amendment of the constitution of the state of Washington, relating to freedom of conscience. The amended article would read:

"Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment, belief and worship, shall be guaranteed to every individual, and no one shall be molested or be disturbed in person or property on account of religion; but the liberty of conscience secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state. No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, or support of any religious establishment. Provided, however, that this article shall not be so construed as to forbid the employment by the state of a chaplain for the state penitentiary, and for such of the state reformatories and asylums, and for the military forces of the state, as in the discretion of the legislature may seem justified; Provided further, that this article shall not be so construed as to forbid the giving of credits to students in the public high schools and state educational institutions for Bible studies taken outside said schools and institutions. No religious qualification shall be required for any public office or employment, nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror, in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony."

This action is intended to safeguard the rights of those who want to be religious.

"When a Feller Needs a Friend"

EVERY week there come to our desk scores of church calendars. We find them a constant source of information. Perhaps one of the frankest statements we have seen in months is that of a church which, because of its fearless facing of the facts, will remain unnamed. Under the caption of this paragraph the attendance upon the services of the church is recorded. We give you herewith the statement in the hope that many churches will be encouraged to face similar unpleasant facts as honestly: "Total number of church members, 345; members unable to attend church, 32; semi-non-resident members, 16; members who could come but do not, 87; members who come once in a while, 60; members who attend at least one service each Sunday, 150. Only 40 per cent of the total membership attend the meetings of the church with any degree of regularity. Only 50 per cent of those who could come just as well as not attend regularly. And here is what hurts—30 per cent of those who could come if they wanted to never come at all." That church which will walk up to such a mirror and face itself is to be commended. The church as a church recognizes that no service at all commensurate with its ability can be given under these conditions. As a remedy it proposes prayerful, personal work upon the part of the pastor and its officers. What doth it profit a church to lay claim to a large membership many of which neither attend its worship nor contribute to its work?

Have a Message

REV. JOHN WILLIAMS, Anglesea, Wales, gave a timely message to young ministers. It was in Welsh and was translated by Rev. D. R. Davies, of Berlin, Wis. The message of this Welsh preacher is that the message makes the sermon.

"Have a message—this is the very heart of a sermon, and God only can give it. You can get a truth, and a divine truth, and have no message. You can have a taste for and a desire to tell the truth and be nothing but an orator or a lecturer. A message makes a preacher. A taste for literature may strangle moral convictions, and the literateur, the poet, the philosopher and the theologian swallow the man. Speak to the souls of the people. Truths for the souls of the people are the truths of the gospel. The preacher must apply himself completely to these truths before he can speak them to a purpose. A man cannot apply himself completely to other things. Think of a teacher of geology. He cannot abandon himself to geology. The couch of geology is too cold and narrow for a soul to recline on it. But the gospel is able to awaken the whole man. The business of the preacher is not to speak opinions but to declare the counsel of God. He speaks to the people for God."

"Never Refused God Anything"

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE, looking back over a long life, said: "If I could tell you all, you would see how God has done all and I nothing. I have worked hard, very hard, that is all, and I have never refused God anything." "Never refused God anything"—there is the secret of the life of service she lived. She worked hard, very hard, but God had his way with her life. She worked hard but it was God working in her his will and through her his work. If our lives as Christians are not wholly a success, it would be well to test them by Florence Nightingale's test—"I have never refused God anything."

The Nations Have Sinned

THE Christian Century says: "There are four major, and deadly international sins that menace our future. The first of these is political injustice; the second is economic exploitation; the third is racial discrimination; the fourth is subservience to material gain. You can go into any one of the hundreds of developed and incipient danger spots in the world and find one or a combination of these sins at the root of all the trouble. In the Far East, for example, the black cloud that hovers over the next hundred years has been formed by all four."

Why I Believe in the Bible

The Bible is the one heart book of the ages—the Word of God to the sons of men. No man is educated who does not know the Bible.

By Samuel John Skevington

I AM a Bible Christian. I believe in the Bible because it works. It proves itself to be the Word of God to the soul of man, and just the word which a holy and loving God would inevitably speak to the soul of a sinful man.

The Acid Test

The acid test of the Bible is not higher criticism or historical criticism—the vital and ultimate test of experience. The Bible needs no defense; it needs only to be lived, and it will defend itself. Test it with the cry of an awakened guilty conscience in the hour of repentance craving the sense of forgiveness. Test it with the call of the soul wrestling with temptation as Jesus did in the wilderness. Test it with the longing of the heart for fellowship with the Eternal Unseen. Test it with the aspirations of life's better moments. Test it with the mystery of death's dark hour and the hunger of bereavement for a word of reassurance. Can the Bible stand that sort of test? If it can, it is eternally secure, as Gladstone called it, "the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture." And it can and does. It meets to the utmost the needs of the human heart. It works. It always works and works everywhere. Lay it up in any heart and it will always produce the same results. It is the one heart book of the ages, the Word of God to the sons of men. Said a man to his wife, after reading the Bible, "Wife, if this Book is right, we are wrong." He read more and then said, "Wife, if this Book is right, we are lost." He read still more and finally said, "Wife, if this Book is right, we may be saved." That is the heart of the Word of God to man, and a host of witnesses whom none can number, having put that blessed Word to the test of life, bear testimony with glad hallelujahs to the verity of its message. Yes, I am a Bible Christian.

A Good Thing

The psalmist says, "Thy Word have I laid up in my heart that I might not sin against thee."

"What the Bible Means to Me"

Confidence, courage, inspiration, hope, life. Plans and specifications for building character without which the earthly tabernacle can have no sure foundation and the superstructure no harmony.

—Corwin S. Shank.

Seattle, Wash.

Here are three good things, or perhaps it were better to say, a good thing in a good place for a good purpose, the one proper use of the Bible.

The "good thing" is what the psalmist calls, "thy Word," something which throughout the longest of the psalms, where this verse is found, he uses eight or nine synonyms to describe, but which, in the final analysis, is the revealed will of God as recorded in the sacred scriptures of his day.

It was even then a wonderful Bible, containing the Pentateuch, some of the historical books, a few of the prophets and some of the psalms, and it was very dear to the heart of those who knew its wondrous truth and its uplifting power. But compare even the later and fuller Bible that Jesus knew and loved with "the Word" as we have it today, with its superlative record of him who was "the word" and became flesh, the Living Word who said "I am the truth," and who uttered that truth in the speech of human life and death—life on the plane of spotless sinlessness, and death on the principle of redeeming sacrifice; a Bible containing all the treasures of the Old Testament plus the unfathomable riches of the New, with its fifth of Matthew and fifteenth of Luke and third of John and second of Acts and eighth of Romans and thirteenth and fifteenth of I Corinthians and third of Ephesians and eleventh of Hebrews and the Apocalypse of final victory. Here is no mere "ancient and influential literature," no mere compendium of the best and noblest of human thought; here is the "Word of God," the divine unveiling of the loving heart of God, the inspired revelation of the holy will and redeeming purpose of God.

A Bible Christian

A Bible Christian is not only a Bible student, but a Bible student plus—plus a life increasingly harmonized with the will of God as recorded in the Bible. Only so is it really true, as the psalmist says of the sacred writings, "more to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold."

I believe in the Bible not only as a sacred literature preserving for us the priceless findings of the best of men seeking after God, I believe in the Bible as a sacred literature containing for us the divine revelation of the unsearchable riches of the grace of God in Christ.

A Good Place

That is the "good thing," but the psalmist says he has laid up that good thing in a "good place." "Thy word have I laid up in MY HEART." The memory is an excellent place in which to store away the wealth of inspired wisdom. The galleries of the mind should be hung full of the beautiful pictures of Holy Scripture. No man is educated who does not know the Bible. The poetry and art and music of the masters cannot be understood without a knowledge of the Bible. But the mind is not the ultimate home of spiritual truth. Dealing with the moral issues of life, religious truth —"the Truth" as Jesus calls it—must pass through the halls of the intellect to the throne-room of the heart, the center of personality, where the eternal issues of life and character are settled, where God himself deals with the ultimates of the soul. Jesus never addresses himself merely to the minds of men. He knows that sin and righteousness are issues of the heart. When Nicodemus comes to argue and be instructed, he is sent away with the assurance that eternal life is not a matter of more or less knowledge, but of a new and a clean heart. Paul says "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." Jesus says, "If ye love me (the fellowship of the heart; not 'if ye know me'—the acquaintance of the mind) ye will keep my commandments." A man's real creed is not any system of doctrines into which he has systematized his religious thinking; it is only that much of truth which has gripped his heart and controls his life and conduct. I believe in the Bible because it fits the heart of man and because it meets the deepest needs of that heart in its longing for God and godliness which are instinctive to that heart.

The Good Purpose

And that leads us to think of the "good purpose" for which the psalmist laid up the Word in his heart, viz., "that I might not sin against thee." "Thy Word" is not a treasure to be laid up in an intellectual safe-deposit vault, but a vital revelation to be enthroned in the heart and inspire a life of righteousness.

Architectural plans are not drawn to show the client the drawing skill of the artist, but to be the guide of the workmen in the erection of the building. The plumb-line was not devised to demonstrate a vertical line, but to enable the builder to raise his wall straight. The mariner's compass is not a toy invented for the amusement of the children, but to point faithfully its t r e m b l i n g finger toward the north that the sailor might know and steer his course across the trackless deeps. And just so the Bible is truth revealed, not for the mere information of man, but for the salvation of his soul and the promotion of his godliness. "That I might not sin against Thee." Bible truth is intended to produce Bible Christians—"The sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." In Paraguay the Indians do not call the missionaries Christians, because they do not treat them as do the white traders of whom they have always thought as Christians; so they speak of the missionaries by a word which means "the men who go by the measure of the book." I believe in the Bible because when it is laid up in the heart it produces real Christ-like Christians. It works. Lay up the Word in the heart and human conduct will match divine law, man's deed will harmonize with God's thought, and the redeemed life will fulfill the Father's will.

The Place for the Bible

Vice-President Marshall once said, "If I were to have my way I would take the torch out of the hand of the statue of liberty, and, in its stead, place an open Bible." At first thought I said "amen" to his suggestion, but on second thought I determined, for my part, to leave the great image in New York harbor just as it is. The place for the Bible is not in the uplifted right hand; that is the place for the enlightening torch. But put the Bible where the psalmist put it, in the heart, that the torch may burn with a light that was never seen on land or sea. And if America is ever to fulfill the ideal of Bartholdi's great image of "Liberty enlightening the world," it must needs be that we shall lay up God's Word in our hearts, for so only can we "not sin against" him and be ourselves free with "the liberty of the glory of the children of God."

Los Angeles.

The Peril of the Empty Soul

But the unclean spirit, when he is gone out of the man, passed through waterless places, seeking rest and findeth it not. Then he saith I will return into my house whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.

JESUS knew the tragedy of the human soul. He understood the inner struggles which never appear on the surface. He knew also that moral defeat often comes because there is failure to realize the conditions of a victory. This man did not fail because he did not try. He failed because he did not know the meaning of triumph. It was the peril of the empty soul. As in the physical, so in the spiritual realm, nature abhors a vacuum. Evil was ousted only to return. The empty soul is not only a peril, but a temptation to the devil. A life must be filled with new motives if the old purposes are not to return. It is not enough to give up a bad habit; there must be the cultivation of a good one. In ceasing to curse you must begin to pray. With the prayer for the clean heart and the right spirit, there must go the supplication, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Reformation must bring transformation. You may civilize without saving. Men may make new circumstances, but new circumstances do not make new men. Material progress is of no avail unless it is accompanied by the redemption of the soul. Human nature is not stationary, but progressive. Negative goodness is not enough. The house of the human soul must be filled with the good and heavenly Spirit if the evil spirit is not to return.—A. T. Fowler.

A Prayer

By HENRY WARD BEECHER

WE pray that thou wilt bless those who attempt to fulfill the duties which thou didst thyself fulfill upon earth, by going about doing good.

May all who comfort the sorrowing be comforted themselves of God. May all who bear the torch of light be themselves enlightened. May all who lift up the lowly and encourage the despairing be themselves blessed of God.

The Tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamen

The spanning of thirty centuries backward may throw new light on Egyptian history

AGAIN Egypt, the land of the Nile, of plagues, of pyramids, of mystery and of mummies has come into the lime-light and has been occupying the front page of the daily press. In thought most of the reading world has spent much time of late in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings—a place more desolate than the name itself. It is a winding, wind-visited, sand-swept valley about five miles from the Nile and across the river from the site of ancient Thebes. When this spot was chosen as a burial place by Egyptian royalty of the seventeenth and eighteenth dynasties, it was hoped that its inaccessibility and its desolateness would safeguard it from robbers. How futile was this hope the world of today well knows.

The Abode of the Dead

The ancient Egyptians of wealth had reason for seeking an out-of-the-way place in which to put their dead. They had a peculiar problem to meet in this matter. Life after death in which the body of the earth earthy would be again tenanted by the spirit was the leading belief of the ancient Egyptian religion. Tombs were not considered as burial places for the last remains of a human being. They were thought of as abodes. The leading inscription upon the outside of these old tombs begs the passer-by to say a prayer for the inhabitants of the tomb.

Since these inhabitants, in the course of time, were to need their bodies again, it was essential that the bodies be preserved in such a state as to keep them habitable. Dust could not be allowed to return to dust. Hence, the mummies of Egypt.

Paradoxically speaking, the greatest ceremony of an Egyptian man's life was his funeral. Seventy-two days were given over to mourning, during which time the body was carefully embalmed, then swathed in numerous linen bandages dipped in preservative liquids. So well was this work done that after fifty centuries Egyptian mummies have been found in a well-preserved state. The linen-swathed forms were covered with a pasteboard casing made in a shape supposed to represent the deceased. This was enclosed in wood or stone and put away deep in a room of a tomb which was afterward sealed. The tomb was usually a room large enough to accommodate an entire family, and sometimes several generations. The construction of the tombs symbolize permanency; they are as firm as the rocks on which they stand.

Worldy Treasure

When these bodies were reanimated by their former spirits, it would be a deep humiliation to find lacking those appurtenances which graced the former life. To forfend any such embarrassment the ancient Egyptians gathered a man's treasures together and surrounded his mummified remains with them. Three thousand years is the period in which it was believed the body would lie in quiessence before receiving back its spirit and renewing life.

It is reckoned to be about that period of time since the tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamen (Too-unkh-amoun—broad a and divisions equally emphasized, is the way Egyptologists pronounce it), was sealed. Definite search for this tomb was begun seven years ago by Howard Carter, British Egyptologist, financed by Lord Carnarvon. It was located last November, but for several reasons the discovery was not at once made public. It was too big a thing to be hushed up, however. The discovery of kings' tombs will out. Of the several royal tombs left to search for, Tutankhamen's was the most important and stress was placed upon the finding of it. Now that it has been located and opened it is found to be of far greater moment than was dreamed of.

Disappointment in most cases has followed the opening of a newly discovered tomb by archaeologists, because too often it was only to find that vandals had preceded them and taken everything of worth. Upon entering the antechamber of Tutankhamen's tomb the middle of last February, it was seen that robbers had visited it at least once, but the surprising thing is that what was taken is scarcely to be missed as compared with what is left. Royal furniture, garments, chariots and ornaments have been found in unprecedented quantities and in an almost perfect state of preservation.

There are those who are not convinced that this is the tomb of the Pharaoh Tutankhamen. That it is merely a storehouse of precious objects is one of the latest opinions advanced by Senor Schiaparelli, the Italian Egyptologist. He, with some of the French Egyptologists, believes that Tutankhamen's tomb was destroyed by his successor, Armais, and that the treasures found were put there either by Armais or were put there by the Tutankhamen faction to save them from destruction.

The Unbroken Seals

Dr. James Henry Breasted, professor of Egyptology and oriental history in the University of Chicago, is in Luxor, Egypt. In an examination of the sealed door of the inner tomb, which is of solid masonry, he found it to be covered from top to bottom with seals made by impressions before the hardening of the masonry. There are more than 150 of them. These unbroken seals convince Dr. Breasted that the body of Pharaoh Tutankhamen lies undisturbed in the sarcophagus beyond the sealed door.

Among the treasures found in the antechamber which throw new light on the old Egyptians are statues, the charm and grace of which are equal to anything produced by the Greeks. This sculpture work represents the revolution in art and religion which preceded Tutankhamen, and in which ancient art reached the highest level before the Greeks.

So rich is the inner chamber that it is doubtful if robbers have ever entered here. If they had it is inconceivable that they would not have returned. Words are futile things in a description of anything so gorgeous. There is a great cubicle twelve feet high, sixteen feet long and twelve feet wide, covered with many layers of finest gold-leaf and studded with all the precious stones of Pharaoh Tutankhamen's period. Inside this is another equally rich canopy, gold-leafed and bejewelled, while between the two canopies are countless jewels. The whole gleams like a mountain of newly minted gold pieces.

In the room is a pile of precious jewels, another of scarabs, a jar of amulets, the four canopic (funeral) jars—but a mere enumeration of contents seem inconsequent in the face of that mass of riches and gorgeousness. To have the centuries thus spanned, is an opportunity, however, for the modern world to glean some idea of the wealth of ancient Egypt and to have additional light thrown on the peoples of that time.

Magnificent and Pathetic

The scene has in it something of pathos in spite of its magnificence, perhaps because of it. The Italians have a proverb that the graveclothes have no pockets. But the Egyptians refused to be parted from their treasures in death, and did their utmost to take them with them.

One of the most interesting theories the records in the tomb may confirm or explode is that advanced by Arthur Weigall, former inspector-general of antiquities to the Egyptian government and one of the best known Egyptologists, that Tutankhamen was the pharaoh who oppressed the children of Israel and whose army, pursuing the Israelites at the time of the exodus, is declared in Biblical accounts to have been engulfed by the Red Sea.

The tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamen is being resealed for the present. Later, possibly next fall, it will be reopened.

The Young Moses

THIS Egypt was a weapon to his hand,
This life was buoyant air, and his the eagle's plume.
For one measureless moment this vision moved and glittered,
Rushing by . . . .
Master of men he knew himself; he thrilled;
There was an empire at his feet.

But overhead, a God.. . . .
Implacable divinity that, as he looked, was of a sudden manifest
In all the burning stars. . . .
Relentless, searching spirit,
Cruel holiness that smote him with the agony of love,
Stern sweetness piercing to the soul,
Silence articulate that turned the universe to one unspoken word,
Violent serenity that plucked at his roots of being. . . .
And a voice that answered him before he questioned it. . . . .

For one eternal instant Moses stood,
The cup of empire lifted to his lips. . . .

And then. . . descended from the temple's roof,
And took his slow way through the shadowed town
Unto the quarter where an outcast people and oppressed
Labored beneath the lash
And put their lives and hopes into bricks because there was no straw,
And cast his lot, in with those sickly slaves,
To lead them, if he might, from bondage.
—Don Marquis in "Poems and Portraits," Published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

What the Increase Accomplished

A statement by Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo and Treasurer G. B. Huntington

FIGURES are not always uninteresting. They sometimes tell a wonderful story. Such a story is wrapped up in the figures indicating the receipts of the Foreign Mission Society for the past six years.

A Substantial Increase in Receipts

The receipts of the three years, 1917-1919, were increased by 100 per cent during the years 1920-22. This remarkable increase came about through the efforts of the laymen's victory campaign, the greatly augmented giving of the churches through the New World Movement and the generosity of friends who made large contributions during the latter period apart from the New World Movement.

The figures are as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Receipts 1917-1919 | $3,098,811.42 |
| Receipts 1920-1922 | 6,292,286.80 |
| Increase | 3,193,475.38 |

This increase was sent by God at a time when our work was halting for lack of the equipment made necessary to follow up the triumphs of previous years; when the world war had left Europe desolate and hungry; when a new Protestant reformation in Europe called insistently to American Baptists for aid; when the rapid and startling rise in the cost of doing business and in living expenses the world over rendered greatly increased expenditures necessary in carrying on our regular work everywhere. One shrinks from contemplating what might have been the result to our world-wide work had not increased resources been forthcoming at this time.

Designated Gifts and Property Equipment

No attempt will here be made to give the minor details of expenditure but merely to indicate the board uses to which the increase was put. More than a third of the entire increase came to us in gifts designated for special purposes. Over the application of these funds, amounting to more than a million dollars the society had, of course, no control other than to use them as the donors specified. Baptists responded nobly to the relief appeals both for Europe and China and designated gifts poured in to the sum of $480,713. General contributions through the victory campaign provided buildings and equipment which had long been sorely needed on many fields. These included the science building; the Evanston dormitory and another similar dormitory erected at Shanghai Baptist College; Scott Hall and Hovey dormitory for student work in connection with Waseda University at Tokyo, Japan; the Goddard Memorial Church at Shaohsing, China; a church building at Chengtu, West China; a school and hospital at Dinghae, China; a dormitory for boys at Bacolod, P. I.; a surgical ward and equipment for the Clough Memorial Hospital at Ongole, India. These and other additions in material equipment speak loudly of large possible advance, and may be translated by the reader into terms of the real spiritual achievement which will flow from them in coming days. The total of these and other designated gifts for buildings and equipment accounts for more than half a million dollars of the increase, to be exact, $562,555.22.

The principle of self-determination growing out of the world war obtained not only in political realms but also in the spiritual, and an inspiring chapter in evangelical history is being written in the new Protestant reformation now taking place in Europe. Unparalleled opportunities presented themselves in Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Latvia, Esthonia and other European countries. The need would not be denied and the increase of expenditure in our Baptist evangelical work in Europe amounts to $302,161.

During the war period the missionary force on all our fields was greatly depleted. It was not until 1920 that we were able seriously to grapple with the problem of the reduced force, but seventy-eight families have been sent out during the period 1920-1922, which has brought up our staff of missionaries to a little beyond its pre-war strength. This accounts for a substantial part of the increase, $213,512.34.

Many other buildings were required besides those which were provided for by designated funds. During the world-war period the difficulty of securing materials as well as reduced personnel had well-nigh brought to a standstill the important task of providing residences, schools, churches and hospitals, and had even made impossible in many cases the needed repairs to buildings already erected. It was needful, therefore, to make large appropriations from funds received from other sources. The amount of increase over the previous triennium was $299,143.11.

The High Cost of Living

The soaring cost of living bore heavily upon our devoted missionaries who are giving their lives to the great world task without remuneration beyond a mere provision for the ordinary needs of life. Increases in salary rates to meet rapid rise in prices in all missionary lands became imperative and account for a substantial part of the total increase in the three-years' period, $538,650.02.

It was not only the missionaries themselves who felt the pinch of rising prices, however, but their faithful native associates. Every phase of missionary endeavor was carried on at the cost of increasing expenditure. Field appropriations called therefore for increased outlay amounting to $287,609.47.

The increase just mentioned includes but few instances of real extension. Advance on the Kengtung field across the border of China and the establishment of a new station at Jamshedpur in Bengal-Orissa are the notable exceptions.

Even before the three-year period, 1920-1922, losses on account of unfavorable exchange rates had become familiar to us, but the peak was reached during the period in question and an increase in expenditure for this purpose was required over and above the large expenditures of the previous three-years' period amounting to $124,717.25.

Smaller items of increase include passages of missionaries, upkeep of property, Oriental students preparing in America for Christian service in their own land, support of retired missionaries and maintenance of homes for missionaries' children, aggregating the sum of $178,360.51.

It is worthy of especial note that while foreign-field expenditures have absorbed more than 96 per cent of the increase, home expenditures have received less than 4 per cent. Of the total increase in home expenditure more than half is due to interest on borrowed money, $59,522.02.

Other increases include the transfer and establishment of the offices in New York, and amount to $55,961.47.

The Accumulated Deficit

The details given above will serve to indicate the mighty problems with which the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society has had to struggle during the years in question. It should be borne in mind that this same period has been characterized by the necessity

What a Boy Should Know

RECENTLY a questionnaire was sent to nineteen men in mature life with varied business and professional experiences. The replies to questions concerning what these men wished they had known before they were twenty-one revealed the following points in the summary of what a young man ought to know:

1. What he wants to do for a living.
2. That his health after thirty depends largely on how he lived before he was thirty.
3. How to take care of his money.
4. The advantage of being neatly and sensibly dressed.
5. That habits are mighty hard to break after twenty-one.
6. That things most worth while require time, patience and hard work.
7. That the harvest depends on the seed sown; sow wild oats and one is likely to reap tares of bitterness and unhappiness.
8. That a thorough education pays in the long run.
9. That education should not stop with the school years.
10. That father is not such an old fogy as he may at times seem.
11. That mother is generally the greatest practical idealist.
12. That the doors of opportunity in this country are still open.—Educational Digest.

for drastic readjustment in well-nigh all commercial business enterprises. New elements of difficulty, unforeseen factors of expense, world events of major importance, uncontrollable rise in costs have been contended with. It is not surprising therefore that our society finds itself struggling under the greatest debt in its history.

It should be borne in mind that of the increased receipts noted, the sum of $446,318.21 had to be applied immediately to the cancellation of a deficit incurred in the preceding year on account of the carrying over of the victory campaign conducted by the laymen. When this amount is deducted from the total increase of the period, the additional sum available to be applied on the increased items of expenditure noted throughout these pages is reduced to $2,747,157.17.

Reasons for the Deficit

The major portion ($808,023.23) of the present deficit was incurred during the first year of the three-year period under discussion. It was due to the fact that the victory campaign was protracted until December, 1919, and the fact that the usual close-of-the-year campaign for funds was omitted in order not to interfere with the preparations for the New World Movement subscription effort which came the last of April and first of May, 1920. Two other factors contributed to the unfavorable situation: First, the peak of unfavorable exchange occurred compelling the society to appropriate $250,000 for this item alone; and, second, the Northern Baptist Convention decided to change the date of closing of the fiscal year, thus adding a thirteenth month.

The additional month's expenditures amounted to $125,000 to $150,000. The alarming deficit at the close of the year, amounting to over $800,000, led the society to adopt a conservative policy of expenditure and its budget was underspent by a considerable sum. This year brought the largest receipts (so far) on the New World Movement, and it was possible to reduce the deficit to $689,459.51. The next year a conservative policy again made possible a substantial saving in the budget approved by the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, but unfortunately the income fell off in such a large degree that the deficit on May 1, 1922, was increased to $914,262.50.

How It May Be Liquidated

This situation gave great concern to the board of managers of the society, and immediate steps were taken to meet it. In anticipation of and in harmony with the advice of the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention the society planned and put into effect a cut of 25 per cent on the total budget for the year 1922-1923, and in building its budget arranged for a reduction of the debt by $150,000 in case full expectancy of receipts is realized. A continuation of this policy has been approved.

The increased receipts of the past three years did much to enable us to meet the need for relief in China and Europe, to follow God's leading in the wonderful opening of European fields, to provide sorely needed equipment on many of our far Eastern and British India fields, to reinforce greatly the depleted missionary ranks and to meet the cost of exchange and the unprecedented rise in expenses of living and work throughout the world. It is important to bear in mind that more than one-third of the increase could not be applied to the regular operating expenditures because it was received in funds designated for relief work, building and equipment. The remainder of the increase, large as it was, proved insufficient to meet the increased cost of carrying on the work. Hence the deficit.

The Future

The accumulation of the deficit has called a halt to the advance of the work. It lies wholly within the power of the churches to determine by the measure of their gifts the period during which the work on the fields must halt and the extent to which, when the present burden is lightened, advance may be made to meet the challenge afforded by the success already achieved and to enter the doors of opportunity providentially opened.

What the "Cut" Means

Letter from Miss Mabelle Culley, Swatow, China, to Miss McVeigh, Jan. 13, 1923

IN compliance with the vote of conference concerning a letter giving you some idea of the meaning of the awful cut in work appropriations, I shall try to bring to you some of the questions we are facing While there have been many encouragements through the year, the problem of how to continue work on the reduced appropriations is demanding our best thought and time.

We were first told to prepare for a cut of 25 per cent, but when we were notified that Miss Senn's salary was to be included in the gross amount, it compelled us to make a cut of just about three-eighths. In order to deal justly with the individual sections, request was sent to each of the woman's board workers to state what the cut would mean in her own work. On examining these replies, we find many of our new workers facing the question of language study, and the accompanying journeys into the country. When we consider that alone we ask how soon are these young women to be prepared to undertake the work that lies before them of reaching the Chinese through the medium of Chinese, for except in the central stations, where English is being taught, the Chinese can only be reached through their own dialect. Therefore, that this great essential be provided, certain other phases of work must be dropped in order that money be allowed for the language teacher.

Those who are carrying the burden of directing the Bible women and teachers are facing the fact that some of these workers must be dropped, because of the lack of funds. In some places the work can be continued, only till the Chinese New Year (Feb. 16), some till the spring months. There is no appropriation for the further plans. How are we to carry the Gospel message to these out-of-the-way places, especially now after the opening has been made in many hearts through the distress of the typhoon and in our efforts to meet some of the immediate physical needs every available worker is needed? This is emphasized as we see the results of the two missionaries who have been released from the regular program of work, to enter entirely into this relief work.

The same thing is true of the hospitals. With the amount of appropriations in hand there is not sufficient to pay the corps of workers that is necessary to man the hospitals. Are patients to be refused entrance for the treatment they are needing? Are hospital doors to be closed? Are medicines to be kept from those devastated districts where thousands of people are suffering intensely as the results of the typhoon? What of the schools? One after another come the reports that with the appropriations for this year, doors must be kept closed. Some can continue only till the Chinese New Year, others can keep open till the spring months—the middle of the term. Are we to tell teachers at the beginning of this new term that we cannot invite them to become teachers with us? Are we to do without these Christian leaders amongst hundreds of students who are waiting here to be trained; Are these students to be returned to their homes just now when they are in places where they could receive the training to become the leaders so much needed in this great land? Just because of this great call for Christian leaders here in China today and our important share in it, whenever anyone is asked, "What part of the work will you be dropping first?" the answer comes, "We will have to drop the lower grades first, and hold as many of the upper grades as possible with the lower appropriations." This is one of the sorest experiences that we must meet, for we realize how often it is true that once we can get hold of the little child and teach her, the teaching is carried even farther, for many of these little ones have been the means of bringing the older people in the home, and sometimes whole families into a knowledge of our Saviour. In many cases the missionary realizing what this awful need means, in the peculiar way in her own station, takes from her own salary in order to continue the work a little longer. But where hundreds and thousands of dollars are needed—what then?

We are glad to report the interest and cooperation which is being exhibited on the part of our Chinese workers and friends and students. In one school where the highest rate of tuition is asked of any of our girls' schools in South China, when the announcement was made that each girl, whether she was paying the lowest or highest rate of tuition must bring with her upon entering school the next term an extra five dollars, there was not one girl in that whole student body who refused, even where this has meant hard extra work for the girl herself to earn that extra money. More than that, one of the girls, who is paying the highest rate of tuition, has offered her services in helping to teach, in her free time, some of the lower class subjects, thus avoiding the expense of an extra teacher for that class. We are surely praying that, through all this experience, there may be born in our Chinese community the sense of a new responsibility in sharing the financial burden of the work and with such contributions as they can bring, we are hoping to continue some school and hospital work further into the year than we had at first expected. However, we must plainly face this fact, that while education for boys is always honored in China, and hence their education more easily provided; even yet there are many, many places where the girls are still re-

(Continued on page 191)

A Visit to Central America

A country of picturesque scenery but low in moral and religious conditions

THE region collectively known as Central America is one of the most interesting portions of Latin-America. It embodies five independent republics, and the British colony of Honduras. These five Central-American republics have much in common as regards their physical formation and inhabitants; although each has its own individuality and is extremely jealous of its rights. Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua cover respectively areas of 48,000, 46,000, and 49,000 square miles; the smaller republics of El Salvador and Costa Rica cover 7,200 and 23,000 square miles respectively; British Honduras, 7,562 square miles.

The whole of Central America was formerly united in one political area under the rule of Spain. Spanish rule came to an end in 1821. Since then attempts have been made again to consolidate the region politically, but these have not been carried out. The geographical position of Central America is one of extreme importance. Many travelers and financiers are of the opinion that the whole region, including the Antilles and West India Islands, may in the future become the center of an increased maritime and commercial movement.

The Population

The total population of the Central-American republics is less than 6,000,000 people, distributed approximately thus: Guatemala, 2,500,000; Honduras, 600,000; Nicaragua, 740,000; Salvador, 1,500,000; and Costa Rica, 450,000. By reason of the ignorance of the masses of Indians in certain regions, and largely through fear of military conscription, or taxation, accurate statistics cannot be obtained.

In Guatemala 60 per cent of the population are pure Indians; the remainder mestizo with a small number of whites. In Nicaragua the population is largely of a composite character, formed by the union of the original Indians, Spaniards and Negro slaves. Intermarriage of immigrants of all nations has produced a half-caste type with blue eyes and fair hair, an uncommon type for a Latin-American country.

Salvador is the most thickly populated of all the republics. The mestizos or ladinos, as the mixed race is commonly called, form less than one-half the total; the Indians, 50 per cent; and the whites and foreigners, 8 per cent. There is a small proportion of Negroes.

In Costa Rica the proportion of Spanish blood is greater than in any of the other republics, but the mestizos form the larger proportion of the inhabitants. The native Indians number between four and five thousand. They are of a quiet, docile nature, and dwell in stockaded encampments, in a savage and un-Christianized state. There are about 8,000 Europeans in the country.

In all of the Central-American countries the birth rate is generally a high one, and the death rate low; although there is little or no immigration the population tends rapidly to increase. In Guatemala and Nicaragua, notwithstanding the constant political unrest, the increase in population is very marked. The high excess of births over deaths is a result of the naturally favorable condition of soil and climate, added to the native woman's disposition towards child-bearing, characteristic generally of the Latin-American people. A large proportion of the births are illegitimate, amounting to 30 per cent of the whites in Guatemala, and 60 per cent of mestizos and Indians.

Education in the Central-American countries is generally extremely backward; and in certain regions it is practically non-existent. In Guatemala 80 per cent of the population can neither read nor write, and the proportion varies in the other republics.

Conducting an ideal republic is a delicate matter. We ourselves have been in preparation ever since the signing of the Magna Charta, and some make bold to say that we haven't quite "attained." Four centuries of Roman Catholic servitude and priestly dominion make poor soil for the sudden growth of democracy. We too often read Latin-American events through American spectacles, and unjustly criticize their governmental proceedings, severities and irregularities. Many of our misconceptions arise from the fact that their laws, derived through the channels of Rome and Spain, are modeled, upon the Justinian Code while ours come from the very different and freer Anglo-Saxon system. But their greatest departure from ideal results comes from their heavy inheritance of the worst possible concepts and conditions from the former age. Great progress, however, is being made. Their leaders are doing the best they can under the circumstances, and they deserve our prayerful sympathy and moral and religious cooperation.

Educational and moral standards are being raised. Religious liberty and that of the press is steadily growing. The inhuman sport of the bull fight has disappeared before the craze for baseball, and other healthy and legitimate sports, in the introduction of which the evangelical pastors, missionaries and teachers have had a leading part. Many agencies which make for a trained, robust, healthy, normal manhood and womanhood are rendering the finest kind of service.

The Great Issue

All political issues in Catholic countries fade into the shadow of a single great fundamental one, which is "Shall the Roman Catholic church control the government?" The Roman Catholic church consistently and persistently declares for the union of church and state, and that the church shall control the state as the soul controls the body. (Great Encyclicals of Leo 13, p. 115—Benziger Bros.) All Catholic peoples have tried out the plan to desperation and are fighting it, while the church is striving to maintain it. The politics of Catholic countries will never be understood until they are read frankly in the light of this fact.

Every doubly holy religious feast day is characterized by unusual drunkenness and numerous fights, casualties and fatalities—all serious, for arms are used, never fists. Doors are made enormously heavy; windows are made with iron bars like jails and asylums and penitentiaries: and there's a reason. Take Guatemala, for instance. It is reported that in the year before the war there were 56,200 saloons licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, giving one saloon to every thirty-six inhabitants, counting men, women and children. And yet the moonshine consumption of the stuff was estimated to be fully equal to the legitimate trade. To call a man a liar compliments him; to insult him, call him "shameless" in the sense of low bred. Nevertheless, while we deplore the low moral average, we must remember that it has legitimate causes. In spite of great disadvantages and handicaps, slow but sure improvement is everywhere noticeable, and some of the finest, brightest, cleanest and most lovable people on the top of God's earth are to be found in the Central-American republics.

Americanization

BY CHARLES HATCH SEARS

It may not be too late for Americans to lift to its true meaning a term made hateful to a multitude of strangers within our gates by mistaken government policy during war days.

Americanization is the process of national unification on the basis of ideals commonly accepted as American.

What ideals have bound America into a degree of spiritual unity?

The recognition of individual worth regardless of race, creed or station and the recognition of equal standing before the law.

The right of every man and woman to a voice in the policies of government and to a choice in their representatives.

Respect for woman, opening to her every opportunity of life and service.

Respect for personality as the richest gift of a wise creator who delights in infinite variation.

Recognition of the home—its privacy which may not be violated without due process of law, its sacred and tender associations.

The recognition of the individual's right to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience and to formulate his faith according to his own experience reason or accepted authorities.

The recognition of the right of the individual to choose his own life aims and to enjoy the fruits of his own labor—an ideal only partially attained.

The recognition of the right of every child to receive at public charge the basis of a liberal education.

The recognition of the dignity of labor—service of brawn of skill and technique, enriched by every personal attribute and faculty and resource.

Americanization is a spiritual process. Like Christianity it is not advanced by the sword. Force defeats its aims.

One generation cannot guarantee national unification for the next, however great a heritage it may leave.

Our fathers attained a national unity in their day—let us in ours. Americanization is a process requiring the appropriation of new ideals as well as the assimilation of new racial elements.

If we would think and act together we must have a common medium of communication. Teaching English is the A, B, C, of Americanization.

The best Americanization is teaching children the best of America.

The Forge of Vulcan

THE New Hebrides Islands are mainly of volcanic origin; and the line of volcanic activity which runs from Japan to Mount Erebus in the South Antarctic, passes through the islands, its course there being marked by three active volcanoes on Tanna, Lopevi and Ambrim. The Tanna volcano is the Stromboli of the Pacific, and is the great lighthouse of the Southern Seas. Like a revolving light, it bursts out every three or four minutes with great brilliance. Three hundred miles northward is Mount Benbow on the island of Ambrim, whose eruptions are usually spasmodic and irregular.

The medical mission station on Ambrim was situated in one of the beauty spots of the New Hebrides. Under the superintendency of Dr. John T. Bowie, a wise and capable surgeon and a devoted missionary, the hospital had become a center of busy life and activity. But little did the staff and patients imagine that underneath the calm and luxuriance of eternal nature the forge of Vulcan was being set up, and that they were really living over a slumbering volcano. On the day when the eruption took place the wards of the hospital were full of patients.

A Volcano at Work

In the center of the island, about twelve miles from the hospital, stood the active volcano, Mount Benbow, its lofty cone rising from the center of an extensive ash plain, 2000 feet above sea level. For untold centuries Mount Benbow had been at work, puffing out steam which at night glowed with a bright, intermittent light. There was the pillar of smoke by day and the pillar of fire by night. So accustomed had the natives become to its presence that the frequent outbursts occasioned no fear. They cultivated their gardens up to the edge of the ash plain near the base of the volcano. But all unknown to the natives, and to the British and French settlers who had their homes in Ambrim, there stretched from east to west a belt of volcanic fracture, which was studded with a series of extinct craters, occasional puffs of steam being the only indication of the pent-up fire beneath.

In December, 1913, the age-long sleep of these extinct craters was broken, and the imprisoned giants awoke to life. From numerous thunder-throated vents the island was rent and torn by convulsive explosions. The outburst was heralded by a series of earthquake shocks which increased in frequency until the solid earth reeled and tottered. The hospital buildings rocked like a ship at sea; the natives in their picturesque mode of speech, saying that Ambrim danced. Then, from the newly formed vents, was seen to rise, dark as the blackest London fog, a dense cloud which shot up like a pillar and spread out in all directions like a gigantic mushroom. In a short time ash and cinders began to fall, making a noise like hailstones and smothering Ambrim and the adjacent islands in a thick layer of volcanic ash.

From the mission house on the neighboring island of Paama—twenty miles distant—we obtained an unobstructed view of the outbreak. During the day immense volumes of smoke could be seen hanging over the island of Ambrim, but the natives of Paama thought that a bush fire was raging; but towards evening the atmosphere cleared, and the approach of darkness removed all doubts, revealing one of the most awful and one of the most magnificent sights that it is possible for the eye of man to behold. Over an area of ten miles the earth seemed to have opened up, and out of this huge fissure tongues of living flame were shooting up into the sky. In one place, which seemed to be the center of the disturbance, six volcanoes had burst out within a short distance of each other, and out of these six furnaces pillars of fire were leaping. The entire district was illuminated, and the inhabitants of Paama and the surrounding isles beheld a spectacle such as had never been seen before in the memory of living men. Rivers of molten lava were flowing from the newly-formed craters, and so great was the flood of this liquid fire that no single channel could carry it. High up on the mountain side the lava rivers divided, and in separate channels flowed in their destructive courses to the sea. From the mission house on Paama the whole course of the Port Vato flow, from the crater to sea, could be clearly defined fifteen miles away. In the darkness, winding among the hills, the track of the red-hot lava was like the trail of a serpent. One can imagine, better than describe, the kind of cauldron that was formed when the enormous mass of red-hot lava mingled with the waters of the ocean. An Aurora Borealis of shooting stars—really masses of lava at white heat—could be seen leaping and jumping continuously; and to such a height was the column of steam shot up that it seemed as if a new volcano had burst on the seashore. During the night the six volcanoes stood out clear and distinct, presenting a magnificent spectacle. Outbursts continued without intermission during the entire night; and with every explosion enormous masses of molten lava—red, white and glistening—were hurled to a great height. Some of the glowing missiles fell back into the crater; but the others, thick and fast as snowflakes, fell on the upper reaches of the cones, maintaining an incessant fusillade, and forming a display of fireworks such as is given to few mortals to behold. As night wore on, the awful fight waxed hotter and hotter; the explosions became louder and more frequent, until it seemed as if the ground on Paama was about to open. The sight was truly magnificent, but the thought that the rivers of lava, in their destructive courses, might be overrunning the native villages that lay scattered around the base of the mountain, made the display far from attractive.

Nature Seemed to Reel

A heavy sea on the beach of Paama prevented an immediate departure; but as soon as our motor-boats could be launched we set off to the rescue, and set off with all possible speed for the hospital district, where the people were in the greatest danger. The journey down the Ambrim coast was fearsome in the extreme. A heavy pall of livid smoke lay over the island, ash and cinders were falling all around, and the sea was covered with floating debris and pumice stone. Several volcanoes were belching out near the sites of villages. At intervals tremendous explosions occurred, when all nature seemed to reel. But what a shock of surprise and horror we sustained when on rounding Craig Cove Point we saw a volcano belching out from the hospital grounds! To approach anywhere near was impossible. The sea, all around, was boiling hot, and an island had been thrown up in front of the place where the mission station stood. Running out to sea we overtook a boat of refugees, from whom we learned what, alas! was but too apparent—the destruction of the hospital, and the loss of many people in the inland villages, who had been surrounded and trapped by the lava flows. Fortunately they were also able to report the rescue and escape of the hospital staff and patients to the island of Melekula. From them later we got the story of their marvelous deliverance. All night they had watched the fire and the erupting volcanoes, never dreaming their lives were in danger, not knowing that the line of volcanic activity which ran through the island cut right through the hospital grounds. The erupting volcanoes followed this line of weakness, and every few miles a fresh volcano burst out, until in the early morning, twelve hours after the first outbreak, the glow of the advancing fire could be seen immediately behind the hills which encircled the mission station. Hastily the patients were being moved to boats, when suddenly an inferno burst out within 500 yards of the hospital. The boat was shoved off into a boiling sea, the crew pulling with might and main. They had gone but a short distance when the earth reeled with a great thunder, and looking back the doctor saw the fragments of his house and hospital hurled into the air. A volcano had burst out in the middle of the hospital grounds, and from the place where the hospital stood a column of compressed steam was shot up with such pro-

Journeying

By Ernest O. Sellers

FATHER, we would come today
From the paths that lead astray
And deceive;
We who thought our way the best,
Unto thee we come for rest,
Wilt receive?

Over mountain, land and sea,
Travel-stained we come to thee;
We return
From the busy marts of trade,
Fortunes lost and fortunes made,
All we spurn.

Peace of soul and rest of mind,
This in thee alone we find;
God of love.
By thy grace to us impart
Life, of thyself a part,
From above.

Father, take each erring child,
Home returning from the wild
Moor and lea.
To thy bosom hold him fast,
From sin's presence free at last,
Safe with thee.

digious velocity that in less than a minute it had risen 20,000 feet above the level of the crater, filling the atmosphere with dust and ash and cinders.—Maurice Frater in "Midst Volcanic Fires," published by the Pilgrim Press.

Columbia and Yale

By George E. Burlingame

IT is an axiom of our times that the intellectual and moral leadership of the nation is to come largely from the student body of our universities.

It is obvious therefore that the intellectual and moral progress of the nation is very largely conditioned by the teachers who have the task of training the future leaders of the nation.

The spirit and influence of a university is itself vitally affected by the character and ideals and principles of its president. His convictions and his teachings and his example are potent to a high degree in shaping the character and ideals and principles of the graduates of his institution.

The president of Columbia University delivered an address before the State Bar Association of Ohio on Jan. 26, in the course of which he denounced the eighteenth amendment and declared that it could never be enforced. He is further reported as saying as follows:

"The situation with regard to the eighteenth amendment is even worse, because the revolt against it is not confined to men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness in one section alone, but is nation-wide. It will not do to attempt to silence these persons by abuse or by catch phrases and formulas.

"These men and women dissent entirely from the grounds upon which the case for the eighteenth was rested; and they regard its provisions and those of the statutes based upon it as forcible, an immoral and tyrannical invasion of their private life and personal conduct.

"No one who is familiar with the practical workings of our political system would expect either the fifteenth or the eighteenth amendment to be repealed within measurable time. So far as one can see, therefore, we are shut up to the alternative of their attempted enforcement by soldiers, and police and special agents, and detectives and spies, or to their abrogation over a great part of the land by local intitiative and common consent. Either alternative is humiliating and degrading."

The president of Yale University delivered the baccalaureate sermon at that institution last June, in the course of which he said:

"It can hardly be doubted that in the United States at least the violation of law has never been so general nor so widely condoned. That is a fact which strikes at the very heart of our system of government, and the young man entering upon his active career must decide whether he too will condone and even abet such disregard of law, or whether he will set his face firmly against this course. The effect upon his own character of the decision which he makes, as well as upon the community in which he lives, is of the most critical importance."

When we reflect upon the far-reaching consequences of an attitude to law and to the constitution such as President Butler seems to excuse if not implicitly accept, we are inclined to question if America is safe under the moral and intellectual leadership of those who share his spirit and his convictions. To assert that a constitutional amendment ratified by forty-six states and sustained by state enforcement acts enacted by an equal number, is "an immoral and tyrannical invasion of their private life," and can never be enforced, "no matter at what expenditure of money or effort," seems hardly calculated to inspire in college youth that respect for authority and submission to law without which America cannot abide as a free nation. President Angell of Yale well says of such defiance of authority, "This is a fact which strikes at the very heart of our system of government."

President Butler insists that the eighteenth amendment "is now making and seems likely long to make for lawlessness in American life." This fallacy, a cherished talking point of those who dislike the deliberate and decisive and overwhelming judgment of the American people against the liquor traffic, was exposed in an editorial comment in the New York Times (Nov. 18) under the heading, "Revelation More than Manufacture":

"Now it is the income tax that is charged with having made us a nation of liars. The eighteenth amendment already has been accused of making us a nation of lawbreakers. But are these indictments well founded? Would it not be nearer the truth if the lying and the lawbreaking must be admitted, to say that there has been, not making, but revealing?

"Moral natures are not so easily changed, and what we now are in actuality we were in potentiality before prohibition or income taxes, and a searcher of hearts would say that we now are no worse than we were before, and no better then than we are now."

President Butler's statement that under the eighteenth amendment we are shut up to two alternatives, either of which "is humiliating and degrading," seems somewhat abrupt and precipitate; and his Columbus address seems to warrant the inference that of these two degrading alternatives, he inclines to the second, which he defines as "their abrogation (he refers to the fifteenth and eighteenth amendments) over a great part of the land by local initiative and common consent."

If one of President Butler's students, sharing his attitude toward the constitution and the laws, should ever attain the presidency of the United States (for which office Dr. Butler has himself been mentioned) how could he qualify for the position? The constitution requires him to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed"; and "before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the constitution of the United States."

We recur to the unequivocal words in which Pres. James R. Angell challenges the student body of Yale:

"The young man entering on his active career must decide whether he too will condone and even abet such disregard of law, or whether he will set his face firmly against this course. The effect upon his own character of the decision which he makes, as well as upon the community in which he lives, is of the most critical importance."

One fails to detect in this noble ideal of citizenship any element either humiliating or degrading. President Angell has discounted and discredited the dichotomy of President Butler. America is not shut up to his two "humiliating and degrading" alternatives. The common consent of forty-six states has approved the principle of prohibition; and the police power of the states and the executive authority of the president of the United States are the constitutional agencies for the application of that principle. If university presidents and newspaper editors and sworn officials will unite in advising the people that they have no alternative but to obey the laws or suffer punishment for their violation, America will be relieved of both painful "humiliation" and deplorable "degrada-

The Trend of Reading

By G. W. Chamberlin of the University of Chicago Press

Looking over the list of our sales of religious books we have found one very decided fact, that is, there is a continually increasing demand for studies of Jesus. Our books in the religious education series covering the life of Jesus have gone out in larger quantities than those on any other subject. The books discussing Jesus and his teaching in relation to the present day are continually called for.

Another interesting evidence of the trend of religious thinking is the large sale that we find for books on religious education in the home. This is a phase of modern religious education that seems more practical to many people than the more complicated problems of the Sunday school and its curriculum, and parents are undertaking new responsibilities in connection with the religious education of their own children.

So far as the books in religious education as a group are considered their sale is steady and rising, but not in a hectic fashion. People are looking for new methods and still need to be reminded that material is just as important as method, but intelligence in this field is growing continually.

Concerning your question as to the controversy between the so-called "fundamentalists" and "modernists" we have not specially emphasized it in our program of publications. Our own judgment is that the modernists prefer something which is not controversial but constructive and are looking for religious books at the highest price. On the other hand, the fundamentalists are so perfectly certain of their own ground that they do not care to read anything more profound than Mr. Bryan, whose book has undoubtedly been one of the best sellers in the religious field.

The denominational press is doing a great work in its generous comments upon books not only published by its own press, but by all presses and by its occasional addition of its splendid discussion of books to its regular book review column.

tion" to which the nation is now subject because "men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness" persist in condoning and abetting disregard of law. It is surely reasonable to expect from people so intelligent and so sensitive, a frank recognition of the fact that ours is a government in which the laws, having been constitutionally enacted, by the people, shall be respected and obeyed by all the people who claim a right to live under the protection of American institutions. "Obedience to law is liberty."

Dynamite—Handle with Care

By "Chemist"

FOLLOWING the Armistice, the casualties in Northern France were frightfully large owing to the unexploded missiles lying about or buried in the soil. Little children playing in the rubbish heaps of ruined cities and farmers plowing their fields, were victims of unsuspected high explosives. Wise people learned that safety lay in stifling curiosity.

I have sat in conferences on stewardship and listened to discussions which handled high explosives in the most amazingly careless manner. I listened for the explosion but none came — except once when I was foolish enough to ask a question.

I have heard a whole conference accept, without the faintest apparent notion of what they were doing, such amazing presuppositions as this, for example, "God is the owner of everything"; and then go on to discuss in the minutest detail how to reckon the tithe. Why does no one challenge such a dangerous assumption as this? How does it come that our leaders allow such high explosives to be handled by innocent conferences? Does no one see where such perfectly revolutionary teaching may lead us?

Why, if that assumption is true and not merely a rhetorical expression, can we not see that all sorts of things are liable to follow?

For instance, it is a terrible menace to that bulwark of Anglo Saxon law, the institution of private property. If God is allowed to claim ownership and the Bible teaching is to go unchallenged cannot any one see how much mischief may be done to our very foundation principle of private ownership? That would be to make us merely trustees; that implies that God's purposes must be accepted as the controlling motive and organizing principle upon which anybody must administer the trust committed to him. In fact it leaves a man no liberty to do as he wills with his own. If we accept this sort of teaching without protest then the next thing we know preachers will come forward and insist that logically this makes my business the Lord's business. The business men of the country will never stand for that. The church and preachers especially depend upon the men of wealth, and if this kind of teaching is permitted to go unchallenged some one will get up and say that the people haven't a right to luxuries. God gave us the brains and the—and the—well, we took advantage of good opportunities and have worked hard and been economical and we do not intend preachers shall butt into our affairs and try to tell us God owns everything. We shall be generous and give for missions and support the church but we want to be left alone. We want to hire and fire our employees without God having anything to say about it. We want to give orders, but we don't intend to take them from anybody. It is all right to talk about tithing. We don't object to that. Some of us pay out more than that in club dues or cigars. But don't let us have any more such radical talk as this about the ownership of God! We are not in business for our health nor for the welfare of any one but our family and our own heirs and we don't intend to let the preachers get away with these stewardship fundamentals. God the owner! Where would society be today if it were not for the enterprise of men like ourselves who had the nerve and the vision to develop the buried potentialities of this world! The mere fact that we didn't create it and that God did, must not be allowed to enter into this discussion. The mere fact that society enhances the value of everything we possess must not be mentioned. Anglo Saxon law and the enlightened Supreme Court of the District of Columbia says that property interests are supreme. So let this question be settled once for all and never again be raised in a stewardship conference. If it is, there may be trouble.

I want to call attention to another thing: If this pernicious doctrine becomes prevalent, some one will rise up in a conference some day and suggest that we ought to take Christ into our business. Now I protest that this is impracticable. How could our modern business ever succeed if we had to be interfered with? Religion has nothing to do with business and while I believe in Christianity for salvation and while I stand by the teaching of the Bible, I am utterly opposed to these impracticable, quixotic notions.

There is still another danger if this thing is allowed to go on without rebuke. All of us like to be recognized and when we give our money we like to be considered generous. It is generous of us to deny ourselves and give for missions. I can see very clearly that some one is going to get up in a conference and deny that we are generous and claim that this is the Lord's money and not ours and so rob us of the only satisfaction we get out of giving. It is subversive teaching and will injure the missionary cause if it is not stopped. I think you ought to call the attention of the denomination to the matter.

The Church's Mid-Week Meal

THE church's mid-week meal is too often an unattractive affair, unattractively served, with scant food and little conversation, partaken of chiefly by those active enough to possess good appetites. Two classes of church members are seldom at the table, namely, inactive folks whose appetites need to be coaxed with tempting food, attractively served, and the mature Christian Endeavorers or B. Y. P. U. folks, who from childhood have been taught the value of spice and variety. These two qualities are seldom found in the average mid-week meal of the church.

When in the business world men serve meals for a livelihood, they first consider the class of people to which they desire to cater. If it is to be those who work hard, the task is easy; but if those whose hands are always soft and smooth, the task assumes complications. A spot on the tablecloth, a bouquet lacking, or a disagreeable odor, may lessen patronage. They must notice customs; they must study the fine art of seasoning and serving; they must note the nationality of patrons—that the Frenchman, the German or the Englishman may find the kind of food he hungers for. The wise caterer also knows that while advertising may bring customers, only proper food will hold them.

Jesus said, "Feed my sheep." Is the trouble all with the sheep, or is there something lacking, that so many are absent from the mid-week meal?

Parents are eager for wisdom in child training. Would a mid-week discussion, intelligent and sympathetic, on the moral and religious training of the child and a chance to pray with other parents for wisdom and guidance, bring them out?

Young folks are eager for happy marriage and later for happy homes. Would a discussion, intelligent and sympathetic, of what makes a happy marriage and a happy home, with a chance to pray with others for necessary qualities bring them out?

Men are eager to know how to be prosperous. Would a mid-week discusion of scriptural business methods, which make for success, tempt them to come?

We are all hungry for ideal men, for ideal women, for ideal husbands and ideal wives, for ideal fathers and ideal mothers. Would art exhibits of word pictures of all ideals help fill the table?

We like change. Is the mid-week meal too often cooked and served by the pastor?

To many a hymn is just as much an act of worship as a prayer, in fact, many hymns are beautiful prayers set to music. Would good music and plenty of it cause hymn-lovers' chairs to be occupied?

In the C. E. and B. Y. P. U. societies members are called upon to take care of special phases of the program. When they outgrow these societies would it be a good plan to keep them busy helping serve the mid-week meal?

Would a prepared outline of prayer-meeting topics, similar to the young people's and yet suited to the needs of maturer life, be practicable and make the graduated young people feel at home in the meeting with older members?

We grow too old for C. E. and B. Y. P. U. only in looks, not in feeling, but the time does come when we look too old and the average prayer meeting does not satisfy us, though it may harmonize with our tiny streaks of silver and embryonic wrinkles. As things are we are such a segregated family: little children, bigger children, biggest children and old folks, each with a separate dining-room. Ought we not to have an all-the-family meal once in a while, lest we forget we belong together?

These are some of the questions which from time to time, during forty years of "regular attendance," have disturbed the brain cells of an active member.

The Open Forum

DENOMINATIONAL SKEPTICISM AND ITS EFFECT

Strange as it may seem, denominational history shows a tendency to separate and differ, rather than to become more like the vesture of Christ. Some denominations have drifted into skepticism, and it is easy to visualize the effect of such drifting. Congregationalism had absolute priority in our country and should be the largest denomination extant. Unfortunately, however, there was a drift in its early history away from the deity of Jesus Christ, and many of its influential churches became Unitarian. This spelled decay, and today that denomination instead of being the largest in the land, is one of the smaller bodies. Universalism in its incipiency taught that Jesus Christ would save everybody. Now it teaches that he saves nobody; that he is just a beautiful human character whose life promotes the ethics of his followers. These two denominations put together (as they should be) would not count for much compared to great orthodox bodies that are revolutionizing the world. These profess liberal religion, and one might suppose the masses would flock to them. But do they?

Very few liberal churches in our large cities can get an evening congregation. And as to benevolence, the orthodox churches of Springfield, Mass., gave more for the betterment of the world in one year than all the liberal churches in the land. One of their ministers on leaving for the Klondike some years ago, after finding himself, and family, in a starving condition, said he would advise ministers to preach for churches that believe in hell, as they will give a support to men who are trying to keep them out of it.

So good a denomination as the Society of Friends, has had its bout with skepticism. George Fox, the founder, was a mystic, and spoke disparagingly of revealed religion, putting the inward light in advance of the teachings of the Bible. This led to skepticism, and paved the path to Thomas Paine, author of "The Age of Reason." (Many will be surprised to know that Paine was a Quaker.) Skeptical tendencies also gave rise to Elias Hicks, who preached among the Quakers that the blood of Christ had no more power to atone for sin than the blood of bulls, and goats. The writer had a birthright membership in the Hixite Society of Friends, and knows whereof he speaks. The teaching of Hicks produced scores of skeptics among the young.

Other denominations are having their troubles along this line: The old and staid Episcopal body is being affected, and those guilty are defying the power of the bishops.

God save our own loved denomination from going on the rocks. This modern discussion in regard to the virgin birth and the divinity of Christ, is all wrong. Man by wisdom knows not God, in the first, or second person. Jesus said in a prayer, "I thank thee, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hath hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hath revealed them unto babes." The forgiven child of God knows that Christ is divine, and is satisfied with the knowledge. The man born blind could not tell all about Jesus Christ, but insisted that "whereas I was blind now I see." Men who publicly try to rob the Son of God of his divinity are as burning buildings. People will run to see the building burn and will make a trip or two to see the ruins; but who cares for the building when it has been reduced to silent ashes.

J. H. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Blanchester, Ohio.

Truth

By CHARLES C. EARLE

THE Truth is in the universe:
In earth and sea, in sky and air,
In man and beast, and Holy Book,
The Truth is everywhere,
For God is Truth.

I seek the Truth; I change it not,
Nor would, nor could: Truth changes me—
My creed, my deed, my very life,
If I'm an honest man,
For Truth is Light.

At any cost the quest pursue,
Nor pelf, nor place, nor power enthrall;
For Truth is gain and fame and might.
The Truth's the seed of all,
For Truth is Life.

Defend the Truth? As well the Sun,
Nor Truth or Sun need man's defense.
Truth's my defense, my rock, my tower
When foes arise, and tempests lower,
For Truth incarnate is Man's character.

What Is the Answer?

Every week the editor is plied with scores of questions. He needs help. Send, in the briefest possible space, your answer.

L. O. Dockstader of Girard, Kan., wants to know if a person not a professing Christian has any obligation to the church. If so, what is it?

In a recent stewardship conference this question was raised and did not receive a satisfactory answer: "How can a Christian woman, whose husband is the wage earner and not himself a Christian and who refuses to make a financial allowance to his wife and who opposes gifts to religious work—how can this woman tithe?"

When the minister prays and the organist plays at the same time, to which should the worshiper pay attention? He cannot listen to both with profit to himself. And, if not, what is the value of the duet?

LIGHT AT EVENING TIME

In my school days in the early 90's I had a gifted teacher who during her long career (from about 1877 to the present) has been spiritual mother to a host of her pupils and their posterity. Recalling that she had once read to our class Holmes' "Last Leaf," I wrote her recently a note of greeting, in which I intimated that she was a "last leaf."

Her reply, telling what life means and how the far horizon looks to a faithful child of God well along in the eighties, surely has power to bless and encourage many who will read it here. I am therefore transmitting it (without her permission) in gratitude for the providence of God which guided me to a small Baptist college at a critical time in my young life:

"Dear Son-Friend: Yes, I am playing the 'Last Leaf Role' with great joy, for the Leaf does not cling on a 'Forsaken Bough.' It grows in the midst of verdant leaves, with singing birds and voices of music all around; with sunshine by day and starlight by night, and with a great vista of Divine Love opening to days upon days of gladness and service yet to be. Never in such abundant physical health as now, as I travel the four-score pathway. Never such love of work; such dreams—dreams of big things to be done, 'in His name.'

"I wonder if you have my two small books already published? . . . I am busy now with the next one, 'The New Day When Christianity and Science Join Hands.' I hope to make it the best yet; the best until the next.

"I am, for 'avocation,' teaching a class of 'mother women' in the Sunday school. I am an acting member of the Young People's Society. I am putting my finger into the pie at D—, the ideal Farm Settlement six miles from here. They have science down to a fine point in agriculture, and I am trying to help them stress the Christian ideal along with the scientific.

"So here I am, busy and happy and hopeful; and oh, so thankful!

"Lovingly,

"Little Mother."

Many will read this heartening assurance that "at evening time there shall be light," with clear recognition of its authorship; for the "little mother" has all over the world spiritual children who know her voice.

GEO. E. BURLINGAME.

Religious Education

A Story from Podunk

By Meme Brockway

A Sunday-school superintendent who lived in Podunk—you have heard of the town!—remarked early in January to his young and attractive daughter: "Thank goodness that bigger and better Baptist Sunday school campaign is over and I can get a rest. Those nagging women in our church, who always insist that we must do whatever any other Baptist school is foolish enough to try, gave me no peace until I wasted a perfectly good dollar on registering and got a book I didn't want and haven't read — 'Sunday School Objectives.' I'm the one to object! Then they kept after me until we had a booster banquet and all that folderol—on the very night our Odd Fellows met, too.

"Now our state got a place near the top of the list, I hope the state director will take a vacation and give me a rest."

Daughter addressed the old gentleman sternly, "Father, we have only started on this campaign. We shall need four workers' council meetings for we have four goals at least to accomplish before June if we call ourselves loyal Baptists and if we want to help our state win."

The Podunk superintendent sighed heavily. "Then those pesky women will give me no rest until June. Can't we bunch those meetings and get them over with less pain?"

"Oh, no! Four meetings, father, for 'it is so nominated in the bond'—to quote our friend Shakespeare! Young Mr. Progressive Superintendent at Bethel Church is holding a meeting for every goal and is taking all. They had one on teacher training in October, on attendance in December, on equipment, the first of January and they are planning a wonderful program on evangelism for the worker's council in February. He told me last night that they will have a great cradle-roll campaign in April, and a vacation school and the summer assembly will be discussed in May and June."

"Ah, my lady, he was here again last night, was he? He is 'progressing,' I'll admit. He has 'more than four goals,' I'm afraid! Aren't you one of them?"

"Well," daughter answered, "I'll let you know in June whether it is better to be the wife of a progressive superintendent or only the daughter of a dear old conservative who prefers resting to racing! Come on, daddy, let's put our school on the map! These are worth while goals at any time and call for all the earnest Christian effort of which you and I are capable. You want better equipment, a new rug for the beginners' room, decent looking Bibles with unbroken backs for the juniors and ever so many other things. You want our teachers to bring their pupils to Christ and into church membership. Why not make these our definite goals at times when all the other Baptist schools are working for them shoulder to shoulder? That little book, 'Sunday School Objectives,' has dozens of plans for us and the Baptist papers and Sunday School Worker are full of suggestions each month for these particular goals. Come on, daddy, you are not a fossil in business. Isn't religion also worth brains and vim?"

The superintendent from Podunk capitulated, and a workers' council meeting was announced on the next Sunday.

The Story of Eight Years

The first great constructive movement following the annual meeting of 1915 in First Church, Melrose, Mass., culminated in the new by-law "Article VIII. Church school and religious education." By this act the Sunday school became the church school and a board of religious education began to direct and to unify the work of Christian instruction, training and culture.

Another step in the program of enlargement came in the electing of a pastor's secretary and later in the increase of paid workers by the appointment of a pastor's assistant. We found also in our church vacation school that money put into trained workers is one of the best investments a church can make.

The next great constructive program came with the year 1922, and has to do with the youth of the church. We now have, properly articulated, the four departments: 1. The juniors of the church, ages 9, 10, 11; 2. The intermediates of the church, ages 12, 13, 14; 3. The seniors of the church, ages 15, 16, 17; 4. The young people of the church, ages 18 and up. The Young People's Council, the executive head of the young people's department, is functioning splendidly. These departments are creditably officered and the work is rapidly being perfected. These departments appear in the church budget for the first time, and the church voted at the last annual meeting $200 to back this new and growing work. This $200 will be budgeted and spent under the direction of the committee on religious education.

Thus, at a long last, our great and noble church sets her house in order to serve her youth. We are at the beginning of a new chapter, but it is destined to make history in the life of this church. The whole round of growing life must be ministered unto, and this calls for a unified program of weekly religious activities as well as a Sunday program. Welcome, the church vacation school!

International Sunday School Lesson for March 25

REVIEW: JESUS THE WORLD'S SAVIOUR
Golden Text: 1 Timothy 1:15.

To many teachers the review lesson is always something of a trial. It should not be; rather, there is every reason why it should be the most interesting hour of the quarter. The work of the quarter all hinges on one central topic. Each succeeding lesson strengthens the thought brought out in the preceding lesson. Then, on the last Sunday of the quarter, all of these threads of thought are woven together to bring out strongly the topic of the past months. It is the teacher's opportunity to strengthen the impressions made by the weekly teaching. The topic for this quarter is "Jesus the World's Saviour." The lessons begin with the account of Jesus healing on the Sabbath and end with his crucifixion. It is a powerful series of lessons which cannot fail to leave an indelible impression on the minds of youth to which the thought is presented as it should be. A pivotal verse is here given for each lesson.

1. "It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day."

2. "He that exalteth himself shall be humbled; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

3. "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

4. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded if one rise from the dead."

5. "Where are the nine?"

6. "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

7. "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."

8. "Unto every one that hath shall be given; but from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him."

9. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

10. "Not my will, but thine, be done."

11. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Leading Questions:

1. What parable that Jesus gave teaches us to make the most of every gift that is ours?

2. By what answers did Jesus confound those who thought to confuse him?

3. What was his great lesson in giving? In the forgiveness of God?

4. What does he teach about courtesy? About prayer?

5. What were his utterances on the cross?

Young People's Work

Topic for March 25

TALES OF INDIAN CHRISTIANS
I Cor. 4:10-13.
(CONQUEST MEETING)

Advertising the Meeting

Make a poster decorated with cut-out pictures of scenery and natives of India. They may be colored with water colors to add brightness to the work.

Literature Needed

The program and material for its preparation are based upon "India on the March," by Alden H. Clark. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents. The book should be circulated among the members for general reading, after the meeting. The song, "India" (3 cents), and the leaflet, "The Story of Nandamah" (free), may be obtained from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York.

Chart Talk by the Leader

Chart 1. Christianity. A square 18x18 inches, subdivided into one-inch squares. From the bottom row erase nine squares, leaving 315 squares, each representing 1,000,000 of India's population. In one corner outline heavily three and one-half squares and mark them with a cross in red, to represent the 3,500,000 Christians in India.

Chart 2. Illiteracy. Upon a similar chart containing 315 squares, outline heavily a group of seven squares to show the number of men (7,000,000) who can read, and another group of one and one-half squares to represent the number of women (1,500,000) who can read.

Chart 3. Christian Illiteracy. A chart of three and one-half squares, representing the 3,500,000 Christians. Upon this outline heavily one-half a square to represent the 500,000 Christian men who can read and one-quarter of a square to represent the 250,000 Christian women who can read.

These three charts when explained, will show the larger proportion of literates among the Christians, and at the same time the appalling illiteracy even in that group.

A Telugu Doctor

Little Nandamah's grandfather and grandmother were among the 2,222 baptized in one day, nearly fifty years ago. Nandamah, therefore, is a third generation Christian. Both her parents were teachers in the girls' school at Kanigivi.

When Nandamah confided to her parents her desire to study medicine they could not comprehend so strange a desire. No woman in the Telugu country ever thought of such a thing. The village people shook their heads and prophesied dire disaster. It was bad enough for a girl to delay her marriage most unseasonably to go to high school —but to go a thousand miles away to study medicine! Preposterous!

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

At the college all work was done in English, which Nandamah had learned in high school, but it was necessary also for her to learn the Hindustani language, in order that she might understand the patients who came for medical treatment.

Nandamah studied hard, and at the end of four years took the government tests, and passed with high credits. She cannot, however, write "doctor" before her name, as medical schools in India are not permitted to give the degree of M. D. to women. All they get is an M. P. L., which means "medical practitioner license."

After graduation she went to the hospital at Nellore at a time when two of the foreign doctors were seriously sick, and worked heroically to keep the hospital open.

Doctor Nandamah was one of the five Oriental women who were brought to America for the jubilee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. She charmed many audiences by her sweet personality and conspicuous ability. After speaking in many cities she entered a medical school in New York for special courses before returning to her work in India.—Adapted from Service.

Introducing Two of Our Boston Convention Speakers

M. F. SANBORN, PRESIDENT

N. S. McKECHNIE, ONTARIO

Everybody At It

THE BOSTON BOOSTER BUNCH of the St. Louis City Union are having a good time planning their trip to the big convention in Boston, July 4-8, 1923. The December rally was held with the Delmar Church. Rev. H. L. Reeder spoke on "The Challenge of Present-Day Opportunities."

WEST VIRGINIA, up to the close of December had registered 119 schools in the bigger and better Bible school campaign. This put the state in class one.

"SPIZZERINKTUM" is the title of a paper published by the San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U. Association of California. Thirty-five young people from this association are in Redlands University.

THE B. Y. P. U. OF THE NEVADA-SIERRA CONVENTION are planning to send a delegate to the Boston convention. Why not? They are a live bunch.

TEXAS STATE B. Y. P. U. workers held a large number of training schools during January and February. There are 90,000 B. Y. P. U. members in the state.

THE WEEK OF MARCH 11, 1923, has been designated as study course week for the entire South.

IOWA YOUNG FOLKS, under the leadership of V. N. Witter, state director, and members of the Young People's Commission, are planning a big advance in all lines of work. The Life Service League has now become one of the large organizations of the state.

MISS EDNA GEISTER, famous recreation expert will have charge of the social and recreational conferences of the Boston convention.

REV. W. G. TOWART, pastor of the First Church, Bennington, Vt., will have charge of the church vacation school conferences of the Boston convention. Mr. Towart has full charge of the schools in Vermont and has been in the work since 1905. For four years he has conducted intensive training classes at Colgate University and will conduct a class this year at Newton Theological Seminary. He is well-known as a member of the faculties of Ocean Park School of Methods and the Vermont Summer School.

The Chimney Corner

Detectives on Your Trail

ONCE upon a time, some years ago now, the writer used to caper home from school at a very lively pace which suddenly became of the tiptoe variety at the front door and grew even more secret as the staircase was being climbed. For it was the greatest fun in the world to "surprise mother."

But now, looking back upon some of those fadeless memories, the "surprise" seems quite the other way around: for there she would be by the sitting-room window, sewing (oh, were there ever such dear little new dresses as she used to make?) and on her knee—opened—the Book she loved so dearly, while on her face, the look that Mary had when she kept all these things in her heart and pondered them.

Even that madcap little detective knew enough not to burst in! With a breathless catch in her throat from all the hurrying, she would stand in the doorway, brimful of mischief and love and awe, waiting to be noticed. And to this very day when the phrase "the beauty of holiness" is used, it calls up an instant vision of those busy fingers, of that open Book, of that tranquil brooding. Money cannot buy beauty like that. Time can not efface it.

Ah, yes, detectives on your trail! Nobody employs them at so much per hour, day, week, or month with all expenses found. No; quite unconsciously they engage themselves to watch, look, listen when you least expect it. There is one mother in America at this minute who would be an absolutely amazed woman if she could know that her little daughter said of her some time ago: "I guess mother's really not much int'rusted in Christian things. For we never have books like this lying around."

"This" happened to be the latest mission study-book; and the mother was actually a so-called active church member. But the little detective on her trail had been keen to draw her own conclusions that, between official promimence and actual interest, "mother" veered toward publicity rather than warmth! When you sift the question down to bed-rock, what do our children, our husbands, our relatives, our neighbors, our friends, and our very maids, expect of us but a daily keeping track of the matters in which we profess a vital interest because of our church connections?

Religious Book Week is, therefore, nothing but a string around your thumb (as it were!) to remind you what a curious anomaly a Christian is who, from year's end to year's end, never reads a new book about the noteworthy advances of God's kingdom in the world, or of any heroic life poured out for the common good. For the guidance of all Baptists, the department of missionary education has issued a folder called "Model Missionary Libraries," all the books mentioned in which may be ordered from the American Baptist Publication Society at the address nearest you.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

There are thirteen separate "bookshelves," each with its individual list of books:

(1) For younger boys; (2) for older boys; (3) for younger girls; (4) for older girls; (5) for young people; (6) for women; (7) also for women; (8-9) for men; (10) the Sunday-school ladder idea; (11) the fireside library; (12) the pastor's library; (13) the stewardship library. The books were all chosen because of their true interest in matter and manner. They are books absolutely appropriate to the ages for which they are suggested. The writer, who has read practically every book mentioned, has no slightest hesitancy in saying that if every Baptist family read these books this year, then by next year the entire world would have its startled gaze fastened on our denomination! Why should we use cook books and Hoyle, crochet books and automobile tour guides? Because our interest centers tremendously on such issues! And why do we not read the missionary books? Try them this year. Ignorance is not a pretty state in which to be caught, and the process of emerging from it will be beautifully painless, as a glance at these titles of the first of the women's missionary shelves mentioned.

It is high time for the lady-of-the-house to remember the little cloud of witnesses daily detecting her vital interests in life. Tomorrow let them catch you reading:

1. "Race Grit," by Coe Hayne. Did you ever feel in your heart that you had had fairly up-hill difficulties in your life? Here are men and women with color against them, poverty against them, and in many cases absolute ignorance against them—yet they had grit enough to surmount every obstacle victoriously. You will put down Mr. Hayne's book with a positive thrill that the day of God's miracles is not over!

2. "Rock-Breakers," by Dr. Lerrigo. A fine sequel to it, for Dr. Lerrigo has recently returned from Africa, where he saw the unexpected joyfulness of thousands of black men and women stepping definitely from darkness into light. Perhaps savage last year; this year Christians—tested as they only test them in Africa! Dr. Lerrigo has a quite delicious way of telling of his trip and some of the primitive conditions he encountered on the trains and so on. Not a Baptist can afford to miss this book!

3. "In the Vanguard of a Race," by Mrs. Hammond, is a series of Negro biographies presented in the simplest style; yet when I put down that little book it was as if a breath of fresh air had been let down from heaven itself. How proud God must be of the black people.

4. "Up from Slavery," by Booker T. Washington, needs no introduction. As an autobiography it is a record of rare perseverance; you are amazed and thrilled and—humbled. It is a case of "put yourself in his place." Could you and would you have done it?

5. "Uganda's White Man of Work," by Sophie Fahs, tells you how a man has to be a veritable jack-of-all-trades when he undertakes to do pioneer work in Africa. Here is romance and adventure and courage for you! Our every-day American worries about retrimming last year's hat and cutting down Susie's dress for Mattie, suddenly dwindle to a vanishing point. Try this tonic!

6. "The Kingdom and the Nations," by Dr. Eric North, is a splendid, comprehensive view of the world today, nation by nation. You may talk with new confidence to the women who go in for clubs and cosmopolitan lecturers and international committees. Inside the covers of one book you will have gleaned it all in a few hours, stated as statesmen see it, interpreted as Christians must.

7. "World Friendship, Inc." does the same service for you in a more conversational manner. Intimate glimpses of the various mission fields sure to fix certain scenes in your mind forever.

8. "Ancient Peoples at New Tasks," by Willard Price, is told in a compelling, racy style, with a clever twist to the sentences and an even cleverer twist to your heart-strings. How the world does have to work to get us our silks, our gold, our rubber, our tea, our coffee! You will be the richer and the sadder for the reading, and the truer Christian.

9. "Ministers of Mercy," by Dr. James Franklin, is a series of life stories of medical missionaries to which no review like this can do justice. If ever any group of men and women followed in the footsteps of the Great Physician, these are they! No hazards too great, no dangers too stupendous, no work too overwhelming. You will never realize the dynamic power of a pill in the hands of a Christian physician until you read this book. Then you will begin to wonder if money invested in battleships and aeroplanes might not have brought peace internationally nearer if invested in medicines and hospitals and a corps of Christian doctors. Don't miss this book!

10. "Judson, the Pioneer," by Hull, and 11. "Ann of Ava," by Hubbard, are two sides of the same story. Ann was Judson's first wife, and surely you can search history through without finding a pluckier heroine or one more beset by bewildering circumstances and fiendish manipulations. The fact that the Judsons were Baptists makes them crave an instant welcome in your home!

12. "Captain Bickel of the Inland Sea" was a Baptist, too, and his biographer gives us a wonderful portrait of a wonderful man in a wonderful yacht. A Baptist yacht which flitted (and still flits) like a great seagull over the sapphire water of the Inland Sea, calling at quaint little rock-rimmed villages tucked in the folds of emerald hills. At first, with no sort of welcome. At last, with all the welcome in the world. You only have to read Captain Bickel's whimsical letters to his own children to realize that he had the knack of words and of personality equal to any emergency. A book you will prize all your life as a definite Baptist chapter in the acts of the apostles!

13. "Serving the Neighborhood," by Felton, gives an insight into sides of Christian social service that will open up new vistas in your immediate community. It is an immensely practical little book, brimful of suggestions you can try out tomorrow morning.

14. "New Life Currents in China," by Gamewell, is an intimate and dependable picture of China today told by a woman who knows to women who ought to know, too. The life-giving effect of the gospel in this wonderful old nation makes you glad for every share you have had in every missionary collection ever taken in your church. And that, of course, is saying all there is to be said!

If interest in these fourteen books in the one bookshelf will lead you to make inquiries about the other bookshelves also, the article will not have been in vain, and the detectives on your trail will feel the influence of your enthusiasm for this splendid line of literature.

The Young Reserves

The Human Bones

(The other day somebody sent us this poem. They said it was not complete, but it really looks as if we had quite a few bones, doesn't it? Add them up to see if the list is not correct as it stands. It seems so to me at a hasty glance.)

How many bones in the human face?
Fourteen, when they're all in place.

How many bones in the human head?
Eight, my child, as I've often said.

How many bones in the human ear?
Four in each to help you hear.

How many bones in the human chest?
Twenty-four ribs, and two of the rest.

How many bones the shoulders bind?
Two in each—one before and one behind.

How many bones in the human arm?
In each arm one; two in each forearm.

How many bones in the human wrist?
Eight in each, if none are missed.

How many bones in the palm of the hand?
Five in each, with many a band.

How many bones in the fingers ten?
Twenty-eight, and by joints they bend.

How many bones in the human hip?
One in each, like a dish they dip.

How many bones in the human thigh?
One in each, and deep they lie.

How many bones in the human knees?
One in each, the kneepan, please.

How many bones in the leg from the knee?
Two in each we plainly can see.

How many bones in the ankle strong?
Seven in each, but none are long.

How many bones in the ball of the foot?
Five in each, as the palms, are put.

How many bones in the toes half a score?
Twenty-eight, and there are no more.

The Boy Who Had References

NOT very long ago there was a business man who needed a boy in his office, so he went to the front of his store and hung a sign in the window: "Boy Wanted. Apply to Manager. References Required."

You have no idea how many boys applied; it took the manager all day long to see them—fat boys with references from their neighbors, thin boys with references from their teachers, tall boys with recommendations from their pastors, small boys with notes from their mothers. And yet, in the end, he hired a boy who had no reference and was too new in town to have teachers or pastors!

"But see here," said the other manager, "isn't that a strange thing to do? To advertise for references, and then not have any consideration for them?"

The manager smiled: "That little fellow had the best recommendations of the whole bunch," he laughed, "for when he came into the room he wiped his feet on the mat and closed the door quietly behind him, which showed he had been brought up well. You should have seen some of the other boys slouch into the room and heard them slam that door. Then there was one very tattered boy in the waiting-room; everybody poked fun at him, but my boy gave him half his newspaper to read while they waited. That showed kindness and courtesy. Then when he came into the office to see me he carried his cap in his hand, and he didn't act too good for the place or too smart-aleck to answer my simplest questions. Politeness goes a long way in an office! Then when I asked him to write his name on a card he removed a hair from the pen which had blurred the signatures of all the other boys ahead of him. That showed he was neat and efficient. There was a book on the floor which everybody had stumbled over, but he picked it up, so then I knew that he took an interest in orderly appearances. His clothes were well-brushed, his hair was well-combed, his finger-nails were clean—so you will admit that with quietness, kindness, politeness, efficiency, orderliness and neatness I had all the references I needed. I think he will make good."

And he did.

An Indoor Game of Golf

"Try playing this with your family tonight. The answers to these questions are all words quite familiar to you, yet they are also articles, terms, etc., necessary for playing the real game of golf. Correct answers will be given next week.)

1. A coachman?
2. An oriental herb?
3. A receptacle for this herb?
4. What a saucy impudent fellow may be called?
5. An expression for aimless working?
6. A bazaar and a color?
7. The point of a pen, and lap of a tongue?
8. To crush and two vowels?
9. A chance?
10. A large social function for dancing?
11. A definite and indefinite number?
12. Parts of a chain?
13. A bed on a boat, and a mistake?
14. Number twenty?
15. Little pits?

---

Another Missionary Honored

Another foreign missionary has been awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind gold medal by the king of England in recognition of "distinguished service in India." The latest recipient is Dr. Robert Harper, since 1897 a missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society at Nankahm, Burma. It will be recalled that a year ago reference was made to a raid by native bandits who were repulsed only after a long struggle, in which one of the British officers and a number of the men were wounded. Dr. Harper and his wife, a skilled nurse, rendered valuable service before, after and during the actual raid in warning the military authorities, in maintaining the morale of the villagers and in attending to the wounded. Dr. Harper is the fourteenth American Baptist Foreign Missionary whose work the British government has so publicly recognized.

Our Own Folks

Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur

By Richard H. Edmonds

"A great soul has gone to his reward. The mourning among Baptists will be world wide." This telegram is from Rev. O. C. S. Wallace, one of the great Baptist leaders of the country. It voices what will be the world-wide sentiment not only among Baptists but among millions of others who have through his sermons or his writings, learned to honor and love this widely-known and beloved of Baptist ministers.

The highest honor which the Baptists of the world can confer upon any man is to elect him president of the Baptist World Alliance. That honor Dr. MacArthur held since the meeting of the alliance in Philadelphia ten years ago, at which time by a unanimous vote of a committee of fifty or sixty on nomination and an equally unanimous vote in the great convention, he was elected president. In order to accept that position he resigned as pastor of the Calvary church of New York.

As president of the alliance, Dr. MacArthur left within a few weeks after his election to visit Russia in order to intercede with the czar for the privilege of English and American Baptists uniting and building a Baptist Theological Seminary in St. Petersburg, where at that time religious liberty was scarcely known. Dr. MacArthur carried the heartiest letters of commendation from the president, the secretary of state, Colonel Roosevelt and other warm friends. The concession was promised but the war came. The money is still ready whenever the English and American Baptists consider it wise to build the proposed seminary.

In the following year Dr. MacArthur traveled 25,000 miles to attend the centennial at Burma of the founding of Baptist missions in that country by Adoniram Judson.

Since his election to the presidency of the alliance, Dr. MacArthur has not accepted any regular pastorate, though his services at the Calvary Baptist church, Daytona Beach, comes nearer being that than any other connection he has made. He has held himself open to supply churches temporarily without a pastor in every part of the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. During an inter-regnum between pastorates in the First Baptist church of Baltimore, I persuaded him to occupy that pulpit for about twelve months, and later on he has on several occasions supplied the pulpit of the University Baptist church, a new organization in that city. Dr. MacArthur went to Daytona four years ago. The first trip was partly on account of bronchial trouble Mrs. MacArthur was at that time suffering with.

It should be said of Dr. MacArthur that never under any condition did he preach anything but the simple story of Christ as man's Redeemer, with surpassing power of eloquence and logic and pathos. Many of his sermons have been printed in book and pamphlet form and widely distributed throughout this and other countries. His sermon, "What Think Ye of Christ," when first preached in New York, attracted world-wide attention. It has been printed in some eight or nine languages, including Japanese and Russian. It has been printed in a number of dialects of India and it is distributed by the thousands of copies by an organization engaged in the work of carrying the gospel of Christ to Buddhists.

When Mr. McKinley was elected president he was a devoted friend of Dr. MacArthur, and offered to send him as ambassador minister to some European country, but this offer he promptly declined on the ground that there was in his opinion no other profession in the world so vitally important as that of preaching the gospel. Colonel Roosevelt was in the room at the time, and turning to Dr. MacArthur, said, "I rejoice that you have declined President McKinley's offer, for I agree with you that your calling is the highest in the world."

The Baptist World Alliance pays no salaries, and during his entire term Dr. MacArthur or his friends bore all expenses of his trips to Russia, India, and his other work for the alliance. The next meeting will be held in Stockholm, Sweden, in July and Dr. MacArthur had already engaged passage for the trip and was preparing his presidential address, which he said a few days ago he hoped to make the crowning effort of his life.

This winter Dr. MacArthur had been preaching with more tremendous power and with greater mental, spiritual and physical force than ever in his life. In these recent sermons he seemed to have been literally lifted from the earth, and the thought of direct and immediate inspiration and power from God thrilled everyone who heard them. His people had been looking forward to a sermon to be preached entitled "The Everlasting Love of the Eternal God." That is a sermon which once heard can never be forgotten this side of eternity. It is a marvelous presentation of the love of God, based on the text: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

Through all his long years Dr. MacArthur has had phenomenal physical health. In a ministry of over fifty years I think he never lost but two Sunday engagements to preach. One was from a brief illness in Baltimore a year ago, and the other was from an accident in Dayton two years ago, which crippled his foot and caused his physician to forbid his standing on it long enough to preach.

The world has lost one of its greatest preachers of the Gospel of Christ.

"Earth is the poorer but heaven is the richer."

Mr. F. D. Phinney

In the death of Mr. F. D. Phinney which occurred on Dec. 15, the Foreign Mission Society, and more particularly the Burma Mission, has suffered a severe loss. For forty-one years Mr. Phinney was the efficient superintendent of the Burma mission press and for thirty-eight years treasurer of the Burma Mission. As an organizer and administrator his abilities were well known, not only by his coworkers in the mission, but by government officials. As indicative of the high regard in which he was held, it is worthy of note that in 1907 he was appointed by the Trades Association as its representative on the board of commissioners for the Port of Rangoon. But it has been as superintendent of the mission press that Mr. Phinney has made his greatest reputation where his loss will be most keenly felt. Since 1882, when he took charge, this enterprise has been not only self-supporting, but in latter years has been a source of considerable revenue.

The following resolution was passed by the advisory board of the mission press at a meeting in Rangoon, Dec. 20, 1922:

"The advisory committee of the mission press wishes to record its deep sense of loss in the death of Mr. Phinney, for forty years superintendent of the press. His marked business ability, mechanical genius and unfailing courtesy to all contributed largely to making for himself and the press the high position they have held among the business firms of Rangoon. During these long years of service he has touched as no other missionary has, and contributed definitely to the work of every missionary of our board in Burma. He has seen and contributed largely to the phenomenal growth of the press from the small and cramped quarters occupied in a side street to the spacious building, a hive of industry, now occupied in Rangoon, and the branch house now in Mandalay. In a very real sense it is true of him that 'He rests from his labors but his works do follow him.'"

Mrs. Mary M. Rose

Upon the occasion of the recent sixtieth anniversary of the beginning of her work on the Burma mission field, the board of managers through its committee on resolutions, sent to Mrs. M. Rose a congratulatory letter, reciting some of the results that had been achieved during her long period of service and praying the blessing of the Almighty upon her for the remainder of her life journey. Scarcely had she received this communication when the summons came to her to relinquish her labors and rest from her long life of intense activity.

Mrs. Rose was born in 1841 at Mergui, Burma, the daughter of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Brayton. At seventeen she was married to Rev. Abram Taylor Rose, an evangelistic and educational missionary to the Burmans in Rangoon. For five years previous to the death of her husband, which occurred in 1896, Mrs. Rose taught in the Pegu Karen high school where she readily gained the affection of all who came under her instruction. About a year after the death of her husband, Mrs. Rose at the earnest solicitation of a group of Karen Christians, started a school for the special training of girls and women for evangelistic and Bible work. Beginning with ten young women, meeting in a small hut, thatched with native grasses and palm leaves, the school has steadily increased in enrolment and equipment as well as in influence. More than half of the graduates have each year gone out into distant villages as teachers and Bible women to work among their own people. Several of the students have become wives of Karen pastors and others have organized new groups of Christians which later became churches.

The value of this noble woman's work is beyond the possibility of human computation. For years to come the blessed influence of her ministry will be felt among her beloved Karens.

Chicago News and Notes

By J. W. Weddell

Moody and Chicago

The eighty-sixth birthday of Dwight L. Moody was recently celebrated in this city. In the autumn of 1856 Moody, a young business man, came to Chicago from a Boston clerkship to sell shoes. He made his mark as an expert in that line. Recently converted under Mr. Edward Kimball, a layworker of the Hub city, he was as intense in his religion as in business. It was the beginning of his great work in Chicago which led him into Sunday school endeavor and identified him with Chicago's growing Y. M. C. A., of which he was soon president. The Christian and evangelistic labors thrust upon him led him to abandon his secular activities, though he was earning a large salary at the time, and give himself wholly to soul-winning.

In England

Moody, however, had to go to London to find himself, and America indeed came to know him as the mighty spiritual giant he was after England had tested and proved him. Deprived of Farwell Hall, the center of his Y. M. C. A. operations and waiting for his church at Chicago Avenue to be erected and financed, Moody remembered an invitation from certain men of Great Britain. With Ira D. Sankey he left for England in June of 1873. When the two arrived in Liverpool it was to find that their English friends had been taken by death. Nothing daunted, Mr. Moody saw an opening for a Y. M. C. A. service at York. There the evangelist met a young pastor named F. B. Meyer, who introduced him to others of the ministry of England. Sankey's voice rang out like a bell and Moody, with his Bible open in his hand, waked up all that portion of the British Isles. Presently all of Great Britain was thrown open and cities the country over were vieing with each other to secure the presence of the American evangelists. Hundreds of thousands flocked to hear them and multitudes were converted or newly enlisted in Christian service.

Back Home

In 1875 Moody and Sankey returned to America. Moody hid himself for a while in the home he had helped to build for his mother at Northfield, Mass. But in a short time he was again upon the platform of his native land. Brooklyn was the first to hear him after his return. New York came next with its vast Hippodrome. Then Chicago had its long-awaited turn. What a greeting was there! It was at Farwell's great wholesale house, temporarily thrown into a widespread tabernacle, that the most of us heard the returned evangelist. Right and left, in every direction the message was carried. Moody was after a while deeply engaged in his Northfield schools, but Chicago still claimed him and here was the center and core of his wonderful work, until on one of the closing days of 1899 he hastened through the city from the West to lay his head down on his Northfield pillow and go home to God.

Our Schools of the Bible

We Baptists are properly the little children of the Book, and in Chicago we have abundant opportunities for pursuing our natural bent. The University of Chicago and the Northern Seminary both have had extension schools in the evening for the popular study of the Bible the past winter; eager classes of young people have received the Word with avidity. Then there are the regular divinity classes open at all times. I looked in on Shailer Mathews and Ernest Burton in their special courses —a privilege indeed. The latter has been raised to the presidency of the university but he is the same humble, diligent student of the Greek text as of old — in fact as he used to be when primus in our college class of '76 at Denison. There is the Home Mission Training School at 30th and Vernon. They study the Bible there as you may know if you but participate in chapel hour over which Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham presides, but where they are always ready for a bit of the expounded Word. There are six or eight hundred students of the scriptures under Dr. James Gray at Institute Place on the north side. Everybody knows there are Baptists there, a host of them. Many of the churches besides are putting in Bible training classes. Why not?

Among the Churches

Baptist churches are not so thick perhaps on the north side as on the south, but you find them here as you go farther out into the fast settling suburbs. Nearest downtown is La Salle Avenue not far from Moody's school. Hugh Rowland and J. Q. U. A. Henry had great days here, and under changed conditions, Joseph B. Rogers is giving today good proof of his ministry — 72,000 breakfasts given to the unemployed last year; ninety accessions, twenty-eight baptized. Dr. Philpott is a little farther out at North Avenue and Lincoln Park, and if not a Baptist, he knows the Jordan path and his great congregation with him. We all know Belden Avenue and love it for its work's sake. Here in the early days E. O. Taylor wrought as pastor of Central Church (Dr. Henson called it circumferential.) Afterwards came Barbour who built the new church and Haines who filled it, and Skevington who broadened it and now Hoyt who deepens it. Other pastors might be mentioned, a rare and goodly succession. North Shore at Lakewood and Berwyn avenues is the flower and fruitage of our northward trend. How happy Pastor W. H. Jones ought to be in the midst of such a church home! Logan square is not far away and there are several of our foreign-speaking churches: Irving Park stands a solid structure on the corner, where not long since, as acting pastor, the writer welcomed the permanent undershepherd, Guy C. Crippen. Portage Park, a new branch close at hand, went out from here taking Pastor C. F. Field with it and building at once a temporary tabernacle which is always full. Albany Park is a mile distant toward the east with Albert G. Johnson as pastor. An aggressive evangelistic atmosphere is here. Berwyn, Maplewood, Norwood, Ravenswood, Rogers Park might be mentioned, but these are farther out. The North Side is a growing field.

Austin and Oak Park are two strong churches of the west, close together. John H. Carstens is the minister of the former, another new pastor whom the writer recently ushered into his present charge. At Oak Park Carl D. Case, a couple of weeks ago at the close of the morning service, united his daughter in marriage to one of the fine young men. Ours peculiarly to congratulate and also sympathize, for the writer will within a fortnight perform a similar ceremony. The daughter of the manse in this case flits away to college halls in far West Virginia. But so they go — and God bless them!

Linfield College

By P. C. Wright

A former student of Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, Wis., recently visited Linfield College at McMinnville, Ore. The visit had peculiar interest due to the presence in the faculty of his erstwhile teacher, Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield. It is widely known that on account of a gift of approximately $250,000 from Mrs. Linfield this Chrisitian institution at McMinnville was led to change its name to Linfield. The gift was made with the understanding that the college should thus become a memorial to her husband, Prof. George Fischer Linfield.

This change of name fitly commemorates a life which represented high ideals of Christian education. The career of Professor Linfield was one of signal achievement. He was born in Randolph, Mass., in 1846. After a thorough training in business schools, he decided to devote himself to the Christian ministry and completed the courses of study in Rochester University and Rochester Theological Seminary. While pastor of a large Baptist church in Iowa, he was called to the principalship of Wayland Academy in January, 1884. An era of expansion in the institution began at once. His service was pledge of a distinguished educational career. In the morning of his manhood, however, he was stricken with a fatal illness and died in the spring of 1890.

Professor Linfield was a winsome Christian gentleman. Those who heard him speak upon Christian education were first of all impressed with the strength of his splendid personality. He radiated idealism. His clear, keen eye, his frank and smiling face, his earnest manner, his noble thoughts, at once took his audience to the realm of ideals. As parents heard his ideas as to the value of education under Christian auspices, desires for the education of their sons and daughters were created. Many sent their children to Wayland on the strength of their confidence in him, knowing little themselves of the institution he represented. Once at Wayland, students felt his interest and friendship, and responded with their best. The discipline of the school rested largely upon the principal's personality. Professor Linfield expected his students to be ladies and gentlemen, and they disliked to betray his confidence. There were infringements of rules, and there were punishments, but these were minor concerns in an atmosphere of mutual love and good will.

Nobility of spirit, strength of purpose, ideals in attainment, frankness in manner, earnestness in endeavor, constantly radiated from his attractive personality. He was an inspiring teacher. Greek was an interesting study in his classroom. His personal enthusiasm was "catching" whether in or out of the classroom.

Under Professor Linfield's management the scholastic standards of the academy were high. Its graduates were admitted to many of our colleges and universities without examinations and took high rank in scholarship.

The record of Prof. George Fischer Linfield will bear inspection. The college of McMinnville has honored itself, as well as the man whose splendid life it commemorates, by its change of name.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

SANFORD. The factories of the Goodale Plush Company, and other Sanford mills will be increased this year by constructions costing into the millions. People are moving into town with a rush, and are building houses for occupancy at the earliest possible moment. The Baptist church, under the leadership of Pastor Ira B. Hardy, is quite up to the progress of the town. The benevolences are among the largest in the state and are most promptly paid. It is building more room for Sunday school and church purposes. It has congregations whose significance, interest and resultant service would delight any pastor. The church and its work show conclusively that some churches have a real Gospel for the real needs around them.

THE UNITED BAPTIST CHURCH, DOVER-FOXCRAFT, Rev. H. F. Huse pastor, is making splendid use of its parish house, the former building of the Free Baptist church. The activities have been carried out through a three-year period. During the past year twenty social gatherings for young people were held with an attendance ranging from eighty to 180. The church has an $800 moving-picture machine which has rendered good service. The social life has not overshadowed the missionary interest as shown by the gifts for the past five years of $4,950 as compared with $1,425 for the preceding five-year term.

VERMONT

THE CHURCH AT NORTH TROY, Rev. C. E. Gould, pastor, has sustained a loss by a fire which occurred Sunday morning, Feb. 4. Probably through an overheated smoke stack the building caught fire and was damaged to the extent of over $2,000, which was covered by insurance. The Congregational people invited the Baptist people to hold services with them, with Pastor Gould and the Congregational pastor, Mr. Young, preaching alternately. The insurance people paid the church $2,000 and already the work of reconstruction is going on; had this church not been insured, it would have been a desperate blow for the people at North Troy, as none of them has great wealth.

THE UNITED CHURCH AT COLCHESTER, Rev. D. G. Donnocker, pastor, is moving steadily forward along all lines. Pastor Donnocker is preaching Sunday afternoons at the Blakeley schoolhouse, which is about three miles from the center. This service, like the one at the home church, is well attended. Recently the Sunday school has been reorganized, and a young people's society organized with over forty members.

THE ADDISON CHURCH, Rev. B. H. Curtis, pastor, recently held its annual meeting and roll-call, with Rev. G. E. Robbins, secretary of the Vermont Sunday School Association, as the speaker both afternoon and evening. The church voted to hold a school of missions each Sunday evening during the month of February, taking up the study of India.

THE WEBSTERVILLE CHURCH, Rev. A. S. Buzzell, pastor, has sustained a great loss in the death of Mrs. Charles E. Thurber, wife of Deacon Charles E. Thurber, on Jan. 28. She was an earnest Christian and deeply interested in the welfare of the church. Her loss will be greatly felt in the church and community.

THE WILMINGTON CHURCH, Rev. L. W. Champney, pastor, held its annual roll-call and business meeting on Feb. 20. Pastor and people are heartily united and earnestly working together. The reports were most encouraging, showing increased interest and a steady growth. There are four churches in the town, but the Baptist church is the only one that maintains a Sunday evening service.

FRIENDS OF REV. AND MRS. C. O. Dunham of East Dover, will be glad to learn that Mrs. Dunham, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia for some time, is out of danger and rapidly recovering her health and strength. Mr. Dunham has been able to resume work at East Dover.

THE WORK AT THE FIRST CHURCH, Ludlow, Rev. William B. Chase, pastor, is encouraging. On Feb. 7 the organized Bible class known as the Roger Williams Brotherhood, held its annual meeting. The Baraca class was the guest of the evening. The ladies of the church served supper, after which Prof. I. A. Bowdoin, principal of Black River Academy, delivered an address filled with wit and wisdom, and at its close presented Pastor Chase with an envelope containing a generous sum of money as a gift from the class. Pastor Chase is now being assisted in special meetings by the assistant superintendent of the convention, Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant. Already there is a deep interest and an encouraging outlook for a splendid series of meetings.

REV. A. J. HOPKINS, who has been the faithful and efficient pastor at Perkinsville since 1906, tendered his resignation and closed his work on that field Jan. 1. Pastor and Mrs. Hopkins have done constructive work and are greatly beloved in the community. All rejoice that they are to make their home in Perkinsville. Most of the young people in the village who are connected with the church have been converted under Mr. Hopkins' preaching and have been baptized by him. The Perkinsville church has invited Rev. E. C. Weeks, pastor at North Springfield, to look after their interests for the present. He is preaching in Perkinsville every Sunday afternoon and will also do pastoral work on this field as well as at North Springfield.

THE BRISTOL CHURCH, Rev. J. J. Fowler, pastor, recently held its annual roll-call and business meeting. Pastor Fowler's report showed that during the year he had made 800 calls, received seventeen new members into the church, and had an average attendance in his men's class of thirty-five, with some men not missing a single Sunday. The report of the superintendent of the Bible school, Mr. Fred R. Dickerman, showed all the teachers had been faithful, and that there was a steady growth both in numbers and in contributions. The average attendance during the year was 108. The school of missions organized and inspired by Mrs. F. R. Dickerman had four classes, with a total enrolment of ten divided as follows: Adults, ninety-seven; young people, thirty-seven; juniors, thirty-one; primaries, fifteen; forty-one persons were present every Sunday evening and thirty-four others missed only one session during the six weeks. The average attendance was 109. The Treasure Seekers and other organizations of the church are also doing splendid work numerically, educationally and financially.

MASSACHUSETTS

CENTRAL CHURCH, MIDDLEBORO, had the privilege of being host to the Old Colony Association at its rally, Dec. 13, with 150 present. Rev. Eugene Philbrook of Randolph, gave the address. On Dec. 31 decision day was observed in the Bible school. Fifty members of the school signed the cards declaring themselves as purposing to live the Christian life. Pastor C. Raymond Chappell stresses the prayer meetings. Once a month something special is featured. On Feb. 15 the special feature was a program by the World Wide Guild. The purchase of a fine stereopticon was made possible by the initiative of the Christian Endeavor Society and the cooperation of the other church organizations. The Sunday evening services are evangelistic. Large place is given to gospel singing with a chorus choir leading, and a men's chorus once a month. The pastor conducts an after-meeting every Sunday evening with encouraging results. A number of young people have recently taken a public stand for Christ in these after-meetings. The pastor is conducting a class for the instruction of new converts.

WE HAVE FORMED A HABIT of utilizing some of the minor holidays for inspirational Christian conventions. The result is very large attendance and a conviction that a free day has been well spent. The recent meeting of the Boston East Bible School Convention at the First Church Malden, on Washington's Birthday, was, by unanimous report, an outstanding success. About 1,000 were fed at the tables and from the platform, and were well filled. The program abounded in things that compelled attention, but perhaps the pinacle of interest was reached in the great address by Dr. A. W. Beaven, pastor of Lake Avenue Church, Rochester.

OUR BOSTON MINISTERS CONFERENCE has been having another of those "ladies days."

Large attendance, and good time generally. After the luncheon came the speakers of the day, Professor Edward A. Steiner and Dr. Hugh A. Heath. Dr. Steiner got at the heart of things in his address, and at the heart of the minister as well. His strain was absolutely faithful and heart searching, insistent upon the minister's highest inner conception of his task. Dr. Heath clarified the program of our board of promotion, and inspiringly led us out into our possible achievements.

THE SUDDEN DEATH OF DR. R. S. MACARTHUR, on many accounts, seemed like a Boston event. He has so long, and so conspicuously taken his place among our outstanding Boston preachers, by reason of his able service in several of our churches. In the best sense he was a popular preacher, winning his popularity in ways that won his own respect and ours. His themes and his sermons were Biblical, with no cheap catchpenny attachments. His abilities, his sweet Christian nature, and passion to preach the truth as it is in Jesus, seemed to put him entirely beyond any need, or any desire, unduly to strain for a big congregation. But always, thousands heard him gladly. One could never be certain to what "wing" he belonged, since all Baptists everywhere gratefully claimed him. There is something glorious about a life so full, so fruitful and so complete. Death seems like a song of triumph.

DR. CORTLAND MYERS is making Boston his first speaking visit since he closed his ministry at Tremont Temple. He, with Dr. Paul Rader, is making noon and nightly addresses in Mechanics Hall, our largest auditorium, and in Park Street Church. The meetings are attended by very large congregations and are under the auspices of the Evangelical and Missionary Alliance.

CONNECTICUT

MATTERS RELATIVE to the merger of the First and South Baptist churches of Hartford are making rapid progress. The most recent action was the selection of a name for the united church. Of a long list of names submitted, the representatives of the two churches in a joint meeting unanimously agreed, on the first vote taken, upon the Central Baptist Church as the name for the new organization.

REV. C. S. NIGHTINGALE, in his seventh year as pastor of the Painfield Union Baptist church is greatly encouraged in his work because of the response of his people to the evangelistic note in his preaching. Both in the Union church and at Sterling Hill, where he supplies, there is a marked awakening. One of the outstanding characteristics of Mr. Nightingale's ministry in his present field is the large number of young people who have caught the vision of the pastor on life investment and have entered college to fit themselves to play their part in the world's work. Of this number is to be found four of his own children, all graduates, and at the present time either teaching or doing post-graduate work. One son is teaching in the University of Wisconsin.

REV. E. E. SCATES, who settled with the Jewett City church last July, is being richly blessed in his work. Several have been received into the church by baptism. This church recently closed a successful school of missions. The school was held on prayer-meeting night for six weeks with an average attendance of forty-seven. There were four classes; the men studied "New Tasks for Old Churches," Babson; the women and young people in separate groups studied "The Trend of the Races"; the children's group had as its text book "The Magic Box." The classes met at 7:30 for study; at 8:30 a half-hour prayer service. A prominent layman of the church and a leading lawyer of the state say that this school of missions developed more interest among the men of the church and congregation than has ever been possible by the usual stereotyped prayer meeting.

PENNSYLVANIA

THE WOMAN'S BAPTIST Mission Society of Pennsylvania has initiated its first Christian Americanization essay contest. A cash prize of fifteen dollars has been offered for the best Christian Americanization essay, poem, story, hymn, or impersonation. The prize will be awarded at the state meetings in October, 1923. The contest is open to all Baptist women of the state of Pennsylvania. It will close Sept. 10, 1923. All manuscripts must be in the hands of Mrs. I. C. Scattergood, 354 South 13 Street, Harrisburg, Pa., on or before that date. If in western part of the state write Mrs. J. P. Warner, 3122 Iowa St., Pittsburgh.

NEW JERSEY

FIRST CHURCH, Arlington, under the pastoral care of Rev. Charles F. Mayhew, has just closed what was enthusiastically declared to be the best year in the history of the church. The long contemplated enlargement for the church school and social features is under way. A fine Sunday-school building and parish house combined is being erected at a cost of more than $40,000. The church hopes to take possession about Easter time. Along with the burden of the building enterprise, the church has paid more than $12,000 to the New World Movement. Each year sees an increasing budget for home work. The church now gives more for the work of the kingdom at large than it does for the local work. At its last annual meeting the church remembered the pastor with a substantial increase in salary. Congregations are excellent and many strangers attend the services. The church is looking forward to an epoch-making year in its history.

The crowning financial achievement of the Mount Pleasant Church, Newark, of which Rev. Sidney Waterbury Powell is pastor, occurred Sunday Feb. 4, when the pastor was presented with $10,000 in bonds and a $2,500 mortgage was burned. The Mount Pleasant Church was organized in 1867, but an adequate church building was not erected until 1907. There was an indebtedness on this building of $40,000. When the present pastor came in 1918 the debt was $36,000. In the second year of his pastorate Mr. Powell called the congregation together and a campaign was inaugurated to free the church from debt. As a result of this campaign the mortgage was reduced to $11,500. At the same time there has been a spiritual revival in the church. More new members have been received in the last five years than in any other like period in the history of the church, the income has increased over 300 per cent and the church has become a center of community life. At the present time the pastor is delivering a series of sermons on the great evangelistic movements in America.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

Denison

The second semester has opened at Denison with a number of new registrations and a large list of applications for the next college year.

Recently letters went out from the office of the secretary to all Ohio Baptist pastors inviting cooperation in turning earnest, capable students toward Denison, and many encouraging replies are coming in.

Work on Swasey Chapel has proceeded as rapidly as weather conditions permitted. Every effort will be made to have the building ready for the September convocation. Announcement was made last week of an additional provision by Dr. Swasey of a set of chimes, a memorial to his wife. The contract for these bells calls for the best of material and design.

Religious life at Denison is fostered by many agencies. Recent visits have been made for conference purposes by Candidate Secretary R. B. Longwell, Student Secretary Frances P. Greenough, and President Clarence Barbour. These all met an enthusiastic response and expressed much gratification over the interest on the part of the fine large group of students intended for Christian service.

MICHIGAN

REV. A. V. ALLEN began his second year at the Jefferson Avenue Church, Detroit, March 1. It has been a great year for the church. The event was celebrated by "An every-member-present service." The older folks, children and others were brought to the church in automobiles.

REV. W. B. HARTZOG, pastor of the Mason Church, called to his aid Evangeists H. P. Hospkins and H. H. Vigneulle. The meetings continued Feb. 11-25. Twenty decisions were registered; the work will go on until Easter when it is hoped there will be many baptisms. The pastor has organized the new converts into a special class for instruction in the obligations of church membership.

ILLINOIS

REV. H. C. WEDDINGTON, who was pastor at Buda for three years, located as pastor of the church at Atlanta, Feb. 1. Mr. Weddington left the Buda church in fine condition. On Feb. 11 there were eighty-three present in the Sunday-school. The meeting house and parsonage are in good condition. It is hoped to secure a pastor soon.

THE CANTON CHURCH gave a unanimous call to Rev. Paul A. Shenk of North Platte, Neb. He accepted the call and will begin work in Canton, April 1. Mr. Shenk comes highly recommended and the Canton church is ready for aggressive work.

THE PETERSBURG CHURCH recently called as its pastor Mr. Riley, who had been supplying the church for some time.

HUDSON, NORMAL, DANVERS, Havana, Kewanee, Peoria, Blandinsville, and some other churches in the state are now pastorless.

BELDEN AVENUE CHURCH, CHICAGO, held its annual meeting recently. Reports from all auxiliary organizations showed healthy progress. Of the 146 additions to membership during the past year, 133 have made their weekly pledges to both their home church and missionary endeavors. Seventy-seven of these 146 were admitted by baptism. As there had been forty-three dismissals during the year, the net gain was 103. A campaign for one thousand members for Belden in 1923 has been launched. Under the pastorate of Dr. Hoyt, the spiritual condition of Belden is particularly noteworthy. Nine young men are studying for the ministry, and five young men and women preparing for missionary work. The Sunday-school showed a decided gain in the average attendance over that of the previous year. The financial condition of the church was never better, and the officers and membership look forward to a splendid year of service.

THROUGH the Mounds Park Sanitarium, beautifully located at the Indian Mounds Park, the Midway Hospital and the Merriam Park Hospital, a complete Baptist hospital service is offered to the Northwest.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK SAINT PAUL

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: New York. Rev. P H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS

We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent.

Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—

Special Easter Services—Just out

Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful.

Write for slide bulletins.

Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.

GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 years Supplying Churches
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

NEBRASKA

Grand Island College

A gift of $25 has been given by Harold Prince for the best debaters. The recipients will be selected at the close of the inter-collegiate debating season. The two Grand Island teams will debate with each other and judges will select the persons to receive the first prize of $15 and the second of $10. Mr. E. H. Wolbach has made the college an annual gift of $50 to be used as a scholarship fund or as the president may think best. Judge H. E. Clifford recently sent a check for $30 to the college to be placed in a special fund and used at the discretion of the president. The Woman's Club of Grand Island has voted a $40 scholarship for the second semester which will be given to one of the worthy girls of the college to cover her tuition. The Rotary Club of Grand Island recently voted to give the college two scholarships which will cover the tuition of two students. These scholarships will be given each year, and are to be used as a loan fund at a small rate of interest. The idea is to have the fund come back to the college in about five or six years, thus making a permanent scholarship fund.

The alumni and former students are seeking subscriptions to build a house for the president. At the present time $1,300 has been subscribed. Special efforts will be put forth to get subscriptions for the full amount by commencement.

Mr. Lawrence Treat is undertaking to raise a $10,000 endowment for the college. He is endeavoring to receive pledges from 100 men and women to the amount of $10 apiece for ten years. This will pay the premium on a $10,000 life endowment policy for Pres. H. M. Wells, the policy being made out to the college as beneficiary. At the present time forty-three definite pledges have been received and nearly twenty-five others have indicated their willingness to help in this effort. An outright gift of $85 will equal a subscription for $10 a year for a period of ten years.

Prof. W. G. Gibson was added to the college staff as professor of physics and bacteriology, at the beginning of the second semester. He is a graduate of the University of Chicago, and is taking hold of his work with keen interest and commendable vigor.

Plans are being made for the summer school which will open June 4.

The boys of the dormitory have recently requested that their reception room be furnished so that they will have a place in which to receive guests. The room has a piano, and lace curtains have been given by the Baptist church of Wayne. The present need is a rug and a set of furniture.

Rocky Mountain States

MONTANA

Rev. C. A. Irvin, former pastor of the Hardin Church, died Feb. 12. He is survived by his wife and four children. Mr. Irvin was a graduate of the Kansas City Theological Seminary. All of his previous pastorates had been in Nebraska.

COLORADO

Feb. 1, the cornerstone of the new church at Austin was laid. The stone, of brown marble, was presented by Mr. John Watts. The new building will be of native, lichen-covered stone, gathered from the hillsides by volunteer workers. Prayer was offered by Rev. Edmund Clark, a former pastor, and addresses were given by Rev. A. S. Hill, one of the charter members of the church, and by Rev. D. S. McGlashan, pastor of the neighbor church at Eckert. Owing to a snow squall the meeting adjourned to the Methodist church at the invitation of its pastor, Rev. J. R. Treganza. Prior to 1910 Rev. W. F. Ripley had advocated the establishment of a Baptist church in this section. One of the chapel cars was sent here to hold a series of meetings in April, 1910. At their close the First Baptist Church of Austin was organized and a building erected. This building was soon outgrown, so the women of the missionary society started a building fund to which they have added each year. The church membership is now about 150. There are funds in hand only for the completion of the basement. The old structure was razed Jan. 31 so that the materials might be used in the new building. Rev. J. I. Earp is the pastor. The Austin M. E. has offered the use of its house until the new place of worship is ready. Union services are being held on

TRAVEL
FROM ATLANTIC CITY
Northern Baptist Convention (May 23rd-29th)
TO STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN
World Alliance (July 21st-27th)

See Paris; visit battlefields; Switzerland; the Rhine; three weeks' cruise through Norwegian fiords to the land of the Midnight Sun; Stockholm Convention.

Sail from New York, May 31st
Arrive in New York, August 5th

$935.00

Arrangement may be made for returning in either party conducted by Rev. Kenneth C. MacArthur or William G. Towart, under the management of the Temple Tours. Private party organized by

CHARLES H. SEARS

276 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK CITY

Sunday evenings and a union church night service is held Thursday evenings, with a social half hour followed by a song fest. There is a half-hour devotional period followed by study classes in teacher training, Bible, missions and child conservation. The classes are arranged to lead to a series of evangelistic meetings during the two weeks preceding Easter. Two members of the mission study class have decided to become foreign missionaries.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. T. F. McCourtney resigned as pastor of the First Baptist church of Brawley after more than three years of service. He accepted a call to become pastor of Scott Memorial church, San Diego, and began work March 1. Considerable progress has been made by the Brawley church during the past three years. Ninety-four new members have been received. Twenty were baptized. A social hall or Sunday-school rooms were built and a new location purchased in the heart of the city on which the church will build in the near future. The church is united and in perfect harmony.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Quarterly of San Francisco Bay Association

The regular quarterly of the San Francisco Bay Association met on Thursday, Feb. 15, at the Twenty-third Avenue Church, East Oakland, Rev. John Newton Garst, pastor. Mrs. Grant Miller of the entertaining church led the morning devotions. The association director, Mrs. J. G. Oehrli, of San Francisco First Church, spoke on the Continuation Campaign. Miss Ina Shaw, missionary supervisor of the Rocky Mountain, Columbia River, and South Pacific districts, gave an address.

The foreign mission speaker for the forenoon was Miss Lucile A. Withers, of China, who gave a forceful and interesting address. In the afternoon, Mrs. Fieldbrave, wife of Rev. M. Fieldbrave of India, Baptist worker among the Hindus of California, stood on the platform with her white sari over her head and talked to us in excellent English concerning India.

Mrs. C. E. Tingley, state campaign director for northern California, spoke concerning the Continuation Campaign. Mrs. L. A. Johnson, honorary state director for north California, was present.

The enrolment committee reported 119 present. The banner for largest percentage of attendance was won by the Dano-Norwegian Baptist Church, East Oakland. The next quarterly will be held with the Burlingame Church, May 17.—May E. Bamford.

Obituary

Mrs. Frances Leeds Leland, wife of Dr. Hector C. Leland, died at her home in Dixon, Ill., Jan. 30, after a few hours' illness. She was born in New York City in 1850. When sixteen years of age she moved to Chicago where she became an active member of the Second Church. In 1876 she married Rev. H. C. Leland. She was a diligent student of her Bible and also carefully read The Standard, Missions and THE BAPTIST for the past fifty years. Mrs. Leland was especially interested in personal work in soul winning and was very efficient as a pastor's wife. She was the mother of three sons and one daughter, of whom one son, Deacon Albert R. Leland, and one daughter, L. Marie Coad, remain to share their father's loss and longing for

"The touch of a vanished hand
And the sound of a voice that is still."

She always maintained an unshaken faith and closed her earthly life in the triumphant hope of a glorious immortality with her Saviour.

Baptist Teachers' Agency

In response to the request of the presidents of some of the Baptist schools and colleges, the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention is about to set up a department to bring together our Baptist schools and colleges and prospective Baptist teachers. This will not be conducted on the plans of a regular teachers' agency, but the board will endeavor to serve the interests of both parties in bringing to the attention of the schools the names of possible applicants. For the present no charge will be made for this service. The board of education, therefore, invites Baptist teachers who desire positions in Baptist schools and colleges to send their names to the board with full information concerning their academic training and their experience as teachers, together with necessary testimonials as to character and work. The board of education, of course, can assume no responsibility in securing positions for any applicants but will be glad to act as the medium of bringing the Baptist teachers into touch with our Baptist schools. Communications should be sent to the Board of Education, 276 Fifth Ave., New York.

Foreign Mission Fields at Home

It sounds paradoxical, yet it is true. The cities of America are America's great Foreign Mission fields at home. The population of leading cities like New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, manufacturing centers like Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo and Pittsburgh, is overwhelmingly of foreign birth, or includes largely the children of foreign born parents.

Spreading the Gospel in Many Tongues

To Christianize these great communities of new Americans, it is necessary to reach them in their own language. The City Mission Societies assisted generously by our Home Mission Society, are supporting missionaries who preach the Gospel in the Russian, Swedish, Hungarian, Lettish, Italian, Polish and many other languages.

Promoting Christian Americanism

These missionaries in multiplying their contacts with the people, through Social Settlements, Daily Vacation Bible Schools, Industrial Schools, classes in English and Americanization, are breaking down prejudices, spreading genuine Christian sentiment, and are winning many for the Kingdom.

Costly but Fundamental

The evangelization of these people will help save the city. This kind of work has cost much; it will cost much more but it is fundamental. Since the inauguration of the New World Movement, there has been a rapid expansion of this work but the continuance of much of it depends upon the future support given to our New World Movement program.

HELP SAVE THE CITY

The Association of Standard City Mission Societies

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Our Book Shelf

Building a Community, by Samuel Zane Batten. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.00.

In preparing the Judson Training Manuals, the Publication Society is rendering a large constructive service to the churches. For the creation of "alabaster cities" that "gleam, undimmed by human tears," this book is a handy, elementary Christian manual. It treats specifically of the city, but its instructions are applicable to communities of all kinds. In its order of arrangement, definition, review questions and reference lists, there is an exhibition of fine pedagogical skill. One fairly itches to stand before a live class with this manual in hand.

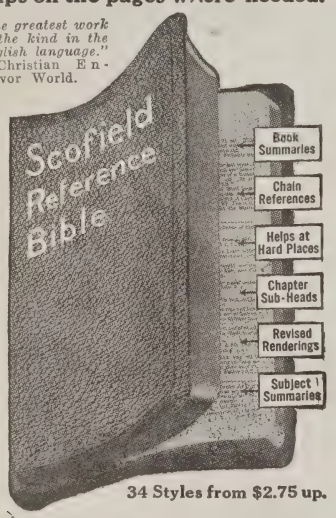
Knowing Birds Through Stories, by Floyd Bralliar. New York: Funk and Wagnalls. $2 net.

A fortunate boy was Floyd Bralliar—fortunate in a father and mother whose first thought when they purchased a homesteading claim in Southeastern Iowa was primarily that of a home, to which they apportioned a ten-acre lot as a playground. This playground became a sort of flower and bird preserve. The country was scoured for new plants to put there—nothing was ever disturbed and a shotgun never heard. Through the years of his childhood, the birds and insects and flowers were Floyd Bralliar's familiars. From this first-hand knowledge he has written the stories about birds. There are also given keys to enable a student to identify the family of the most common birds. Thirty-nine illustrations, many of them in colors, give added meaning to the text. Although the book is intended primarily for boys and girls, it will prove as suited to mature persons who are interested in the subject or who wish to become so.

Analysis of the Interchurch World Movement Report on the Steel Strike, by Marshall Olds. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

No man who has not read the interchurch report on the steel strike has any business with this volume. If that was an appeal to prejudice, so is this. If that was written from the viewpoint of radical socialism, this is written from the viewpoint of reactionary capitalism. If that was a brief for the strikers, this is a brief for the United States Steel Corporation (presented with the compliments of Judge Gary). That the interchurch report possessed the character intimated, this reviewer does not affirm, but this book does. It accuses the report of prejudice, radicalism, unfairness, superficiality, inaccuracy of statistics, false handling of facts, sophistry in reasoning, untrustworthiness of personnel. It impeaches frankly and by name, Bishop McConnell, George W. Coleman, Alva W. Taylor, Earl Taylor, Fred B. Smith and others. It places them in the position of having intelligently or ignorantly played into the hands of the I. W. W. and of revolutionary communists. In fact, it strikes, as it is designed to do, a damaging blow at the interchurch report, and against the persons who signed or prepared that report. An issue is thus raised in which this book is not conceivably the last word. On the contrary, it may be the signal for the opening of the debate on industrial relations to the whole public for the first time, on terms that demand a frank and open consideration of all proposals in the light of all the facts. If so, the world will be the gainer.

The Use of the Old Testament in The Light of Modern Knowledge, by J. E. McFadyen. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.25.



Fifty-five studies in Old Testament literature, most of them prepared as commentaries on the Sunday-school lessons and originally published in the Homiletic Review, are now made available in clear type and attractive form as a handbook for teachers and for general readers. Dr. McFadyen was a pupil of George Adam Smith, and is his successor in the chair of Old Testament at Glasgow. Like his great predecessor he espouses and advocates the modern critical view of the Old Testament, but seeks always the spiritual element and ministers to devotion. Two-thirds of the book is concerned with "Tales of the Early World" (chiefly Genesis) and "Tales Involving Miracle" (Moses, Elijah, Elisha and Daniel). Most of the miracle, it must

The SCOFIELD Reference Bible

Edited by Rev. C. I. SCOFIELD, D. D.
Assisted by Eminent Scholars

Helps on the pages where needed.

"The greatest work of the kind in the English language." — Christian Endeavor World.

34 Styles from $2.75 up.

Send for circular of Bible Questions
Ask for Circular A-9

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch
35 WEST 32D STREET, NEW YORK

The book of the year for the pastor and layman

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A CHRISTIAN

By Professor Edward Increase Bosworth

The beloved teacher of theology at Oberlin combines an open and fearless mind with a loving devotion to evangelical Christianity. In this book, he has translated the very essence of the historic evangelistic message into clear and simple speech for the man of today.

A thoughtful business man has said after reading it, "It is the first time in my life that I have been able to follow this vital subject through to the end without becoming bewildered by mysticism and confused by dogma." Price $1.25 Postage 10c

At all Religious Bookstores

The Pilgrim Press Boston New York Chicago

WORTH-WHILE BOOKS

The Children's Bible

Selections in simple English by
Henry A. Sherman and Charles F. Kent
With 30 full-page illustrations in full color and duotone. $3.50

"This book ought to be in every home of refinement, culture, and piety, without regard to church affiliation."
—The Social Preparation.

Companionable Books

By HENRY VAN DYKE

Makes an irresistible appeal to any one who loves good literature. Dr. van Dyke's estimate and analysis of some of the literary classics which have most impressed themselves upon the hearts of men are masterly. $2.00

Belief in Christ

By CHARLES GORE, D.D.

A sequel to Belief in God. It surveys the various views regarding the person of Christ, his miracles and teachings; and aims to build up a reasonable faith on the basis of traditional belief. $2.25

The Christian Doctrine of Peace

EDITED BY JAMES HASTINGS, D.D.

This volume deals in a thorough and practical manner with the whole biblical doctrine of peace, and, above all, the question of peace or war. $4.00

Human Nature in the Bible

By WILLIAM LYON PHELPS

Deals with the Bible purely as literature and as a delineation of character. Judges the men and women of the Bible by the standards of the twentieth century. $2.00

At all bookstores

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS
597-599 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

HEBREW LIFE AND TIMES

By HAROLD B. HUNTING

"The daily life, the environment, the customs and habits of the Hebrew people are stated vividly, clearly, and, consequently, interestingly."
—Religious Education

Illustrated
Price, net, $1.25; by mail, $1.37

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

be said, is explained away, but important religious lessons are drawn from the tales for the edification of believers. Much of the book is of large value for all careful students of the Old Testament.

Dramatized Missionary Stories, by Mary M. Russell. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.00.

Twelve simple missionary messages in dramatic form, of varying length and requirements, offer an opportunity for young people to interpret publicly and impressively the spirit of missions and the character and achievements of such missionary leaders as Carey, Moffatt and Livingstone. The author has been connected with the Methodist Sunday-school board. The material would be improved if the long recitations were cast in dramatic form and broken into briefer utterances.

The Oracles of God: Studies in the Minor Prophets, by W. E. Orchard. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

The author describes this volume as "an endeavor to appreciate the personalities of the prophets and to estimate their contribution to religious, ethical and social thought, . . . to discover what the message of the minor prophets means when taken as a whole, the one being allowed to correct the other, and thus a broader interpretation of God's word to them being gained." There is little of detailed exegesis or criticism, but much of illuminating and intensely human exposition and application. Traditional dates are followed for the most part; but Joel is assigned to 360 B. C., Zechariah ix-xiv later than Alexander's conquest (333), and Jonah, cir-300 B. C. These verile and stimulating essays on the "prophets of the Silver Age" will inspire a minister of God to fresh adventures in the field of expository preaching directed at the world we live in. Amos "stood for the idea that religion is international, or nothing." Hosea represents a noble adventure in reproduction, suggestive of Calvary. Jonah—written without any concern for versimilitude and intended by the writer as a fable—is an exhortation to the Jews to undertake the conversion of the heathen: an exhortation which "needs to fall on the ears of Christendom, which must either take its own faith seriously and set it before the world as a practical policy, or see its own light fade and its leadership pass away."

Via Sacra (The Expositor's Library), by Rev. T. H. Darlow, M.A. Hodder and Stoughton.

"It may be among the meadows when summer afternoons are spacious; it may be down in the clamour of the crowded streets; it may be in some great cathedral with chanted litanies, or in a quiet chamber whose door shuts out the world—this any place where God grants the vision, where God lets down the ladder." This chance sentence from the chapter on "The Sacred Commonplace" best reveals the choice spirit of these papers and the graceful diction which counts for much. Or this, from "The Wings of a Dove," "Lost Eden! The rustle of its palm trees, the murmur of its four-fold river, sound like an undertone through the legends of the race." The book is made up of these deep spiritual echoes and longings, these homilies of the soul, to which the humblest of us are subject. No one can read the reflections recorded here without feeling the holy legacy that is ours in just living unto God. Deep crieth unto deep, and all life is full of angelic voices. A fine gift this book for the preacher who would have his soul sensitive to God's voice both in nature and revelation.

Dr. Harry Emerson FOSDICK

was the only author who had more than two books mentioned in The CONTINENT'S list (February 1, 1923) of 63 helpful religious publications. Dr. Fosdick has won renown and the gratitude of countless thousands of readers for the help that he has given them. Popular theology, ethics and psychology—the deepest things of life are presented convincingly, suffused with a true religious atmosphere. Five of his books were listed:

CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS.....$1.50
Forceful, brilliant and direct in its presentation
MANHOOD OF THE MASTER..... 1.15
Vividly sets forth His personal qualities
MEANING OF FAITH..... 1.35
MEANING OF PRAYER..... 1.15
MEANING OF SERVICE..... 1.25

A life that rightly conceives of prayer, that is dominated by faith, must be serviceable. This is a call for complete expression of the Christian life through service.

The THREE books uniformly bound in cloth, with morocco ridge, gold stamped, gilt top, with silk marker, encased in an attractive carton, $5.00 postage paid.

HAVE YOU ORDERED YOUR COPIES?

At your bookstore or from us

Association Press
Pub. Dept. Inter. Comm. Y. M. C. A.
347 Madison Avenue New York

BOOKS WITH A PURPOSE AP

Over a Million and a Half are Reading
S. D. Gordon's "Quiet Talks"
His Latest "Quiet Talks on Life After Death"

S. S. TIMES says: "Quiet, penetrating messages bringing inspiration and courage, guidance and cheer."

There's a rare treat in store for those who have never read these quiet, forceful books on the Christian life—OVER A MILLION AND A HALF SOLD! TRANSLATED IN 26 TONGUES! Try any one of the fourteen books—you'll later get them all.

Any Volume $1.25

Quiet Talks on Life After Death
Quiet Talks on the Deeper Meaning of the War
Quiet Talks on John's Gospel
Quiet Talks About the Crowned Christ
Quiet Talks on Following The Christ
Quiet Talks About Our Lord's Return
Quiet Talks About the Tempter
Quiet Talks with World Winners
Quiet Talks on Personal Problems
Quiet Talks About Jesus
Quiet Talks on Home Ideals
Quiet Talks on Service
Quiet Talks on Prayer
Quiet Talks on Power

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS Fleming H. Revell Company New York, 158 5th Ave. Chicago, 17 N. Wabash Ave.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

CHURCH ARCHITECT
Wilson B. Parker 620 State Life INDIANAPOLIS
Send for Illustrated booklet

EASTER FREE
HALL-MACK CO. MUSIC
A postal from Supt., Pastor or Committee will bring a set of sample services. FREE.
* EASTER HELPER, NO. 9, 20c
Book of Songs, Recitations, Drills, etc.
FLAVIA, or THE MARTYRS, 25c.
A Song Story of early Christian Era. This and others sent for examination on request.
* PAGEANTRY
Two Easter Pageants and a Play—25c.
* These are not sent for examination.
SPECIAL—30c.
3 Services, regular edition, value . . . . . 21c
Pageant . . . . . 25c
Helper No. 9 . . . . . 20c
All for 30c in stamps. 66c
HALL-MACK CO., ADAM GEIBEL MUSIC CO. } 21st & Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS
Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write
J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

The largest book for the smallest price.
Manila $30. for 100. DeLux Boards $40. for 100
400 SELECTIONS
For all purposes. Sunday Schools, Churches, Praise Services, Young Peoples Meetings. Returnable sample or free specimen pages sent on request.
HALL-MACK CO. 21st & Arch Sts., Phila., Pa.

The Mother-Teacher of Religion
By ANNA FREELOVE BETTS
"If the mothers of the land would read this book and profit by it the problem of the religious education of the young would be solved."—Boston Evening Transcript.
Illustrated. Net, $2.00; by mail, $2.20
THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

THE MINISTER AND MUSIC

How much thought do we give to the subject of properly instructing our ministers in music? What can be done to impress upon the minds of the faculty of theological seminaries the importance of making music a part of their courses of instruction? How often do the church, Sunday-school, prayer and devotional as well as other services connected with the church, lack enthusiasm, when the pastor could stimulate interest if he understood music and hymnology. Too frequently the superintendent of the Sunday-school has no special interest in music, and leaves it all to the chorister, who in many instances does not know much about it. With him it is all form and no expression. The prayer meeting and other services present the same embarrassing difficulties. If the minister had received a course of instruction in these subjects, he could make the services of far greater power and enthusiasm. In many instances, he could tell the story of the hymn and the music, thus adding to their significance. The minister should be instructed how music ought to be sung by the choir so as to be in harmony with the service and the sermon. If this were done, he would not be at the mercy of the organist or choirmaster; he would be able to consult and advise with them, and see that all is in accordance with the service or occasion.

I talked recently with a number of theological students who had listened to lectures on music, hymnology and related subjects. I asked them several questions and was surprised to find they knew little about many of the most helpful and important points. They confessed the lectures were not as interesting as they might have been.

There should be in each seminary a musical department, a quartet and choir or chorus where a student can become familiar with ancient and modern music and all pertaining to it. Greater demands are being made for church music, and the minister trained in music would be able to render great assistance. If at the devotional or prayer service, the proper hymn were used the story of the hymn would add much of interest. Why cannot the minister occasionally take for his subject a hymn, and announce that the services on a certain evening will be of a musical character? The minister's training would show results.

What a power music can be in the Sunday schools! Some of my richest experiences have been in conducting music in such schools. If you teach your school how to sing some of the difficult pieces they will show greater interest in music. These are days when the young people want the best.—AUGUSTUS S. NEWMAN, in Musical America.

REVIEWS

The H. W. Gray Co., New York

The H. W. Gray Quarterly for Lent and Easter, 1923

At stated intervals this company sends out compilations of new and significant church music. The volumes are indispensable to the active choirmaster in his search for church music of the higher class. The one under consideration contains some of the most valuable music for the on-coming passion season that this reviewer has seen. The names of the composers represented will serve to gauge the high quality of the choral music: James, Cadlyn, Rybner, Gilchrist, Dickinson, Bach, Warren. If you do not get this quarterly, you should write in for it. The new address of this publisher is 159 E. 48th St., New York City.

The White-Smith Music Publishing Co., Boston

The Goblins ..... Ross

Mrs. Ross has made of a clever lyric by George B. Carpenter a most taking and attractive encore-song; it is singable, distinctive and practical; published in two keys for high and low voices.

Huntzinger, Inc., New York

Death Triumphant ..... Scott
Heavenly Light..... Lester

Two new sacred songs from a house which has become noted for the successes it has turned out in this field. The two titles listed above, by their sales and use in the short time in which they have been on the market, show promise of being in the scanty line of "best-sellers." The Scott number is a direct melodic setting of a virile text by the composer himself, has a well-written accompaniment effective for either organ or piano; the vocal writing is idiomatic and grateful. It is a song which will be appropriate to any service, and enjoyed by any audience. The other song is built on less conventional lines. The colorful text, by Sarah Roberts Wallbaum, has afforded a fine opportunity for dramatic and emotional climax-building. The varied movements of the song culminate in a stirring and thrilling paeon of praise at the close. It is not difficult, either for singer or player, is available in two keys for convenience, and is devotional in mode and tone.

A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston

Praise Waiteth for Thee..... Watson
Give Ear to My Words, O Lord. Grant Schaefer
Thine, O Lord, Is the Greatness..... Baines
A Prayer for Refuge..... Bidwell

Four effective anthems for the regular services of the church. Their particular subjects can be gleaned from the titles. All can be highly recommended to the choirmaster in search of sincere settings of appropriate sacred texts, simple to sing and pleasant to hear. None of the four selections is to be classed with the great anthems of our repertoire—such works as "Ho, Every One That Thirsteth," by Martin; "Fear Ye Not, O Israel," by Spicker, and the like. But it is good honest music, honorable for use in the sanctuary and worthy of wide use and encouragement.

A LIVE CHOIR

We are in receipt of a note from Otto MacPherson, director of music of the First Baptist Church of Mt. Vernon, Ill., detailing the worthy hopes and aspirations of the choir and other musicians of the church. Besides the weekly service music so efficiently rendered, several concerts are scheduled, both by the forces of the town and by outside artists specially engaged. Such energy and enthusiasm deserve the finest sort of reward, both concerning success and the appreciation of the congregation.

What the Cut Means

(Continued from page 172)

fused the financial help needed for their opportunity of study. While this is gradually changing, it is not yet possible for us to say that all girls and women's schools must be self-supporting. We are thankful for the progress the Chinese have made in their thought towards the education for girls. When we realize that the majority of baptisms have been the direct result of the personal touch with Christian students during their school lives, of the personal touch in a hospital, it makes us tremble at the thought of needing to close any school, or hospital or even any part of them.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued on page 164)

Rev. R. M. Travers, pastor for many years at Pontiac, Mich., has resigned his pastorate at East Orange, N. J., to become field secretary of the New Jersey Baptist Convention.

The Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa, cares for a daily average of 200 children. It will have rounded out its forty years of service on March 16. It was founded by Rev. J. G. Lemen, who was its manager until his death in 1904. The institution has no endowment and is supported by the voluntary gifts of the people from all parts of the country.

Bethel Institute Glee Club broadcasted a radio concert program from the W. L. A. G. radio station, Minneapolis, on Feb. 26, 10:30 to 12 p. m. The program consisted of numbers from the Glee Club and members of the faculty of the Music department, and a talk by President Hagstrom. Judging from the number of long distance telephone calls, telegrams and letters received by the institution the program was heard and enjoyed by a large number of Baptist friends and others.

San Joaquin played host for eight months to the Chapel Car,, "Grace," and during the visit the chapel car missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. E. R. Hermiston, directed the building and dedication of a church edifice, free of debt. The erection of a parsonage is the plan for the near future, and Rev. S. Kers has accepted the call as pastor of the new church.

Bibles and Testaments to the number of 160 were placed in the homes of ranchmen, cowboys and others in Arizona during the three months which preceded Christmas, 1922. Rev. D. Holloway, colporter missionary covered this field and reports that most of these books were purchased by the owners of the homes in which they were placed.

Considerable success is greeting the missionaries at Sunlight Mission, Toreva, Ariz. One of their problems is to remove from the Hopi Indians, prejudice aroused some fifty years ago, against Negroes, a feeling finding its origin at the time when a regiment of Negro soldiers was sent among them to quell a riot. It was most encouraging at a recent special meeting of Hopi Indians, to find them contributing $12.50 for work among Negroes.

Dr. John Clifford, it is reported, spoke on Feb. 4 at the anniversary meetings of the Bishopsgate Chapel. His subject was "Christ As a Personal Evangelist." He said: "God hates drift, that is why he sets men thinking and rethinking. He trusts the intellect of man."

The sum given for missions by City Park Church, Denver, Colo., in a recent issue of THE BAPTIST was misquoted as $2,418.22. The last annual report of the financial secretary shows the following totals: Raised for all purposes, $19,337.90; paid out for current expenses, $4,905.62; paid out for missions and benevolences of all kinds, $14,432.20. A fairly good showing for a suburban church of 317 members, of whom fifty or sixty are non-resident, with many children in the membership. There are no wealthy members, but a large number led by the pastor, Rev. W. R. Schoemaker, are tithers.

For four weeks, beginning March 18, the churches of Massachusetts will unite in an effort to awaken an interest in the church members who neither worship nor work in their own churches. In an editorial you will find an illustration in one local church which is doubtless typical of a general condition.

The China Baptist Publication Society has now on hand for the use of Baptist churches in China, the graded Sunday-school literature. The presses of this institutions are kept busy all day until 10 o'clock at night turning out supplies. The business is immense as it is not uncommon for the call to come for religious tracts amounting to 100,000 copies.

Want Ads

Free Trip to Europe or Baptist Convention at Stockholm will be given an organizer of a party of five. Price $750 to $1,300. No extras. Established 1900. Babcocks Tours, 13 Halsey St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

It's Worth Looking Into!

WHAT?

Life Annuity Bonds

WHY?

They Represent a Sane Investment

Annuities give a higher rate of interest than any other safe bond, and render unnecessary the worry and cost of reinvestment. At the same time they are primarily an investment in the work of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

Write us today and learn the whole story

MRS. MARY E. BLOOMER, treasurer

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society

(Corporate Name)

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

EUROPE, GREECE, EGYPT, PALESTINE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE

Tours Personally Conducted—45 to 108 Days, From $675 to $1485

Why Pay More? Our Tours Give as Much as Any Give More Than Many Cost Less Than Any

Sailings June and July. Write today for itinerary and full information The WICKER TOURS, Richmond, Va.

Comprehensive Tour of Europe

RECREATION — EDUCATION — INSPIRATION

A close-up study of Reconstruction, from the View of Industrial, Political, Religious and Social Relations, Including Jubilee Exposition at Gothenburg, Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Germany, Switzerland, Italian Lakes, Rome, Florence, Monte Carlo, Southern France, Paris and the Battle Fields, London and Oxford.

With an Experienced Leader in co-operation with Bennett's Travel Bureau, whose name stands for Comfort, Convenience and Courtesy.

Write for particulars to

DR. WILLIS A. CHAMBERLIN

Denison University GRANVILLE, OHIO

Annual Meeting American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

The one hundred and ninth annual meeting of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N. J., May 25, 1923, at 9:45 a. m., and succeeding days, to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the board of managers, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting.

By order of the board of managers,

WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD, Rec. Sec.

Dated, New York, Feb. 21, 1923.

Rates to the Atlantic City Convention

The several passenger associations whose jurisdictions cover the entire Northern Baptist Convention territory, have granted to those attending the Atlantic City Convention, and the dependent members of their families, a rate of one and one-half of the regular one-way fare, under the terms indicated below.

Upon the presentation of an identification certificate, the local ticket agent of the railroad from your place of residence, will sell to the holder, between the dates herein given, a round-trip ticket for one and one-half the regular one-way fare, which ticket must be validated for use by the agent at Atlantic City, of the route used in reaching that place, which route must be used in returning.

Selling dates from Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington are May 11-20 inclusive, and the ticket will be good to return on, up to midnight of June 7.

From Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah and Wyoming dates of sale will be May 12-21, with final limit June 6.

From all other points tickets will be on sale May 14-23, and final limit midnight of June 5.

The Pacific Coast lines will have a summer rate which will be very low, and the tickets thereon will be on sale May 15-Sept. 15 and be good until Oct. 15.

Identification certificates can be secured by applying to your state secretary, or other denominational leader, or by application direct to this office.

W. G. BRIMSON,
Manager of Transportation,
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"It Is to Laugh"

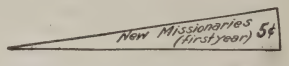
A Londoner with a reputation as a pugilist had come from London to fight a Scot farmer whose great strength had been praised in the press. He entered the yard of the Scot, tied his horse to a tree and approached the farmer who was working nearby.

"Friend," he said, "I have heard a great deal about you and I have come a long way to see which of us is the better wrestler."



The Scotchman, without answering, seized the young man by the middle of the body, pitched him over the fence and returned to his work. When his lordship recovered his breath he stood silent. "Well," said the farmer, "have you anything more to say to me?" "No," was the reply, "but perhaps you'll be so good as to throw me my horse."

How Your Dollar Grows

If Invested with the W. A. B. F. M. S.

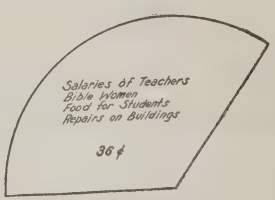
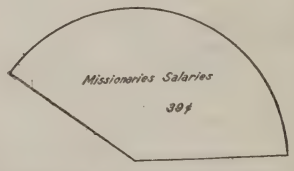
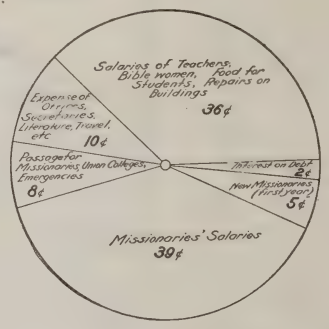
Interest on the debt that would not be, if loyal Baptists paid their pledges promptly and fully.



Outfits for new missionaries. Travel to their fields of service. Expense of language study. Salaries for the first year.



Miscellaneous expense:
Travel for furloughs
Our share of running expenses of four Union Christian Colleges for Women in the Orient.
Necessary small fund for emergencies.



Administration:
Correspondence with 283 missionaries.
Keeping accounts for budget of $502,326.95.
Helping 4,000 Baptist churches carry on their women's foreign mission work.
Preparation of literature.

Schools and Bible women:
Salaries for native teachers.
Bible women.
Food for children unable to pay for it.
Necessary repairs on buildings.

Missionaries' salaries—the foundation on which the dollar grows.

You know how little one dollar buys today. It must be multiplied many times.

HELP MAKE MORE DOLLARS GROW!

The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

Corporate name

ALICE M. HUDSON, Treas.

276 Fifth Avenue New York

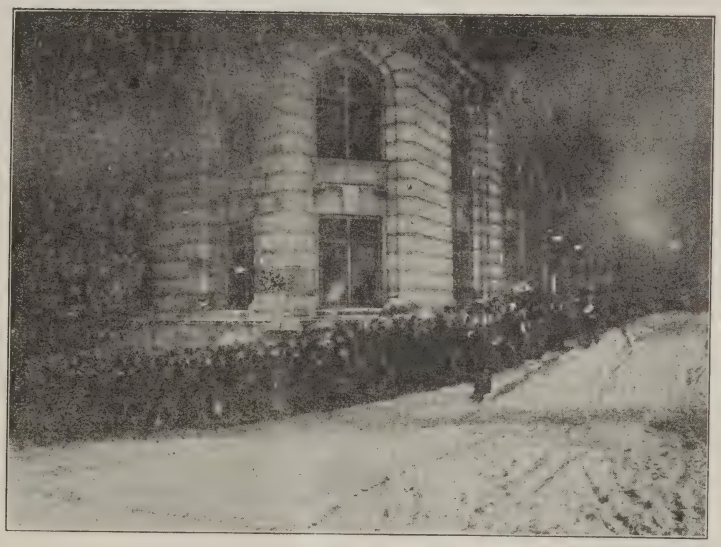
THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION



86.05
BAP

Volume IV March 17, 1923 No. 7

The Baptist

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
MAR 17 1923

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Ford Hall Building, Boston, Massachusetts

SHOWING the Forum crowd lined up in a snow storm, waiting for the door to open. The picture was taken at six thirty on Sunday evening, January 14, 1923.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. S. P. Shaw, general superintendent of the South Dakota Convention, was obliged recently to undergo a very serious surgical operation. We understand that his condition is as good as can be expected. Friends everywhere will pray for his complete recovery.

Rev. A. C. King, who has been assistant pastor of the Selma church, Selma, Cal., has accepted the call of the church at Orosi. The Selma church, of which Rev. F. C. Truax is pastor, passed resolutions expressing appreciation of the service rendered by Mr. King.

At their own expense in the early fall Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Homer Rhodeheaver and Miss Grace Saxe will leave on a tour of the mission fields. The last two are former members of the Sunday party. It is proposed to hold conferences with missionaries of all denominations.

Dr. Fred P. Haggard, formerly home secretary of the Foreign Society and Miss Charlette F. Clark, for eleven years superintendent of the Fannie Doane home for missionaries at Granville, Ohio, were married, Mar. 1, by Rev. H. T. Houf, pastor of the Granville church. They will make their home at Wolfboro, N. H.

The new postmaster general of the United States, Harry S. New, of Indiana, is an editor. He declares that under his administration the postoffice department will not be a political machine but will concentrate on the business of delivering the mail. That sounds good to those of us who have waited a week for mail which has been posted in the next county.

Rev. G. R. Robbins, who until recently was pastor of the Memorial Church, Columbus, Ohio, is engaged in evangelistic work. He is now engaged in special meetings with the Tabernacle Church, Chillicothe, after which he goes to the Oakley Church, Cincinnati. Dr. Robbins is well-equipped as a real pastor's helper in evangelistic meetings. You will find his announcement on another page.

A copy of the "Osaka Mainichi," "the only English daily newspaper published in Japan, owned, controlled and edited by Japanese," is a newsy sheet. If the copy is a fair sample of the general character of the journal it compares favorably with many of our own dailies. When we read its leading editorial on the need of national defense we had to look to see if we were not reading the Chicago Tribune.

Calvary Church, New York, has installed a broadcasting station. The pastor, Dr. John Roach Straton, will send out his sermons direct from the church. The station is W Q A O. According to the secular press the pastor will "twist the devil's tail so that his squawk will be heard across the continent." The radio will be used to deliver attacks on the theater, the evolution theory, the latest dances, the latest styles, and so forth. The first sermon to be broadcasted was "Old Fashioned Medicine for America's New-fashioned Sins and Sorrows." Sounds good.

Dr. John R. Sampey, professor of Old Testament interpretation for thirty-eight years, has just recovered from a serious illness and with Mrs. Sampey has gone to Florida for a month's rest. Professor Kyle M. Yates, his assistant, will occupy his chair during his absence.

Last year Dr. U. M. McGuire gave THE BAPTIST an interesting study of the then recently organized Order of De Molay for boys. It started less than three years ago with nine members and now numbers 150,000. The movement is sponsored by the Masons. The first annual meeting will be held in California the coming summer.

Infant mortality is the big problem presenting itself to the missionaries in the city of Osaka in Japan. Here is found the highest rate of infant mortality in the world. During the past year 257 out of every 1,000 babies died. Missionaries, especially engaged in work for women, find here a great field for study and work.

In May, at the next meeting of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the question of reunion of northern and southern Metho-

(Continued on page 196)

Is Your Radio Working?

Time for WABFMS—Orient

Listen in!

WABFMS—South India.

"'No hope here! No hope beyond!' wailed the sick woman. 'I have tried three times to end it all and they have stopped me. Why?' I told her of Christ who died that we might have everlasting life. They listened eagerly. The younger woman followed me to the door asking questions, and exclaimed, 'If your message is the truth, as you say it is, why haven't these walls heard it before?'"

WABFMS—Japan.

"It is the dormitory girls who first become Christians. For the sake of evangelism we should provide room for all who want to come. Just yesterday a non-Christian mother and father came together to beg us to take their little girl in because they wanted her to have Christian teaching and become a Christian."

WABFMS—Assam.

"The men sat on the ground in a wide circle around a lantern under our front porch and begged us to open a school in their village .....'How can we change our religion when we do not know anything about yours?'"

Hold the air—Stand by!

Have you done your share toward Broadcasting the Gospel in the Orient?

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

Alice M. Hudson, Treas.

276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., March 17, 1923 No. 7

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 194 |
| EDITORIAL | 197 |
| ETHICAL LEADERSHIP AND THE MODERN MINISTRY, BY J. C. CARLILE | 200 |
| ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF FORD HALL, BY CHARLES H. WATSON | 202 |
| WHERE DOES THE MISSION FIELD BEGIN? BY CHARLES ALVIN BROOKS | 203 |
| AT THE DAWN OF A NEW AGE, BY ROBERT B. LONGWELL | 204 |
| THE SWATOW REGION A HALF YEAR AFTER THE TYPHOON, BY NEWTON H. CARMAN | 205 |
| PERSISTENT AGITATION BRINGS RESULTS, BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY | 206 |
| AN IDEAL CHURCH BUILDING | 207 |
| THE BUSINESS OF SOUL WINNING | 208 |
| OPEN FORUM | 209 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 210 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 212 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 213 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 214 |
| THE RELIGION OF A BEST SELLER, BY W. T. ELMORE | 219 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 220 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 222 |

Now Father Confessor

"I am glad you wrote me and reminded me of the 'sin of omission' and I hasten to make confession and restitution." Thus writes a man of no mean city. You can't guess the name of the city by that description, and you know the secrets of the confessional are sacred. After all when you fail to pay your subscription to your denominational papers, your church and the work of the kingdom, you need both to "confess and make restitution." How does your label read?

Killam's Kollum

Show As He Goes

A recent subscription to denominational journals from Lodge Grass, Mont., was for Mr. Show As He Goes of that city. What a fine name for a Christian Indian or any other Christian—Show As He Goes. We also note that Everyland receives a subscription for Lewis Walks On Ice. This latter name more truly defines the average Christian. How would you like a Christian name which exactly described you as a follower of Christ? Some of us would be known as Brother or Sister No Good, or Good Once In A While, Good When He Feels Like It, Brother Know Nothing and Do Nothing. There are endless possibilities along this line.

It Is the Man—or Woman

After all has been said about the difficulty of getting church people to take their church papers, the problem simmers down to individual interest and good business principles. We have many reasons for the statement. In the first place, you can trace the pastorates of certain men by the gifts of the churches to missionary and benevolent work. You can trace these same men by the lists to the denominational newspapers. We cannot give you here a list of individuals, but as an illustration let us call attention to the list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST in Bridgeport, Conn., last year—one of the largest lists in New England. Perhaps the Bridgeport saints are unusual in their loyalty to the denominational journals. We think they are; but Pastor McQueen goes to the First Church, Rochester, and lo, the list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST doubles at once. How can you account for it? McQueen. The same is true of hundreds of men and churches. The other day Lewiston, Me., sent in a check for $110; Jenkintown, Pa., $30; Hutchinson, Kan., $39, and so it goes. We made our friend Leonard in Detroit blush by our note, "Leave it to Ben," we are informed. It was not a blush of shame but of wholesome pride. He followed up the list which called forth our effusion by another, amounting to $54.50. We tell you it is men and women that spell the difference between success and failure in any enterprise dependent upon voluntary unpaid service. There is Pierson at Janesville, Wis.; for three years running his list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST has been more than 10 per cent of the reported membership. It is the man.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 194)

dists will be decided. A joint commission on unification met recently in Cincinnati where it was definitely decided to submit proposals for union to the bodies concerned. The churches are essentially the same and the separation came about over the question of slavery. The concensus of opinion seems to be that the plan will be endorsed bringing to an end a break which has lasted eighty years.

The new building of the First Church, Eaton, Colo., of which Rev. N. J. Peterson is pastor, will be dedicated on Easter.

Mr. James Allison, who for twenty-six years was the faithful caretaker of the Second Church, Chicago, is now caretaker of the Wilmette Church.

Percy Lenwood Graham was ordained March 2 at the Immanuel Church, Scranton, Pa. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. I. J. Beckwith and the charge to the candidate was given by T. Vassar Caulkins.

Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, has undertaken one of the biggest jobs any governor ever tackled. He proposes to enforce the dry law in his state, which is commonly reported to be one of the "wettest" spots in the country. Mrs. Pinchot, who for many years has been an active club woman, has started a campaign to interest the woman's clubs in the enforcement of law. It is already clear that these friends of law and order will meet with powerful opposition.

E. Elizabeth Vickland writes: "The missionaries in Assam wish to express their appreciation of the White Cross supplies sent by friends. Many parcels of hospital supplies have been sent. Through a misunderstanding, some of these were sent to Golaghat instead of to Gauhati where the new woman's hospital is in process of building. However, in the future, may we ask that no hospital supplies be sent to Assam unless your white Cross Director sends you a requisition for the same which she has received from the field, as we may become overstocked with certain supplies which are more needed at the present time on other fields. This does not apply to Christmas boxes, but simply to hospital supplies."

It will be of interest to those who have viewed with alarm some tendencies in the moving picture field to find that there is a group of educators, clergymen and others interested in welfare work engaged in a study of the problems involved. They recently evolved a creed as follows: "I believe that the best way to improve motion pictures is to select, patronize and advertise the best; I believe in special performances for boys and girls and special "family nights; in educating parents to study their children and to regulate their attendance at motion pictures with intelligent care; I believe in the maintenance of the highest standards in the conduct of the motion picture theatres which I will attend; I believe in telling the exhibitor when I like his program and why, as well as when I don't like his program and why; I believe in the motion picture theatre as a community institution and in community cooperation with the exhibitor; I believe in the vast educative, cultural and recreational values of the screen and in my own ability to add a little to the forces working for its constant elevation." If you would like to know more about the matter of "better films," address Better Films, 70 Fifth Ave., New York. Clarence A. Perry, associate director of the department of recreation of the Russell Sage Foundation, is chairman, and Rev. A. Ray Petty of Judson Memorial Church, is a member of the committee.

Mrs. Harriet B. Runyan of St. Paul recently conducted a two weeks' Bible and missions campaign with the Y. W. C. A. of Rock Island, Ill. This was Mrs. Runyan's fourth annual visit to the Y. W. C. A. of Rock Island.

F. Wayland Ayer

Deputy Police Commissioner John A. Harris, of New York, says that to apply the method of Coué would decrease the automobile accidents 50 per cent. "Autosuggestion as applied to traffic is nothing more than caution. Of course, it is impossible to eliminate all street accidents, but I am sure that half of them would never occur if both pedestrians and drivers practiced Couéism." Wonder how Mr. Coué would like to be a traffic cop?

By a printer's error the name of the author of the article on "A Visit to Central America" was omitted. The author is our good friend Samuel Graham Neil of the Publication Society. Please excuse the mistake of the printer.

Mrs. Gerald R. Richards, widow of the former secretary of the Cleveland Baptist Union, has been appointed superintendent of the Fannie Doane home for missionaries' children at Granville, Ohio. Mrs. Richards is well qualified for the position. Since Mr. Richards' death she has been in charge of the Y. W. C. A. dormitory at Akron, where she has rendered satisfactory service as adviser and friend to hundreds of young women in that city.

One student totally blind and another with but sufficient sight in one eye to observe large moving objects are setting a pace for high scholarship at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. J. Earle Dodd, the former, of Meggett, S. C., and John W. Burchfield, the latter, of Altoona, Pa., are both candidates for degrees, Mr. Burchfield expecting to graduate in the spring. Brother students read the lessons over to these men, who get their assignments from one reading. They take oral examinations. Mr. Dodd made ninety in New Testament and in Old Testament and one hundred in systematic theology in the recent term examinations.

An independent committee of laymen in Seattle has secured Rev. G. Campbell Morgan for a series of meetings for two weeks from Mar. 18-30. He will hold two services each day. The meetings will be held in the building of the First Church.

Rev. F. F. Soren, pastor of the First Church, Rio de Janeiro, is in this country. In addition to his duties as pastor Dr. Soren is professor of pastoral theology in the seminary there and Mrs. Soren is in charge of the college for boys and girls.

On March first Grant M. Hudson closed his work as director of the work of the Michigan Baptist Convention and John E. Smith assumed the task. Both men are Michigan graduates of Kalamazoo College. For ten years or more the newly elected director was pastor of the First Church, Kalamazoo. The work of the convention was never in better condition and we expect great things in the years just ahead.

Rev. H. P. Klyver, convention pastor of the Michigan Baptist Convention has accepted the call of the Immanuel Church, Detroit. This church offers a splendid field for the service of one with the experience of Dr. Klyver.

In the issue of March 3, it was stated that the total receipts of the Whosoever Bible Class, which meets in the Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, were $1,099. This amount was raised for missions alone; the total receipts were $2,160.

Mr. J. C. Stern, who has been preaching in South Africa, came to Chicago for further training. He was ordained by the Marquette Road Church, Feb. 26, and his work as pastor has opened auspiciously. Pres. G. W. Taft preached the ordination sermon, Dr. M. P. Boynton gave the charge to the candidate and Dr. Benjamin Otto the charge to the church. Rev. C. B. Althoff was chairman of the committee.

The Campbell County Ministerial Association (including Baptists, Methodists, United Brethren, Disciples, Lutherans, and Episcopalians) in session at Newport, Ky., passed resolutions, according to the Western Recorder, endorsing the Ku Klux Klan. Their reasons are stated in no uncertain words. First they believe in the principles of the klan and "denounce as underhanded, unprincipled and un-American the Jesuitical propaganda which is being fathered and carried on by a certain secret organization of a certain religious sect and given the widest publicity through the secular press." Then follows a warning to the American Legion to beware of the leading of Father O'Connor, national chaplain of the legion, and in closing they speak of their unreserved opposition to any group which takes the law into its own hands but they propose to make even corrupt officials enforce the law.

The Baptist

A Hat with a History

MORE wonderful than the mysterious and inapposite things, living and dead, which the pseudo-magician draws from a silk hat, have been those drawn from the tall hat of the young preacher, Samuel Cornelius, who lived a century ago in the neighborhood of Philadelphia and Washington. He carried tracts in the crown of his hat for distribution as he went about. This appears to have suggested to him and to Noah Davis, both having studied theology in the home of Dr. Staughton of Philadelphia, the formation of a tract society, Davis taking the initiative which, under the later name of the American Baptist Publication Society, will have its one hundredth birthday next year.

The last work of Cornelius was the pastorate of the church at Ann Arbor, where he died in 1870. The writer of this followed him a score of years later and heard many a quaint anecdote concerning this original character. One of these was told him by President Angell. Some one had asked Father Cornelius how many deacons he had and received the astonishing reply, "A thousand." At the incredulity in the face of his questioner he insisted, "Yes, yes! a thousand—one and three ciphers!" The old man must have effected a permanent change, for in the writer's pastorate he found all of the deacons to be integers. But what would Father Cornelius say if he could see next year all that has come out of his hat?

"On the March" tells us something of that outcome, midway of the New World Movement. The magician has drawn from the hat a great publishing house with a yearly business of more than two millions. An editorial staff of fifteen (O, the manuscript and proof-reading!) and a hundred printers turn out religious literature, from Bibles in fifteen languages—including a Russian Bible for our new Baptist million or two—down to the latest works which have been fine enough to pass the meshes of the editorial sieve, and the fifty million copies annually of Sunday-school publications with far more than a billion pages, requiring eighteen hundred tons of paper annually!

And out of that hat has come perhaps the biggest Baptist university in the world. In the allocation of service and eliminating of duplications the work of the Publication Society has been in general determined as the dissemination and inculcation of religious knowledge. This it does on a tremendous scale through the billions of printed pages it has sent fluttering out over America and to distant continents and islands. Its silent teaching reaches more millions than all ordinary Baptist schools combined. It catches its matriculates younger and holds them longer than any other school, for the lisp of little children and the voices of white-haired saints alike repeat its lessons. Its books and other publications are carried to places inaccessible to church and Sunday school. It has a correspondence course covering four years, for ministers, missionaries, Sunday-school workers and others, in Biblical and Baptist history, the life of Christ, sermon-making, missions, evangelism, Christian training, and the new Christian culture courses of our young people. Yes, it is a very big Baptist university.

But it is not an impersonal mechanism, a mere sanctified mail-order house. Its general officers wield a potent, personal influence not only over their own great work but in every department of our denominational life. Its representatives, under a cooperative arrangement with the Home Mission Society still go far and near, on foot and by grace of the meek but efficient flivver, by chapel car and chapel boat, and now, by a chapel automobile, carrying Christian literature and the personal message of the gospel, with the voice and the hand-clasp of a friend.

THEN there is the daily vacation Bible school, another great idea widely used among all denominations but, like that of the chapel car, originating with the Baptists. By this and the rapidly spreading week-day Bible school the influence of the church and Sunday school is multiplied enormously. Another remarkable feature of the society's work is its cooperative arrangement with twenty-four states and five great city mission societies in the employment of state and city directors of religious education who unify, amplify and stimulate the work of Sunday schools and churches through institutes, summer assemblies, vacation Bible schools and through a thousand other lines of official or personal influence. With four millions of invested funds and this vast reach of beneficent activity our Publication Society has come a far and splendid journey through the years.

There is the uncompromising top-piece of the old Puritan; there is the star-spangled hat of Uncle Sam; there is the historic hat of Lincoln; and Roosevelt's cow-boy hat ready to be cast into the ring. Among these hats that have made history we believe Baptists may claim a place for the old high hat of Samuel Cornelius.

F. Wayland Ayer—Christian Layman

F. WAYLAND AYER has gone from us. His friends have been aware of his failing health for a year or more, and yet the news of his death comes as a shock. The secular press has given in detail the story of his life in its relation to business enterprises in which he has been a large factor. We shall speak of him here in the relation in which most of our readers knew him best—that of a Christian layman.

For many years Mr. Ayer interested himself in the work of the denomination and kingdom outside his local church. For twenty-five years he was president of the New Jersey Baptist Convention. He familiarized himself with the details of the growing problems of that great state. Within the past few years he made provision through gifts to the convention to help carry on that work when the day should come that he could no longer give it his personal attention.

It was during the Extra Million and Victory campaigns that the denomination at large came to know him best. For months he gave practically his whole time to those great endeavors out of which grew our New World Movement. He never spared himself. We have been with him in scores of conferences with ministers and laymen. It was here that those qualities which had made him a business success were most clearly in evidence. He was frank, blunt in expression and unswerving in purposes. His messages to ministers and laymen alike were not of the soothing type. He discovered a tendency upon the part of a considerable number of ministers to "protect" their laymen from outside appeals He would say again and again, "The layman needs no one to protect him. He has become an expert in that line himself. What he needs is to be 'exposed' to the appeals for the work of the kingdom."

We cannot here begin to enumerate the positions of responsibility he held both in the denomination and in other Christian enterprises such as the Y. M. C. A. In the denomination they ranged from the presidency of the Northern Baptist Convention and, for a quarter of a century, the head of the work in his own state to the superintendency of his own Sunday school for fifty years. We feel sure that he would reverse the order; for no task he undertook seemed ever to dim for him the glory of the home work, especially that of teaching the Word of God in the local church.

We cannot forbear making mention of his service to THE BAPTIST. It was during the great national campaigns to which reference has been made that Mr. Ayer faced the facts concerning our denominational newspaper situation. A trained publicity man, he knew the value of the appeal through the printed page. He discovered that in order to reach even 50,000 Baptist homes he had to go through the channels of at least a half dozen journals, all of which were more or less local in their nature and appeal. It was then that he dreamed of the day when the denomination should have a medium carrying our common interests to the remotest bounds of the convention. From that time he served on committees which had to do with the paper and its problems. While ill health kept him from the meeting in Indianapolis, he wrote to members of the committee, expressing his interest in the newspaper enterprise and pledging his continued support. He believed to the last that the paper can have, and therefore should have, a much larger circulation.

F. Wayland Ayer gave himself to the interests of the kingdom outside of the local church but his interest in the home church never lagged. He set currents in motion which will continue to be a blessing for years to come. He will be remembered as a Christian layman.

Pious Camouflage

THERE has come to hand one of the many appeals for the support of various undenominational and faith missions. We are not now passing upon work that these institutions are doing; that is not our purpose. We assume, what we believe to be true, that these agencies are conducted by unselfish men and women and that great good is accomplished. The motive of the workers is in no way called into question, but the methods used to secure financial aid do not at all appeal to us.

"While the founders of the school do not feel that the appeals for the Lord's work should be made to men, but unto him in whom is their entire dependence, yet . . . ." Then follows one of the shrewdest appeals for financial support under the guise of "witnessing." Why camouflage this financial appeal? Why should we not call upon men to carry on the work which Christ himself commissioned them to do? There is altogether too much of this same sentiment in our churches. "I do not like to talk money in our church. It destroys the spirit of worship." The church that does not teach and practice stewardship of life, time and money, is falling far short of what a Christian church should be. When as members of the churches we get right with God in the matter of stewardship, we will find it less difficult to worship him in spirit and in truth. We do not show a lack of faith in God when we ask men for money for his work. We show our faith in his ability to create in men the desire to serve to the point of sacrifice. Nevertheless our troubles are due not to the making of appeals but to the wrong way in which we make them.

The Word of a Gentleman

THE Baptist Times and Freeman says: "In the diary of David Livingstone there is an entry which was made at a time when he expected to be murdered by savage tribes. It reads as follows: "Felt much turmoil of spirit in view of having all my plans for the welfare of this great religion and teeming population knocked on the head by savages tomorrow. But I read that Jesus came and said, 'All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' It is the word of a gentleman of the most sacred and strictest honour, and there is an end on't."

A Page of Opinion

Preachers and Editors Create "Rabid Partisanship"

IN an interview reported in the Northwestern Christian Advocate Miss Royden lays blame for "rabid partisanship" in religion at the door of the preachers and editors. Somehow when she speaks out one begins to prick up his ears to listen. She said we "were frightfully in earnest.'

"Why look at your theological differences, for just one instance," she went on to say. "You seem to be enormously exercised over modernism. There are actually 'fundamentalist movements' organized and seemingly many people are interested on both sides of the question."

When asked what she conceived to be the reason for this condition she replied without hesitation: "Do you mind if I say that I believe that it is due to your lack of education? It is not that I think you uncivilized; it is just that you are new. You have been so busy building a nation that your people have not had time to become educated in the sense that I mean. You have not had time to think seriously. You read your newspapers and perhaps a magazine or two. But are too busy to think into and through big questions —so you take the opinions of the editors or preachers as your own. Naturally you take rather violent sides.

"And the pitiful part of it is that so much of the battle is over phrases! In my preaching in England I always have a time for answering questions after the sermon and I often have some of the old phraseology hurled at me, but when we dig down and down to the heart of the matter we usually find that the literalist holds almost the identical idea which is mine. It seems to me that a great share of the difficulty is due to the encrustation which has taken place around some of the great theological words or phrases. The terminology has become hardened. We hear it from our childhood and it becomes a part of our thinking until finally we feel that the foundation is removed from under us if anyone tampers with this word. Words become of more importance to us than truth.

"I don't want to seem harshly critical, but this intense zeal over your theological divisions here does seem due in great measure to your willingness to be led by your preachers and editors, to your lack of real thought on the subject—what can well be expressed perhaps as lack of education."

"But that would hardly characterize some preachers who hold a very literalistic view of religion and are tremendously in earnest over the faults of the liberals. Some of them are quite well educated. What about them?" I queried.

"Does it necessarily follow that because they have gone through schools, they think deeply or scientifically?" was her counter question. "I believe that if people took time to think out their problems they would not be so rabidly partisan, one way or the other. Preachers and people, you are frightfully cumbered with things. You have so many things to be done that you have all too little time to think. But you have such a marvelous civilization, one that I sometimes think holds the promise of the future for the world. If only your religious life were thought through to a more mature conclusion."

Plan for World Organization

LEWIS STOCKTON, of Buffalo, N. Y., has outlined in the Buffalo Express a plan for helping to bring about a new alignment of the governments of the world, in regard to establishing a peaceful world order. His plan is, briefly, as follows:

"It is suggested that congress invite representatives of all governments to a conference to consider principles upon which to establish a duly constituted international authority, orderly international relations, national security and economic stability by the joint action of all governments. The action of the conference is not to be binding on any government unless ratified duly by all governments according to their several constitutional principles. The following agenda is proposed:

"Can a tentative agreement be reached by the conference to reduce armies, navies and expenditures for armaments, according to principles of relative size to be agreed upon by such conference?

"Can an association of all national states be formed for the purpose of establishing the permanent international court of justice by setting up a quasi citizenship in such association; such court to have jurisdiction over such quasi citizens as individuals?

"Can the conference recommend to the several governments to consider the feasibility of jointly guaranteeing economic aid, where needed and authorized by said association, under proper restrictions?

"Can the conference agree to recommend that the league of nations amend its covenant to accord with the agreements of the conference, if and when such agreements are ratified, made and entered upon by governments of all states?"

In furtherance of this plan all who agree to its statement of principles are asked to clip this statement from THE BAPTIST, paste it on a sheet of paper, and send it to Charles Evans Hughes, secretary of state, Washington, D. C., with the following endorsement: "I favor the United States government proposing a plan, in substance, like the one herein outlined," signing your name.

Each one of us is responsible for his section of public opinion, and each one of us can exercise an influence in forming this vast force—a force so irresistible that, once aroused, it can achieve the impossible. The plan appeals to us as a step in the right direction.

Ethical Leadership and the Modern Ministry

An address delivered before the Baptist board by the president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain

By J. C. Carlile

AN impartial survey of history would not show that the ministry of the churches has been conspicuous for its moral leadership. Those who hold that the modern ministry is fashioned upon the priesthood of the old dispensation, if not a direct evolution of the priestly order, can claim comparatively little in the realm of ethical movement. Their leadership from the days of Aaron, who is perhaps best remembered by his creation of a golden calf, unto the last of the priests of the Old Testament, against whom Malachi uttered strong words of condemnation, was characterized by vacillation, neutrality, and at best a mild support of the moral movements of the age in which they lived. Perhaps it was a special function of the priesthood to conserve ceremony, custom and tradition. It was left to the prophets to become the moral guides and leaders of great movements. I do not take the view that the Christian ministry is the outcome of the Old Testament priesthood. I think it has closer affinities with the prophets—less of the temple and more of the synagogue.

The Prophets as Ethical Leaders

The prophets were of a different order. It is an inspiration to read the Old Testament apart from the annotations and the puzzles of the higher critics or the blind literalists, and to view the prophets simply as the religious leaders of ethical movement. What a wonderful company they were! They were the pillars of morality and religion in the state, not simply advocates, but its passionate exponents. We cannot get away from the charm of their whole-hearted advocacy of righteousness, equity and the virtues that are as gems in any nation's crown. In every land, and particularly in Eastern lands, avarice and personal advantage were the great temptations. The prophets never ceased to proclaim the City of God wherein dwelleth that righteousness which exalteth a nation. Each has his distinctive message, his clarion note, fashioned by his personality and conditioned by the period in which he lived.

Amos insists upon the internationalism of true religion, for God is God of all. Hosea proclaims that the individual must not only share God's love, but must act in love to his brother. Isaiah in stately imagery sets forth the wondrous message of Jehovah. The character of God is the guarantee of the triumph of righteousness. Ezekiel, far away in exile, sees the approaching doom of the Holy City and cries aloud that the burden of responsibility rests upon each individual; not even the elect—the chosen people of God—can escape individual responsibility. All share in the responsibility for corporate righteousness or collective sin.

The prophets not only received by revelation the conception of the character of God and his relationship to the people, but also the foundations upon which ethical order can alone be built. They were not simply politicians, though they are usually that without apology; they brought the glow of religion, the fervour of lips that had been touched by the live coal from off the altar, the singleness of purpose that belongs to men who have heard the call, and each for himself has responded: "Here am I; send me."

Inarticulate

By Lucie Gill Price

SOMETIMES
I fall upon my knees
And cry: "Oh, God!"
Then my troubled mind
Goes groping for the words
With which to tell him
Of my woe,
And finds them not;
Yet he surely understands,
For on my bended head
I seem to feel his touch
Of gentle sympathy.

The prophets realized that their work could be done only in the community and through the community. The great task was to reproduce that type of life which they had seen in vision while they lingered alone in the presence of God. Social righteousness was in their view directly connected with cleansing grace. While their religion was not simply an ethical code, they knew nothing of religion which did not include and go beyond ethics. Their conception of righteousness was not confined to the Hebrew people. Of course, it was primarily to them that their messages were delivered, but they saw the glory of the Lord filling the whole earth; and their utterances of ethical principles knew no barrier.

The New Testament tells the same story. The priesthood, standing upon precedent, custom and tradition, fearful for the rights and existence of the profession, consented to and planned the crucifixion of the Lord.

Jesus a Great Ethical Leader

It is amazing to see the decisions he gave in axioms upon the great moral questions of his day. Almost in sentences he asserted the moral principles which are timeless in their application, and know neither race nor language.

It may be recalled that not a few of the fathers of the church were the ethical leaders of their time. It would be worth while collecting the utterances of the early fathers upon the love of money or the lust of personal display. In modern times—well, I am afraid it is true that the ministry as a whole has not counted for much in the realm of ethical leadership; yet there have been blessed and brilliant exceptions. We immediately remember the outstanding names of Calvin, Wycliffe, Luther, Whitefield, Wesley, C. H. Spurgeon, and John Clifford. To these men, and of course to a great number of others, we owe a debt beyond all possibility of payment.

The Great Evangelists

While we may be saddened by the frequent silence of the church upon moral problems, we may be thankful for the leadership of great evangelists. J. H. Green, in his history of England, shows that a prelude to revival has usually been the decadence of morals in religion. He gives two striking illustrations, one in connection with the Renaissance at the end of the eleventh century. The church was terribly cold, the clergy timid, when suddenly the fire blazed, and everything was altered. Mr. Green says:

"The revival left its stamp on the fabric of the Constitution itself. The paralysis of the church ceased as the new impulse bound the prelacy and the people together, and its action when at the end of the reign of Henry VIII, it started into a power strong enough to save England from anarchy, has been felt in our history ever since."

Mr. Green says of the period in which the Methodist movement began: "There was no doubt a revolt against religion and against churches in both extremes of English society." The movement led by the Wesleys changed in a few years the whole temper of English society. "Religion carried to the hearts of the poor a fresh spirit of moral zeal while it purified our literature and manners. A new philanthropy restored our prisons, infused clemency and wisdom into our penal laws, abolished the slave trade and gave the first impulse to popular education."

The Modern Ministry

I do not expect a real revival of the Christian religion without a large increase in ethical leadership. The separation of ethical movement from the churches, and the silence of the ministry, have resulted in two extremes. On the one hand religion has been in grave danger of being sicklied over by sentimentality. Sentiment, of course, is a good thing. It is part of every wholesome mentality, but sentimentality is what Ward Beecher described as a "slop over" of sentiment. On the other hand the separation has at least given the appearance to Christianity of stereotyped conventionalism; creeds and ceremonies without ethical value. That I regard as the great problem of our time. Christianity is more than morality but never less than morality. Has the weakened ethical leadership of the ministry any bearing upon the lost grip of the churches upon the people? I believe it is perhaps the chief factor.

At present, again allowing for blessed and brilliant exceptions, the ministry is not conspicuous for ethical leadership. Recall some of the outstanding ethical problems and honestly ask what guidance the ministry has given upon these, and what influence has that guidance had upon the nation. There are the questions of the stewardship of ability; the means by which personal wealth is increased; the elimination of war as a method of settling disputes among nations; the substitution of an international court of justice in the place of the old diplomacy and its appeal to the big battalions and the big navy; the reform of the drink traffic so closely related with the problems of the housing of the working classes; the amusements and the education of the people; the present law of divorce with its positive creation of wrong doing; the system of leasehold tenure and a multitude of problems that are as crying children begging to be taken in hand.

What has the ministry said on these subjects that can by any stretch of the imagination be regarded as leadership of the people? We are greatly concerned, and perhaps with justification, over the method of ordination, vestments and ceremonies of initiation, but when the last word has been said, these are not the great things of the people's life. It is true that men cannot live by bread alone; neither is a strong character sustained by custom and tradition. Perhaps the supreme need of the ministry is a great baptism of courage. It was once said: "He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall save it unto life eternal."

Training in Ethical Principles

Ethical leadership demands many qualities, and no one man, not even a minister, can be everything. It is quite clear that ethical leadership demands knowledge. This is not the day in which the little minister can denounce anybody and anything at his own sweet will without being an object of ridicule. We need a ministry trained in ethical principles quite as much as in theological folk-lore. There is also the necessity for a revaluation of our standards of values. We have to be clear as to the Christian standard; and when light has been given, there is the necessity for the well-balanced judgment that prevents men from rushing in where angels fear to tread. The ministry is degraded by becoming the exponent of class warfare just as it is by being the champion of middle class apathy and pretence.

I believe there is a great day yet to dawn for the Christian ministry, in which the minister, fired by evangelical zeal, and knowing the passion for souls, will follow the path of the great Master, the One who loved us and gave himself for us, in being the friend of publicans and sinners, and certainly not the enemy of Zaccheus and Nicodemus. In that day the minister will proclaim the way of the Cross for individual salvation with no uncertain sound, and the path of ethical righteousness for the society. Regeneration begins with the individual. It has no circumference until the knowledge of the love of the Lord covers the earth even as the waters cover the sea.

The Everlasting Love

I have loved thee with an everlasting love: Therefore have I extended loving-kindness unto thee —Jeremiah 31:3 (Margin).

OH, wondrous, wondrous is this declaration—
"I've loved thee with an everlasting love"!—
Take it, ye winds, and sound the proclamation,
Till all the world shall learn this love to prove.

"Yea, I have loved thee, loved thee, O my people!"
Listen, belov'd! this gracious love is thine;
Lift up thine head! rejoice; rejoice, O Israel!
Again I say, rejoice, O heart of mine.

'Tis true! 'tis true—O heralds of salvation,
Wing forth this precious message far and wide;
Tell it with joy, from nation unto nation,
Till all are sheltered 'neath the Riven Side.

Tell it, O friend! where'er thou art abiding;
Tell out this wondrous story, sweet and true;
Tell them that thou art in this love confiding—
This love of God, so old, yet ever new.

List ye! oh, list!—"O Israel, I have loved thee!
Have loved thee with an everlasting love!"—
Nor life, nor death from this can separate thee;
Nor heav'n, nor earth from thee this love can move.

Sing ye, O heav'ns! nor cease ye from your singing;
And ye, O seraph-choirs, take up the strain!
Sing it, O earth! ye hills and valleys ringing!—
"Yea, I have loved thee!"—Even so; amen.

—Jennie Wilson Howell, in Boston Transcript.

Anniversary of the Founding of Ford Hall Forum

By Charles H. Watson

THE recent hilarious celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the Ford Hall Forum very naturally placed its chief emphasis upon the personality of one man. The man who first conceived the idea, and whose practical inspiration was the declaration in the will of Daniel Sharp Ford that the Boston Baptist Social Union "erect a building which should be used as a common meeting-ground with the working men and women of Boston." Closer than any other organization that has used the building has the Ford Hall Forum hewn to that line.

It was not an easy departure from the old denominational conventionalities; but from the humble beginning fifteen years ago, to the present proud and joyous anniversary, George W. Coleman was fully equal to it. He would have been almost superman, if from the outset he had perfected a plan that would have completely disarmed criticism, and only won him a whooping support of humanity. He has been saved from that misfortune, and while energetically and ingeniously trying out his purpose, and breaking a path, he had to take risks and learn valuable lessons from experience. But he has been risky and teachable and resourceful, and enthusiastic; while not always surprised at criticism, he has been continuously surprised at the abounding success of the enterprise.

Throbbing with Life

The chief characteristic of the forum is its kindling courage and contagious enthusiasm. The entire atmosphere of it is vital and electric. Given a live leader, determined frankly and bravely to face present-day questions, and to find authoritative men who will pluckily attempt to answer them, and inevitably you have something that throbs with life. And its character and record will be such as the forum has established for itself. The people can always be trusted to respond. Their response is simply what such leaders are certain to kindle. Possibly Dr. Charles E. Jefferson had this law in mind when he "believed the time would come when there would be a forum in every city church." People want to ask questions.

Even figures in connection with a live enterprise become fascinating; 326 Sunday evening meetings; 244 different speakers. Three-quarters of the speakers have appeared but once; 14 per cent of them have been women; 28 per cent have been ministers, priests, or rabbis. Medical doctors, college professors, business men, lawyers, judges, poets, social workers, publicists, representatives of labor, journalists, authors, lecturers, and educators made up the residue of the oratorical company.

A Humorous Exception

One item in the forum record is humorously suggestive — this: "Almost never have we had men in high public office as forum speakers." Shrewdly kind is this discrimination against politicians big and little. It saves at both ends—saves the politician and saves an audience that is too earnest for evasions. It discloses the man who could not survive the "question hour"—too covered

GEORGE W. COLEMAN
Founder, Director and Chairman
Ford Hall Forum, Boston

with vulnerable spots which the swarm of forum sharp-shooters would pelt with their bullet questions. Even Coleman could not save him. One who must glue his ear to the ground, look all ways at once before committing himself, and makes it his habit to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning," would be a sad misfit on that platform. How many charms of the forum are here accounted for?

The Celebration

It was double-barreled. One barrel went off on Sunday evening, Feb. 25, and the other at the banquet on the twenty-eighth. By the way, generally have things been double-barrelled with the forum. When the child was born, it was welcomed by double-barrelled suspicion. Only 150 wary working people at first appeared. They were invited into a Baptist building, to be shepherded by a Baptist deacon, all bills to be paid by an association of Baptist laymen. They were suspicious that the "church" was trying to put something over on them. Then when the forum so succeeded that it compelled "headlines" in the newspapers, and reporters picked out on their pens the most radical utterances of its free speakers and questioners, the conscientiously orthodox began to suspect something worse than "heterodoxy." They remembered that Coleman never "drew the net," nor ran in the groove of traditional revivalism, and really had "ungodly speakers" now and then. They doubted whereunto this thing would grow. Then the blatant pulpit demagogue would fulminate.

It was an enfilading fire of suspicion. But the enterprise had vitality enough to weather everything. It was a tough baby, it thrived on castigation, and had a resourceful, ingenious and smiling daddy, who entirely believed in the future of his youngster. Helpers of the right sort flocked about him, waves of sympathetic attention went out through the city, the state, and the nation: finally a cry for forums went up in every direction; and now there are hundreds of them, modelled after Coleman's original, all over the country. Then came The Open Forum National Council, The Open Forum Speakers Bureau, and The Summer School of Open Forum Methods.

The Flavors of the Celebration

In brief, this is the forum story: Suspicion has become jubilant and almost embarrassing adulation, and Coleman is in danger of continuous apotheosis. But he modestly, sensibly, humorously checks it up, and gives full headway to his gratitude.

You must bear in mind that the forum never attracts any "dead ones." Live men with live issues, a hall packed to the walls with all sorts of "folks"—racially, socially, religiously and politically —and all fused together for liberty, justice, and reality — that outfit suggests

THE MONTHLY SUPPER OF THE "FORD HALL FOLKS"
Mrs. Coleman at the right center about to partake nothing funereal nor somnolent. Should a sleeper stray in, he'll awake, and get melted into the common mood.

All these flavors got into the celebration. There were many voices, and every one of them sounded a true note of appreciation. Did not Lieut. Gov. A. T. Fuller speak, and culminate in declaring Coleman "A Big American?" Did not City Councillor Henry A. Hagan, representing the absent mayor, nominate Geo. W. Coleman for next mayor and promise to stump the city for him? There were many other voices, each with a sincere and happy contribution, but there was one voice that swept all the strings of the celebration in masterly fashion, and seemed to utter everything the forum had sought and achieved. It was the voice of Rabbi Harry Levi, of Temple Israel, in Boston, whose speech was the overflow of a full heart. It was a gem; and the art of it was all heart. Every man and woman who in that forum had found the true soul of America as it opened to understand them and to give them hospitality and expression, found the Jewish rabbi an eloquent tongue for them.

The Forum Census

Remember that we had J. Arthur Sparrow's census of the forum before us. Here is a part of it: One-third are foreign born; 61 per cent of foreign parentage; 134 different occupations were designated; 37 varieties of religious faith, only 7 per cent disclaiming any; 58 per cent lean towards Protestantism; 22 per cent are Jews; 6 per cent Roman Catholic. Only 2 per cent confess to agnosticism or atheism. A great happy family made up of all these supposedly discordant elements was celebrating, and talking back at "George" in a note of affection. It makes a genuine celebration when all differences are lost in a sort of high tide of unmistakable democracy! Dr. D. G. Wilcox, president of the Social Union, was an ideal toastmaster.

Of course, there was no criticism. They were celebrating successes, not mistakes. Dr. Coleman would be the last live man to disclaim making any. Only dead men are thus impeccable. The "folks" know how to celebrate successes. The native gayety of the foreign elements makes even the American hilarious. The leading genius of hilarity, however, is an American—Mr. Delcevere King. In volume and variety of song and fun he was easily king; and his subjects were unanimously with him. Dr. Denis A. McCarthy, our genial Catholic poet, put all the notes into his beautiful poem which he read. George W. Coleman was in everything; but it was because he had led us along towards the final fulfillments of the prophecy of that coming time

"When man to man, the world o'er Shall brothers be, for a' that."

An Interpretation

Excerpt from poem by Denis A. McCarthy and read by him at the Ford Hall Forum, Feb. 28, 1923.

... when a fellow says "Ford Hall,"
He says, "George Coleman," too — that's all.

Conversely, when George Coleman's name
Our momentary thought may claim,

Ford Hall at once comes into view,
With "Open Forum" joined thereto.

The fates have joined these names together,
And there they stick in wind and weather,

And, 'pon my word, he'd grossly blunder
Who'd try to pry these two asunder.

'Tis fifteen years since they were wed —
A decade and a half has sped

Since George, the pioneer, began,
Out of his honest love for man,

To build a better spirit here
In this old city, quaint and dear,

'Twixt class and class; 'twixt race and race.
And now in many a distant place

The seed he sowed has taken root;
The plant has grown and yielded fruit,

And "Open Forums" east and west
Have faced the trial, stood the test,

And everywhere have strongly wrought
To make the "get together" thought

Enter the consciousness of those
Who viewed their fellow-men as foes.

This work for broader minds has made,
Old ghosts of bigotry has laid,

And helped its people all to see
The one-ness of humanity.

Where Does the Mission Field Begin?

By Charles Alvin Brooks

WE HAVE smiled at the seeming egotism of the old woman who thought she lived at the center of the world because the sky came down all around her.

Most of us can remember a few survivals of that ante-diluvian age of missionary antiquity when people thought of missions as having to do with foreign lands and distant peoples and whole categories of especially dry and unreal things which were not even remotely related to current history or daily life of human beings like ourselves. The missionary was the original man or woman from Mars, so far as being very human.

It is no longer conceivable (if it ever was) that "missions" is the province of a few saintly old ladies who have no other interest in life and who are always regarded patronizingly by their children and by their more modern sisters, and sometimes secretly by their husbands, although the latter should be taken with several grains of caution.

Today every newspaper is a fresh edition of "missions." Every magazine of any standing is a missionary journal. Everything which claims the front page and bold headlines is an arrest of attention to the serious-minded and intelligent Christian and raises the question as to what must be done about it.

The frontier home mission field is at our door. The distant "foreign field" has moved around the corner. The ends of the earth have converged upon our parish. We must ride in a limousine with the curtains drawn if we would avoid the reminder that all people of the world are pouring down our street.

We realize afresh, unless we are cursed with a hopeless stupidity, what has always been true: namely, that Christ does not propose to rely upon a few devoted people whom we call missionaries commissioned to be sent forth, while a selfish church is unwilling to soil its hands with the messy work of saving the world. The great commission which is the Magna Charta of the Christian church is a commission to the whole church. What we call "missions" is not an elective of the chosen few. It is the supreme and unescapable business of the whole church. There can be no possible arrangement whereby this world-saving business can be delegated to a few. It is the business of all the churches, of all the members individually and collectively.

Who Is a Missionary?

Now we do not need to leave home to carry out our commission. We do not need to be "ordained to the ministry," to discharge it. Every schoolteacher, every employer of labor, every business man, is a missionary. Every home should be a Christian center. Every contact of a casual day is a missionary meeting. Public opinion is a missionary matter. The community spirit is a missionary influence. Everything which goes on in the place where we live is broadcasted to the ends of the earth.

Once the great concern was to get enough money to finance this home and foreign missionary enterprise. It is still a great problem and there is still an unfinished task at a distance. But the great, the supreme concern, today is the Christianization of all our social life which means, broken up so that we can digest it, the spiritual renewal of our own lives, the life of our church and community; the Christianization of our whole range of interests and activities; the renewal of religious sanctions and motives; the upspringing within us of that apostolic passion for human welfare and loving service and the redemption of all human life; the rebirth of an unconquerable belief that the gospel of Jesus is the golden remedy for all our ills; that in the mind of Christ we are to find solution of all our problems; that race friction and class consciousness and all pride and greed and oppression are utterly alien to the will of God; that love, the love of the Cross, is still the only dynamic for the world's salvation

We must someway be awakened to a new sense of sin. We need fresh conviction of the deadliness of old sins which are becoming respectable. And we need a sense of the damning sinfulness of perfectly respectable practices and habits of mind which moved Jesus to the depths; the sin of the priest and Levite passing by on the other side, the sin of

(Continued on page 223)

At the Dawn of a New Age

By Robert B. Longwell

THE heathen world and the races which have been held in the grip of superstition and ignorance or exploited by tyranny of priestcraft and cruel rulers are waking at the dawn of a new age.

Where are the signs of this awakening? Consider the mighty hosts of Russia where millions have but recently turned from the bonds of a state religion to the liberty wherewith Christ makes men free. Consider the smaller nations of Europe where populations are turning almost en masse from the yoke of Rome. See Turkey in her merciless march through the blood of Christian martyrs and recall the 70,000,000 Mohammedans in India whose hearts have beat in sympathy to the mad mania of the Turk.

Take the single case of India with its 300,000,000 people of whom 200,000,000 are Hindus. In this Hindu community there are as many as 50,000,000 people commonly called the "outcasts," "untouchable," "depressed classes" and so forth. All other Hindus, namely those who make up the four great castes, are said to have emanated from various parts of the body of the great Hindu deity, the head, the arms and chest, the loins and thigh and the feet. But the "untouchables" are so low down in the scale of human existence that they never came from this great deity in any way whatever. They have suffered all kinds of contempt at the hands of the caste men—have been disallowed access to public water supply, forbidden to walk on certain public paths. Even their very shadow is regarded as contaminating, and if the shadow of one of them fell upon a high-caste man the latter would go forthwith and bathe.

Two Lines of Influence

Two lines of influence have come to bear upon these people. Until the days of Carey, Marshman and Ward they seemed to be doomed for all time to remain in their unhappy condition. But the missionaries told them, as widely as it was possible to tell them, the story of boundless hope and love. The effect of this story repeated in different communities through a number of decades is best understood by the fact that nearly all the great movements towards Christianity in India have been among these outcasts. Some of them have been educated and a few have developed into great preachers before whom the high-caste Hindu stands and marvels as he listens to the imperishable story. These depressed people have come to see that they do not have to remain forever the helpless, suffering objects of contempt, and have begun to aspire hopefully towards better things. It stands almost beyond the peradventure of a doubt that if missionaries and means could be provided for their evangelization the vast majority of these 50,000,000 depressed, negelected, suffering but now aspiring people could be led into the Christian community within a generation.

But it is a passing opportunity, for a second line of influence has come to bear upon these people. Within the last five or six years the government of India has extended the franchise to every one who pays as much as fifteen rupees in income tax. This is indeed a wide franchise for people who never knew what it meant to cast a vote in the history of their country. It will include the "outcasts" just as rapidly as they develop along the upward march to respectable manhood. High-class Hindus and Mohammedans realize this, and have already begun to flirt with the "outcasts." The psychology of the situation is easy. High-caste Hindus do not want these 50,000,000 outcasts to add the weight of their future political significance to that of the Mohammedans. Also the Mohammedans do not wish them to support the great Hindu community, hence the change of "heart" and of attitude on the part of high-caste Hindus and Mohammedans towards the "untouchables." It need scarcely be stated that once these depressed classes are absorbed into a more "respectable" and powerful company, they will be immeasurably more difficult to reach with the gospel message.

The New World Movement is an effort to see that these millions wake to a knowledge of the Prince of Peace and henceforth march to the music of his gospel, lest they wake to the weird and terrible shouts of war. It is the spiritual reaction of the heart of a great denomination to the conditions which this new and awful age has revealed. It is a recognition of the greatest opportunity this world has ever seen to point the millions of human beings whose spirits are beginning to awake from the sin-stupor of centuries to him who is the Way, the Truth and the Life.

The limited space at our disposal does not permit the setting forth of the challenge which comes ringing from our other fields. Oh, how the calls come, and keep coming! What an awe-inspiring age is this in which our lot is cast! The New World Movement is an effort to understand the signs of the times and to measure our strength against our God-given task. This is what calls for the "dedication of life." This is the "vision" and the "voice" which send the mighty thrill through the heart of the young Christian who says, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?"

To meet such conditions, and to carry the leaven of the kingdom to the millions who are now easily within our reach, and who must be reached in this generation or never, calls for a generous and sacrificial dedication of life. We have had the joy of seeing lives placed on the altar for such service in these recent months. How they stand out before us, one after another, as we have met them and listened to the story of their consecration and preparation, and how our hearts have rejoiced as we have received letters from those whose names were furnished us as references. Just the other day we received a letter which came from a college professor in response to an inquiry regarding a candidate for foreign service. In this letter referring to this applicant, the professor says: "In my fourteen years of teaching I have not had his equal."

Experiences of Candidate Committee

We could call the names of some who would remember long the experience they had a short time ago when in the capacity of "candidate committee" they listened to the story of another applicant relating his struggles to prepare himself for missionary service. That committee was composed of business men, ministers and educators, including the president of an academy, a college president and a professor in a theological seminary. As the young man told the story of his spiritual struggles not one of these committeemen was able completely to hide his emotions. This young man was dedicating his life to service. A number of other cases could be mentioned. As these young people were asked what their motive was in offering themselves for missionary service, one or two seemed to express in a single sentence what others had to put in a longer statement, but the gist of it was, as one young man said: "Because I believe that men without Jesus Christ are lost." It is reassuring beyond expression to find young men and women of the finest educational qualifications who are facing this sacrificial life in this materialistic age. Such dedication of life can never be explained except as an act of devotion to him whose glory fills the heavens and at whose name every knee shall bow.

If then we have the vision of the world's great need, and are met with this offering of life, what is the next step? Manifestly it is to place the life where the need exists. Shall we be able to send these noble young men and women out to the fields where they are ready to go, in order that with heroic spirits they may address themselves to the stupendous task of the age, the mightiest challenge the church has ever seen? That question can be answered only by the churches. Will they at such a time as this fail their Leader, or will they present an unbroken phalanx and march steadily up to their God-given task? If they stand together and if each does his part, a new era of triumph will begin. A letter just received from a fellow missionary reads: "We are still in the grip of a great revival. Five thousand converts in eighteen months." Similarly encouraging reports are coming from many fields.

God's Great Gifts

By Elva S. McBeth

I FEEL that God is close to me
When nature's wonders, fair, I see:
The stately tree, whose form so tall
Gives cool, protecting shade to all:
The nodding flower, whose fragant breath
Sweet comfort brings to thwart grim death;
The winging bird, whose merry song
Cheers fainting heart, bids faith be strong;
The happy child, whose marvelous eyes
Reflect the glories of the skies;—
O, may I ever thankful be
For God's great gifts, so rich and free!

The Swatow Region a Half Year after the Typhoon

By Newton H. Carman

FORTY-TWO thousand lives were snuffed out in a few hours—drowned by the tidal wave, or crushed under fallen walls. It was nearly six months ago that this happened. Sometimes it is hard to believe that it ever did happen. Then again the scene is brought back again with vividness. Every morning on my way to school, I walk past a ruin where two parents and four children met the sudden call that night. Nature is beginning to round off the jagged edges where big branches were born away and tree trunks snapped in two; but many of the broken walls, tileless roofs and mutilated works of man still stand, gaunt and ugly, to bring back the sensations of that wild night and to call to sight again the scenes of destruction which the chill drizzling daylight revealed. And in certain sections today the need of food, of clothing and of shelter is as great as it has ever been.

The area of typhoon and tidal wave devastation might roughly be divided into three classes. In the first, the visible signs of the typhoon are still everywhere present, especially in the buildings. But the loss of life in this area was very small—a few score in all, perhaps—although this area is the widest of the three. Agriculture and commerce are going on about as before; there is very little actual suffering; and only these outward marks are left to tell the story of the storm.

Back to Normalcy

The second zone was affected by both wind and wave, but not to the extreme of the third. A few hundreds were killed, or perhaps a few thousand. The high-water marks still stand on the walls, but the buildings for the most part stood, with much of the damage now repaired. Farming lands were rendered temporarily untillable by the brine which bathed them for several hours that night. Property loss and the ruining or carrying away of many articles of family or commercial use were common, but except in a few cases, the suffering in this section is not acute today. This section has for the most part come "back to normalcy."

But there is still another area where devastation and death ruled with a high hand that night and where suffering exists today. Villages were leveled to the ground. Populations of thousands were reduced to hundreds, and hundreds to tens. Those of us who were not in that area then or who have not visited it since, find it hard to realize what really occurred. A few vivid and intimate stories by Melvina Sollman, who has recently spent several weeks in that region, gives us some conception of what was and is the situation there. She says:

"The village of Thau Chhong has 500 left of 1300 and only a few houses standing. One old Christian woman was saved by clinging to the top of her bed. When the water came in, it floated the bed so that she was safer than those who were younger and could run away. That is one thing that first puzzled me, for I wondered how so many old people could be left. On inquiring I learned they were all saved in that very way. They could not get out, so they clung to their beds or rafters. The one mentioned was seventy-seven years old, and while her life was spared, all her possessions were washed away. She was at church even if she did have only two thin summer jackets to wear, and the day was cold. Two other old women, seventy-one and eighty-two years old, were also at church. Each lives alone and is in need of clothing and bedding, and the last one also needs her roof mended. We will see that it is done before we leave here. It paid to come here if only to relieve these three old faithful women, yet there are many more just as needy. . . .

"The wells were polluted, not only by the salt water but by the overflowing cesspools and all the filth of the cities and villages, and there was not a drop of good water for some time. The wells are brakish and horrid tasting even yet. One mother told how hard it was to do without water for so long, and she said, 'It was hard enough for us older people, but when the children cried for water and there was none, it was distressing. All the water we had to give them was the few drops of dew we caught each night.' Can you imagine such need? Some have cried until they are almost blind and others have lost their voices from wailing. There always has been enough skin disease, but now there is even more in the devastated districts for there was everything in the water in which they were held for the night, and had to use afterwards. . . .

"I shall always remember the face of the dear old woman who was the last to receive a bundle. We give out tickets to the needy ones and then do up bundles according to the number and need of each ticket and on the distributing day each receives his or her bundle. Of course there are always beggars and the all-year-round-poor that we cannot give to, so we always tell them we give to those who have tickets, for we have to draw the line somewhere. That day, as always, there were the crowds of others beseeching us for things but we had to refuse. Among them was an old woman eighty years old. When I saw her I knew I would have no peace of mind or heart if I did not give her, even if she did not have a ticket, so I told her not to trouble and I would give her something. She followed me quietly around, and as soon as possible, I went over to the women who were putting away the few things left to take back to the chapel, and told them to get out a wadded jacket. The old sad face brightened as she saw the material, and a smile broke as she saw the cotton for the filling, and the old wrinkled face beamed as she saw a pair of trousers added. Although we were not warm with all the clothing we had on, she was wearing only one thin suit! That happy face was a benediction to that trip."

The three great needs of today are shelter, food and clothing, but at present "the greatest of these is clothing." Shelter is not so vital just now, for the weather is mainly dry. When the spring rains begin their downpour, roofs repaired badly or not at all, in homes which lacked the necessary funds for such repairs, will find huddling groups trying to find, as we did the night of the typhoon, dry places under leaky roofs. Food, too, is important, but not so difficult a question. For though the local stores of rice were long ago exhausted, relief stores and funds have generously come in and the hungry are being fed.

The Most Pressing Need

Clothing is the most pressing need now for some time. Though we are at the edge of the tropics, and the temperature is never below freezing, the winds that blow across the ocean some of these chilly days bite through all but the warmest winter clothing. Chicago winter wraps are welcome here in South China many of these days. Burlap bags and thin summer jackets have been a poor defense against wintry winds, yet they have been all that thousands have had. Carloads of garments and bedding are being rushed to this region, and still the need is not met. A newspaper reported a few days ago that sixty had died of exposure during the cold snap at New Year's time. Is it any wonder that all available funds not otherwise designated are being turned into clothes and bedding? Or is it strange that old garments not yet discarded are being gladly given over to these shivering January victims of an August storm?

Yet with all this suffering, the unselfishness and patience of many of the sufferers that old and young have shown for each other, the hearty cooperation of the local officials, many of whom lost their own families and possessions that night, have been encouraging features. To hear and meet these stories gives to us "outside country" people a new appreciation and love for these people among whom we have elected to live. Property, buildings, crops, personal possessions, are of little value compared with the people to whom they belong. That hearts of gold still remain where all other gold and silver has vanished away, is a cause for gratitude. If only this awakened unselfishness and this new spirit of service and cooperation which has come in the aftermath of disaster may be quickened and made permanent by the spirit of Christ!

What are the churches and mission doing? Generous contributions have come from Chinese Christians in other parts of China and abroad, and from churches in America and England. This is being administered in the name of him in whose spirit of love it was sent. Our mission itself, though handicapped by shortage of workers, has sacrificed the time and strength of a number of missionaries for this work. Mr. Baker of Chaochowfu has spent many weeks supervising the building and repair of important dykes in that section. Miss Sollman of the women's school, assisted part of the time by Miss Northcutt of the hospital, has rendered invaluable service in the buying of thousands of bolts of cloth, has supervised the making of it into garments and bedding, and then personally distributed it in scores of villages of that region. The disinterested work of these mission representatives and the native Christians and workers who have helped them, have already resulted in a new spirit of friendliness to the church and willingness to hear the Christian message. The Father in heaven, whose rain falls upon the just and the unjust, has been glorified in the service of his followers, who with true Christian impartiality have treated all cases of need alike and played no favorites. And this has been a new message to the hearts of our Christians as well as to the watching world without.

Newton H. Carman, son of Dr. Augustus S. Carman of the Northern Theological Seminary, has been on the foreign field since January, 1920. He is connected with the new normal department of Swatow Academy. He is a distinguished athlete and trains the Chinese students in track work. During the absence of Rev. G. H. Waters, Dr. Carman is taking care of his field. Dr. Carman is a graduate of the Denison University with degree of A. B. He is also a graduate of the University of Chicago with degrees B. D. and A. M., and a member of Phi Beta Kappa. In 1919 he married Dr. Mildred H. Scott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest K. Scott of Oak Park, Ill. Dr. and Mrs. Carman are the missionary representatives of the Hyde Park Church, Chicago.

Our churches as a whole, I believe, will go forward all the more in spite of—or is it because of?—this tragic loss which God has permitted. A fine new church building in Nam Ie, the pride of its members, was totally wrecked by the storm. Yet this is in the very region where some of our own workers have contributed most toward relief and repair, and a great door has been opened in the hearts of the people. So when a new building can be built—and it must be soon, while hearts are still warm—there will be many new hearers who will come because of the cup of cold water given them in their great need in the Saviour's name. Some of the churches in my own field, in spite of damage to their buildings, and the personal losses of their members, have even made a forward step toward self-support. Others, after contributing to the repair of their churches, are beginning the new year with diminished mission grants. Granting the littleness of faith and of real Christian spirit shown by some in this crisis, granted some doors of opportunity unopened and other open doors unentered, the consensus of opinion seems to be that our churches are going forward with greater zeal and singleness of heart than before this catastrophe was visited upon us.

Earthquakes, typhoons and tidal waves cannot halt the progress of the church of Christ. Suffering and need there is, disappointment and grief remain, purses and larders are still empty and there is scant protection from the wintry blasts. But the spirit of Christ, as shown by his followers everywhere towards these needy here, will reveal him as nothing else could. Perhaps the God who also speaks in the still small voice, has chosen to speak to us through the storm.

So may we Christians in China, though there are new crosses for some of us to bear since that fateful night in August, thank God, take courage and go forward following in his train.

Persistent Agitation Brings Results

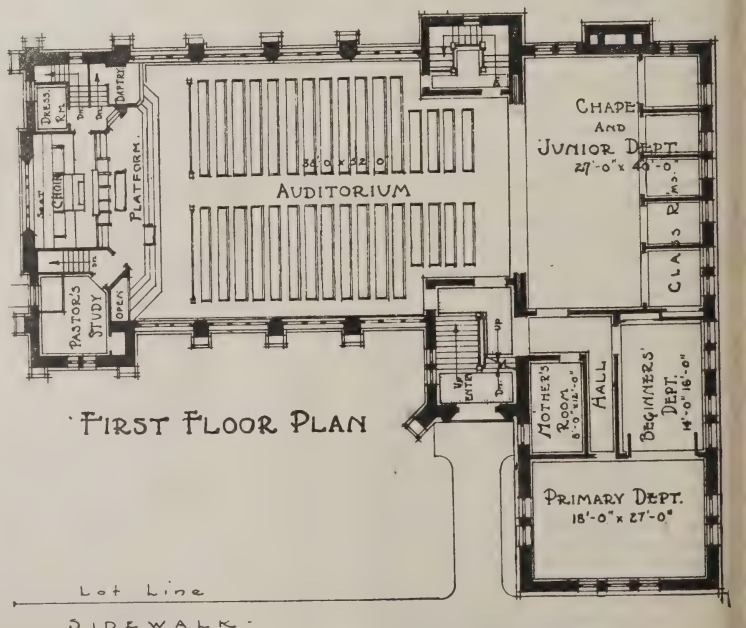
BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

THE career of Dr. John Lee, a Methodist minister tucked away in a country parish in Northern Illinois, has a lesson for all of us. It is doubtful if his name is in "Who's Who," and yet this quiet, modest, obscure missionary pastor has played a crucial part in one of the great chapters in the history of religious liberty.

Some years ago the Northern Illinois Conference of Methodist Ministers appointed a committee for the purpose of bringing to the attention of Ecuador, Bolivia, Peru, and possibly Rome, the evils in regard to the marriage of non-Catholics in these countries. The priests of Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru, would not marry any one who was not a Catholic. All Protestant churches were forbidden and no marriage could be legal unless performed by priests of the Catholic church.



Dr. John Lee was appointed as a member of this committee. The meeting adjourned. The committee was forgotten. It was six years before ever it was called upon to report. Meanwhile Dr. John Lee had been steadily at work. He went ahead for twenty-two years with but one objective—to right this wrong against religious liberty. He was quiet; he was systematic; he was persistent; he was courageous. He knew how to dream big dreams and plan big plans. The only funds he had were a reasonable sum granted by the conference for postage. He studied his question, found out what were the exact conditions, learned who was responsible for them, and then began a systematic correspondence with Catholic and Protestant clergymen of the three countries. To this he added the attempt to reach the governments of those countries, through the state department at Washington. After ten years of patient and persistent writing, he began to get a market for his wares. He found Dr. Calderon, a celebrated priest of the city of Guayaquil, who agreed with him and who defied his bishop when the latter refused to recognize the rights of Protestant persons.

Dr. Lee's campaign involved the flinging of an even wider line of attack. Hundreds of prominent Catholics were written to, in North America and in Europe. A good many of these letters received no answer. Some noted prelates refused to believe that the conditions of religious oppression in South America existed. It is encouraging to know, however, that a good many Catholics joined heartily with Dr. John Lee in his opposition to intolerance. The editor of the Catholic Citizen in Milwaukee printed his answer to Dr. Lee's letter in his newspaper, as follows:

"It is desired that Peruvian Protestants and American citizens residing in Peru be permitted to marry there as here (divorces excepted), and that their marriages be considered legal marriages. If the laws of Peru do not permit this, then those laws are unjust. Roman Catholics concerned through any mistaken notion of zeal in obstructing remedial legislation will burn for it in purgatory."

Strong letters of encouragement also were received from such Catholics as the Very Reverend James C. Byrne, president of the Roman Catholic College of St. Thomas at St. Paul, Minn.; former secretary of the navy, Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore, Md.; Col. John Brisben Walker, magazine editor; William J. Onahan, prominent Chicago layman; Jeremiah Curtin, of Bristol, Vt., widely known translator of Sienkiewicz; Justin McCarthy, English historian, and Rev. Paul Sabatier, historian of France.

Most encouraging of all, however, was a letter from the Roman Catholic bishop, Patrick James Donahue, who not only indorsed the movement for religious liberty, but urged Dr. Lee to secure effective action through the pope. Bishop Donahue told Dr. Lee how best to do this. The bishop even hoped for an apostolic benediction on the movement. Dr. Lee adopted the bishop's plan.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN, FIRST CHURCH, FREMONT, NEBRASKA

Writing to Germany, he secured the support of Count Bernstorff. Through its state department, Holland expressed willingness to aid through diplomatic channels. The British government was willing to help. The diplomatic agents of Germany and Great Britain were instructed by their home governments to use their good offices to bring about the desired reforms in South America. Two presidents of the United States, President Cleveland and President Harrison, wrote to Dr. Lee, expressing their hope that he might realize his objectives. President McKinley aided actively. Secretary of State John Hay, and Richard Olney, kept a constant stream of letters going back and forth between Washington and South America.

Letters to the Pope

Finally Dr. Lee began to address a series of ten letters to the pope. This was on the advice of Bishop Donahue, the great Roman Catholic bishop. These letters did not protest nor criticize. They set forth in detail the conditions which were to be found in Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador—conditions which were in restraint of the equal rights of all creeds. For months no answer was received, but after the visit of Cardinal Gibbons to Rome, Dr. Lee learned that the cardinal had brought to the attention of Rampolla, secretary of state, the charges which Dr. Lee made. At last a letter came from Rampolla (through Cardinal Gibbons), in which he stated that the restrictions on the practice of the Protestant religion in South America existed by constitutional enactments, and the pope could not interfere. However, Dr. Lee kept steadily on. At his direction a moral pressure was exerted on the three South American republics, one at a time, beginning with Peru, by the United States government, Great Britain, Germany and Holland. These great Northern powers called on the three South American republics to bring about the same religious liberty which the four great nations accorded to citizens of Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, resident in their territories. Peru was the first to respond. Less than two years after Dr. Lee began writing to Protestants and Catholics, both private and public, and to governments, a bill was introduced in the legislature of Peru, remedying this religious oppression; but it took until late in 1897 before the civil marriage law was finally passed only to be vetoed by President Pierola. It was in 1915 that the climax of the battle for religious liberty came in Peru, when a constitutional amendment was proclaimed, ending the prohibition which had existed against the public worship of the Protestant religion.

Ecuador did not feel the effects of Dr. Lee's crusade until 1900. In 1903 a drastic civil marriage law was passed, which forbade priests to perform the marriage of any persons who had not first been married by civil authorities. In 1905 a law was passed permitting public worship to any religion not contrary to law and morality.

In Bolivia bills for civil marriage rights and for religious freedom were reiected in 1901, 1902, 1903 and 1904. In 1905 a law was passed permitting the free exercise of all religion (not immoral) within the republic. I have the impression that civil marriage rights have been granted within recent years, but am unable to verify this.

A story like this ought to hearten every advocate of righteous reform. Dr. Lee was backed by no great organization. He had no generous funds. He had not the pedestal of a great name or fame. He had simply a passion for justice and a belief in the gospel, and a determination to win. There are great wrongs in America! There are great advocates in our churches! When it is given to any one of us to see clearly these wrongs, the way to remedy them lies open before us. Where are the men and the women who will devote themselves superbly and sincerely to the public health, the removal of child labor, the enactment of federal marriage and divorce laws, the suppression of the trade in narcotics, the pushing and better organization of Sunday schools, the circulation and reading of the Scriptures, the keeping of the Sabbath, or any one of a dozen great causes that today are summoning us to their promotion? Granted the consecration, the determination, the system and the sanity of the agitation, success is absolutely sure.

An Ideal Church Building

THE First Baptist Church building, Fremont, Neb., was dedicated, Sunday Feb. 4, 1923, just one year from the burning of the former church edifice. In planning a building to meet all the modern requirements of church, Sunday school and social service, the architect, Harry W. Jones, of Minneapolis, had two prime objectives in solving the problem before him: the church—worshipful; and the parish house—utilitarian.

The main auditorium is distinctly a place for formal worship. It embodies those elements contributing to this spirit, in plain architectural form, light and shade, color and decoration of which the art windows in their tone and texture should be the keynote. The general plan is a rectangular room, symmetrical in every way, on a central axis, focusing towards the pulpit and choir. The dark, rich, main memorial east window, is above the choir. The open baptistry is on one side, an appropriate object lesson for a Baptist church. The approach to this is concealed, and leads to dressing rooms in the rear and, by stairway to basement, to other ante-rooms, and to a large choir room. On the opposite side is the pastor's study, with outside entrance, leading also to choir room.

The seating capacity is 300; but the chapel, used also by the junior department, may be opened into the large auditorium, augmenting its capacity to 600. In the rear of the main auditorium unit, and of no less importance, is the Sunday school and parish house.

The large tower at the angle of the two units gives ample entrance to both church and Sunday school, a special feature being that no outside steps are needed, the stairs starting from the landing up to first floor and down to the basement. Another entrance on the opposite side of building gives similar additional access.

Upon the right of the tower entrance is a mothers' room, used also as a rest room, fitted with a cot, tables and chairs for emergency purposes. The beginners and primary departments are immediately adjoining and may be opened together when desired. By this arrangement, all the younger children are on the first floor, with easy access to the outside.

On the second floor, in addition to the gallery, are the intermediate and young people's departments and class room, with commodious lockers for coats and hats, and a large ladies' parlor with windows on three sides.

The basement cares for a large dining and social room, with stage. The kitchen, arranged for both cafeteria and general service, is so situated as to serve additional double dining room for committees or classes. Club rooms for Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls, a check room for men in the tower, and retiring room and toilets for the women, complete the accommodations for every form of church enterprise.

The materials used are dark reddish brown brick, with cut-stone trimmings, and a Spanish roll tile roof. Art glass windows in the main auditorium are a rich warm tone. The large east window is of peacock blues and greens, giving a restful effect before the eyes of the congregation.

The interior finish, pulpit furniture and pews are of dark English oak, the walls of tan with delicate olive green tracery. The hardwood floors have heavy carpet runners and rugs down the aisles and on the pulpit platform. The ceiling is of heavy timbered trusses; the paneling between of Washington fir, all finished in dark tones and enriched by oriental electric lanterns, which serve not only their purpose of illumination, but as a decorative feature at other times.

Special attention has been paid to the acoustic properties, which are perfect, as well as heating and ventilation—important factors in building. The church has a membership of about 400, and the Sunday school has the same number. The total cost of the building, including pipe organ, was a little less than $60,000.

The Business of Soul Winning

Heroic Evangelism

IN PORTSMOUTH, famous in England's history, Rev. Griffith J. Harris is pastor of our church. Notwithstanding that he has three services at his own church every Sunday, in September, he opened his evangelistic campaign which is to continue through March in the coliseum music hall in the heart of the town. The Baptist Times and Freeman says of his work, "I wish I could convey to you some adequate impression of those first Sunday meetings. Howls, catcalls, whistling, mocking repetition of anything said until anything in the nature of a set address was impossible. More than once Mr. Harris has had to leave the platform and be content to go down among these 'Philistines,' talking to one here and there where he could get a hearing. At the same time telling them quite frankly that he should win in the end, that his day would come and that they would hear him before the season was over."

He has won. An outstanding feature of the gatherings is the presence of hundreds of youths in their teens. It has been necessary to set aside Tuesday evenings to meet those who have become interested. Thirty have joined the minister's Sunday evening Bible class at the church and there have been many conversions. Mr. Harris found that his church was unable to reach these young folks through its regular services. They did not attend. He then went to them with the gospel. And the gospel proved, as it always does, the power of God unto salvation.

An Evangelistic Appeal

CHRIST made fishing for men the first thing in his program. Directly upon his return from the temptation and his anointing with the Holy Spirit he chose the twelve. Almost immediately we find both Mark and Luke recording his mingled exhortation and command: "Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men."

John has not gone half way through his first chapter until he tells us of the experience of Andrew and himself in soul-winning. He says that Andrew outran him, setting down his testimony in these words, "He first findeth his own brother Simon—and he brought him to Jesus." In this record therefore there is set down the account of the first man who ever won another man as a follower of Christ. Of all the widening and deepening river of soul-winning which has been broadening on through the ages Andrew was the spring and the source. He was the first man who was made a fisher of men.

One has only to open the Acts of the Apostles and read those stirring chapters straight through from the ascension on through Pentecost to the end of that particular record of the things which Jesus "began both to do and teach" to see that the first business on the calendar of the leading characters of that book was that of soul-winning. Peter at Pentecost drove straight ahead for conversions. He preached a crucified Redeemer and the remission of sins, and demanded immediate repentance and faith. He was filled with all joy to see his net caught so full that it must have reminded him of the time when he let down the net "on the other side of the ship" at his Lord's command.

THE period of unusual activity in financing our missionary, educational and other denominational agencies has been one of remarkable results in the work of evangelization. Our commission, which calls for an evangelistic passion, an international outlook, a symbolic initiation and an ethical obligation, is being obeyed as far as the work of making disciples is concerned. Under this caption we shall be glad to print from week to week brief stories of the efforts of the churches to win men and women to Christ.

Paul was not to be swerved from his business of soul-winning even by imprisonment and earthquake. At midnight he and Silas were practicing hymns in their inner prison, and amid the dust and wreckage of the earthquake which set him free we hear him saying to a penitent jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Whether tossing here and there in the fierce euroclydon that swooped down upon his little ship in the Mediterranean, or making a fire in the chill of the island on which the boat was finally wrecked, you hear him leading men to Christ. How his epistles are filled with his passionate pleading that men shall turn from dead works to serving the living God!

The pre-Easter season should bear its witness that our ministry and membership still have this holy passion. We should go out not merely to swell our membership rolls, but to see men turned from darkness into light and from the power of Satan unto God. If Christ could come in visible presence into our midst again would not his first word to us all be, "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men?" And would we not with all the ingenuity of the angler study the tackle and prepare the bait and make the casts necessary in this holy business of taking men alive for the service of Christ?—Bishop Stuntz in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

An Evangelistic Truck

ONE of the good laymen of Brookfield Baptist Church, Indianapolis, Ind., recently converted, asked God the other day to show him how to do something of real value for the kingdom. The early morning found him taking his ashes out to the alley. A man drove up with a Buick speed wagon and the two men talked for a little while. It was raining, remember, and not an especially good day for seeing "sunshiny things." But before the conversation was over this man purchased this new "gospel truck" and will place it at the disposal of the Baptist work of the city. It is to be manned and ready for emergency calls soon. Send in your S. O. S.

The Conference on Evangelism at Atlantic City

FOR several years the American Baptist Home Mission Society, in cooperation with other denominational organizations, has held a conference on evangelism and spiritual enrichment on Sunday and Monday preceding the sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Last year in response to the expressed desire that there be no preconvention meetings this conference was not held at Indianapolis. So many expressions of regret because of this omission have been received, and so many urgent requests for its return that the Home Mission Society has voted to reconvene the conference this year at Atlantic City under the direction of the department of evangelism.

The program will be builded around the Great Commission. It will be an intimate contemplation of our primary task in the enterprise of redemption. The Sunday afternoon session will be in the nature of a retreat, when we shall come face to face with our personal responsibility. It is purposed that through the sessions we shall study evangelism in its wider applications to the complex conditions.

To these quiet contemplative hours may we come for that spiritual regirding we so consciously need for the accomplishing of the greater tasks that await us.

Further details will be announced as we approach the time of the meetings.

H. F. STILWELL,
Genl. Supt. of Evangelism.

A Revival in Cuba

MR. AND Mrs. F. J. Peters, evangelists, have finished one week's series of meetings in Cristo, Cuba. Well over 200 persons, including students and their friends and parents, professed faith in Christ. Practically all of the boarding pupils took the stand. This has been in every way the most successful meeting experienced in Cuba, President Routledge of Cristo College reports. Meetings to continue two weeks at Santiago were begun immediately at the close of the Cristo meetings. At Guanatamo, where Mr. Peters was assisted by the pastor, Rev. J. Luis Molina, who serves under the general home board, the church was greatly revived, 161 giving evidence of the power of the Lord's presence. Mrs. Peters added much to the meetings by her singing. Groups gathered in the streets and the parks to sing the hymns learned in the meetings.

Gleanings

The Belgian Congo Mission at Sona Bata is still in the grip of the great revival. From 1,500, the membership has grown in 16 months to 7,000. Forty-four baptismal services have been held and from one to 537 people have been baptized at each service.

The Manchester Church, Rev. Charles G. Wright pastor, has just concluded a three weeks' evangelistic campaign with the assistance of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hillis of Kahoka, Mo. Members of the church have been greatly quickened, the unsaved have accepted Christ, heads of families are included in those converted and new impetus has been given to all the work of the church.

(Continued on page 224.)

The Open Forum

THINKS INFORMATIONAL WIRES CROSSED

I read in my copy of THE BAPTIST for Feb. 24 a review of Mauro's "Evolution at the Bar." I cannot help wondering on how much knowledge of the subject the writer of the review based his commendation of it: "We commend this little volume as a most convenient, readable, and dependable primer on subjects that are so much mooted these days." I got a copy of this book some weeks ago to see what the man had to say. As I read it through he seemed to me to be using words in a clever way without knowing facts or understanding principles. Not being deeply versed in science myself I showed the book to Prof. John M. Coulter, of the University of Chicago, who is both a very eminent scientist and an earnest Christian man, active for many years in Bible-class teaching, Y. M. C. A. work, and other forms of religious endeavor. No man is more competent to judge of the subject. This is his reply:

"I have looked through 'Evolution at the Bar.' To me it is an amazing book. I thought Bryan had taken the prize for ignorance of the subject, but he will have to yield this position to Mauro. I have never seen a more hopeless tangle of misunderstanding. The quotations he makes, taken out of their setting, are entirely misleading. As you say, he is certainly acting like a tricky lawyer in trying to make a case."

It certainly is cause for wonder that in these days any intelligent person who has had a reasonable amount of contact with current knowledge should seriously set to work to argue against evolution as if it were something dangerous, something hostile to the Christian faith. Evolution long since became a basic principle recognized and used by practically all scientific men. Discussion among them as to whether it is a fact ceased long ago. All the marvelous discoveries and applications of the forces of nature during the past fifty years have been made on this basis. Every discovery, every experiment tends to confirm it. Investigation now is as to the causes of evolution and the methods by which it works. Such investigation is carried on by men who have given their lives to the study of nature. They know their ground; they know fact from fancy. How absurd it is for men who have no such thoroughgoing, first-hand knowledge of nature to assert that the men who have such knowledge do not know what they are talking about; to declare, as is done by some people much in evidence, that the very principle on which they do their work is at best nothing more than a clever guess. What do such men mean? Do they think the whole scientific world has gone crazy, and that they are able to set the scientists right? Or, again, do they think they must deny the truths of material nature in order to maintain the truth of the gospel? What right have they to pit one set of God's truths against another and make a religious issue out of the alternative?

Of course the real animus of the objectors comes from a fear that the Bible will be discredited if we admit that the first chapter of Genesis is not a literal history of creation, and hence that the foundations of the faith will be shaken. This fear would vanish if people would consider what is implied in the fact that the Bible comes to us from the long ago. The Bible is a library of books whose one concern is religion, not natural science. They were written, even the latest of them, ages before natural science was born. They reflect the conceptions of nature that were current when they were written but it is religion, spiritual truth, which they aim to impart, not a knowledge of nature or the history of the earth. To force the Bible or any part of it into service as a scientific treatise confuses people's ideas about nature and also does violence to the spirit and purpose of the Scripture itself. The Bible displays an intimate acquaintance with nature and a love and appreciation of its beauties, for it is the literature of a people who lived largely in the open and were familiar with God's out-of-doors. It abounds in descriptions of nature and allusions to nature—poetic, picturesque, beautiful beyond compare, and true to common experience; but all this wealth of beauty and power of expression are used, not to teach men about nature but for the ever-present purpose of enforcing spiritual truth. In the first chapter of Genesis itself the evident aim is to set forth God as the Creator and man as made in his image, the crown of the creative process, whom God set over the works of his hands. Simple, dignified, lofty in conception, poetic in form, it contains lessons of priceless spiritual value for the men of the writer's time and of all time, but it has nothing to teach the twentieth century as to the actual process of creation. God left mankind to discover that for themselves, just as he has left them to discover many other things in life, by observation and experience. The primitive ideas concerning nature have merely been outgrown.

If people will but recognize the purpose of the Biblical writers and not try to make them teach science it will help them to read more clearly the testimony of the rocks on the one hand, and the testimony of Scripture on the other hand. They will cease to obscure the truth by denying facts in order to uphold outworn forms of belief. They will cease to obstruct the spiritual life of thousands of young people who are learning science in our schools and colleges, by raising a false alternative between science and religion.

FREDERIC J. GURNEY.

Chicago.

My Soul Was as a Drifting Ship

BY H. R. CARSTENS

MY SOUL was as a drifting ship,
Out on the restless sea of life;
A fragile craft, so all unfit
To brave the danger, storm and strife.

The darkened, angry, threatening clouds
Had brought a tempest of despair;
Depression, like a thickening fog,
Was hanging round me everywhere.

Out on the rising, rolling waves,
My helpless soul was pitched and tossed,
As if it should be dashed apart
In the fury of the storm, and lost.

But in the chaos of it all,
There came the consciousness anew,
No matter how the tempest raged,
My Captain, Christ, would see me through.

I put my confidence in him
As Captain of my ship, and he
With utmost love, in safety, brought
My soul into a calmer sea.

Oh! Christ of God! could we but know
What strength can come to us from thee,
If we but let thee guide our course,
And pilot us on life's great sea;

Ah! then, unnumbered hosts of earth,
Amazed, would learn to understand
The joy and happiness that comes
From trusting in thy guiding hand.

Naval Tr. Sta. Band,
San Francisco, Cal.

PASTORS, TAKE NOTICE

The mention you made in a recent editorial of a pastor in a large and old church in Chicago who, instead of preaching the regular sermon on a Sunday morning, opened the meeting for testimonies, struck a responsive chord in my heart. Not especially that all Sunday morning services should be so conducted, but the mid-week prayer meetings ought certainly to be used by the members in prayer and testimonies in place of the pastors occupying most of the time. LEVI LUNDQUIST.

---

For four weeks, beginning March 18, the churches of Massachusetts will unite in an effort to awaken an interest in the church members who neither worship nor work in their own churches.

---

A carillon of forty-two bells, now being made at Croydon, England, will be presented to the Park Avenue Church, New York, by John D. Rockefeller. The carillon will be the largest in this country and will require a specially trained staff of bell ringers.

The Chimney Corner

Charge It to Father

YOU cannot do justice to Jimmie with mere words. What sort of a term is "yellow" to apply to hair like his? What sort of an expression is "blue" to describe eyes of a depth and an innocence as enchanting as Jimmie's? And as for saying "naive" and "adorable" and "quaint," somehow they fall far short. For Jimmie was that extraordinary person—a wistful child. Miss Chadwick saw it at a glance, just as she turned away from the grocer to pay her bill at the cashier's window. There stood Jimmie with his nose on a level with the counter, and his great eyes lifted timidly toward the Ogre-Person behind it.

"If you please, sir," said Jimmie, in his politest little piping voice, "here's an order."

The grocer leaned down from his soaring height, and Jimmie reached up from his diminutive depth. Their hands met. The grocer took the list, and with that neatness and dispatch, peculiar to his kind, assembled cartons and packages and bottles. It was not the grocer whose deftness held Miss Chadwick spellbound; but she could not take her eyes off the astonished little boy, who had not seemed to grasp the fact that his list was going to turn into such a mountain of food. His eyes were like saucers as he bravely began to arrange the the various shapes into his too-small arms. Try as he would, there never seemed room for everything; but the grocer knew the remedy for that, and slipped the smaller parcels into a paper bag. Armed to the very teeth Jimmie triumphantly marched away, when all of a sudden the grocer came to himself—as the best of them will, in discharge of their duty!

"Hey there, young man, aren't you going to pay me?"

Jimmie turned his eyes of cerulean blue upon the brusque gentleman.

"I forgot," he said with swell huskiness. "You are to charge it to father."

The grocer had no eye for charms like Jimmie's. There were farmers and wholesalers and landlords to pay in good hard cash, so in pursuance of his bounden duty he demanded sternly: "But see here, kid, who is your father, anyhow?"

Jimmie looked as Jonah must have felt while the whale was swallowing him: "But —don't — you — know — my — father?" he asked in complete dismay.

"No, I don't," roared the Ogre-Person, "who is he?"

Jimmie stood rooted to the floor, lost in thought—the upheaval of a new thought that there could be unfortunates such as this man who did not know the Central Figure of the Universe! "But I know him, just as easy!" boasted Jimmie beguilingly.

Miss Chadwick felt something snap in her heart—and all that afternoon the sweet confident boastfulness of it lingered in her memory, so that when she came to the continuation campaign meeting she arose and told the little story in all its dear simplicity.

"I don't know how it is with you," she said, "but I am just like Jimmie. I have taken all the good things that the world has had to give me, I have piled my arms full—too full, sometimes, and I have turned away blithely. But the world has said to me: 'Aren't you going to pay me?' And I have answered: 'Charge it to Father.' 'But who is your Father?' the world asks, and I, who have always known him and felt familiar with him, say in hushed surprise: 'Why don't you know my Father? I know him, just as easy!'"

I think the ladies at the meeting understood. Meetings have a way of showing when they grasp a point: a mental ripple leaves the atmosphere, a sweeter expression lurks in the corners of listless eyes.

Miss Chadwick continued: "Just for my own satisfaction, I have made a list of the people to whom I could go to inquire in case I did not know God as my Father, just as easy. Here is the list: My minister, my Sunday-school teacher, the superintendent of the Sunday school, that pious little woman next door to me who is a veritable benediction to all who know her. This is merely my own more intimate circle of acquaintances to whom I might go to inquire. But I looked up in the supplement of the telephone book and discovered twelve churches in town, eighteen ministers who have telephones, a deaconess; oh, I suddenly realized what a wealth of helpfulness every unsaved person is surrounded with, provided every Christian functions as he is expected to function—'ye are my disciples if ye do all things whatsoever I command you.' Here are twelve churches in this one small town, each with its pastor, each with its board of deacons, each with its Sunday-school superintendents, each with its teachers, each with its saintly little shut-ins who are like fragrant benedictions straight from God. And I, I bank on this atmosphere! I charge it all to Father! While all the time the busy, self-engrossed, curious world is saying: 'Yes, but who is your Father?' That is why I believe in the continuation campaign. Because it gives us each a chance to acknowledge the security and the joy and the benefit which has come to us from knowing our Father—just as easy!"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

The Best

LET us remember
How once our Lord poured out
His blood for us;
And in the prime of his mysterious manhood
Gave up his precious life upon the cross.
The Lord of lords by whom the worlds were made
Gave us the best he had.

He, in the far off ages, once claimed
The firstling of the flock, the finest of the wheat,
And so he asks his own with gentlest pleading
To lay their fondest hopes and brightest talents at his feet.
He will not spurn the smallest service, humblest love,
He only asks that of our store
We give the best we have.

—Translated.

The Young Reserves

Can You Cook?

FOR Peggy knows two lovely surprises you can easily make some Sunday evening for tea when your mother really ought to have a complete rest. They are very simple to prepare, and very good to eat also!

Neapolitan Sandwiches

Cut three enormous slices of bread, each slice a little over one inch thick. Butter one slice and spread it with about an eighth of an inch of peanut butter. Butter another slice and spread it with about an eighth of an inch of pimento cheese, or jam —whichever you have. The plain piece of bread comes between the two thickly-spread pieces, of course. After you have put them together neatly, take a sharp bread knife and slice through the three thicknesses, forming slender little Neapolitan sandwiches which look quite like ice cream! You can slice a dozen in just a jiffy from the one enormous sandwich which you made. Try it some time.

Toasted Marshmallow Crackers

Any kind of crackers will do—graham crackers are delicious, and saltines are good, or little round sweet crackers. Take a big pair of scissors and cut marshmallows in half. Place a half on top of each cracker, and put the crackers in a baking tin and the baking tin in a slow oven. The marshmallows will puff up proudly, then turn a golden brown; after which you will know at once that the only possible thing to do is to—eat them!

More Letters

THERE never has been a week with so many letters arriving as this particular week has been. The boys who are collecting stamps are legion! My little supply of seventy stamps melted away like snow in May when your requests began pouring in—everybody seemed to want Egypt, Panama and Cuba, and as these were the countries from which I had the very fewest stamps of all, a number of you had to be disappointed, I fear! Perhaps you will have better luck the next time, for I am going to begin saving all over again at once. Then a number of letters brought us new names for our page; but so far none of the names seem exactly what we want "for keeps," so we will file all these splendid suggestions for a little longer until the committee can come to a decision.

A lovely little letter from Nathana Cameron of Grady, New Mexico, tells us that she is ten years old and the daughter of a Baptist minister. Some day she hopes to be a missionary, and meanwhile she can write such fine original poems as this one which she sent for our page:

If You Try

BY NATHANA CAMERON

There's a winning little way
You can do every day;
If you try.

You can speak a word of cheer,
And save many a bitter tear;
If you try.

You can help some one in danger,
Even though it be a stranger;
If you try.

Now these few words from me
Are just for you to see
If you try.

Nathana ought to enter in our Dollar Hill poetry contest which closes the first of April. How I do hope that you are all competing!

The following letter is brimful of news, isn't it?

Dear Miss Applegarth,

I have read THE BAPTIST ever since it was first published and I like your page ever and ever so much. My brother and I hurry over to my grandmother's every Saturday to see it, and I like the stories and the puzzles and everything. I just love what Peggy writes. She must be very nice. I like the stories by "Bud" too. My brother and I know a lot about India too. That is because I have an uncle in India. He is a missionary and my, but he is busy! People in this country would "strike" if they had to work in sizzling hot weather as he works. He teaches in a school during the week, then he preaches on Sundays and goes out Sunday afternoons with the young preachers he has trained. They hold services under a tree. They hang up a picture on the tree, something about the Bible, then they sing hymns and the first thing anybody knows there is a crowd. One day a funny thing happened to my uncle. There was a man he did so awfully want to convert, but the man was high caste and kept away from my uncle. But one day he saw my uncle's gold tooth and that made him interested in our God right away, because he said that no idol, ever gave a man gold teeth, so my uncle must be a great favorite of our God! I guess it's the only time a gold tooth ever converted anybody.

Do you know any nice games about India—things we could guess in our junior society? My brother is president but I help him. This is a very very long letter but as I have been wanting to write it for a very, very long time, Miss Applegarth, maybe you will forgive me.

Your loving little friend,
ADRIENNE M. BROWER.

Chicago.

In regard to the games on India, we printed two pages of games in the Chimney Corner for May, 1922, and June 24, 1922, so if you have saved these back numbers you will have some interesting games to try. Here is another in which the answers all end with "age." A correct list will be given next week, in order that we may all have the fun of guessing.

The Age of India!

1. In what age do the little mud huts stand?
2. What age does the Hindu farmer use on his soil?
3. What age do the Hindus worship?
4. What age do little girls dread especially?
5. What age do the gaudy birds in India wear?
7. What age did the Hindu soldiers in the war display?
8. What age keeps the Hindu outcasts from feeling free?
9. What age do the robber tribes of India indulge in?
10. What age is the home of missionaries?

My Strong White Teeth

MY TEETH are strong and pearly white,
How did they grow to be just right?

I asked my mother this today
As I was coming in from play.

Her answer then she put in rhyme,
And said, "Twas with the help of lime."

"And where's the lime, what do you think?"
"In every glass of milk you drink.

"In grains like rye and wheat and oats
The lime is in the overcoats!

"And as for carrots, rosy red,
Just eat them mashed or creamed," she said.

"And even onions have some lime,
But do not eat them all the time.

"Then phosphorous is needed, too,
It helps the lime its work to do.

"Now celery, spinach, fruits and cheese
Will give you some of each of these.

"Nor are these all the foods you see
That make our teeth as they should be.

"The rest I'll tell another day,
So brush your teeth and run away."
—Democrat and Chronicle.

Concerning Our Name

Every day we receive suggestions for our new name for the Young Reserve column; here are the latest:

"Old-Fashioned Fireplace."
"Keen Kid's Korner."
"Flickering Sunbeams."
"The Beehive Corner."
"The Lamplighter."
"The Properly Bent Twig."
"The Discoverers."
"The Discovery Club."

And from Helen M. Goodwin, of Northwood, N. H., comes this suggestive poem:

The Young Reserves are dissatisfied
With the way they are addressed.
Miss Applegarth asks for a name
And has put them to the test.
I suggest "Knights of Tomorrow,"
Little helpers of today.
Who do away with all life's sorrow
And with joy and gladness light the way.

Helen is nine years old; don't you agree with me that she has been thinking hard about our new name? All these suggestions are being saved carefully. Just at present the committee has not settled on any name as "best." Meanwhile we are managing beautifully with our old name, until some decision is made. We hope Helen has courage to try another poem for the Crusade-Up-Dollar-Hill contest!

"It Is to Laugh"

Billikins—"What is it that walks on eight legs and sings?"

Millikins (after some thought)—"I don't know."

Billikins—"A quartet."

---

John O'London's Weekly tells a story of a Highlander who prided himself on being able to play any tune on the pipes. On a certain Sunday morning he perched himself on the side of one of his native hills and commenced playing for all he was worth. A minister came along and, going up to MacDougall with the intention of severely reprimanding him, asked him in a harsh voice, "MacDougall, do you know the ten commandments?"

MacDougall scratched his chin for a moment and then said, "Do ye think ye have fooled me? Just whustle the first three or four bars and I will hae a try at it."

---

In a certain church one of the duties of the sexton was to blow for the organ. The man was deaf, and had fallen into the somewhat embarrassing habit of quitting his task before a hymn was finished.

One Sunday a new minister was coming and the young lady who played the organ naturally wanted to appear to advantage. As soon as the service had started she wrote a note and, handing it to the sexton, told him to read it at once.

The old man did not understand her. To her horror she saw him go to the minister after the first hymn and hand him the note. The minister opened it and read: "Keep blowing steadily until I tell you to stop."

Religious Education

The Aims of Week Day Schools of Religion

One of the outstanding facts in the observation of the surveyor with respect to these new educational organizations is that there is a serious lack of definiteness as to why they are being established. This is made more apparent when one gets away from that vague idea that they are the answer to a crying need for more religious education and notes the character of the several efforts. The brief analysis of the aims as they appear in the minds of the leaders, which occupies this section of the report, is made in the hope that order and clarity may come out of disorder and indefiniteness. Of course, much of the vagueness is due to the fact that there is a considerable diversity of aims in various schools and systems. As is shown by the following discussion, the ends which the several schools hope to attain differ considerably. In many schools and to some extent in all there is no single aim or no one reason for the school's existence, but rather a multiplicity of objectives. We may look at these objectives from four angles.

When the leaders of this movement are approached on the subject of why it is necessary to have week-day classes we obtain, among others, four answers. In the first place most of them say that there is need for more religious education. The argument is that suggested in the introductory section. Spiritual illiteracy, post-war immorality, new adjustments in religious ideals, and similar present-day conditions are reviewed to prove their point. Whether or not there is a general need it looms large in the minds of those responsible for the existence of schools.

A second motive, sometimes existing alone in the minds of the leaders but more often coupled with others, is that of "getting on the band-wagon." The mere fact of imitation is sufficient to explain the existence of schools that otherwise might not be accounted for. It has become a sweeping movement and the idea is catching. There is a desire to be up with the procession, to have the latest attachment for the ecclesiastical machine and the latest method for making the world over into the kind of world it should be. Let it not be thought that the surveyor is endeavoring to ridicule the earnest workers who are back of the schools, but it is only fair to say that the laws of social psychology are plainly working. In these days when organization has become the watchword of the church as well as of other institutions no church organization is quite complete without a week-day school. This fact of social suggestion is, on the other hand, not without its values, else how would any good movement spread? But we must bear in mind that if this were the only reason, that the other fellow is doing it, promotion would scarcely be justified.

A third motive which is occasionally found is that of denominational extension. This varies in character and quality and in its manifestations. Fortunately it is not a very widespread motive in its less desirable aspects, for such a loyalty is very commonly misunderstood and likely to lead to difficulties. Likewise it must be said that it is not confined to any one or two denominations but appears to some extent in all. The surveyor found two schools meeting jointly for worship, but when it came time for the lesson each group of scholars was taught by teachers from their own church. And this in spite of the fact that the denominations there represented were considered among the most advanced and the pastors exceedingly so. To measure the extent of this motive, which has its good side as well as its bad, is difficult. One has to pry rather strenuously to find it. Nor is this feeling limited to local churches, nor even to a united front within any one denomination, for one discovers various agencies in a single denomination vying, in a more or less friendly fashion, for control of the week-day movement.

A final reason from the standpoint of motivation is a widespread belief that the Sunday school has failed as an educational institution. In the minds of many, of course, it is not so much a matter of failure as of inability in the face of added burdens; but the result is the same. We must have another or a new agency to supplement or replace the Sunday school. With the truth of this statement we have not to deal in this report. But the fact is true that a large number of the advocates of week-day instruction have defended their action on these grounds. We must have a real educational institution with real educational methods. The Sunday school has failed utterly; or, its work must be supplemented; we cannot teach on Sunday; religion must be carried into the week-day, and so on with similar ideas.

—ERWIN L. SHAVER in "Week-Day Religious Education," Doran.

John 5:24

O H, Rabbi, standing in the throng
That presses 'round the Nazarene,
Why close that stubborn heart of thine?
Why not upon his bosom lean?
And, looking in that raptured face,
So radiant with his Father's grace,
Drink in that love he offers you,
And seal thine everlasting peace?

The "greater works" awaiting thee
Will joy and peace far richer bring,
Than blood of ancient sacrifice,
Offered up blindly to your king.
Now break traditions cerements
That bind thee like an iron band,
And into God's own sonship blend
Thy life, thy love, thy heart, thy hand.

Hudson, Wis. —J. A. A.

International Sunday School Lesson for April 1

THE WALK TO EMMAUS
(EASTER LESSON)

Lesson: Luke 24:13-21. Golden Text: Luke 24:5-6

Introductory

This second quarter is to be given to a study of the Old Testament, but the first lesson is on the New Testament because it is Easter Sunday and it is desired to have the resurrection as the theme. Two weeks ago the lesson was on the crucifixion, on Friday. There followed the burial in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and the resurrection on Sunday. There had been rumors abroad of an empty tomb. The two men who were walking that afternoon to Emmaus had heard these reports. Emmaus is supposed to be a village a few miles west of Jerusalem.

The Lesson

It had been a week of momentous happenings in the lives of these journeyers to the neighboring village. Naturally they were discussing these when Jesus drew near and walked with them. "But their eyes were holden that they should not know him." He questioned them as to what was the subject of their discussion. If this stranger knew nothing of the occurrences of the week, then he must indeed be aside from all the life of Jerusalem. One of them named Cleopas asked: "Dost thou alone sojourn in Jerusalem and not know the things which are come to pass these days?" "What things?" questioned Jesus. Then they relieved their sore hearts by telling him of Jesus the Nazarene—a prophet, mighty in deed and word before God and the people, condemned to death and crucified, buried and leaving an empty tomb. When they had finished their recital, Jesus said, "O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe in all the prophets have spoken!" For the disciples had interpreted the cross as failure and not as the fulfilment of the prophecy. When they reached the village of Emmaus, Jesus made as though to continue his journey, but the two begged him to abide with them. At the evening meal he took the bread and blessed it, and suddenly their eyes were opened and they recognized Jesus. At that instant he vanished from their sight—but the knowledge that they had walked and communed with the Risen Christ was with them.

Leading Thoughts

1. "Their eyes were holden that they should not know him"—the unrecognized Christ still walks beside men. 2. The Christ is ever near to answer the questions of troubled souls. 3. It is because Christ lives that we know we have eternal life.

Young People's Work

Topic for April 1

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS
(4) THE EASTER PSALM
Ps. 16:1-11; Acts 2:22-27.
(CONSECRATION MEETING.)

The audience gathered on the day of Pentecost must have been a very inspiring one. The writer of Acts says, "Now there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, from every nation under heaven."

According to the historian, Judas had come to his fate and a new disciple had been chosen. Following this the people all came together and in the early part of the service the entire audience seems to have passed through a tremendous religious experience. What a wonderful preparation for the preacher of the day, the Apostle Peter.

After defending his congregation against the charge of being drunk, he launches into his great discourse. The burden of his message of the day was to connect his congregation with the risen Christ. He knew how to use the Scriptures as is evidenced by his appeal to the prophecy of Joel:

"I will pour fourth of my spirit upon all flesh."

Peter was a fisherman of the first order. He must get his audience to the place where he can draw the net. He does not keep them waiting very long for the way of deliverance.

"And it shall be, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

After his appeal to prophecy, Peter speaks of the "wonders and signs" which God did by Jesus in their very midst. This same Jesus was crucified by "lawless men," but that it was according to the plan of God that he should die. For scriptural confirmation of his argument, he appeals to the Psalmist as one who "spake of the resurrection of Christ." "This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses." This Jesus who was exalted by the Father was the source of the Holy Spirit which they had felt and whose power they had witnessed.

The climax of his sermon comes when he identifies his audience with the "lawless men."

"Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified."

The immediate reaction of the audience to the preacher's message was the request for help,

"Brethren, what shall we do?"

In response to their question, the preacher leads them into the way of salvation "and there were added unto them in that day about three three thousand souls."

We worship on this Easter Day a living Christ. Through the years his spirit has been moving upon the hearts of humanity the world over. Thousands have come to know him as Saviour and Lord. Under the urge of his spirit and the dynamic of his life the forces of righteousness are moving on and on to greater achievements.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Speakers and Conference Leaders, Boston Convention, July 4-8, 1923

Mr. Milton M. McGorrill, director of religious education, Temple Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Rev. N. S. McKechnie, pastor, First Church, Belleville, Ontario.
Prof. H. B. Robins, Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y.
Rev. C. N. Arbuckle, pastor, First Church, Newton Centre, Mass.
Rev. Albert H. Gage, director of religious education, Chicago Association.
Rev. U. M. McGuire, pastor, First Church, Greencastle, Ind.
Rev. R. M. West, pastor, First Church, Lewisburg, Pa.
Dr. James A. Francis, pastor, First Church, Los Angeles, Calif.
Dr. Russell H. Conwell, pastor, Temple Church, Philadelphia, Pa.
Dr. Frank W. Padelford, secretary of the board of education, New York City.
Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor, First Church, Syracuse, N. Y.
Dr. F. W. Patterson, president, Acadia University, Wolfeville, N. S.
Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, pastor, First Church, Detroit, Mich., and president Baptist Young People's Union of America.
Dr. Harry S. Myers, of the stewardship department of the General Board of Promotion, New York.
Mr. H. F. Smaltz, president of the Young People's Baptist Union of Brooklyn and Long Island.
Rev. Charles A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin.
Miss Edna Geister, social and recreational expert of Elgin, Ill.
Rev. C. W. Petty, pastor, First Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Dr. Joseph Taylor of China.
Rev. W. G. Towart, pastor, First Church, Bennington, Vt.

Hudson River B. Y. P. U. Association

The Baptist Young People's Union of Hudson River Association, North, held its midwinter rally Saturday afternoon and evening at Fifth Avenue Church, Troy.

The afternoon session opened at 3.30 o'clock with Pres. Edw. Hotaling, of the Tabernacle Church of Albany, in the chair. The opening song service was led by William H. Wade of First Church, Troy. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. W. Rogers of Emanuel Church, Schenectady.

Speaking Contest

The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to an extemporaneous speaking contest under the direction of Everett Lee of Emanuel Church, Schenectady; George Sparks of Tabernacle Church, Albany, and E. R. Rehberger of Stillwater. Mr. Lee presided during the contest. The following acted as judges: Dr. A. M. Prentiss of Troy, Rev. Marshall Sewall of the Sixth Avenue Church of Troy and Rev. Edgar Smith of Calvary Church, Schenectady.

Representatives from the three districts of the association competed in the contest, the rules of which were as follows:

1. Each district was allowed three speakers, who were chosen as desired by the district committeemen appointed.

2. Topics, as below, were distributed to the speakers several days before the contest.

3. At the time of the contest, the topics were put into a box, and one topic was drawn from the box by the speaker after he reached the platform. The topic was read to the audience and discussed. The speaker was allowed five minutes. Order of speaking was determined by drawing before the contest.

4. The judges (three) independently rated the speakers from one to nine, on the basis of thought and delivery. The judges' lists (three) were then combined by adding the ratings of each speaker. The district score was obtained by adding the combined ratings of the speakers (three) from each district. The district having the lowest score was judged as winner, that having the next lowest was awarded second place, that having highest score was given last place.

5. Districts having less than three speakers had twenty-seven points added to the combined ratings for each missing speaker. Judges rated from one to the number of speakers.

Topics

1. Give reasons why each B. Y. P. U. society should be actively represented at the Boston Convention.

2. How may evangelism be made more potent in our B. Y. P. U. program?

3. Should there be a junior B. Y. P. U. society in connection with each senior B. Y. P. U. society? Give reasons?

4. What helps in addition to Service do you suggest for use in our meetings?

5. How may a B. Y. P. U. society "make money" to carry on its work?

6. How can a large percentage of

(Continued on page 223)

Our Own Folks

Calvary Church Dedicates New Building

Nov. 25, 1886, at a called meeting of forty-nine members of the First Baptist Church—then located at Fifteenth and Davenport Streets, the Calvary Church of Omaha, Neb., was organized.

L. D. Holmes (now deceased) was moderator of this meeting and was later elected senior deacon and Sunday-school superintendent. Services were held in Saunders Street Mission, a small chapel located at Saunders (now Twenty-fourth) and Izard Streets. On Dec. 15, 1886, Rev. A. W. Clark, of York, Neb., was called to be missionary pastor, the church paying $500 and the Home Mission Society $700 of his salary.

At a council of ministers and laymen the church was recognized and the pastor installed on Jan. 6, 1887. Dr. O. S. Wood of Beth Eden Church, Omaha, made the recognition motion and Rev. O A. Williams, of Lincoln, Neb., preached the sermon. In the following February a mission school was started at Central Park, Dr. E. T. Allen serving as superintendent.

The following charter members are now living in Omaha: Mrs. E. M. Johnson, Mrs Carrie Jones-Morrison, Mrs. Silina Mathis, Mrs. Edith Shinrock, Mrs. Susie Phelps-Almy, Mrs. J. D. Daily, Mrs. Carrie Mansfield-Carpenter, Mrs. O. W. Van Orman and Mrs. I. H. Crane.

As the growing work demanded larger quarters and better facilities, the chapel was sold to the Welsh Presbyterian Church for $650 and a new location secured at King (now Twenty-sixth) and Seward Streets. A comfortable building was erected, costing, with the lot, $8,700. The Home Mission Society loaned the church $4,500 on a mortgage.

In January, 1900, plans were laid to build a more commodious church house. A lot was purchased at Twenty-fifth and Hamilton Streets, where a church was erected at a cost of $30,000 and dedicated, free of debt, Oct. 20, 1901. Rev. Myron W. Haynes of Chicago aided in the dedicatory services.

This building was the home of Calvary Church for about twenty years, and was the center of strong and far-reaching activities.

On March 30, 1919, a unanimous call was extended to Rev. Howard C. Whitcomb of Chelsea, Mass., the present pastor. As the surrounding conditions of the church had materially changed, a new location seemed imperative and, after careful deliberation and a thorough canvass of the field, the church purchased the lot at Thirty-ninth and Cuming Streets for $6,000, with a view to making a new center of work. Plans were immediately started for the building of a church, which would afford better opportunity for carrying on a more extensive work, the churches Mt. Moriah and Pilgrim's Rest (Negro) undertaking to purchase the property at Twenty-fifth and Hamilton Streets for $35,000.

Possession of the church building was given to the Negro people on Nov. 1, 1920, Calvary meeting in the Mission Chapel of Calvary Branch No. I, until services were established in the basement of the new church, where they have been conducted until the completion of the new building.

This building was recently dedicated. Rev. Myron Haynes of Chicago preached the dedicatory sermon for this as he had for the previous one in 1901.

The new house of worship is of the Secession type of architecture and is of buff-colored brick and will seat about 700 people. Adequate provision has been made for the development of its religious education program and for the part it will play in the community life. The building will be open and in use seven days of the week. A pipe organ suitable for the attractive building was designed, has been installed and is in use.

Philadelphia Letter

By Arthur C. Baldwin

Where is the deadline in the ministry? Our good octogenarian friend, Dr. Lawson, who occasionally comes down and delights the conference with a live word, remarked to us that the one who crosses the deadline is usually dead before he gets there. Philadelphia has a number of men who refuse to grow old.

The eightieth birthday of Dr. Russell H. Conwell has called out expressions from every class of our citizens. Editorials of praise were in all the newspapers. An entire week was given over to celebrations that included gatherings of the students of Temple University, a great meeting in the academy and a dinner for the ministers' conference. The gifts, of which there are many, included an automobile. We have no fear, however, that Dr. Conwell will ever become the victim of our speed laws. Sate and sane has been his policy in everything. He goes on his serene way undisturbed and undisturbing in the face of yapping extremes of theological and other controversies, too busy doing good to engage in controversy that gets us nowhere. He is easily our foremost citizen. The move to express the popular goodwill by raising $125,000 for a Conwell Hall for Temple University will soon be a success.

The passing of George E. Rees, D. D., on Feb. 19, removes one of these remarkable men who refuse to know a deadline. Though in his seventy-eighth year, Dr. Rees was active in the ministry. He became a pastor here in 1872 and served in the active pastorate with the Tabernacle and the New Tabernacle churches until 1909. It was during his ministry that the Chestnut Street Church edifice was erected. Since his retirement he has served as acting pastor for several churches. He was doing a most energetic and significant work with the Chester Avenue Church at the time of his death. Always present at the conference, witty, shrewd, with a keen, timely word for any discussion, he was a notable figure in our religious life and will be greatly missed.

Now that the subject of age and deadlines is before us, the name of John Wannamaker ought to be added. Only this week, the Sunday schools were asked to have a Wannamaker Sunday and bring gifts for his memorial. The public schools have had their special day also. Business houses, the Union League, the Chamber of Commerce are making their contributions. It is John Wannamaker the Christian even more than the great captain of an industry, that is being remembered. Again do we recognize what a great thing it is to do the will of God.

CALVARY CHURCH, OMAHA, NEBRASKA

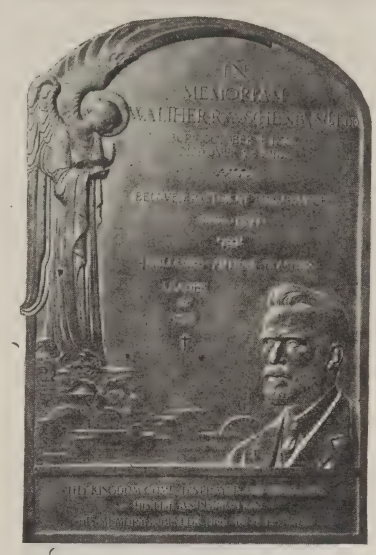
The fundamentalists held another of their regular conferences in the East Baptist Church on Feb. 22. Though unable to attend and so report upon it, I have no doubt it was like others I have attended, a balanced and earnest program, the sincere expression of earnest brethren whom we all respect and honor. The newspapers, however, with their usual appetite picked out the occasional and sometimes unfortunate phrases and featured them as the characteristic expressions. How they delight to do it! No morsel is quite so sweet for the carnal tongue as the differences among people of the churches.



I am saying this not to make a fling but to point a moral. Those of both conservative and progressive mind must stop calling names. We must stop doing what William James called "dichotomizing the cosmos," bisecting life into alternatives and refusing respect to those who roost on the one we have not chosen. The future of religion whether for Baptists or any one else must be inclusive and not exclusive. The spectacle we must give these watching newspapers is the one that impressed the Romans of an early day: "How these Christians love one another."

There are unities in religion that cover up all the theological differences. Some time ago the speaker at our conference was a man of pronounced conservative convictions. His address dealt with great, fundamental realities of the soul's life and its experiences with God. It was a moving, unifying address that brought expressions of appreciation and gratitude from the entire conference. Not long since another speaker gave us an address from the standpoint of modern scholarship. But again it was the great realities of religion of faith and conscience and consecration that he touched upon and again the conference responded as one man to his vital appeal. Such experiences make one feel again that we must get away from the periphery in all our preaching and discussion and come to that common center which all our hymns and prayers emphasize for us, where theologies are secondary and faith is supreme.

Like other great university centers, Philadelphia has a large representation of foreign lands among its students. The International House of the Christian Association of the University of Pennsylvania reports forty-seven nationalities represented by over 400 students. Chestnut Street Church in February observed its fifth annual foreign students' Sunday. The program included the sending out of invitations to all non-Catholic foreign students, an appropriate morning sermon by the pastor, brief addresses by six of these visitors in the students' class, dinner for all the visitors in the homes of the church people, and an open house celebration in the evening. So far as we know, the Baptists are the only ones who are making this definite effort of friendliness toward those who will have a significant part in the future of their peoples and the Christian Association speaks of it as an example they hope others will follow. Already the Chamber of Commerce has caught the idea and has just given the third annual dinner to over 400 foreign students. That is the way it ought to be. The churches lead and then business falls into line.

The wireless and the broadcasting of sermons deserves a paragraph. Not long ago the writer and his church quartet went to one of our business houses and conducted a chapel service from opening hymn to benediction. Not a hearer was in sight save the operator. The microphone stood there and that was all. To preach into it was about as inspiring as talking into a rain barrel, but they told us that 500,000 people probably heard that sermon. Regularly now, a morning service, an afternoon chapel service, and an evening service is being broadcasted from our wireless stations. And in addition to these three favored pastors, doubtless hundreds of others are looking on with covetous thoughts longing for a similar opportunity. "Will it hurt the churches"? asked a reporter. That is not the question. Does it help the cause of Christ? If it wins people to him, I am not afraid that it will not draw them to others who love him, and into a common worship.

Among our pastoral changes may be noted the removal of Dr. Walter M. Walker from the Third Church, Germantown, to the First Church of Frankford; the change of Dr. A. E. Harris from Bethlehem to Nicetown, and the call that the Third Germantown has extended to Rev. Ralph L. Mayberry of Mount Pleasant at Ambler. The next general Baptist event will be the Social Union on March 15 with our New York brother, Ray Petty, as the guest of honor. We have no doubt that this ray from our neighboring suburb will be a bright one.

In Memoriam

"I am in the midst of you as he that serveth."

A BRONZE tablet in memory of Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch was dedicated Feb. 27 in the Second German Baptist Church, New York City. Dr. Rauschenbusch served in this church for eleven years following his graduation from Rochester Theological Seminary. Although he resigned in 1897 to return to the seminary as professor of New Testament, the people of his congregation have lovingly cherished the memory of his works. Rev. Frank Kaiser, pastor of the First German Baptist Church, of Detroit, and a lifelong friend of Dr. Rauschenbusch, delivered the dedicatory sermon, giving a brief biographical sketch. After the unveiling of the tablet, Otto A. Wolff, a trustee of the church, thanked the members who had made the memorial possible by their contributions. He characterized Dr. Rauschenbusch as "the ideal Christian" and referred to the tablet as a shrine.

Dr. Rauschenbusch's influence on religious thought was world-wide, and his books have been translated into six European languages and Japanese and Chinese. Probably the best known and most widely read is "Christianity and the Social Crisis." Its foreword shows the motivating power of the life that has contributed so much to the religious world:

"I have written this book to discharge a debt. For eleven years I was pastor among the working people on the West Side of New York City. I shared their life as well as I then knew, and used up the early strength of my life in their service. In recent years my work has been turned into other channels, but I have never ceased to feel that I owe help to the plain people who were my friends. If this book in some far-off way helps to ease the pressure that bears them down and increases the forces that bear them up, I shall meet the Master of my life with better confidence."

History of Colorado Baptists

The writer is gathering material for a history of the Colorado Baptists, and he will be glad to hear from Baptist ministers who were here in the years long gone. Their reminiscences will add color to the narrative. It is very desirable to have biographical sketches of preachers who were in Colorado in territorial days and later. The denomination that honors its able leaders of the past has a prospect of producing more in the future. We should remember with gratitude the good men and women of other days. Their services and sacrifices should be appreciated by Coloradoans of this generation. The story of Baptist progress and achievement in this mountain commonwealth is worth telling. The past has its lessons for the present.

The writer wishes to get hold of copies of the Rocky Mountain Baptist, published forty years ago and later, if any be in existence. Perhaps some pioneer pastor still has some of these papers. If so, they ought to be preserved in Baptist headquarters, Denver. The file of Baptist Annuals for Colorado is complete, thanks to the zealous efforts of Dr. Granville Malcom, but certain copies of Minutes of the Associations are missing. Can any one supply copies of the Minutes of the Western Baptist Association (Negro) for 1908 and 1909? Does any one recall the first name of Rev. E. Nisbet?

EUGENE PARSONS,
Baptist Headquarters,
602 Mining Exchange Bldg.,
Denver, Colo.

Generous Hungarian Baptists

BY DR. J. H. RUSHBROOKE

Never have I received any message that has moved me more deeply than the following which recently came into my hands signed by Mr. Attila Ceopjak on behalf of the Hungarian Baptists. The message was sent me in English and I give it unchanged:

"The Hungarian Baptists for the starvating (famine) Russians.

"The greatest part of the Baptists in Hungary are poor. The war brought great misery. There are in need of relief many widows and orphans of war and persons unable to work. As we heard from the disastrous situation of the Russian people, we notwithstanding our poverty, are obliged to come to help and to save any families. Our Baptist union addressed a summon to the churches, to contribute in the Sunday schools and girl and women societies and between the divine services on a fixed Sunday, for the assist of the Russians. The result was delightful, because nearly 270 places has gathered 428,696 Hungarian crowns. That are indeed in English money only 60 pounds, but it is the gift of many poors and widows and a sufficiently value, perhaps it will be lovely before God. We may add this amount to the presents of our English brethren, that it shall be arrived together with their presents to the determinated place. During the war many Russian prisoners of war has been converted and baptismed in Hungary."

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

FOR THE TWO AND ONE-HALF years, since his graduation from Bowdoin with highest honors, Rev. Alexander Henderson has been director of religious education in the churches and Sunday schools of Maine. He came to his work with exceptional preparation, as he had had the Newton course in addition to college. He has brought to individual schools new ideals and methods and has secured by scientific grading a much greater degree of efficiency than shown before. He has conducted institutes for religious education, has organized and lectured at summer schools, and has been a teacher as well as prime mover in the community schools of education at Portland, Lewiston, and Bangor. Mr. Henderson has accepted a unanimous call to the church at Fairfield.

UNDER THE DIRECTION of the Waterville Council of Religious Education, Mr. Harry S. Brown, president, a very successful institute of religious education was conducted Feb. 21-23, in the Sunday-school house of First Church, Waterville. Director Henderson was in general charge of the sessions. Among the teachers and lecturers were Prof. Warmingham of Boston University, Rev. George F. Finnie, of Lewiston, Mrs. C. C. Barney, Miss Susie Parker, Prof. Charles Cummings of Bangor, Prof. Logan Pruitt, Miss Ruth Howard, and Miss Florence Norcross, director of religious education in the Waterville church.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Bar Harbor Church reported excellent work being done under the leadership of Pastor Charles W. Turner, who also holds services at Town Hill and Salisbury Cove. All bills for the year have been paid, and over $500 has been raised for benevolence. Seven have been baptized, and the various departments of the work are carried on with a strength that gives promise.

REV. H. G. KENNEDY, pastor for the past eighteen months of the United Church of Oakland, tendered his resignation Feb. 26, to take effect May 1. Mr. Kennedy is to resume his work as the Maine representative of the Lord's Day League, a position from which he resigned to take the pastorate at Oakland.

REV. JOHN SCOTT PENDLETON is now in his fifth year as pastor of the Columbia Street Church, Bangor. Twenty-one persons have been received into the church since Jan. 1, and a like number are expected at Easter time.

MASSACHUSETTS

ON WEDNESDAY, FEB. 21, the Winthrop Street Church of Taunton, gave a reception to the new pastor and his wife, Rev. J. Earle Edwards and Mrs. Edwards. They were welcomed to the community by a representative of the state convention and by the Taunton Association, and greetings were extended by all of the living ex-pastors of the church, some of whom were present. After the formal exercises in the auditorium, Mr. and Mrs. Edwards received their friends in the vestry. Mr. Edwards recently came to the Taunton church from New Jersey.

REV. J. EARLE EDWARDS

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REDEDICATION SERVICES were recently held by the Curtis Memorial Church of Concord. Extensive alterations in the church edifice add materially to the equipment of the church for Sunday-school and social work. The principal services of rededication week were held Feb. 18. The sermon was preached by Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the convention. The church has prospered under the pastorate of Rev. P. A. Kilmister.

THE MERRIMACK STREET Church of Manchester recently gave a largely attended reception to its new pastor, Rev. J. W. Rafter, who came to Manchester from the Newport Church. The Merrimack Street Church is one of the best working churches.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES under the direction of Rev. Lewis Smith of the New England Evangelistic Association have been held with the church at North Stratford, Rev. E. M. Fuller, pastor. Results have been encouraging.

REV. J. K. MILLER, convention pastor-at-large, is conducting meetings with the Milton Church, Rev. G. H. Chambers, pastor. Mr. Chambers has recently come to the Milton Church and the work is moving with enthusiasm.

THE CHURCH AT HUDSON recently received a legacy of $100 by the will of Mrs. Mary A. Miller, late of Washington, N. H. Hudson was Mrs. Miller's native town and her parents attended the Hudson church.

THE CHURCH at GREENVILLE mourns the loss of its pastor Rev. R. W. Dunbar, who died of pneumonia Feb. 14 after a short illness. Upon the burning of the Congregational Church at Greenville a few years ago the Baptist Church and Congregational Churches formed a federation. Mr. Dunbar was pastor of the Congregational Church and the Baptist Church was without a pastor so Mr. Dunbar became the minister of the federated church. He was a man of sterling qualities and gave his undivided interest to the federated church at Greenville and the Congregational Church in Mason, a neighboring community. He leaves a wife and several children. According to the terms of the articles of federation the pastor who succeeds Mr. Dunbar will be a Baptist minister.

WEATHER CONDITIONS during the winter have been most severe. Deep snows and long continued cold weather together with a shortage of fuel have interfered much with state convention and church work in many localities. In some districts the attendance at meetings has necessarily been reduced in numbers and collections both for New World Movement and local church work have been much reduced. In several instances where evangelistic campaigns had been planned the lack of fuel and severe cold weather have caused an indefinite postponement.

NEW YORK

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BATAVIA tendered a surprise party to the pastor, Rev. George K. Warren, on his birthday, Feb. 26. A crowd gathered in the Sunday-school rooms, and waited for the entrance of the pastor and his family who had been sleighriding with friends. A procession was formed to the dining room in the order of the months of the year, those whose birthdays occurred in January leading. Following supper, Mr. and Mrs. Warren were presented with a purse of gold and a basket of flowers.

NEW JERSEY

PASTOR C. H. RANNELS of the First Church, Bayonne, entered upon the fifth year of his pastorate March 4. The deacons reported that the attendance at the communion service was the largest within their memory. Five received the hand of fellowship. First Church is free from debt and continues to prosper.

SUNDAY, FEB. 25, was a red-letter day in the history of Third Church, Camden, of which Rev. W. B. Kell is pastor, when the mortgage was burned. Rev. J. E. R. Folsom, superintendent of evangelism of the New Jersey Convention, delivered the evening sermon. When Mr. Kell came to the field three years ago, there was a $2,000 mortgage on the property. The church is now free from debt.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

Rev. Guy C. Crippen, of the Irving Park Church, Chicago, baptized seven persons March 4. This makes fifteen additions by baptism since the present pastorate began in December.

At a Denison banquet at the Hamilton Club, Chicago, Pres. E. D. Burton of the University of Chicago was a special guest. Dr. John W. Weddell of Morgan Park, who is a member of the same class as President Burton, the class of '76, led the singing. Some one said, "These men are types of the 'original Denisonians.'"

OHIO

Rev. J. A. Moe has resigned, after four years, as pastor of the First Church, Urbana, to accept the call of the Hyde Park Church, Cincinnati. He will begin his new pastorate April 1. H. S. Morgan is chairman of the pulpit committee at Urbana.

The board of managers of the convention has appointed Rev. Robert Hughes of Bucyrus official representative to the World's Baptist Alliance at Stockholm. He has been granted a vacation of two months with salary and the board has made a generous contribution toward his expenses. Mr. Hughes is a very capable district superintendent of the convention.

The Marietta Association in Southeastern Ohio to some extent is solving the problem of the country church by employing Rev. F. A. Maier as pastor at large over the sixteen pastorless churches. Mr. Maier began his labors the first of May, 1922, and since that time he has conducted one or more week-end services with each church and has held seven evangelistic campaigns in which over fifty have been converted. The church at Marietta is supporting this important work.

MICHIGAN

The Beulah Church, Detroit, Rev. Herman Lang, pastor, announces that all the efforts of the church are concentrated on an intensive evangelistic campaign, as a result of which it is hoped that there will be at least 150 additions. Since the beginning of the pastorate of Mr. Lang, seventy-three persons have confessed Christ.

The Baptist Church at Marshall is promoting a program of evangelistic work to continue until Easter. Marshall has been divided into seven districts with a captain and prayer-meeting leader for each district. Prayer meetings are held in the seven districts simultaneously. The first meetings had a total attendance of seventy-four, the second week, ninety-eight. Captains report as many as twenty calls made by one worker. March 11-18 evangelistic meetings are held every evening in charge of the pastor, Rev. J. Burt Bouwman. Professor Whitehouse of Albion gives five addresses and the singing is led by the Baptist choir. The effort has been characterized by willingness on the part of many of the church members to work hard for its success.

An instrhctive program was presented March 2 by the Americanization committee of the missionary department of the Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, under the leadership of Mrs. John Van Hee. Mr. C. R. Thompson, who in cooperation with the board of education has organized twenty-three classes in the night schools for the purpose of teaching the students the principles of American citizenship preparatory to their admission as citizens, delivered the address. To illustrate his lecture, Mr. Thompson brought with him two young men who had received their citizenship papers, and re-examined them in the meeting. Many of the American-born women in the audience admitted that they would not have passed the test in as creditable a manner as the young men.

Dr. Daniel Swamidoss, a native of India and noted for his religious and educational work among the rural people of that country, addressed the students at Hillsdale College recently. He also addressed the county Y. M. C. A. boys' conference to which the college acted as host. There were seventy-five boys present from all sections of the county.

The old Baptist church building at Harbor Springs has been sold to the Presbyterians. A new structure will be erected. Baptists have not held regular services there for some years.

The campaign for $200,000 for endowment from the citizens of Kalamazoo for Kalamazoo College has moved slowly and the time has been extended. A new effort is being made to reach the goal and to meet the condition of the Rockefeller foundation.

The church at the "Soo" celebrated recently the first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Thos. B. Marsh. The church is in a flourishing condition.

Rev. H. E. McGrath has accepted the call of the church at Atlas. He began his service the middle of the month.

IOWA

Rev. A. G. Lagerquist of Des Moines, one of the field workers of the Iowa Convention, has been chosen as a delegate to the Baptist World Alliance, which is to meet at Stockholm, Sweden, next July. This will be his first visit to his mother country for thirty-five years. A committee has been appointed to raise the funds necessary for the trip.

Rev. Ray. E. York closed his work as pastor of First Church at Iowa City, the seat of the state university, last Sunday. During his pastorate a building has been erected as a student center, and the church building has also been remodeled. Mr. York has not announced his plans for the future.

President John W. Million of Des Moines University, delivered an address at the Fort Des Moines army post Sunday evening, Feb. 18. His subject, "The Stairway of Success," was enthusiastically received by a large audience of soldiers and people of the community.

The University Church, Des Moines, devoted two Sunday services to a review of the booklet, "On the March." Three speakers took part at each service, touching the high spots on the work of the different organizations of the Northern Baptist Convention. The booklets were distributed to different families to be read, their names signed on the inside cover, and returned to the church. The booklets thus became a "circulating library" among the members of the congregation. "On the March" was the subject of study by the young people at an evening service, and is to be the study for a meeting by the women's society. The church is trying to get "on the march" with the denomination.

Rev. Hal E. Norton, formerly superintendent of the Baptist Union of Des Moines, is now pastor of the First Church of Winfield Kansas. He recently moved his family to that field. His jovial way will be missed in the work of the Baptists of the city.

An Intensive Training School for workers in church and week-day schools dated for Des Moines University, Feb. 26-28, had to be postponed on account of the illness of the instructors or members of their families. Rev. V. N. Witter, director of Sunday-school and young people's work for the Iowa Convention, has done a great deal of hard work for this school. It is hoped that the program can be carried out in full soon after Easter.

Rev. Howland Hanson, professor of biblical literature and director of religious life for Des Moines University, is conducting vesper services for the university, the first and third Sundays each month. His general subject is "The Rising World."

Under the auspices of the ministerial association of Des Moines, a big interdenominational campaign of personal evangelism is to continue during March. Sunday, March 4, there was an exchange of pulpits throughout the city. March 11 was "Go-to-Church Sunday," and the eighteenth is "Whole Family Sunday." Personal workers are being trained during the week March 11-18. Personal evangelism will be carried on till after the Easter services. This is a great united effort on the part of the Protestant churches of the city and promises great things.

MINNESOTA

Over 150 Baptists of Minneapolis enjoyed a social gathering and supper at Curtis Hotel, Tuesday evening, Feb. 27, the occasion being the visit of Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the N. B. C. The invocation was given by Dr. D. D. MacLaurin, acting pastor of Temple Church. Rev. John A. Earl, pastor of First Church of St. Paul, brought greetings from the St. Paul Baptists. Vocal solos were rendered by Miss Anne O'Malley of Trinity Church. Dr. Taylor delivered a helpful and inspiring address on "An American in Czecho-Slovakia." An interesting feature of the evening was the presence of a goodly number from the membership of the Slovak Baptist Church of Minneapolis, this being the second largest Slovak Baptist Church in America. The meeting closed with prayer by Rev. E. A. Valiant, executive secretary of the St. Paul Baptist Union. Much credit for the success of this gathering is due to the social gatherings committee of the Baptist Union of Minneapolis.

The Calvary Church, Minneapolis, will soon celebrate its fortieth anniversary. The present auditorium was dedicated twenty years ago. The church has had a good history. It is proposed that the month of April be observed as pay-up month in order that the fiscal year may be closed with all pledges paid in full to date.

SOUTH DAKOTA

The Lord has blessed Church Invigorator Earle D. Sims in a work at Clear Lake. The Baptists own a church plant and parsonage at that place, yet the church doors have been closed for three years, no services at all having been held here in that period. Mr. Sims arrived at Clear Lake, Jan. 4, commenced evangelistic meetings and continued them for over a month, preaching every evening and three times on Sunday. The weather was fierce—frequently from twenty to thirty below zero and sometimes a blizzard was on, yet large crowds attended every service, sometimes 300 and more people crowded into the building. As a result the Baptist people were awakened, many people were converted and twenty people were baptized during the meetings, while others united with the church by relation. An annual banquet was held and with enthusiasm the church voted to take up its work again. Officers were elected, a Sunday school with over fifty scholars, a ladies' aid with twenty-four members and a chapter of W. W. G. with nine young ladies, were all organized by Brother Sims. A pastor's salary was raised and Rev. Edward L. Jordan was called as pastor. Brother Sims remained at Clear Lake until the last Sunday in February, and then turned the work over to the new pastor. Mr. Sims is now with the Baptist church at Elk Point, S. D., where the church has been without a pastor for some time.

Rocky Mountain States

NEVADA

Rev. John B. Speed, for the past three and a half years secretary and promotion director of the Nevada-Sierra convention, has announced his resignation to be effective May 1. Rev. Bruce E. Jackson has been appointed his successor. Mr. Speed has made no definite plans for the future.

Want Ads

Middle-aged lady desires position with family traveling to Stockholm. Experienced nurse. Speaks English and Swedish. C. A., care of THE BAPTIST.

Wanted—Well recommended woman for housework. A permanent home with unusual spiritual advantages. Mrs. Fales, Cornell Drive and Emerson Street, Dayton, Ohio.

Baptists benefited—Yamhill County, Oregon, offers mild winters, pleasant summers, tempered by sea breezes. We have diversified farming, commercial fruits, berries and English walnuts. Location of Baptist College of the Northwest, Linfield's standards are known country wide. A new $75,000 church an immediate prospect. Write the Secretary of the Commercial Club or Pastor C. L. Trawin for information, McMinnville, Oregon. Forty miles south of Portland. Two paved highways; two electric lines.

THE three Baptist Hospitals—the only Baptist Hospitals of the Northwest—Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital, Merriam Park Hospital, are thoroughly and efficiently equipped for service.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK SAINT PAUL

ARIZONA

Rev. J. N. Campbell, formerly of Walters, Okla., has accepted the call to the First Church, Douglas.

Mr. M. A. Resendez of Los Angeles has been appointed colporter missionary for the Mexican people to succeed Rev. P. J. Villanueva.

The Arizona Young People's Union sent $100 to the Publication Society to pay for putting into print literature for the Spanish-speaking mission work. This is an excellent service rendered by the B. Y. P. U. societies of the state.

Rev. Hardie Connor, formerly pastor in Safford, has returned to the state after the absence of a year in Oregon to become pastor at Willcox, Gleeson, and the Sulphur Springs Valley. Mr. Connor is already seeing results of his ministry on these needy fields.

Pacific Coast

OREGON

On March 4, Rev. Thomas J. Villers began his second year as pastor of the White Temple, Portland. Within the past year nearly 200 were added to the church membership and the subscriptions for current expenses have almost doubled.

Burma

By J. Herbert Cope

At last the Burmans and others have secured the cure for all political ills—the ballot. A number voted, and a fairly representative council of seventy members was elected. In some places the Ghandi-ites tried to keep the people away from the polls but their efforts were without success. In other places missionaries say that the campaign somewhat resembled one at home with parades and transparencies. An interesting fact is that one district of Burmans elected a European representative. There are besides a preponderance of Burmans, Karens, Indians, Chinese and Europeans, A few are Christians. At the same time there is a change in the governorship. He is no longer to be called a lieutenant governor, but one in fact. The only difference will be in the matter of salary; his powers will be the same and it is interesting to see how he handles his new council. Since he is keenly interested in education the missionaries are happy over his appointment.

In November the corner stone of the new university was laid with the usual pomp and addresses. It is founded on hope, not one cent having been appropriated for its completion. The raising of the money is left to the new governor. If the buildings are not soon erected our men at the Judson College will be camping on the campus. The dormitories are all over, in any hole that can be found, and this condition cannot continue permanently. New buildings must be had if efficient work is to be done.

Speaking of buildings, in spite of the cut in appropriations the Burma mission is able to some extent to continue its building program. The new Indian school in Rangoon is one to be proud of and will mean everything in our work. Morton Lane at Moumein is erecting a much-needed assembly hall. And the Kemendine school has one wing of its new building completed. Word was received by the ladies at Mandalay to get out plans for their new building.

A few days ago at Mandalay I saw the new Chinese church being constructed. Most of the money has been raised on the field and the Chinese are very proud of their work. The Karens, to show the community interest in the gospel, are putting up the wing in which the pastor and his family will live. Thus the work grows in various directions.

Dr. Harper's name has been added to those who have been honored by the government for service in an indirect way while preaching and teaching. He is to be congratulated.

Many words will be written regarding the passing of Mr. Phinney. I think no one would doubt or question the statement that the Burma mission could have lost any other man at this time better than Mr. Phinney. In writing of what he was, one could not well exaggerate.

Haka Chin Hills, Burma.

Money to Make Us Happy

By Wayland Zwayer

MY SUBJECT is, "Money to Make Us Happy," or "Taking Your Money to Heaven." My text is a story of how Russell H. Conwell used a Christmas gift of $1,000 to help six boys finish their college year and to pay a widow's rent for three years. My immediate inspiration is this morning's session of the ministers' conference of Philadelphia in honor of Dr. Conwell's eightieth birthday.

In reply to a reporter who asked Dr. Conwell about his use of the Christmas gift, he said, "Talk about satisfaction. You asked me whether money can help make old age happy, and I tell you with all my heart it can—provided you don't keep it."

Dr. Conwell has earned a great amount of money in his many years of usefulness. More money than most of us ever had or ever will have. And when he dies, he is going to take it all to heaven with him. Or, I might more correctly say, he and his money are already in heaven. "Lay not up for yourself treasures on the earth, . . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. . . For where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." (Matt. 6:19-21). There are a lot of people who expect to go to heaven and leave their hearts outside.

Ovid tells us that,

"As in the fire the yellow gold is tried,
So friendship's faith can but be proved in time
Of dark adversity."

The saddest thing in all Christian history is not the cross nor any martyrdom, but missionaries unable to sail because friendship's faith has been tried and found untrue in this time of God's adversity.

I suggest an insurance agent for careless Christians. If I did not think I could fulfil my monetary obligations to God in my lifetime, I should insure myself, making the policy payable to the work of the kingdom. An insurance agent for careless friends of God! Their post-mortem gifts might brighten their stay in heaven. If they cannot take enough money with them to make them happy in heaven, they might have some sent to them after they get there.

The Religion of a Best Seller—"One of Ours"

Extracts from a Sunday evening address at First Church, Lincoln, Nebraska

By W. T. Elmore

I HESITATE somewhat to take this subject because Willa Cather, the author of "One of Ours," is really herself, "one of ours." Not only is she a Nebraska girl with all the flavor of the prairies in her writings, but she is a graduate of our state university, class of '95. My class was '96. In her freshmen days she was a regular attendant in this church. She is very much "one of ours."

While at times the detail in this work may seem tiresome, and there is almost nothing of plot and but little to appeal to the imagination, yet for Nebraskans there is a great charm and interest in the accuracy of her picturing of the life of the prairies. We are glad to have easterners know that our farm people—some of them—drive Cadillacs as well as Fords; and one farmer's wife drives an electric. Willa Cather makes no mistakes as to any detail. She knows farm life even to the psychology of the horses. Her frankness in detail sometimes goes beyond conventionality. Her descriptions of army life show the same power of observation.

But it is of the views of religion expressed in this work that I speak. First, her attitude toward ministers and ministerial students: with one possible exception in a reference to a retired minister of New York City, her references invariably belittle the minister. I can scarcely understand this. When she attended this church it was under the ministry of Dr. O. A. Williams, once my pastor, and whose successor I now am—a man of the highest possible type, whose name will always be revered in Lincoln. No doubt Miss Cather met pathetic preachers in the early days; but she must have met some of those heroes, too. Some men of the highest culture helped to found our work. I think of Newell, Keeler, Powell, Bedell, Scott, Lawler, and I believe there were giants in those days.

Perhaps it was we ministerial students who gave her this impression. She says, "Young men went into the ministry because they were timid or lazy, and wanted society to take care of them; because they wanted to be pampered by kind, trusting women, like their mothers." And I was one of them! This leads me to ask who these ministerial students were. They are located at "Temple," which is Wesleyan University, but we of the state university were the ones Miss Cather knew.

I think of Dave Forsyth, giant from the plains. Certainly neither timid nor lazy, now at the head of all the home mission work of the Methodist church. I think of Norman Barr, the first man to grasp my hand when I entered the old main building for the first time. Barr was from Holdredge, a man of magnificent physique, who made money whenever he needed it and had great business prospects. For twenty-five years he has been in Chicago. His mission in "Little Hell" has grown to one of the greatest institutional works in the city with a summer camp at Lake Geneva. Fifty people at least work under him as salaried helpers.

I think of Francis Tucker, not robust, but a leader, now at the head of one of China's greatest hospitals. A man so trusted that he was in charge of all the great famine relief work for northern China during the last famine. I think of William Axling, surely "one of ours," a member of our own church, who was called the "Moody of the Platte"; and perhaps because of his youth, his ruddy cheeks, and his great popularity wherever he went to preach, might have been a subject for a little satire. But Axling now has the Japanese language the best of any American in Japan, and his influence there is so great that we all recognize him as our Christian ambassador, with influence in all good things exceeding that of many an accredited government diplomat.

I think of Steve Corey. "Timid?" He certainly was not the day of the cane rush; at least some boys with broken heads would so testify. He certainly was not the day he kept his place in the football line until he was finally carried fainting from the field with an injured leg. Steve is now the foreign mission secretary of the Christian board.

I think of Zeke Moore, great bicycle rider, now a district superintendent in Iowa; of John Marshall, daily seen on our streets, still refusing a salary, the devil's worst enemy, and ready at any time to take a place at the stake with Savonarola or John Huss; of Lewis Thayer, prevented from carrying out his plans, physician and land owner in the west.

The book mentions one name. The description we would scarcely recognize; "His top-shaped head hung a little to one side. The thin hair was parted precisely over his high forehead and hung in little ripples. He appeared regularly at mealtimes to ask a blessing upon the food and to sit with devout downcast eyes while the chicken was being dismembered." He is located as coming from "Temple," but the man whom she names was a classmate of Miss Cather, and later was pastor at Hastings, as represented in the book.

We know him. He was "one of ours"—a member of our church, quiet and dignified, gentle, perhaps too gentle in his ways. But he was most popular and influential, president of the Y. M. C. A. and of plenty of other things. He held pastorates at Wayne, Peru and Hastings, and then, because of a nervous breakdown, went into business. Now if you wish to reach him by mail you only need to address him by name at Hollywood; if you wish to see him you had better make an appointment, for he is an outstanding business man in that growing city, and bids fair to be able to buy out half his class some day. So much for one "timid or lazy."

The missionary enterprise suffers in this book. The hero marries a precise Christian girl with many good qualities, but with no marital affection. Her mother was odd. Her older sister was peculiar and went as a missionary to China. And finally this sister leaves her husband and goes to take care of her missionary sister for a year or more. She disappears then from the story.

For fifteen years I had most intimate relations with missionaries. I have seen them in the making. I have sailed the seven seas with them. I have been their guest and have been host to large numbers. I have worked with them, played with them, agreed and disagreed with them, and associated with them in every normal sphere. And I have not met this type.

As to the missionaries themselves, they are the most vital, virile people I have ever met. It seems to take a certain emotional fervor to make a good missionary. A bloodless, loveless individual usually doesn't have any such interest; and if one such should go abroad his or her career would be short.

I have heard of wives leaving their husbands. I have even heard of ministers' wives leaving their husbands. But it was not to go as a missionary. It was more likely to elope with the choirmaster! Fortunately my illustrations of this are limited to one. The presentation is not according to the facts. It is not a fair representation.

If the author can find such an illustration in real life, I am prepared to find

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; New York. Rev. P H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

illustrations—a hundred or more for each one—where women have left their husbands, not because of missionary leanings, but because of the dance hall and the un-Christian conditions of modern society. For domestic felicity, for the truest devotion to their families, for real comradeship, and for the great loving sympathetic heart which will go through fire and flood with the object of one's love, and never deserts, give me the women touched with the missionary devotion. I know them.

The book makes much in its earlier chapters of a certain denominational school, "Temple," on the borders of Lincoln. This is, of course, University Place and Wesleyan. The school is pictured as an uninteresting place, with the most of the students impecunious ministerial acolytes. The main object of the school appears to be to teach a "faith which was a substitute for most of the manly qualities he admired." The faculty were mostly ministers who were a failure.

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS
PULPITS
COMMUNION SETS
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY
1060 Lytton Bldg., Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Ware—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free. DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dpt 17 Greenville, Ill.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

CHURCH ARCHITECT
Wilson B. Parker 620 State Life INDIANAPOLIS
Send for Illustrated booklet

BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE
STOCKHOLM, JULY 21-27
SPECIAL TOURS LEAVING NEW YORK
June 9, 16, 23, 30 and July 7
Comprehensive itineraries, splendid steamers
Excellent hotels and experienced directors
Send for folder
BENNETT'S TRAVEL BUREAU
500 Fifth Avenue New York City

A TRAVEL BOOK FOR JUNIORS
By HELEN PATTEN HANSON
The small boy goes with his uncle from America to England, Palestine, and Egypt. It is a journey of wonders, and the author makes each stage of it a real pleasure for young readers.
Illustrations and maps. Net, $1.25; by mail, $1.37
THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

At the present time there are about fifty on the Wesleyan faculty, and only three of these besides the president can classify as ministers. I believe the era of the denominational school is coming, not waning. The state schools are getting to be so large that the students in the first two years at least are lost in the throng. There is but little personal attention. The leading men on the state faculties wish that large numbers of these students could take at least their first two years in smaller schools.

When it comes to showing men turned out, and women, too, our smaller schools have no reason for fear. It can probably be proved that in proportion to numbers graduated, the smaller schools can show the largest percentage of the great and near great.

The book represents a young man, out of touch with his environment, looking for the larger life. Religion is definitely closed to him. Not one strong Christian character appears. His mother is good, a Christian, but weak, and dwarfed by her faith. She is a hindrance to him. His wife leaves him because of her religion. His brother is a Christian, but a prig and a bigot. Not one Christian home is shown.

Is this true to life? Are our Christian mothers dwarfed by their faith? Have we no ideal Christian homes? Is every religious young man or woman a prig, a bigot, or cold-blooded and unloving?

Obituary

MRS. CARRIE GERTRUDE MERRITT

Mrs. Carrie Gertrude Merritt died suddenly at her home in Chicago, March 7, 1923. She was born in Troy, Michigan, in 1864, and in early youth gave her life to her Saviour and united with the Baptist Church. For the past twenty-nine years she was a member of the Auburn Park Baptist Church, and a diligent worker, especially in the Women's Missionary Society of which she was the president. Her many friends and relatives, together with her husband, Walter H. Merritt, and her daughters, Ruth, Alice, Esther and Winifred, rejoice in the rich heritage of her unselfish Christian life and character.

MRS. HATTIE PARKER McKEE

Born Ohio, 1840, April 16; died Mt. Carroll, Ill., Feb. 21, 1923. Married July 2, 1861, to Rev. Melvin McKee. Resided at Indianola, Ill., and Crawfordsville, Ind., 1879-1887; Minneapolis, Minn., 1887-1897; Mt. Carroll, Ill., 1897 until her death. She is survived by her son, William P. McKee, dean of the Frances Shimer School; two grandchildren, Howard Harper McKee of New York and Margaret Elizabeth Damon, Springfield, Mass.; and two great-grandchildren, John Parker and Martha Hughes McKee. Funeral service at Frances Shimer School by Rev. George C. Fetter, Ottawa, Ill.

THOMAS SUTTON

The church in Needham, Mass., has sustained a severe loss in the death of Thomas Sutton. He was born April 2, 1850, and united with the Brookline Baptist church when a boy of fifteen. He came to Needham in 1869, and shortly afterwards united with the Baptist church of this place. He was senior deacon of the church at the time of his death, having served in that capacity since 1886. For a number of years he was superintendent of the Sunday school. He was very fond of children and for a time, with Mrs. Sutton, directed the work of the primary department. He was a member of the Boston Baptist Social Union for several years. He served his town as selectman for four years, was made town clerk in 1897, and held that office at the time of his death. For forty years he carried on business in the town, and the success he won was due in no small measure to his strict integrity. He was a man of affairs, and held through the years a number of important town offices. In 1903 and 1904 he represented the town in the Massachusetts House of Representatives. He was a churchman of rare consecration, seldom missing a service, and his testimonies and prayers in the devotional meetings of the church were thoughtful and stimulating and helpful.

On February 22, 1873, Mr. Sutton was married to Miss Margaret Minchim, of Braintree, Mass. Their married life was of unalloyed satisfaction and pleasure. On Wednesday, February 14 last, they started for Daytona, Florida, on a trip which was to mark the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Sutton had contracted a cold before leaving, which developed into double pneumonia, and he passed away at Southern Pines, North Carolina, on Tuesday, the twentieth. His remains were brought to Needham for interment. Funeral services were held in the church on Friday afternoon, the twenty-third. The church was filled to overflowing, and many were turned away. The services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. A. J. Hughes, assisted by Rev. Robert L. Webb, D. D., a former pastor, and Professor W. N. Donovan, of the Newton Theological Institution. "The memory of the just is blessed."

A. J. HUGHES.

Our Book Shelf

Night Scenes of Scripture, by Rev. Norman MacLeod Caie, B. D. New York: Doran. $1.25.

This is a book of 200 pages containing fourteen sermons which are striking in illustration; graphic in description and persuasive in their practical application. The author is a new writer and preacher of the famous Scotch school of religious thought and his works are highly recommended by Prof. James Moffat, famous as the translater of the New Testament. While his viewpoint may be described as modern, he strikes a deep evangelistic note and each page is made to glow with earnestness and zeal for the cause of Christ and his kingdom.

If America Fail, by Samuel Z. Batten. Philadelphia: Judson Press.

The author advocates the socialization of industry in America either by full social ownership and control of all means of production and distribution or by so much of control and supervision by society as shall safeguard the people's interests and give each person his equities. Democracy must develop industrial power and social discipline. He stresses the moral element in the life of a state; the significance of empty cradles in American Protestant homes; appeals for spiritual ideals and for "daring to be poor." He believes that without a Christian social order America is doomed to fail. The book, like all of Dr. Batten's, is full of significant statistics.

The Meaning of Life, by A. Edwin Keigwin. New York: Doran.

These are sermons with no attempt at disguise, even the texts being given. It is a relief from the shams which pretend to be an original and unified discussion of a theme, but which prove to be merely a series of disconnected preachments artificially bound together. This book stands reading as well as hearing; it has the peculiar grip on the reader not usually attained apart from the personality of a verile and attractive speaker. It is an example of the straight talk which gets hold of a present-day New York Presbyterian congregation and which has sufficient conductivity—as few sermons have—to stand without great leakage the test of transmission through type. The title is very fairly descriptive of the text.

Sermons on Biblical Characters, by Clovis C. Chappell, D.D. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50.

Ministers in our times find convenient themes for preaching in Bible characters. Biographical sermons can be made very profitable from every viewpoint of pulpit discussion: theological, historical, practical and pertinent to the times. This author has presented some unusual names: Jephthah; the mother-in-law, Naomi; the mother, Jochebed, besides more familiar ones like Jonah, Thomas, Peter. The interesting and practical discussions and lessons gathering around those characters make the volume exceptionally readable and suggestive.

Seeing the Best, by George W. McDaniel, D. D., L.L. New York: Doran. $1.50.

A volume of ten of the choicest sermons and addresses by one of America's outstanding preachers. In a former work entitled "The Churches of the New Testament" the author has endeared himself to a large circle of readers. Dr. McDaniel possesses a broad knowledge of present-day life and is sensitive to the needs of those who are trying to direct the spiritual forces of our times. He also has a thorough command of the Bible and knows how to make old truth live again in the face of present day problems. While "Seeing the Best" is the title of the first sermon and no doubt one of the most able ones, yet his sermon on "Faith and Science" will be very helpful to those who are finding some relief in a great age of doubt.

Preaching and Sermon Construction, by Paul B. Bull. New York: Macmillan.

These are lectures by an English rector to students and clergy of the Church of England. Not always thoroughly revised from lecture-note to book form, they are yet readable and suggestive even to those of different ecclestiastical environment. The author rejects modernism, but solely on the authority of the church, insisting that every communicant must do thus, and that he must trust to a subsequent verification from experience of the dogmas thus received. There is a devout spirit, with many valuable suggestions for the preacher's life and ministry, that its elaborate homiletical rules are adapted rather to the English and liturgical practice than to our own. There is even what seems to be an overhang of mediaeval scholasticism in the author's suggestion of "schemes" or standardized methods of treating any subject or text. But there is much that takes hold upon the universal elements of effective preaching in all time.

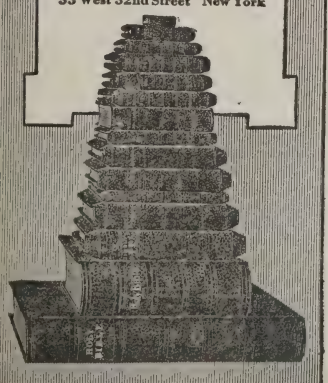
The Gospel for Today, by Dr. R. A. Torrey. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

A book of thirteen gospel sermons that are at once arresting, searching, convincing and compelling. Placed in the hands of unbelievers this book will serve mightily in winning them to Christ. It will serve as a powerful stimulus to pastors who desire to engage in evangelism in their own churches. It is full of suggestive material gathered from an experience of a world-wide ministry. It will root and ground most firmly in the fundamentals of the Christian faith those who are weak in the faith. In these sermons Dr. Torrey is characteristically plain, forceful, fearless, earnest and passionate.

The book is rightly entitled, "The Gospel for Today." If sin is the underlying cause of all our ills today, then the gospel so strikingly proclaimed in this book is "The Gospel for Today." The author says of this gospel: "It is the gospel of a crucified Christ, a Savior from the guilt of sin, and a risen Christ, a Savior from the present power of sin."

The author regards all other gospels other than the gospel of the crucified, risen Christ, as anemic and powerless to save men from the penalty and power of sin. This book excels in the realm of evangelistic literature.

The Altars of Earth—Studies in Old Testament Humanism, by Hubert L. Simpson, M.A. Boston: Pilgrim Press.



Not often have we read a book whose contents and discussions thereof were more intensely interesting than are those of this volume. The author quotes Exodus 20:24 for a text: "An altar of earth shalt thou build unto me." By a unique exegesis and ingenious adjustment the text is made to serve in explaining scriptural records in the light of modern scholarship as represented by George Adams Smith and his school of expositors. The story of creation and the Edenic events such as the serpent, the temptation, fall and expulsion are accepted as divinely inspired records of great truths rather than facts clothed in symbols, and illustrations as Jesus presented truths in parables. Those records, according to the author, are not legends, folklore and myths, but realities clothed in language that fits them for the youth-age of the race and are manifest to the understanding and intelligence of the modern scholar in Bible reading. He maintains that those records of events, speeches and results as we read them in Genesis are the wisest the spirit of inspiration could devise for "instruction in righteousness" in all ages and he criticizes the popular presentation and understanding of them as dimming their luster. His commentaries seem to us sometimes more eisegetical than exegetical, and more ingenious than conditions permit; but he is always constructive and reverent. His discussions of the "long ages" of the antediluvians, the translation of Enoch, the "shipbuilder" (Noah), the deluge, the tower of Babel seem to us sane and not in any way disputing scriptural records. We believe his presentations will lead the Bible reader to a deeper appreciation of the sacred Book as the Word of God. As literature, the book is not only faultless, but is a fascinating reading both on account of the nature of the contents and the style of presentation. We dare say he is too constructive to please the radical modernist and too spiritual to satisfy the literalist. He has found the golden mean of good sense and scholarship.

OXFORD BIBLES

are made in so great a variety of styles and prices that there is one to suit every occasion and every purse

At all booksellers or from the publishers

Oxford University Press American Branch
35 West 32nd Street New York

New—Valuable DORAN BOOKS

MAN AND THE ATTAINMENT OF IMMORTALITY
Prof. J. Y. Simpson, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S.E. Successor to Henry Drummond at New College, Edinburgh.
A most original and important discussion of organic evolution as exemplified in man and its ultimate significance in his religious development. A work of profound scholarship and highest spiritual value. Illustrated, Net, $2.25

CRITICAL HOURS IN THE PREACHER'S LIFE
Rev. Ernest C. Wareing, D.D., Litt.D., Editor of the Western Christian Advocate.
With striking originality and startling frankness this well-known editor and preacher reveals the struggles, tragedies and temptations of the minister's life. A book of warning and inspiration. Net, $1.25

SOME LIVING MASTERS OF THE PULPIT
Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.D., Litt.D., Author of "Preaching in London," etc.
Intimate studies of many of the greatest living preachers on both sides of the Atlantic. Dr. Newton's personal contacts and power of analysis make this a volume of peculiar insight and richness of incident. Net, $2.00

CLASSICS OF THE SOUL'S QUEST Rev. R. E. Welsh, M.A., D.D., Professor of Apologetics and Church History, McGill University.
A fresh and noteworthy interpretation of the great devotional writers whose quest for the spiritual life has crystalized itself into great literary classics. Net, $2.00

THE DEEPER VOICE
Annie Steger Winston
A study of childlikeness in relation to the spiritual life of which the author says: "The way to a trust in God which is sole antidote for that distrust of life which has fallen upon men." Net, $1.25

CAN WE DISPENSE WITH CHRISTIANITY?
F. W. Butler, Vicar of Hurley, Berks.
Of this recent publication of the Student Christian Movement the Christian World says: "A scholarly and closely reasoned argument for the uniqueness and 'absoluteness' of Christianity from the philosophical side." Net, $2.00

The AUTHORITY OF JESUS
Rev. R. Winboult Harding, B.D.
A strong message showing that love is "practical politics" in human life. "Just the kind of book that is calculated to help thoughtful young men and women."—Methodist Times. Net, $2.00

TEACHING ADOLESCENTS IN THE CHURCH SCHOOL
Erwin L. Shaver, New England Secretary, Congregational Education Society.
Professor George A. Coe, says of this book: "It is a genuinely new departure in the method it unfolds for conducting a training class." Net, $1.25

DORAN BOOKS At Your Religious Book Store
GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY
244 Madison Avenue New York

ORGANIZATION and ADMINISTRATION of RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By JOHN E. STOUT

"A comprehensive and wholesome survey of the whole subject of religious education, not only in connection with the church, but also in relation to the community and higher institutions of learning."—The Congregationalist.

Net, $1.50; by mail, $1.65

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

RODEHEAVER'S
GOSPEL SONGS
(Latest)

Give new life to all religious services—especially revivals — also "Awakening Songs," "Songs for Service," "Victory Songs"; —One book prepaid 45c cloth, 35c limp, 30c manila. Any quantities, .05c less, not prepaid. Returnable sample on request.

RAINBOW SACRED RECORDS

Of Homer Rodeheaver's voice, and of other great evangelistic singers. Double face records, 75c each. Write for our lists.

FABER FLDG. ORGANS
Fold like a suitcase; light weight, carry with you anywhere. Great for Classes, Clubs, etc. Write for catalog, prices, etc.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
629 McClurg Bldg. Chicago, Ill. Dpt. B, 814 Walnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

WRITE FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG
The J. B. Foote Foundry Co., 24 Front St., Fredericktown, O.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BULLETINS
Every progressive church should use Winters' De Luxe Bulletin Boards. Dignified, refined, effective and economical. Over 7,000 IN USE. They increase attendance, interest and collections. Thousands of enthusiastic letters from Pastors. Write today for illus. Catalog B. H. E. Winters Specialty Company, Davenport, Ia.

IT IS A BURNING SHAME
that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation
furnishes protection AT COST
FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM
No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock company.
Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured.
No agents. Deal direct.
National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager, 1509 Insurance Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

NEEDS OF A CHURCH ORGANIST IN A SMALL COMMUNITY

1. He needs a fine modern organ. To procure such an instrument may seem an impossibility to him, and to many of the church people who are perhaps satisfied with their present organ—who naturally wonder how the large amount of money necessary can be raised and how the delicate instrument can be kept in tune and in repair so far from the centers. But with patience and quiet determination it is possible to overcome all objections and to secure the needed treasure. We know of an organist who worked for six years before he persuaded his congregation to make the experiment, and even then, as the last pipes of the old tracker action organ were being carried out of the church, a prominent member remarked: "It is too bad! We shall never have as good an organ as this old instrument." Suffice it to say, when the new four-manual was installed, every one was delighted—so much so that when after seven years of service it burned with the church building, the entire amount needed to replace it was subscribed before the plans for the new building were completed!

2. The organist in a small community needs the assistance of great organists in giving his public recitals. This for his own sake, and for the sake of the community in which he lives. He may himself be a first-class artist, but "variety is the spice of life," and with a fine, up-to-date organ in his town the people are entitled to hear as many as possible of the leading organists of the day, whose very presence in the town will be an inspiration and whose organ playing will be a great help in raising the standard of music in that locality. And how will such visitations affect the country organist himself? He may take frequent trips to the city for recreation and study—and he should do this always—but to have association with these distinguished artists in his own town at his own organ, as his guests, is indeed a privilege the value of which cannot be estimated.

3. He needs, even more than does a city organist, the esteem and cooperation of his pastor and the church members. Here we tread on sacred ground! Every organist knows how absolutely necessary to good results is a congenial and sympathetic relationship in this department of his work. We bless in our hearts forevermore the ministers who have understood us and who have allowed us to work with them in perfect accord.

4. He needs to keep in touch with town matters—to be ready to help in the public schools, choral societies and orchestras, and in giving explanatory organ recitals for children. He needs association with the other organists in his town. Fellow workers in so noble a field, their acquaintance and friendship should be cultivated. Meetings could be held once a month in the different churches, to compare notes as to methods of work, to discuss current musical events—to "play a little, sing a little, and have a cup o' tea." These things strengthen the tie that binds, and give cheer and courage to the overworked and disheartened ones. There are many organists—real heroes—in small communities, whose work is "uphill all the way." Not long ago a letter was received by the writer of this article from an organist who "wondered if the leader of a volunteer choir could ever hope to enter the kingdom!"

And this brings us to the final need—the crying need of a country organist—and that is a paid choir. The volunteers are splendid in many instances, and surely their services are greatly appreciated, but every organist needs and should have some paid singers who will always be present. We imagine the above quoted organist had found himself that Sunday morning with a small choir—most of the members "sleeping over," or playing golf, or riding in automobiles, little thinking about the bitter disappointment of the organist, who, judging from the rehearsal of the evening before had every right to expect a full choir to render the somewhat elaborate program prepared.

Thus it is, very often, with the organist in a small community, and he wonders sometimes why he keeps on. But oh! the compelling tones of the organ! And oh! the longing to amount to something in this brief life of ours! "Are these worth nothing more than the hands they make weary? Hush! The sevenfold heavens to the voice of the Spirit echo: 'He that overcometh shall all things inherit.'"—Mrs. Bruce S. Keator in The Diapason.

A MEAD OF PRAISE

"A little over a year ago THE BAPTIST, the official organ of the Northern Baptist Convention, inaugurated a department under the heading of 'Our Music Corner.' Mr. William Lester is the able editor of this page. Its introduction into a religious paper seems so natural and logical a thing to do, in view of the importance of the subject and the large part that music has in all our services, that we wonder why it has not been done long ago. But a good example has been set. May we not now hope to see it generally followed?"

The above paragraph is "lifted" from the March number of the Choir Leader, that live and valuable journal issued by the Lorenz Co. of Dayton, O. Such approval is hereby heartily appreciated!

REVIEWS

From the Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

Hear Thou Our Prayer.....Lester
O Little Town of Bethlehem .....Murphy
On Parade .....Lester

A useful anthem, an attractive simple solo, and a peppy march for piano make up this trio of selections. The anthem is a melodic interpretation of the familiar scriptural text, set for soprano solo first continuing for four-part chorus. The music is simple in contour and texture, ingratiating in melodic values and richly harmonized. Any volunteer choir should find it easy to do; the opportunities for detail effects provided should make it welcomed by the most ambitious quartet. The accompaniment is a real organ part—not the hybrid mongrel part-piano and part-organ melange so often given. The Murphy song is especially adapted for the Christmas season, but it is usable at any time of the year when a tuneful, easy, sincere and pleasing solo is required. It is issued in a medium key. adaptable to any voice.

Dr. G. R. Robbins, Pastor-Evangelist

Has finally yielded to long-continued suggestions and advice of able men in pulpit and pew to give up the pastorate and devote himself entirely to assisting pastors and churches in evangelistic work and expert money raising at dedication of churches.

HE IS CONSIDERED

Safe—Sound—Spiritual—Scriptural—Successful.

PURPOSES

1st—Strengthening the ties between pastor and people.
2nd—Increasing congregations and financial income for current expenses and missions of the church after the extra meetings.
3rd—Leading men, women and children to Christ and into the church who will be worth while.
4th—Lifting the church still higher in the estimation of the community.

CAN SERVE

Large or little, City or Country Churches.

IF REQUESTED,

Mrs. Robbins will conduct women's and children's meetings, instruct converts, and help those seeking Christ.

Address all communications to

REFERENCES:

1st—Any Baptist pastor in Ohio.
2nd—Any reliable Christian citizen in Cincinnati where for twenty-six years he was pastor of the Lincoln Park Baptist church.

TERMS

Railroad expenses. Good room and board. A free-will offering.

REV. G. R. ROBBINS, D.D., 67 Midland Ave., Columbus, Ohio

Hudson River B. Y. P. U.

(Continued from page 213)

society membership be secured in attendance at business meetings?

7. Are our "banners" presented at each rally on an equitable basis?

8. What active efforts should be made by the B. Y. P. U. society to bring the members into a knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ?

9. What active efforts should be made by the B. Y. P. U. society to encourage and promote faithful church attendance by its members?

10. What in addition to that now being done should the association be doing for the remote societies of the association?

11. To what extent should the social life of the society be extended?

12. Is pageantry in our meetings, particularly in missionary meetings, helpful? Why?

13. Are we, as an association, doing all we should do for Dr. and Mrs. Groesbeck? Do we know enough of their work? Should the present situation in this regard be changed? How?

14. Should the association publish a paper in the interests of the B. Y. P. U. societies and their work?

15. Discuss the question of having debates in the B. Y. P. U. meetings and if favorable suggest topics suitable for debate.

Summy's Corner
Impressive Easter Anthems

Well Balanced Voice Parts
Effective Sonorous Acompaniments

Easter Bells ..... .15
By Philo A. Otis
Now Is Christ Risen from the Dead.... .15
By John A. West
As It Began to Dawn..... .15
By Charles H. Bochau
A Psalm of Eastertide..... .12
By Eleanor V. Hull
All Glory, Laud and Honor..... .15
(for Palm Sunday)
By Harry H. Pike

CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO.
Publishers
429 So. Wabash Ave. Chicago

Religion of a Best Seller

(Continued from page 220)

I think again of those in my day who were seeking the larger life, and who came to our university. I maintain that none has more found it than the men whom I have named above who were ministerial students in those days. I find other Christian men, products of the same generation and the same environment. They have found life where others have found a wilderness. The hero, Claude—what a Paul Harrison or a William Axling, a John Mott or Robert Speer, a Fosdick, a Sherwood Eddy, or a Charles Gilkey he might have made!

The war is over. It is easy to have a hero find his soul in that great sacrifice, but we cannot provide a war and a sacrificial death for all. We must live, and find life in more commonplace ways. There was one who found life. It took him to Calvary. And he said: "I am come that they may have life and that they may have it more abundantly."

Where Does the Mission Field Begin?

(Continued from page 203.)

Dives, living in luxury while gaunt poverty lies at the door; the sin of the rich fool who was as big a sinner as he was a fool; the sin of the rich young ruler who rejected the fellowship of that band from which St. Francis drew his inspiration—and went his sorrowful way in the poverty of a selfish life.

The missionary field is here. Each one of us lives at the center of it. Every day we are a part of vast forces which are joined in struggle, the kingdom of the world in conflict with the kingdom of God. The missionary enterprise on any field is nothing other than accepting the challenge and facing the issue.

Dr. Gladden, preaching on immortality, announced for his topic the arresting and suggestive question, "Where Does the Sky Begin?" We do well to ask that of the kingdom of God. Where does that kingdom begin? Right where we live every day. But except a man be born of the Spirit he cannot even see it, much less enter.

Many shall say, "Lo here, lo there" is the kingdom. But do not go after them for, lo, the kingdom of God is among you; you live at its center every day.

---

Prof. C. W. McKeever, N. Y., will be the solosit and song leader of The Geo. M. Hulme evangelistic party. A large tent 50 x 80 has been secured for summer work. The evangelists' address is 1063 La Croix Ave., Akron, Ohio.

Gleanings

(Continued from page 208.)

A revival meeting of great interest and fine results was closed in the First Church of Paris, Ill., on Feb. 18. Rev. R. Theodore Gasaway of Joliet brought the messages of the meeting assisted by Singing Evangelist Wm. S. Dixon, of Chicago. On three Wednesday evenings preceding the campaign ministers were invited to address the church on subjects introductory to such a series of meetings. In the order of service the following men appeared: Rev. Irving A. Fox of the Riverside Church in Decatur; J. W. Boyle, a deacon of the First Church of Terre Haute; Rev. J. W. Merrill of Champaign. Albert A. Gordanier, who has been pastor of the Paris Church for two years, planned and directed the meeting.

At the First Baptist Church, Gallipolis, O., the pastor, Rev. Robert W. Peirce, gave the right hand of fellowship to thirty-four new members, most of whom he baptized after a two weeks' meeting in which Dr. F. E. Brininstool, a former pastor, but now Educational Secretary for West Virginia, assisted. There were also twenty-two young people who signed life service cards.

Singing Evangelist Wm. S. Dixon, Wheaton, Ill., recently assisted Rev. Wm. Ward Ayer, pastor of the First Church, Valparaiso, Ind., where there were seventy-three who accepted Christ; also twelve young people publicly pledged themselves for the ministry and mission fields, and a number of family altars were erected. The Holy Spirit was very consciously present in all of these services with deep old fashioned conviction of sin.

Office Evangelism

HERE is a new suggestion in evangelism which comes from Rev. Bowley Green.

"Passing a big department store one morning I obeyed an unpremeditated impulse to go in and speak to the proprietor on the subject of personal religion. Finding him, I said: 'Mr. T., I've talked beds and carpets and bookcases with you, but I've never talked my business with you. Would you give me a few minutes to do so?' He led me into his private office, and I took my Testament from my pocket and showed him passage after passage, bringing his duty to accept Christ plainly before him. Finally the tears began to roll down his cheeks, and he said to me: 'I'm seventy years of age. I was born in this city, and more than 100 ministers, and more than 500 church officers have known me as you have, to do business with, but in all those years you are the only man who ever spoke to me about my soul.' Why not have office evangelism? Meet a man by appointment in his office, and go without apology as you 'bear witness of the light.'"

Do You Know?

THAT during the period of the New World Movement 14 new Baptist churches were organized in Colorado and 16 Sunday schools?

THAT in Southern California, 11 church buildings were erected and several chapels provided for the foreign population?

THAT the Northern California State Convention has established missions among the Japanese, Portuguese, Armenians and Mexicans?

THAT there has been an increase of 29 per cent in the population of our cities in 10 years, thus greatly accentuating the problems of our City Mission societies?

THAT the expenditures of the Detroit City Mission Society increased from $29,805 in 1919 to $46,416 in 1922, thus indicating how one city mission society has met this larger city mission problem?

THAT the Home Mission Society has opened a Spanish-American Training School with 12 students for the training of ministers for Mexican Baptist churches?

THAT three years ago, before the New World Movement began, there were only 3 Christian Centers in operation, whereas today there are 29 with 1 other under construction and plans drawn for 3 more?

THAT on the foreign field 12,174 baptisms were reported in 1921, being the largest total in 16 years?

THAT in Japan during the period of the New World Movement, 4 additional churches have become self-supporting and the contributions of the Japanese have increased more than 200 per cent?

THAT you who made a pledge to the New World Movement AND PAID IT have had a share in these achievements and should find increasing satisfaction in what has been accomplished?

THAT the accumulated deficits of the Missionary Societies, which began in the fiscal years 1919-20, creates a grave situation which may involve further drastic reduction, notwithstanding enlarging missionary opportunities everywhere?

THAT these and a thousand other facts of achievement, progress, encouragement, discouragement, opportunity, difficulty in the work of our National Missionary Societies, State Conventions, Board of Education, Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, City Mission Societies, etc., are published in a remarkable document which has just come from the press. You can secure copies on application to the Literature Department, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

"ON THE MARCH"

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

276 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

BAP

Volume IV March 24, 1923 No. 8

The Baptist

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
MAR 24 1923

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

A Call to Prayer

Week of Prayer, March 25 to April 1, 1923

WHEN has the world's need for sympathy and brotherhood been so impelling and beseeching as it is today? When have hate and selfishness so nearly brought ruin to all that is helpful and good? How shall the church perform today the task to which God has sent it as the light of the world and the salt of the earth, if its own lamp is not trimmed and burning and its own life so true that it can be the purifying influence in a time of selfishness and sin?

The call to the church is first of all a summons to prayer and consecration. We need to confess our shortcomings and to be ashamed of our aloofness, our sinfulness and complacency. Let us examine ourselves before we take others to task. Hatred and selfish unconcern will cease among the nations when they cease in the individual hearts of men and women.

There is a deepening conviction among men that the greatest power on earth is the power of prayer. It will release more energy for the world's help than any other agency. Pentecosts are ever at hand and will fall upon the church when by the same method that precipitated the first Pentecost it brings itself close to the Infinite.

"Day long a craven cry goes up,
The people drink a bitter cup,
They languish, seeking stones for bread,
Brave faith seems fallen—the old hope dead,
The babblers will not cease,
The people have no peace.
Wake, wake your strings of fire!
God for us—strike the lyre!"
—Commission on Evangelism, Federal Council of Churches

Fresh from the Field

Rev. L. B. Crosby of Ft. Collins, Ohio, is now on the way to recovery at Mayo Brothers' Hospital at Rochester, Minn. He has been in a very critical condition and this word is good news to his many friends.

Rev. L. C. Trent of the Woodruff Place Church, Indianapolis, Ind., reports work prospering and that the men's class now has 121 members. Mr. Trent was formerly pastor of First Church, Kewanee, Ill. He began his work with the Woodruff Place Church the first of the year.

Dr. W. H. Steadman of Champaign, Ill., died at the home of his daughter in Peoria, Feb. 19. Dr. Steadman was a graduate of Shurtleff College. Most of his ministerial career was spent in eastern Illinois where he was instrumental in building a number of churches in what is now known as the Bloomfield Association. He leaves a wife and five children.

Prof. Herbert E. Wise, of the department of philosophy of the University of Redlands, died March 6 as a result of being struck by an automobile. He was born in Yarmouth, England, in 1865. At the age of sixteen he went to Canada where he attended Woodstock College and Manitoba College. He organized Calgary Church, one of the largest churches in Canada. Professor Wise is also a graduate of Newton Theological Seminary. He held pastorates at First Church, Norwich, Conn., and Central Church, Minneapolis. In 1910 he was called to the departments of economics, political science and philosophy in the University of Redlands.

An Industrial Fellowship, according to the Baptist Times and Freeman, has been formed in England. This fellowship is composed of a large number of the leading men of the churches, and in social, industrial and political life, whose desire is to bring public life into harmony with the gospel. They are making an exhaustive study of social and economic life; the results will be presented at a conference in Birmingham next year. They have already discovered that there are a million two-room houses in London and that in thousands of cases whole families are living in a single room which is unfit for human habitation. These men feel that the gospel of Christ has some relation to such a condition and they propose to find what that relation is.

The following item taken from a bulletin of one of the New York churches, where industrial conditions have greatly affected the payment of pledges to The New World Movement during the past year, is suggestive. The church has a Storehouse Tithers' Association of about 100 members. "The amount due on these pledges (to N. W. M.) is $5,996.25 each year. The amount paid during 1922 was $4,053.08 making the amount unpaid for the year $1,943.17. $2,686.70 per year represents the amount of the pledges toward this fund made by those who are members of the Tithers' Association. This amount has been paid in full by the Tithers' Association for 1922, bringing the pledges of all its members up to Jan. 1, 1923. The pledges made by those who are not members of the Tithers' Association amounted for the year 1922 to $3,309.55. On these pledges there has been paid during the year $1,266.38, leaving an unpaid balance of $1,943.10. If the tithers had paid in the same proportion as the non-tithers the deficit for the year would be $3,537 instead of $1,943. If the non-tithers had paid as the tithers did, all pledges would have been paid to date and there would have been no deficit."

The year book of the Scottish Baptist Union shows 143 churches with 21,976 members, an increase during the year of 735 members. The Sunday schools show an increase of 1,615 scholars.

With the approval of the controlling boards of missions of the various denominations, the missionary education movement of the United States and Canada announces the opening of a new department—that of the guidance of American travelers through countries where missionary work is being done, in order that they may come in touch with and appreciate what is being accomplished for the temporal welfare and spiritual redemption of the people of those lands. Rev. John Cobb Worley, for seven years the Pacific southwest secretary of the missionary education move-

(Continued on page 228)

The Children of America
For the Children of India

The special Easter offering in our churches and Sunday schools, which for years has been contributed toward the work of our two Foreign Mission Societies, will this year be applied toward the work among the children.

Few people realize the task of evangelizing and educating the rising generation in India. The following summary shows what is being undertaken by Northern Baptists.

Burma

709 Sunday schools with 32,284 pupils.
752 village and station primary schools with 21,302 pupils.

Assam

273 Sunday schools with 11,186 pupils.
231 village and station primary schools with 5,812 pupils.

South India

781 Sunday schools with 16,909 pupils.
898 village and station primary schools with 24,474 pupils.

Bengal-Orissa

42 Sunday schools with 1,533 pupils.
123 village and station mission schools with 3,118 pupils
Sinclair Orphanage at Balasore with about 75 orphans.

Remember that the risen Lord, whose resurrection we celebrate on Easter, was the friend of the children.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Checks should be sent to your State Promotion office or to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION
"God does not make heathen; he makes little children."

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., March 24, 1923 No. 8

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 226 |
| EDITORIAL | 229 |
| THE SOCIAL GOSPEL IN CHINA, BY SHERWOOD EDDY | 232 |
| TRY RELIGION ON THE BOY, BY CLIVE MCGUIRE | 237 |
| A STANDARD OF GIVING, BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY | 238 |
| A MISSING COG AGAIN, BY BRUCE KINNEY | 239 |
| THE COMING GENERATION OF BAPTISTS, BY LEONARD W. RILEY | 240 |
| THE BUSINESS OF SOUL WINNING | 241 |
| OPEN FORUM | 242 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 243 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 244 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 246 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 247 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 253 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 254 |

A Good Canadian Scotch-Irishman

"Some months ago, possibly more forcibly than kindly—for I am a blunt Canadian Scotch-Irishman—I voiced my criticism of THE BAPTIST. I am pleased to change the note to one of commendation. The spirit of broad fair-play and of general desire to afford the entire denomination adequate representation is weekly—and not weakly—becoming more evident. To use an ancient formula, which it seems to me I have heard somewhere, 'Every day in every way you are getting better and better.' May your shadow never grow less nor your soul more lean, nor your store of good things less, and you will efficiently continue to serve our loved denomination."—Rev. W. T. Milliken, Salem, Ore.

Killam's Kollum

A Loving Request

When the editor's joys on earth are at an end and his kollum is no more, kindly remember that while still in the possession of all of the faculties he ever possessed he made a final request. The request is this: Kindly forbear sending in a news note of my passing which reads, "Whereas the Almighty has seen fit in his goodness to remove, etc." Some folks think that a newspaper is for the insertion of pages of "whereases." We are so thoroughly convinced that most of our readers fail to see the news in these notices that we make the above request. No doubt it will be respected.

A Last Message from Mr. Ayer

The last letter the editor received from Mr. F. Wayland Ayer shows clearly his faith in THE BAPTIST. We had asked his advice about certain matters and in his reply he said: "My opinion is not of much account in this connection as it will not be possible for me to attend the meeting. I am physically below par and have cancelled all engagements calling for conferences otherwheres than at Meridale farms. All the same, I believe in THE BAPTIST, believe in you, and believe that the 100,000 circulation of which I have been talking is possible to a denominationally owned paper. I doubt if an individually owned paper can ever expect a large circulation among Baptists." And Mr. Ayer had large plans for a campaign to reach the desired goal. It will remain for others to carry out the plans.

Patient Preachers—Impatient Editors

"About all a preacher is for, in the eyes of promoters, is to give utterance to their plans. In the dying throes of nearly every week, a committee, or commission, or association devoted to something or other is born," says the Religious Telescope. The patient minister should, of course, read all the suggestions for sermons on this or that theme and do his bit toward promoting the society for the amelioration of conditions in the Fiji Islands, and all the rest. One minister found recently that he was under necessity of choosing his own sermon topics but six Sundays last year. The rest of the time all he had to do was patiently promote some worthy project. Editors are victims of like conditions. There is only one difference—they are far from patient sufferers. If we were to make up the paper just one week as absentee editors insist we ought to make it, we would turn out a promotional hodge-podge that would daze the reader—if it did not do worse.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 226)

ment, has been placed in charge of this department. He brings to it the experience of ten years' residence in the Orient and the knowledge he gained in organizing and conducting four similar parties for the California committee of the movement.

J. L. Colville, an engineer on the Southern Railway, was converted some months ago. He has resigned his position and entered Mars Hill College to prepare himself for the ministry.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of the Divinity School at the University of Chicago, will preach the baccalaureate sermon June 10 at Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh. Doctor Mathews is also director of religious work for the Chautauqua Institute of New York.

Immanuel Church, Chicago, will dedicate its new $250,000 addition to the church property on Easter Sunday. At three o'clock in the afternoon a service has been arranged in which all Baptists within the reach of Chicago are invited. Pres. Ernest D. Burton of the University of Chicago will give the address. It will be a great service and we now call attention to the meeting so that you may arrange to attend. Fuller particulars next week.

The Baptist mission hospital at Shaohsing, China, welcomes and helps without discrimination all classes and all creeds. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him" is changed only a bit to read, "If thine enemy suffer, heal him." Soldiers, sometimes northern and sometimes southern, depending on the fortunes of war, are taken in and aid administered. Those suffering from gun shot and knife wounds are constantly being treated and an otherwise large variety of cases is constantly found. Hookworm seems to be found chiefly among the poorer farming class.

A letter from Sherwood Eddy following his visit to Shanghai, tells with high praise of the work of Dr. H. W. Decker. He said: "Dr. H. W. Decker, your medical representative, is treating some 10,000 patients a year in his little industrial hospital situated in the midst of the great cotton mill district. I earnestly hope that no shortage of funds will imperil the work of this, the only industrial hospital that I have found in the whole of China. It is a noble work and if continued for a few years will help to raise industrial standards in the midst of one of the most terrible centers of human misery that I have ever seen."

Dr. A. W. Beaven of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., is preaching a series of sermons on real religion. The calendar of the church says: "Most people are interested in real religion. Those who have it want more of it. Those who haven't it admit that having it would be a real advantage. Even those who criticise the church acknowledge real religion is essential. The man outside the church usually concedes this." The topics announced are "Real Religion —is it being crowded out by the movie, the auto and the radio. How to get it and where to use it. Is it worth more here or hereafter?" The church will observe Easter Sunday as "pay-up Sunday."

In the calendar of the First Church, Seattle, we find this interesting note: "Children under fifteen, while going to or returning from Sunday school, may now ride on the street cars at the same rate as when attending day school—ten rides for 25 cents; one ride for 3 cents; two children for 5 cents."

A new stereopticon lecture entitled "Everyday Evangelism in South India," by Miss Ballard is now being booked at the following depositories: New York, Boston, Granville, Chicago, Portland and Los Angeles. Many mission study classes will want this lecture. In closing up this year's work there are many churches that will also be interested in using "World Work of Baptist Women." This may be found in the following depositories: New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Parkersburg, Chicago, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Portland, Los Angeles, Denver.

The picture number of the Stephens Standard, the Stephens College magazine, is a thing of beauty and sets forth in a most attractive way the work of the college. Time and again we have said "Watch Stephens College," and now again we say, "Watch."

After seven years at West Fitchburg, Mass., Rev. Benjamin E. Wald has resigned to become pastor of the church at Sunnyvale, Cal. He will close his present work April 1.

The church at Wakefield, Mass., has welcomed its new pastor, Rev. Harvey J. Moore, who recently closed his work at Keokuk, Iowa. The church has received $1,000 under the will of Mrs. Jennie Lenfest, the interest of which will be used to maintain a church messenger service, according to the secular press.

Rev. E. M. Lake supplied the First Church, Boston, during the winter vacation of its pastor, Rev. Austen K. DeBlois, who has been in the South.

Mr. Frank C. Nickels of Minneapolis, former president of the Home Mission Society, is seriously ill at Pekin, China. With his wife and son, Horace, he was on a tour of the world, visiting the mission stations in the East. He had not been well in Rangoon and Shanghai, and it was thought wise that he go to Rockefeller Foundation Hospital at Pekin for examination and a possible operation. Latest news from Mrs. Nickels is not encouraging, although it is hoped that he will recover sufficiently to be brought home.

Rev. Judson B. Thomas, acting pastor of the Englewood Church, Chicago, died at a sanitarium in Martinsville, Ind., on Sunday morning, March 18. He had an acute attack of heart trouble following a slight illness of influenza. For twelve years Dr. Thomas was pastor of the Austin Church, Chicago. He was for a long period district secretary of the A. B. H. M. Society.

University of Chicago preachers for the quarter beginning April 2 are: April 8, Dr. Daniel Jones Evans, of the First Baptist Church, Kansas City, Mo.; April 15, Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale Divinity School. Dr. Henry van Dyke, of Princeton University, will preach April 22 and 29. In May the first preacher will be Bishop William Fraser McDowell, of Washington, D. C., who will be followed in the same month by Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York City. In June Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, of St. John's Church, St. Louis, will be the first preacher; President Rush Rhees, of the University of Rochester, will be the convocation preacher on June 10.

Francis Wayland Ayer

An Appreciation

By President Clarence A. Barbour

ON Monday, March 5, I had a long distance telephone call from Mr. Wilfred W. Fry: "Father went away at a quarter before two o'clock this afternoon." These words told of the passing of a great personality, Francis Wayland Ayer. The time of his "going away" had come. It was a "departure," such as that of which the apostle Paul speaks. That splendid body of his did not decay in power. It did not waste away. A dread disease made an assault upon it so overpowering that it was taken by storm and was forced to succomb. Mr. Ayer went out in his strength, like a warrior falling in the thick of the battle.

Years ago he had said that when his time came he would like to go from Meredith, the home of Meridale Farms. He always referred to that region as "God's country," and it seemed to grow increasingly dear to him with the flight of the years. He had been troubled with a cold for some time, and went to Meredith to freeze it out, as he jocosely said. It was real winter in Meredith, the snow piled high and the roads almost impassable. On Thursday, the first of March, he had driven to one of the homes of the neighborhood to inquire as to the reason for the absence of one of the Bible-school scholars from the service of the preceding Sunday. He was taken with a spell of weakness and the next day was not able to rise from the bed. Pneumonia developed. On Monday he "went away."

Wednesday, March 7, the day of the funeral service at Meredith, witnessed one of the most severe storms of the winter. The wind was blowing a gale, the snow was whirling in great clouds, and the roads were heavily drifted. Nevertheless, on foot and in farm sleighs, people gathered in the little church on the hill-top to the number of 150 or more. At the conclusion of the service the body was taken on a farm sleigh through the drifting storm to Delhi, where a car was in waiting to transport the funeral party to Philadelphia. On the journey and in Camden, where funeral services were held on Saturday afternoon, the casket rested upon a rug made of the skin of Mr. Ayer's favorite horse, Claymore, one of the many horses which he so dearly loved to drive.

In the North Baptist Church of Camden, where for more than fifty years Mr. Ayer had been superintendent of the Bible school, there was a gathering on Saturday afternoon, March 10, which taxed the capacity of the building. Not one who was there will be likely to forget the hour, particularly, perhaps, the wonderful chorus and congregational singing of the hymns, "For all the saints who from their labors rest," "Jerusalem the golden," and the Doxology. It was a company the like of which is not often to be seen.

It would be impossible fully to express the richness of this great personality and the achievements of this many-sided life. Sometimes we are so close to a life that we do not realize its stature. A letter from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Camden contains the expression, "We have lived

(Continued on page 251)

The Baptist

The Man in the Pilot-House

TO THE passengers on a liner in a North Atlantic winter voyage, and to their friends and all who are concerned for the success of the trip, there is keenest interest in the man who stands through the night at the wheel; who holds the great vessel—which is yet so small a thing in contrast with the illimitable sea—steadily to its course; who knows the safe lanes of ocean travel and the dreaded iceberg zone to be shunned; who takes care, as far as human foresight can, to avoid the deadly derelict; and who goes without sleep or proper meals for long stretches of time when some great storm-demon is doing its best to send vessel, crew and cargo to the bottom.

Northern Baptists have called a man to the pilot house of our denominational craft for its New World expedition which has the great missionary and educational goal of the denomination as its destination. That man, whom we call our director, has able helpers and wise advisers in the administrative committee; the constituent organizations of the denomination also have their experienced and far-seeing executives; the states have their organizations and executive officers; and our largest cities are organized and officered for their momentous task. Yet there is a solitary and tremendous responsibility resting upon the heart and bowing the shoulders of the man to whom the denomination has given chief direction of its promotional work, the raising of the resources for carrying on our Northern Baptist share of the work of the kingdom. In his office converge the afferent nerves which report the conditions of our work throughout all its world-field, and out from his office go the efferent nerves which carry back to the churches inspiration and the plans of campaign; and there are other nerves of supply which pass from the churches through the office of the General Board of Promotion, and which are the very life of our missionary activities at home and far-flung through the world.

When the General Board of Promotion called its director to the task of raising an unheard-of sum and carrying out an undreamed-of program, he said to them: "Brethren, you are asking of me an impossible thing; nevertheless, with God's help I am going to attempt it." Bravely he and his associates, men and women, have toiled at that task. When checked at some point they have reshaped their plans to suit new conditions and new demands, cutting expenses to the quick in order that the largest possible percentage of receipts might go directly to the missionary needs.

In their recent manual, "On the March," they have put forth a report of the campaign, a log-book of the voyage thus far, which frankly reveals its shortcomings and disappointments, but tells an inspiring story of achievement and progress in spite of storms of opposition, icebergs of criticism, sunken rocks of indifference, and the failure of some coaling-stations to fill the bunkers with sufficient fuel for the voyage. We thank God for our director and the General Board of Promotion.

But how must it look from the pilot-house in New York with the annual port of call only five weeks distant and so much still unaccomplished? What yearning of heart there must be as the possibility is considered of our failure to fulfil even the modest plan for this year's voyage. And what must be the consequences if our vessel come limping into port with barnacles of debt clinging to its hull and with inadequate fuel and supplies for continuing the voyage which should bring the gospel and its messengers to the nations who are without hope and without God in the world. There should be a million hearts sharing in spirit the vigil of the man in the pilot-house, and bestirring themselves to supply the ship's stores in abundance, and surrounding the vessel with a million prayers like white sea-birds as it ploughs its way through these last five weeks of the year's voyage.

It seems unthinkable that our great denomination should fail of its duty in this emergency. It is far more than the mere question of disappointing our pilot in New York; there is another Pilot who, we are sure, is guiding our denomination to its harbor. Let us be sure we do not fail him. But how can we fail unless he fails—unless the purposes of Almighty God fail? It is the consciousness that our task is not any human leader's but his that spurs us and inspires us. What Dean Alford of England so beautifully wrote of the individual Christian's experience is altogether true of the church as a whole:

"My bark is wafted to the strand by breath divine,
For on the helm there rests a hand more strong than mine.
One who has known in storms to sail I have on board,
Above the raging of the gale I hear my Lord;
For this I know, where'er I go there is a hand divine
That holds me, still, through every ill, whatever lot be mine."

Looking Ahead

MANY serious accidents happen because people do not look ahead while traveling over the roads of America. Many of them die on the roadside saying "I forgot to look ahead," or "I did not look ahead until it was too late." The Northern Baptist Convention does not intend to have any accident occur because of a failure to look ahead and to look in ample time. Already a wise committee is at work upon a denominational program for the future years after 1924.

We would not presume for one moment to advise "the committee upon future denominational program," but we do desire to start the rank and file of our constituency to thinking very seriously about what sort of a future enterprise they desire to engage in as part of the Northern Baptist Convention.

We are sure that every interested Baptist church member wants to continue a cooperative movement of the sort that will conserve the unity of our whole task at home and abroad. Unity is strength and in a unified program we can keep very close to every element in true Christian democracy and at the same time can promote true spiritual efficiency. A unified program covering all our local church productivities does not mean any overlordship or bossism but it does mean Christian cooperation under wise, brotherly and competent leadership.

We are sure, next, that every local church in the Northern Baptist Convention wants the whole task at home to be linked in a proper way with the whole of the task beyond the local sphere. It would be utterly unwise to do one part of the task at the expense of the remainder of it. It is all one job, after all. Our missionary work will never be properly supported unless the whole task of the local church is done in a big worth-while way. But on the other hand a local church is committing suicide on the installment plan when it refuses to do a worth-while share of the work that lies beyond its own local bounds. We therefore expect to find our future cooperative work linking together very closely the local work and the world task. We must not do less for world missions in the days to come but we must do more than ever before because the whole denomination will be helping every local church to produce a competent and properly supported ministry and a bigger and broader brand of individual Christian. Sometimes in the past a few members of some local churches have felt that the only concern of the whole denomination was to get out of them all the money that they could for outside works and then leave the task inside to be done with the meager leavings. Of course they have been mistaken about this but in the future we are sure that even the appearance of evil will be avoided. The whole task is a unit and it must be kept in all its phases a closely knit unit.

Finally, we feel sure that a proper basis of stewardship will bulk large in all the plans for the future work of our denomination. We want a church membership in every local body that knows much about the lordship of Jesus Christ and in consequence will separate a first portion of every element in the life for the use of the gospel enterprise at home and abroad. Prayer and intelligence is needed as well as money. Every local church must help every other similar body produce such a stewardship.

The other day we were walking along a crowded way. We were looking ahead and making some speed but a man came along going in the opposite direction. He was looking behind while he tried to move forward. Despite all that we could do to avoid him he got on the editorial corn and it was our prompt and unanimous conclusion that his way was not a proper method of trying to make progress.

Go forward but look ahead and do not look behind while you travel if you want to make real progress and to this end we have now written.

Vow and Pay

WE ARE inclined to the opinion that the story of Ananias and Sapphira has much significance today because a large number of our church members are under vows to pay towards the maintenance of our New World Movement. The sanctity of those pledges as well as their inviolability is very great because they were made for the support of an important phase of our Lord's work all over the world. Moreover, the pledge was in effect a permission to do the work; and now that the work has been done the incurred obligation must be met.

To pay the vow if it is humanly possible is of the highest importance. To pay those pledges even at great personal sacrifice is quite imperative. Of course if the money to meet those obligations is not in hand and cannot be procured both common sense and our Lord would not expect them to be paid. That is reasonable and Christian.

We have a friend who got into business difficulties and had to borrow money to meet the exigency and when doing so for commercial purposes he also borrowed enough to pay his vows unto the Lord. That man showed a true conception of Christianity.

The case, however, with many pledgers is in this wise. They could borrow the money and make payment in full. But they will not do it. They could pay it out of savings laid away, but they do not want to do that. They could pay it out of current earnings but it would not be quite easy to do that as they do not like to make the needed sacrifices; so they refuse to do it. Some other people have had some new object come into their horizon and the pledger desires to divest the money from the old obligation in order to do the new thing that just now has a stronger appeal.

In order to make clear the situation we cite a case. A church in an unnamed state made a reasonable response to the appeal for pledges for our New World Movement. The people paid their vows during the past years but now some of them announce that they desire to build a new church edifice and so they propose to cancel their former pledges and put the money into the new building. The strange part of the case is that the pastor leads the people in the plan to cancel the old unfulfilled pledges.

Yes, the spirit of Ananias and Sapphira is still abroad and our churches, our pastors and our people must be very careful not to do what brought swift punishment to those two people of old who vowed unto God and then decided to withhold payment. There are many ways in which the vow may be broken but in essence they all bring the breaker of pledges to the same ignoble end. We have vowed; let us pay, and let the payment be made cheerfully out of our love for the Father of all mercies.

A Page of Opinion

Who is Lost?

WE ARE always glad when an article, editorial, or any other feature of the paper creates comment. There is nothing more disheartening than an editorial congregation which never talks back, never praises, never questions, never condemns. The editor of THE BAPTIST seldom suffers long periods of depression.

On another page you will find a communication from a pastor who asks a number of questions. Perhaps you can answer them for him. These queries grow out of the one on the cover page of issue of March 10 where Franklin W. Sweet asks, "Who is lost?" His answer centers in the words of Jesus, "This my son, was lost." His conclusion is that "to Jesus, the man was lost who was either unbrotherly to man or unfilial toward God." He does not discuss the "plan" of salvation; he does not attempt a system of soteriology; he does not discuss any doctrine of the atonement, but he leaves the question where the Great Teacher left it.

Dr. Sweet gave this message to his own people through the pages of the church calendar. He reminded them that the narrative to which he referred is not the story of a prodigal son but of two prodigal sons. The one had wandered a long way from his father's house and lived a disreputable life. He was lost. The other who remained at home was also lost, for he was a long way from his father's heart—he had lost his father's spirit. The pastor, as we understand him, reminded his members that regardless of the theological terminology they might use to describe their experiences, an unbrotherly attitude toward man or an unfilial spirit toward God should lead them to ask the question, "Am I not lost?"

Prayer Is Not Coaxing God

S. D. GORDON of "Quiet Talks" fame is holding noon meetings in the Olympic Theater, Chicago, under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation. We give herewith excerpts of a recent message:

"Prayer is not coaxing God. It is not persuading God. It is not winning God over to our side. It is getting in touch with him.

"Prayer is not overcoming God's reluctance—it is merely taking hold of God's willingness. Prayer is partnership.

"It is really a picture, a man on earth and a man in heaven, with a capital M for that man, those two in close touch of partnership. The man with a capital M can do as he likes with the other man, and the other man on earth can do as he likes with the enthroned man. But then his likes are controlled by that Man.

"Of course I am talking now about prayer as a fine art. Prayer is the simplest thing imaginable, and it is the finest art which calls for the utmost skill and the best trained brain and heart. A little child prays and God hears and answers. The busy man prays and God stoops down and does what is asked. The profligate man, dirty in his sin, penitently looks up and the answer comes at once. That is one side.

"The other side is that prayer is the finest of fine arts and it brings into play all the best disciplined powers of the brainiest brain and the heart."

The Militant Element in Christianity

ADMIRAL A. T. MAHAN of the United States Navy delivered an address upon the occasion of the presentation of Bibles to West Point cadets. In the course of this address he said:

"Speaking after much experience of bad and good, of religion and irreligion, I assure you, with the full force of the conviction of a lifetime, that to one who has mastered the Word of God, even imperfectly, it brings a light, a motive, a strength, and a support which nothing else does. Mastered, I say; for to be useful it must be mastered as truly as any branch of your professional course here; to the one as to the other, if you will have the fruit, you must give the labor. Today we put in your hands the means, as your teachers here have done in secular matters. To utilize them rests with yourselves and God; and he will not fail if you do not. This I have found."

The Ruhr Situation

AT this writing, the situation is more serious than ever. France is tightening her grip day by day. Already the French journals are beginning to talk of the permanent holding by France of all the occupied territory. (The occupied territory grows larger with each week). Meantime, Germany is becoming more and more solidified, and bitterness is growing everywhere. Ugly events occur daily. The whole situation is fraught with greatest danger. If the United States is to mediate, it should move immediately. Meantime, from England and the neutral countries of Europe voices are demanding that the matter go to the league of nations where it belongs. France objects to this; indeed, the more firmly entrenched France becomes in Germany the less she welcomes any outside interference. Meantime, the most significant development is growing impatience in England with the policy of benevolent neutrality and the insistence that the British government make an open protest. The British labor party and the small but influential group headed by Lloyd George demand the withdrawal of the British troops. The British cabinet is split over the issue, Lord Curzon insisting that the English troops remain and others, mindful of the growing menace to Great Britain and Europe in general, showing more and more restlessness at Bonar Law's policy of watchful waiting.

The Social Gospel in China

Today we are standing at the parting of the ways. China is being rapidly industrialized. We must transform the system that is destroying men. Christ must be Lord of all.

By Sherwood Eddy

I HAVE just completed a three months' tour of China. Evangelistic meetings have been held, chiefly among government students and non-Christian young men, in a score of the capitals and cosmopolitan cities. I have also endeavored to make a study of industrial conditions in this great land which is being rapidly invaded by modern industry. I find a growing spirit of unrest among the masses of labor who are so hard pressed under the new industrial system. As in other countries the attitude of the workers is changing from passive subjection to resentment. It is a part of the world's unrest.

America Leads in Strikes

The writer on his last journey around the world found strikes in Japan, India, Egypt and throughout Europe, and returned to find over three thousand a year in America. If we ask the reason for this unrest in America we may turn for an official answer to the Final Report of the Commission on Industrial Relations where the causes of industrial strife are thus stated: "The sources from which this unrest springs group themselves almost without exception under four main sources which include all the others:

1. Unjust distribution of wealth and income.
2. Unemployment and denial of an opportunity to earn a living.
3. Denial of justice in the creation, adjudication and in the administration of law.
4. Denial of the right and opportunity to form effective organizations."

If these truly represent the attitude of labor throughout the world, we are indeed facing a crisis in our industrial life.

Trend of Shanghai Labor World

To enable readers to form an opinion of the present trend in the labor world in Shanghai, a reporter of the Shanghai Sunday Times interviewed one of the foremost labor leaders. In reply to the question concerning the present unsettled conditions and the reason why strikes are occurring in almost every trade, the labor leader said: "The reason for all these strikes lies in the general injustice of wages and conditions in industry."

What are the conditions to which this leader refers?

In one of the chief industrial cities of China, we visited a number of mills and factories. The first was a match factory which is said to be the best of its kind in the city. We found here 1,100 employes, mostly boys from nine to fifteen years of age, working from 4 a. m. to 6:30 p. m., with a few minutes intermission at noon. They work on an average of fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, with no Sunday rest The boys receive from 6 to 10 cents and the men about 25 cents a day. The poisonous fumes of phosphorus and sulphur burned our lungs in the short half hour we were in the factory. Eighty men and boys in this plant have to go to the hospital each day for treatment. Many suffer from phosphorus jaw in which the bones of the face decay on account of the cheap grade of phosphorus used. This could be avoided if somewhat more expensive chemicals were used, but it would cut down the profits which are said to be very high

Working for Food Alone

We next visited a Chinese rug factory. Twelve hundred boys and young men, from nine to twenty-five years of age, are here employed They are working on an average of sixteen hours a day, from 5:30 a. m. to 10 p. m. The majority of the boys serve as apprentices for a period of three years and receive no pay whatever, getting only their food. This "apprenticeship' is only a blind alley. After the boys serve three years there is no future for them in the business. When they are graduated from their apprenticeship they can become ricksha coolies and earn on an average of 30 cents a day. After five years of this work they are usually broken in health and are then useless.

> WE all are blind until we see
> That in the human plan
> Nothing is worth the making if
> It does not make the man.
>
> Why build these cities glorious
> If man unbuilded goes?
> In vain we build the world, unless
> The builder also grows.
>
> —Edwin Markham
> in "Man Making."

Men Earn $9 a Month

The third plant visited was a Chinese weaving establishment making cloth upon primitive hand looms. At present there are 15,000 boys in the city working on these looms. In normal times there are 25,000 employed but many are now out of work. The wages paid to the men average $9 a month, or about 30 cents a day. The workers often average eighteen hours a day, from 5 a. m. to 11 p. m., working seven days a week. The majority of the boys are apprentices who receive no wage whatever except their food. They are going without education and are among the 80,000,000 boys and girls in China who are out of school with no educational provision whatever for them. Even after learning their trade, unless the workers in some mills can turn out more than three pieces of cloth a day, each eighteen feet in length, they receive no pay whatever. The dark hovels in which they work often affect their eyes until many are suffering and some can scarcely see. There are no signs of labor unions here and no man dares to strike. If he drops out of his work he knows he will face starvation, for there is a hungry multitude waiting to take his place. Apprentices are frequently hired out by their poor parents for no pay whatever simply to relieve them of the burden of having to feed them at a cost of 6 cents a day. The grim struggle for existence among the silent millions in China is pathetic.

A Solution

As the writer has traveled around the world he has inquired of employers, economists and laborers for a solution or a way out of our present industrial disorder. In York, England, we visited Mr. Seebohm Rowntree. Here are 7,000 happy workers in this factory, with their model homes, model schools, and their garden village. Here Christian principles are actually applied to problems and industrial conditions. In speaking of the present industrial unrest and the way out, Mr. Rowntree said there are three possible solutions: The first is to make the employers all powerful, crush out labor unions, forbid strikes and run labor by autocratic, military force. But the day of serfdom has gone. It did not work in Russia. The second solution is for capital and labor to seek a balance of power; both organized and strong. Then we shall have entrenched warfare, bitterness, strife and strikes, leading to possible results such as we had in the last war. The third way is to remove the causes of unrest by honestly meeting the injustice which we find in industry today and changing existing conditions. Of course the situation in England is different and the industries are more advanced than in China.

Five Legitimate Demands of Labor

Mr. Rowntree, under the present conditions in industry in Britain believes in five legitimate demands of labor: (1) The fixing of a minimum wage for all workers, which would enable a man to marry, to live in a decent home, and to bring up a family of normal size in a state of efficiency. (2) The limitation of hours of the working week, and a bill to secure a forty-eight hour a week as a maximum for all England He himself, always in advance of legal requirements, has adopted a forty-four hour week. (3) Insurance against unemployment which shall be universal and compulsory. On an average, only 5 per cent of the men in Britain are out of employment. (4) To give the workers some share of democratic control in determining the conditions under which they shall work. He has already instituted a plan for industrial councils. (5) Labor should have a larger share in the product of industry, and more adequate remuneration for services rendered. To secure the worker's cordial support for increased output, he must be given a more direct interest in the prosperity of the business.

The Attitude of the Church

What attitude is the church in China to take toward these conditions? Are we to follow the teaching of our Master and become the good Samaritan to bind up the wounds of bruised and impoverished humanity about us, or shall we, like the priest and Levite, pass by on the other side? The writer saw the church in Russia fail to understand or apply the social gospel. It identified itself not enough with Christ and the people but with the special privilege of autocracy, aristocracy and plutocracy. It became almost an adjunct of the police department and of the spy system against almost every movement for liberty and social justice. At last repression, injustice and reaction produced revolution, and we have the result of Bolshevik Russia today.

His Way

HE writes in characters too grand
For our short sight to understand;
We catch but broken strokes, and try
To fathom all the mystery
Of withered hopes, of death, of life,
The endless wear, the useless strife,—
But there, with larger, clearer sight,
We shall see this—
His way was right.
—JOHN OXENHAM.

The writer saw the church of Catholic Austria and Protestant Germany make in some degree the same mistake. It had not reached the masses of the toiling poor. I saw labor, largely Marxian, materialistic, and often anti-Christian, turn against the church and the church's God. Here was labor with a body, but lacking a spiritual soul. Here was the church with a soul, but no body of social expression and little contact with the poor for whom Christ died. They were willing to give charity but not justice. The same mistake has been made by the church in the syndicalist countries of Southern Europe where the great mass of organized labor is often bitterly anti-Christian.

The church in China need not copy the mistakes of the churches in the West. Today we are standing at the parting of the ways. China is being rapidly industrialized. These multiplying millions cannot be sustained by agriculture and the ancient handicrafts alone. Is industry in China to be materialistic, selfish and godless; to crush labor as a mere commodity for the making of goods and of profit: or is it to place humanity before profit, personality before property, men before money?

The New Industrial Standard

I believe the leaders of the church in China will not make the same mistake as those in Russia, Austria and Germany. The National Christian Conference that met in Shanghai in May, 1922, adopted a new industrial standard for China as follows: "No employment of children under twelve full years of age. One day's rest in seven. The safeguarding of the health of workers, e. g., limiting working hours, improvement of sanitary conditions, installation of safety devices." This is such an innovation, however, that it is meeting with decided opposition from some foreign and Chinese employers. Are these resolutions to become a dead letter in the archives of a forgotten conference or a living issue for the church in China until they shall be translated into new and better social and industrial conditions in this land?

A Gospel with Two Aspects

There is but one gospel, but it has two aspects, the individual and the social, two hemispheres of the full-orbed truth, two poles to complete the circuit of power. Either taken alone is a maimed fragment cut off from the vitality of the living organism. Social service that does not contemplate the regeneration of the individual, that would merely improve his outward material surroundings would be superficial, shallow and impotent. Likewise, an exclusive individualistic emphasis that would seek to save the individual with no reference to his human relationships and social obligations is equally incomplete. Thus, it is not enough to save the souls of a few slaves while the social evil of slavery is dragging down its millions. We must both save the individual slave and abolish the social evil of slavery. It is not enough to save a few drunkards in the slum missions of the Salvation Army, while the evil of drink is ruining multitudes. We must save the individual and keep him from drink, but we must also abolish the social evil of intemperance and keep drink from the man. It is not enough to save a few individual souls in the poverty of the city slums. We must abolish the slum and attack the evil of poverty and social injustice. It is not enough to carry on welfare work for the toiling masses in industry, but we must seek to change existing conditions which are crushing out the lives of many men, women and children in the factories and mills.

We Must Redeem the Whole of Life

The individualist may hold that we are only to win men one by one by simple addition, with no social obligation to the community; to pluck brands from the burning, but not to try to put out the fire that is destroying them. But the social gospel holds that we must not only relieve poverty and human misery but remove their causes; that we must not only pluck out individual brands but seek to put out the fire that is consuming them; not only reclaim the prisoner but make the prison an instrument of social redemption. We must not only offer the palliative of charity for social injustice but transform the system which is destroying men. In a word, we must redeem the whole of life and all its relationships, religious, economic, social, political, national and international. We must believe that no social good is impossible to attain, and no social evil impossible to abolish.

The Second Commandment

An exclusive individualistic conception may seek to save separate individuals, prepared for a future heaven. The new and wider social gospel must not only save the man himself, but save him from the sin of selfish isolation and seek to change all his relations. A saved individual is one in harmony with God and his redemptive purpose for man. The cross is not the symbol of a selfish, possessive salvation for the future. It is the revelation of the redemptive love of God in Christ Jesus, giving itself for man to win them to accept not only God's free gift to themselves, but sacrifice as the principle of their lives to be lived out in service for others. A selfish conception sought to get man "right with God," but often stopped with the first commandment to love God without including the full implication of the second to love his neighbor as himself.

A man cannot be right with God if he is wrong with men. How can he love God whom he hath not seen if he does not love his brother whom he hath seen? Christ states his own mission in social terms of good news for the poor, release for captives, sight for the blind, freedom for the oppressed, and the year of liberation when every man was to go out free, back to his God-given inheritance and possession. In his reply to the question as to what a man must do to inherit eternal life he shows that he must love God and his neighbor as himself, and, like the Good Samaritan, minister to needy humanity. His standard of judgment at the last day is measured by what we do to our fellowmen. His whole teaching is summed up in the realization of the kingdom of God involving a Christian social order, based upon the principle of love. We cannot possibly reconcile the kingdom of God with the poverty, oppression and injustice of the present order. Rather we must change these conditions by applying Christ's whole gospel to the whole of life. The social gospel is as old as Isaiah and the teaching of Jesus. As Wesley well said, "The Bible knows nothing of solitary religion."

The Church and Politics

We cannot accept the warning of business interests that the church must "keep out" of politics and industry. The church cannot forfeit its right of participation in moral issues in every field. It must give heed not only to how men give their money but to how they make it. The ministry cannot abandon its prophetic function. It cannot fail to apply the gospel to all the conditions of the working world and to the wrongs in our political, social and industrial life. Christ is the light of the world; not of all save industry, or politics, or any other special preserve of vested wrongs. He must be Lord of all, or he is not Lord at all.

The Christian church has the salvation of the world as its goal, and should always be ready to right wrongs in the spirit of love and sacrifice. What, then, should be the attitude of the church in China towards industrial conditions? Shall it be content with study, preaching and talking unaccompanied by action? Let us examine some of the existing social and industrial conditions in China today which call for the application of Christian principles.

Earning 12 Cents a Day

In Chefoo, as in other cities of China, we found a serious industrial problem. In the hair net factories 17,000 women and 1,000 men are daily working ten hours for 12 cents a day. Twenty-six thousand boys and young men are here employed in forty factories making pongee silk. They work thirteen hours a day and receive an average daily wage of 12 cents. Skilled artisans are paid from 40 to 60 cents, but in many factories an average wage for common labor is only 20 cents a day. Despite these facts we found industrial conditions better in Chefoo than in almost any city visited in China. Owing to the early missionary work there are a number of Christian employers in Chefoo who close their factories on Sunday, though most of the other employers work their men seven days a week.

Unrest and Dissatisfaction

On the whole very little attention is paid to the health of the workers, and almost no safety devices for machinery are used. Employers have almost autocratic control and there are no organized unions. There is a great deal of unrest and dissatisfaction amongst the workers but to date there has been no systematic attempt to organize. There have been three recent attempts to raise wages by strike, but these were severely crushed by the police and a number of the leaders were imprisoned. Employers close down entirely or lay off workers at will.

An average of about 2,000 girls

"Thou Shalt Be a Blessing"

HAVE you ever thought how little it takes to bless another life? Christian history is radiant with little deeds made great through the name and power of Christ. Why are we slow to recognize this? Is it not because with the gift must go the personality of the giver? This explains the essence of true religion. What is true of God must be true of man. God cannot bless without giving himself, his character and his love. This is the meaning of the incarnation — God in Christ giving himself, by sacrifice and identification with human need. This, then, is the purpose of God, that none of us need go uselessly through life. Your mind, your principles, your friendship, your religion, in a word, yourself, make up the blessing you can be in the world. Opportunities open to him who wants them. Man blessing man, because having been blessed by God, if carried out by each one of us, would bring about the world's salvation!

—ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

and women are employed in Chefoo. This would be approximately one-fourth of the employes in the city. Some 18,000 of these are in the hair net, lace and embroidery factories. Some have well-arranged and equipped buildings, while others use buildings utterly unfit for such purposes, where the light is poor and where the workers are badly congested; where there is no provision for babies and where the lavatory facilities are exceedingly poor. The needle work is very hard on their eyes and there is a high percentage of eye trouble. In only one or two cases is any provision made for protection or care of the workers' eyes. Only in a few cases is any particular attention paid to the moral condition of these girls and women. Some must find living quarters for themselves and are subject to all kinds of temptation and fall an easy prey for those who trade in human life for financial gain. So far as we have been able to ascertain there are no definite regulations governing labor by any establishment. No attempts have been made in this industrial center to introduce protective legislation for any class of workers.

A Chinese Cotton Mill

In Shanghai we visited a cotton mill under Chinese management during the night shift. Here girls and boys from seven to twelve years of age are working twelve hours each on day and night shifts and receiving 15 cents a day. Women of all ages are earning about 30 cents for twelve hours work. Common laborers are paid from 30 to 35 cents a day, while skilled workers receive from 40 to 50 cents a day.

Down the long rows of machines here and there a woman has fallen asleep before daybreak over her work that takes her to the factory seven days or seven nights a week with no Sunday of rest. Some of the workers are allowed two rest days a month. Here and there babies are asleep on piles of waste or playing about the machines at which their mothers work during the long night.

A Procession of Night Workers

It is now 5:30 a. m. and the night workers are just pouring out of the great mill. This motley mass of humanity comprises all ages from one to sixty years, the babies being carried in the mothers' arms. Here is a woman who has earned 26 cents for her long night's toil, leading her child of twelve who has earned 13 cents for twelve hours during the night. The mother who is hobbling along on her bound feet, is carrying a small baby that is forced to spend half of its life in the roaring factory where it will play about the machines until it is old enough to work. Here are wheelbarrows, each pushed by one man, carrying eight women with bound feet or feeble ankles a mile or so to their homes at a cost of ten dimes a month each from their slender wages for this daily service. The chimneys are belching forth black clouds of smoke over the teeming city on this dark December morning, while the alleys and streets are pouring forth their streams of human life back into the ceaseless roar of the giant factories.

The Secret of Endurance

He endured as seeing him who is invisible

WITHOUT vision a man chooses like Lot, and his affinities are with the earth. As with Moses, so with us, we need to learn the secret of endurance. We live in circumstances where it is not easy to endure. In every one of us there is a consciousness of a dual nature; a lower and a higher, with its secret conflict, where character is at stake. There are life's sorrows and bereavement, experiences which admit of no explanation. We meet difficulties in Christian service. Those we try to help are hard to get along with; others are unresponsive. Thank God that the Arm upon which Moses leaned never fails. These words are true today. Are you cultivating the vision which sees God now? Do you keep fellowship with the Eternal? When the soul seeks God, all the infinitude of a Father's love goes out on its behalf.— ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

The Labor of Little Girls

We next visited a silk filature where 1,000 employes toil from 5:30 a. m. until 6 p. m. Here I found little girls seven years old earning 18 cents a day. The wages of girls and women run from 14 to 40 cents a day. Here are mothers working with nursing babies lying on the floor beside them or strapped to their backs. The children learn to work as soon as they are able to walk. Here they toil in the hot steam with their hands deftly manipulating the cocoons in the boiling hot water. The employes say the agile hands of little children are best adapted to this rapid work. "It pays!" The sight of some of the children had been affected from the hot water and steam in their eyes. With no medical care for their eyesight these children must sometimes give up work and face hunger or go on and be satisfied with a smaller wage.

In One of the "Homes"

We next visited the homes of these workers. Here is a carpenter who has courteously invited us into his "home." His neck is full of running sores from scrofula, pouring out tubercular infection to the several families crowded in one small house. He is earning 70 cents a day, or about $27 a month, to support his family of three. Here in a two-story shack, that is subdivided into little rooms, hovels, holes and shelves, forty people, including four families and their relatives try to live. Here is a room about ten feet square with ten people living in it. Half sleep during the day half during the night shift. They have no stove in the room and no chimney to carry out the smoke from the fire under an iron pot in which all the cooking is done. There is no latrine or closet in the house but simply a bucket in this room where day and night ten people, men, women and children, cook, eat and sleep and live. Live? No, rather exist!

Income and Outgo

Beside this carpenter is a man working in an American factory which after the war made over 100 per cent profit a year. This man is earning 40 cents a day on which he must support a family of five. With the aid of his children and his wife they can earn together about $19 a month. But the cost of bare existence for a family of five is about $25 a month which leaves this worker with a growing deficit. The house opens on a filthy alley six feet wide which is little more than an open latrine. These narrow alleys are filled with filth, garbage and muddy water. The rent of this house is $10 a month.

In the next house were working girls, from ten to fifteen sleeping heavily during the day before going back to the night work in the mills. These girls told us they were earning 30 cents a day. Home for them consists of a room of pine boards covered with dirty cotton rags. Some of the rooms have neither doors nor windows. The workers come home from the long hours in the mills and crawl into these dark holes where they wait for the sound of the factory whistles that daily call them back to their work.

For these masses, these human "personalities," there is available no park, no playground, church, Y. M. C. A., club or reading room. They cannot read or write. Life is bounded by the factory, one dark street and the hole or hovel in which they exist. As we came out of these homes a flock of crows were perched upon a neighboring tree in the cold winter wind. I envied those crows on the clean limbs of that tree and pitied these human beings in their poverty, cold, hunger, filth and squalor. They were made for better things. They were meant to live.

Happy in a Hospital

From the homes we proceeded to the neighboring hospital. On the first cot is a boy seven years of age who has lost two fingers in an unprotected machine in the cotton mill. He was working with his two little sisters. The three of them together were earning about 38 cents a day. On the second cot a little girl of twelve has lost a portion of her hand in an unguarded machine. Her face expressed a quiet content for she is having the first complete rest and the first sufficient food in her life of toil.

Value of a Man and a Mule

In the next room of the hospital is a little girl of thirteen with the flesh torn from her arm which will disable her for life. No damages will be paid to any of these children. Ordinarily no damages are paid for accidents, maiming or death. In one mine in North China recently, however, where a number of men were killed by an explosion, the company allowed $40 for each man. The mules lost were valued at $100 per head. Not only do most of the employers refuse to pay damages in case of accident or death, but as yet we have found no law in all China for the protection of the life or health of the workers.

Will any reasonable man maintain that such conditions are necessary, human or just? They have been changed in other countries. They may be changed in China as well. I visited one Chinese Christian employer who has reduced his work from fourteen to ten hours a day. He told us that he is now producing more in ten hours than he formerly did in fourteen. He gives one day's rest in seven and pays high wages ranging from $25 to $30 a month. He has classes for his boys, training groups for his foremen, welfare work for his employes, a cooperative store and a savings bank for the workers. And yet he earns an honest 12 per cent profit. The Commercial Press of Shanghai, with 3,000 employes, hires no child labor. It has a minimum age limit of sixteen years, a nine-hour day, one day's rest in seven, a free school for 500 boys and girls and an industrial association for the employes. One or two such examples prove that changes can be made.

A Misfit

IF you are built
So you can't sing
A happy sort
O' cheerup thing,
You better hadn't
Sing at all;
Thest let wildbirds
An' crickets call,
An' let the honey-
Bees ba-zoom,
An' flowers breathe
Their sweet perfume
That is the way
You better do.
If you ain't glad,
The thing fer you
To do to help
The world along
Is not to bu'st
Forth into song;
If you can't grin,
An' if you frown,
You better jest
Keep out of town,
An' in the house,
Till it comes night;
A grouch is best
Kept out o' sight.
Why, even nights
The little frawgs
Sends cheer-o songs
Across the bogs;
An' if you're sour,
An' grumpy blue,
A frawg is of
More use then you.
—Judd Mortimer Lewis,
in Houston Post.

The Policy for the Church

What policy should the church adopt concerning existing social and industrial conditions in China? It is our conviction that it should be a four-fold policy: First, it should be spiritual and human, caring both for the spiritual and the material welfare and full development of individual lives. Second, it should be practical, not visionary and Utopian, but going forward one step at a time as men are able to receive it; it should be educational and evolutionary rather than destructive. Third, it should be non-partisan and impartial, not taking sides for employers or employes, for capital or labor, not as a judge or divider or settler of industrial strikes. Fourth, it should be thoroughgoing, uncompromising and fearless on moral issues. It should stand not only for social service but also for social justice; not merely for surface palliatives but, going down to the root causes, it should seek to change conditions, aiming at nothing less than the building of a new social order which we call the kingdom of God.

The Two-fold Application

It is our conviction that the application of this policy should be two-fold: First, an educational work of reform to change existing conditions. Second, welfare work of service to minister to the workers under present conditions. Of the two the former is the more fundamental and imperative. The latter alone will not do. How much welfare work can be done for men, women and children toiling from fourteen hours a day, seven days a week, on an unjust wage? The conditions themselves must be changed by the application of Christian principle for the solution of the present industrial problem of China. Will the church courageously apply them or miss its opportunity? Will it evade its responsibility and pass by on the other side with the priest and the Levite as did some of the churches in the West?

The High Calling

We are facing today a deep human need and a challenging opportunity. We believe that the church in China will rise to its high calling with a whole gospel, individual and social, applied to the whole of life.

—The Chinese Recorder.

Try Religion on the Boy

The leader who tries religion on the boy has God and the boy on his side

By Clive McGuire

SINCE the normal boy spends so large a portion of his time in fighting, it will cause no alarm when I call attention to another fight in which he is featured — Tradition (well-armed, mature, but clumsy and indiscreet) vs. the Boy (untrained, unconventional, but resourceful to a fault). Their conflict is as old as human knowledge. The fray takes the form of a tendency on the part of the boy to do what he is expected NOT to do and to omit doing what IS expected of him. To put it in his own terms, when the "dope bucket" is well and neatly filled he is apt inadvertently to overturn it.

I have only one general comment to make regarding this conflict. An analysis of the case almost invariably discloses that Tradition is the aggressor, the sinner and the loser. I state this generalization by way of approach to one of the most common and most erroneous of adult traditions regarding boyhood. This tradition declares that boys are hard to reach with Simon-pure religious appeal. How to "get at them" with religion is the common interrogation of parents, pastors and teachers. The problem is always stated with the assumption that the "hook" must be skilfully baited, the trap well concealed.

Avoiding the Trap

The boy's logical reaction to such an approach is silently, but determinedly, to avoid the trap, and with characteristic success. For such an approach ignores basic principles that any leader of boys should have learned in the primer class. Boys between twelve and twenty are crying out for God. The high tide of conversion is at sixteen. Tradition to the winds, leaders of boys had better recognize this fact and launch with zeal an effort to provide boys an appeal in keeping with their heart hunger.

If the leader has actually learned the truth just stated he may be safely left to his own devices to discover methods. But there is need for caution at one point. A danger lurks in the fact that many an adult male Christian, if he ever had a boyhood has let it slip from his memory. Men are needed who can think in boys' terms. There is a type of reasoning well known to workers with boys that finds its best illustration in the case of the lad who, claiming a prize for having found the lost horse of a neighborhood, was asked how he knew where to look for the animal and replied, "I said to myself 'If I was a loose horse, where would I go?' and I went there and found him."

Such a line of reasoning is essential if leaders are to make the appeal that calls out a favorable response on the part of the boys. The leader, by closing his eyes and practicing Couéism in its most elementary form, may grow younger and younger until he is again with the gang by the old swimming-hole. Then he will remember that in boyhood religion was a tremendously big thing, but abstract theology was nothing. The fact will pass before him that boys respect genuineness and that in their minds the unpardonable sin is moral treachery. He will recall the days when he and his boy friends were responsive to the unadorned Jesus kind of religion. How can he forget the times of doubt and difficulty (and such times came with awful frequency) when he prayed with absolute faith, and he knew God was listening? His reverie will help him to again feel God as he felt him in boyhood. God was then a living, seeing, loving presence restraining him in the times when Satan (and he felt Satan, too) was making an almost successful bid for his soul. He sees again the old meeting house where he was one of a class of boys in the Sunday school. The boys were an unruly lot. One would suppose by their antics that thoughts of religion had never entered their minds. But they were acting "tough" just to keep people from knowing how they really did feel. It is hard to get a boy to be normal in the thoroughly impersonal and artificial atmosphere of the average Sunday-school class. He probably lives again through that life crisis when a sympathetic friend came to him and told him the mysteries of life, and God and eternity. It was no task for the friend to convince him, for his soul was open to the truth at every pore, and he welcomed it. This was the time when he learned to pray aloud and he broke into tears the first time he heard his own voice in prayer.

A vision of his own boyhood opens up the boy heart to the leader. He remembers that in his own boyhood he had no desire to do the prescribed thing, and he supposed he was lost because he did not feel the way the old deacons and sainted sisters kept saying they felt. Interminable sermons were monotonous to him. He wondered why the preacher found anything in them to enthuse over. But when religion was put in his own terms it spoke as the voice of God to him. The wise leader will remember these things for they are the common experiences of normal boyhood, and with that memory fresh in his mind he will go with unfeigned personal sympathy to some hungry lad and give him the truth for which the young soul is ready. The boy will respond. His response will not be the one prescribed by orthodox tradition, but he will pledge himself silently and openly to "put in his best licks for Jesus Christ." This was the kind of response Jesus looked for and the boy can be depended upon to give it.

Twelve years of work with boys have led me to a deep conviction that the religious appeal is the strongest appeal they know. I say they will respond because I have watched them do it. While I was secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Lorain county, Ohio, I had occasion to test this principle in work with the leading boys of eleven high schools. We projected a movement to organize high-school leaders for prayer and Christian service. We were determined to make the appeal prohibitive for any other than positive Christian boys with a keen desire to "create, maintain and extend high standards of Christian character." The thirty-five boys to whom the appeal was made were selected solely on the basis of their actual leadership. They were the leading athletes, the presidents of senior classes, editors of high-school papers, or, in any case, boys who were actually dictating the spiritual standards of the group. Each boy was interviewed privately and a clean-cut challenge of Christian duty given. The obligation the boys were asked to sign involved personal prayer, meetings for group prayer, and specified efforts to spread the leaven in the school. Of the thirty-five leaders interviewed, not one turned the proposition down, though many of them had never been active in church or Sunday school and a large per cent of them were considered, and considered themselves, "bad boys." This result was not obtained by skilful pleading, but by a brief and plain presentation of the natural claim of Jesus Christ. The interest of the boys was in each case assumed and the assumption was always correct.

The Worst Failure

The same principle is painfully illustrated in the worst failure I ever experienced in religious work with boys. It occurred in a little town in northern Ohio. A gospel team from one of the denominational colleges of the state was to visit the town during the Christmas vacation. It was necessary to have the boys lined up. The adults promoting the visit knew that the team was coming for an evangelistic campaign but were afraid to let this information get to the boys. The boys were therefore told that the college fellows were coming to lead them in games and outings and to tell them of college life. When the boys came into the first meeting with the team present and learned that they had been trapped, they left to return no more; and it was silently understood during the four days of the gospel team effort that any boy attending the meetings would thereby lose caste.

Boys can be reached with a religious appeal but they want the label on from the start.

"But there is no one in our church who can handle the boys." These words with minor variations express the lament that rises from a majority of churches. The lament ordinarily implies a scarcity of that

My Creed at Seventy-Nine

Matt. 16-24. Acts 2-38.

By Annie A. Preston.

I believe in God the Father Almighty
Maker of earth and Heaven.
I believe in Jesus the Son of God
For man's redemption given.

I believe in the Spirit the Comforter
Christ's gift, that wondrous power
That claims each soul by love divine
And each may claim by dower.

I believe in the church as a guide and stay
A home, type of heaven on earth,
A universal brotherhood
Its gate the Spirit's birth.

That high resolve within the heart
To live for what is best
That faithful following the right
That gives to life its zest.

I believe the Bible, in prayer, in faith
God's Love renewed each day
I believe we follow Christ's Golden Rule,
When we love and serve and obey.
Willington, Conn.

type roughly grouped as "stunt artists." Few churches have such leadership and those in whose service the "stunt artist" may be found have nothing to boast of, nor any guarantee that a religious appeal will ever reach the boys. But I have seen few churches that lacked potential leadership for successful work with boys. A successful leader of boys must qualify on three counts. He must be a Christian. He must be a worker. He must know boys.

The pronoun "he" is here used in its generic sense. For some of the best leaders of boys are women. The first boys' work secretary of the Y. M. C. A. was a woman. A woman of middle age, in the church of which I am pastor, is doing a piece of work with high-school boys that for finesse excels the accomplishments of experienced and professional workers with boys in the same group elsewhere. We will cleave to the trite principle that "the boy problem is the man problem," but it must not be applied to the exclusion of properly qualified women who may assist in its solution. The qualities of leadership to be sought are essentially the same in men or women.

As I come into contact with real leaders of boys I lose all confidence in the claptrap leader, whose claim to eminence lies in his noise and buffoonery. The modesty of one real leader, now living in the sunny South, forbids my making use of his name but he stands out in my mind as the most successful leader of boys I have met. His "knack" with boys is almost uncanny, and his friends assume that the boys "Tom" cannot reach are beyond the reach of anybody. In personal interviews, or in public addresses to large groups or small, the result is always the same. The boys rise to their best in his presence. The secret of his success is not to be sought in his schooling, for it has been very meager. I doubt if he has any "principles of work" with boys or any "method of approach." His secret lies in a genial personality, backed by a religion that is pervasive, mature, fearless, fresh, continuous and earnest, and in an uncultivated personal interest in the particular boy who happens to be in his presence. The boy cannot, and he would not if he could, resist the appeal of such a character.

"Try religion" was the recommendation of Garrison to a nervous and earnest church worker who had asked him to suggest something that would make her church go. Let the army of defeated and distracted pastors, teachers and parents of boys act in the light of the same axiom.

The leader who tries religion on the boy has God and the boy on his side.

Saint Paris, Ohio.

A Standard of Giving

BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

NOT long ago I read in a monthly magazine published in Japan, an article with the above caption. It was so thoughtful and so suggestive that I determined to make an abstract of it for THE BAPTIST. The article was written by Wm. M. Vories, one of the most outstanding missionaries in Japan, at the head of the Omi Mission, an independent organization. He says:

"No one can set for another the amount of giving which will represent a fair discharge of his responsibilities to the kingdom of God. Giving must always result from the individual's own conscience, or, better still, from his love for the cause. No amount can be considered a large gift or a small one by reason of its actual size. A thousand dollars from some men would be paltry, while one dollar from others might be liberal—according to how much was left for personal uses after the gift was given.

"Neither is money, or effects, the only form of giving. An hour of some men's time may be worth more than a bushel of others' money! The person of no financial means may render the greater service to the cause by giving his personal efforts, his counsel, or his prayers."

Helps for Efficient Giving

Although it is impossible to set a just standard of giving by any arbitrary rules, Mr. Vories feels that there are some principles of giving which will help to make our giving efficient and will clarify the claims of sensitive consciences and limited incomes. He believes that one of these principles is in setting for ourselves a rational basis of proportioning our giving to our personal expenses. While no better ratio has ever been devised than the tithing system of the ancient Hebrews, yet modern industrial conditions conspire to make that excellent law work out great discriminations between families of widely differing incomes. It may be entirely too easy for one man to give a tenth of his income—he could do it and not in any way limit his personal expenditures. He could do it and still have too much left for his own good. At the same time his neighbor, struggling under heavy burdens and barely able to make both ends meet, would perhaps find the giving of a tenth of his income difficult.

Mr. Vories recognizes that all those who can, should by all means observe tithing, giving one-tenth of their gross, rather than their net incomes; but suggests that when we go beyond the paying of a debt, to the point of really giving out of our own legitimate substance, we could make a safe and just agreement with ourselves; that for every purchase we make for ourselves beyond the actual necessities of decent living, we should give an equivalent sum to the kingdom of God. Let this be our rule: "One dollar to the kingdom for every dollar spent on self."

Something for Others

"This provides for the actual living expenses being first paid; but as soon as the realm of luxuries—or even what we might call comforts—is entered, it begins to call upon us to 'love our neighbor as ourself.' The man of small income will perhaps find himself giving a dollar or two to the kingdom every time he spends a like amount for a baseball ticket. A man of larger means will justly feel it his privilege to send in his check for several hundred or several thousand to the mission board, or to some mission station that he personally knows, every time he buys a new auto—according to whether it be a Ford or some fancy make.

"This standard of giving, we should notice, would not deny comforts, or even luxuries, to those who can rightly afford them. But it doubtless would often postpone the day of realization somewhat, since always double the amount required would have to be available. This would have a salutary effect in limiting luxurious living, perhaps; and certainly it would tend to make the extras of life more appreciated, because of the waiting as well as because of the sense of satisfaction from doing something equally good for others."

Mr. Vories continues to carry out this thought in relation to other things beside money. He says:

"Suppose every time we spend an afternoon at golf or tennis we engage to give an equal amount of time to helping some good cause or some unfortunate person. Every time we give an hour to magazine reading, we give an hour to service in some of our church's institutional efforts. Or if we want to help in missionary work but have little means, we could give these hours that match our hours spent in relaxation (that is every hour beyond those necessary for recreation of health) to some work that would earn something to be devoted entirely to the work of the knigdom."

Giving Christianity

He concludes by this great appeal:

"That would be living Christianity!

"That would be something like giving!

"That would mean an end to the begging, bazaaring, belittling efforts of churches to squeeze together their paltry missionary funds.

"That would be the beginning of a manly and sane attack upon the task set before us to bring the gospel of Christ to all men everywhere—the gospel of hope and health and brotherhood and the spirit-led life.

"O yes, I know, we can't expect to get many people—even Christians—to agree to such a strenuous standard of giving—it is too much to expect, perhaps; but that doesn't prevent individuals from trying it. And after a while, if we practise it joyously, others will surely follow. Then some day, perhaps before it is too late, there will be enough means for the work!"

Give

BY W. E. HENRY

GIVE!
Not as the niggardly miser,
Feeling each penny a pound;
Not as the careless handed,
Flinging his substance around:
Miserly, carelessly never
Unto the cause of the Master
Dare to give.

Give!
Not with the hope the Almighty
Richer will make you to be;
Not for the praise of the thoughtless,
Light as the froth of the sea:
Holding such hope is quite hopeless,
Seeking such honor quite fameless,
Though you give.

Give!
Give for the joy of subduing
Selfish ambition and pride;
Give for the sake of a service
Holy and helpful and wide:
Joyfully, hopefully ever
Unto the cause of the Master
Boldly give.

Give!
Give for the joy of assisting
Others who falter and fall;
Give for the sake of a Saviour
Crucified, crowned Lord of all:
Thus shall your happiness deepen
Through your out-going devotion
As you give.

"A Missing Cog" Again

By Bruce Kinney

THE letter from E. O. Clark in your issue of Feb. 24, reminds me that I had intended to write with reference to the original letter under the above heading. I have had wide opportunities for observation literally from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I desire to remark in the first place that there is no "missing cog." We have all the machinery necessary in our state conventions heading up in their executive secretaries. Churchless ministers and pastorless churches may avail themselves of the efficient help of these brethren without cost. This applies to both the self-supporting and the mission churches. What then is the trouble? Simply that the fault lies mainly in that churches refuse such help in so many cases, especially self-supporting churches. If a state convention official assumes to speak in a case of that sort he is frequently told to mind his own business in so many words. Even churches receiving large amounts of aid through the convention often scorn help in their time of need. I know of one such church which called three successive pastors without the advice of the convention officials and in one case despite their unsought and adverse advice. They also promised (without authority) that one-half of the salary agreed upon should come from the state convention. Is it any wonder that that church is no stronger today than it was fifteen years ago? To say the least, this is lack of team work. These churches of all classes charge that these officials are either "bosses" or want selfishly to "dictate" whom the churches shall call. Well, they have their faults, but suppose some other "cog" were created and thrust into our denominational machinery, who can assure us that the man or men composing that new wheel will not develop at least as objectionable traits as those who are now at the head of our convention work?

Will Not Be Dictated To

There are worthy men who at times are without pastorates or enduring the tortures of the damned at the hands of some long-haired deacon or some short-haired woman and they often blame the general workers for it, when the fact is that many churches deliberately turn down a man's name for the sole reason that a general worker suggested it. They say they refuse to be "dictated to." One time I was eighteen months strenuously but vainly endeavoring to locate one of the finest men I ever knew. Our relations became strained but were finally cemented again because at last I did locate him and he knew it.

I would commend some of the suggestions of Mr. Clark's but must differ from others. The method of having a "stated supply" is often dangerous. It is not always that a man suited to the particular church is at liberty or available. The best man for such a job is often busy. The one who is called to that difficult office may for one reason or another be unable to get such a church as he desires. In that case he has been known to use every device honorable (and sometimes otherwise) to prevent the church from calling anybody as pastor. In one such case the stated supply wrote to several prospects and advised them not to accept the call if it had or should come.

Then sometimes these stated supplies reorganize the church machinery from top to bottom under the excuse of preparing it for the coming pastor—all this with little knowledge of the personnel of the church or the needs of the field. The result often is that when the pastor does come he must, after short acquaintance, lead the church through all the agony of another reorganization. The stated supply is an ideal arrangement if you can find the ideal man.

The other suggestions of Mr. Clark's I would commend without reservation. Especially would I emphasize with all my power the unwisdom of having more than one candidate (before the church at least) at one time. This is bound to result in division. Each man will make friends and when he is not called some of these are aggrieved and often refuse to cooperate with the church. Settle the case of each man as soon as possible and before any other man is considered by the church.

Some other constructive suggestions are:

1. Beware of the man who invites himself to be a candidate supply.

2. Beware of the man who after such an auto-invitation tells you that he is about to receive a call from a larger church and that if you really want him you will be obliged to hurry.

3. Beware of the man who is indignant when asked for references. The man who dislikes to be "looked up" is the very man who should be looked up and that most thoroughly.

4. Get light from every possible source—from both friends and foes. I love some men for the foes they have as well as for the friends they have made.

5. Never call a man who is entirely unknown on the strength of one or two "trial sermons." He may be a great preacher but nothing else. Such a man captured a church. Proofs were placed before the chairman of this big church of his immoral conduct. The chairman replied, "I don't care a —— if this is so. He is the man we want."

6. On the other hand investigate a man's work as well as his character. Some men do their best before a strange congregation in trial sermons, while other men feel self-conscious and do their worst. I know of one man who was turned down by several churches on his trial sermons despite the fact that, during the fifteen years' pastorate he was then serving, he had done one of the most remarkable pieces of constructive work I have ever known along all lines of church activity.

I say these things about our general workers, especially about our state convention executives after having been officially associated with them for more than twenty years. I pay them this tribute all the more freely because for the last year I have had no supervisory relations with them. I have known most of the convention executives throughout the Northern Baptist Convention for twenty years. I do not suppose any living Baptist has attended as many state board meetings in as many different states in an official capacity as I have. These leaders are human and have their faults, frailties and foibles as the rest of us. There are, on the other hand, devoted men who are loyal to the deity and lordship of Jesus Christ and are literally burning their lives out in the interests of his kingdom. In all my experience I have known but one or two of these men whose word could not be taken at face value and whose promise was not as good as any man's bond. My concluding constructive suggestion is this:

7. Many churches in their over-emphasis on their own independence are making a great mistake in their refusal to use the help of these officials who are ready to serve them unselfishly. Many pulpit committees are wholly without experience in or knowledge of how to go about checking up a preacher's record. I am not pleading that these convention men shall be given the power to dictate or decide the issues, but that churches shall avail themselves of the information, perhaps, already on file. Many of these men have been in office from ten to twenty years. If they do not already know the record of the man in question they know how to secure it speedily, and that without involving the church desiring it. Then with all the facts before them, let the church decide for itself. Of course where there are charges of immoral or indiscreet conduct and proof is lacking, it is difficult to know what course to pursue, but the following cases readily occur to my mind:

Specific Cases

Rev. A. was called by a certain church without consulting any general worker when these men concerned had on file a statement in the minister's own handwriting confessing himself to be guilty of adultery.

Rev. B was called to a church in another state after he had been convicted of bigamy and there was a certified copy of the court proceedings on file with the state convention officials.

Rev. C. was called to a church without any investigation when only recently he had pleaded guilty in open court to an immoral charge with a young woman of his congregation.

A total stranger was called to the pastorate of one of our Baptist churches who had never so much as been a member of a Baptist church but whose record of immorality and crime I had personally traced from Chicago to the Pacific coast and back again.

I could continue to specify such cases by the dozen but what is the need? In each of these cases the convention officials had the official information that could have been had for the asking. But no one was consulted until rumors began to percolate through to the people of the church and then they asked for help to let go of the ears of the wolf. Let the churches give the machinery we now have a fair trial before demanding additional "cogs."

IF after kirk you bide a wee
There's some wad like to speak to ye;
If after kirk you rise and flee,
We'll all seem cold and stiff to ye;
The one that's in the seat with ye
Is stranger here than you, maybe.
All here hae got their fears and cares,
Add your soul unto our prayers,
Be our angel unawares!

—Calendar, Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn.

The Coming Generation of Baptists

By Leonard W. Riley

THERE will be another generation of Baptists. How strongly it will bear resemblance to the present generation remains to be seen. The responsibility for any resemblance rests upon those of us who are now called Baptists.

Former generations of Baptists have given a good account of themselves. They have wrought into the fabric of our nation some of its most priceless possessions. They have taken the initiative in carrying the same treasures into all the world. They are today one of the most numerous and wealthy of all religious organizations. They are correspondingly influential.

Have Baptists fulfilled their mission to the world? Is there any longer reason for their existence? Has the time come for them to surrender their distinctive principles and merge themselves into other religious bodies? A study of the conditions which exist in our own country and in all the world today answers these questions with a most emphatic negative. He is thoughtless, indeed, who ventures an opinion to the contrary. Forward altogether must still be our Baptist watchword.

Progress a Problem of Personality

Experience proves that all progress is primarily a problem of personality. Leadership in any enterprise—industrial, commercial, religious, educational—is fundamental; all other elements are purely incidental. Our Lord, for example, devoted the large portion of his time and energy to the training of his leaders. All else that he did was subsidiary to this great purpose. His churches today cannot afford not to recognize the wisdom of his course. The world for which Christ died will be led to him or away from him through trained leaders.

Jesus certainly approved of our generous giving to missions at home and abroad; but what is the ultimate gain of planting a church anywhere if there be no leader for its people? The training of leaders for the future should always accompany the work of extending his kingdom in the present. That body of believers will prove most effective and enduring which attends to the one obligation with the same earnestness and zeal that it gives to the other.

The Baptist academies, colleges, universities and seminaries which we have today are the result of the efforts of former generations of Baptists to provide for the development of their leaders. A call of the roll of those leaders and an investigation of the sources of their training would give full proof of the wisdom of our forefathers in establishing and maintaining these educational centers. Whatever of material possessions, social prestige and spiritual power we Baptists of today are enjoying, we owe quite largely to the laymen, the ministers and the missionaries trained in these selfsame institutions.

If, then, we are to have a large and influential constituency in the coming generation, we too, must look well to the development of our leaders. They will not "just grow" like Topsy. They will not to any considerable extent be produced by our state universities nor by the institutions of other denominations. These institutions are organized and maintained for other purposes and we have no right to expect them to do our work for us. Any reason we have for our existence is likewise a reason for maintaining educational institutions. We must ourselves develop the leaders required to propagate our peculiar tenets. The past clearly indicates that this cannot be done without Baptist educational institutions.

This being the case we may as well admit first as last that our corporate responsibility for these institutions is both great and varied. First of all, though by no means most important, is the question of their material equipment. Reference has already been made to the wealth which the Lord has placed in our hands. He has made it easily possible for us to provide for our children the very best in the way of educational equipment. A worldly pride should not control us in making this provision. A proper pride in caring for our own in building up institutions which will reflect his glory is abundantly justified. Attractive grounds, buildings of enduring materials, beautiful architecture, comfortable heating systems, ample lighting facilities, libraries, statuary and paintings which bring inspiration from the past, extensive laboratory appliances and endowment funds sufficient to command the best type of teachers, are all valuable in education and our Baptist young people are worthy of them. What is more, we are financially equal to providing every one of our educational institutions with the very best of all these things. If we fail to do so we cannot blame our Baptist students for seeking their training in institutions where such advantages are to be found. This is one vital question which we must face squarely if we are to have in the next generation Baptists who will be a credit to us and to our Lord and Master.

An Inadequate Conception

We have, however, a very inadequate conception of our educational task as Baptists if we are content merely with supplying these institutions with all that money can buy for them. We must see to it that they are imbued with that spirit which money cannot buy, with that "something" which is not to be found in our state educational institutions. If we do not do this we have no possible excuse for calling upon our constituency to bear, in addition to other burdens, the expense of maintaining educational institutions. We must not forget that ours is not the task of providing popular education for the many but of so conducting our work that Christian leaders will be sent forth from our halls.

This desired result cannot be achieved unless the trustees of these institutions are Christian men and women who have at heart the interests of the kingdom of God. These trustees are responsible for the selection of the president and the president in turn has the recommending of the members of the faculty. Thus the circle is completed and disaster inevitably follows when it is not properly composed. Worldly business men, no matter how wealthy and prominent they may be, are placed upon these boards at our peril. Their election may prove the entering wedge which will ultimately deprive us of the assistance of these institutions in our work of establishing God's kingdom in this world. Our work if necessary can be done with comparatively little equipment however desirable much of it may be, but it cannot be done without the spirit of Jesus Christ.

Our professors also should be Christian men and women. Like produces like in the class room as well as elsewhere. We can afford to omit a given course of study from the curriculum but we cannot afford to put an unregenerate teacher in charge of it. Due reverence should characterize the thoughts, the words and even the actions of these teachers. They should be positive and constructive always; never negative and destructive. They are making the next generation of Baptists.

Great care is usually exercised in the choice of a pastor. Even greater care should be exercised in the selection of the presidents and professors of these academies, colleges, universities and seminaries of ours for vastly more is at stake in the selection. The ideas and policies of these men and women will come to prevail in these institutions. We cannot afford to make any mistake at this particular point. Large numbers of students, adequate endowments and splendid equipments are excellent indeed but they are worthless if we secure them at the sacrifice of the Christian character of these institutions.

A Lie Always a Liability

When a man bears the name of Baptist and does not function as a Baptist what does it profit the denomination even though he be the leading man in his community, his state or nation? Pride of position or of possession cannot prosper our cause. We are here to overcome this spirit of the world. When an academy or a college or a university or a theological seminary is known as a Baptist institution, but in no wise functions as such what does it profit the denomination even though it has a world-wide reputation for splendid equipment and profound scholarship? A lie is always a liability no matter how it may be attired.

Hitherto the Baptist denomination has been altogether too trustful of its educational leaders. These men, trustees and and faculty alike, have always been very attentive to the denomination and delightfully deferential to its wishes during the lean periods of the development of these institutions. But when the needs have been fairly well supplied the words of Deuteronomy 32:15 describe the result:

"But Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked:
Thou art waxed fat, thou are grown thick, thou art become sleek;
Then he forsook God who made him,
And lightly esteemed the Rock of His salvation."

Baptists took a long step in advance when they provided in the New World Movement that education and missions should stand together in the denominational budget. These two enterprises are one and should never have been separated. Now that we have them united let us see to it that henceforth they work side by side, recognizing the dependence of each one upon the other. Undoubtedly our denomination has suffered an incalculable loss because of the policy which was maintained previous to the New World Movement. We now have an opportunity to bind so closely our educational institutions to the heart of the denomination by our contributions and our intelligently manifested interest that henceforth there will be no occasion and no desire to break away from denominational relationships.

(Continued on page 255)

The Business of Soul Winning

A Continuous Revival

DAVID LEON WOODWARD, pastor of First Church, Marion, Ind., has closed a revival of two weeks' effort with the result that the lives of many have been quickened and many souls have been born into the kingdom.

The real revival of religion has only begun. Special evangelistic services will be held every Sunday evening until a week preceding Easter, at which time the revival will reach its climax in a week of special meetings with services every night until Easter.

Mr. Woodward put on the special meetings by request of the church following a vote of confidence offering unanimous support. The music was furnished by local talent in the church. A big chorus choir of thirty voices with the Baptist quartet as a nucleus was organized, with Miss Nina Elkins as director.

The pastor delivered sixteen specially prepared sermons. The invitation was not given during the first week, but the pastor gave pointed and practical sermons of a revival nature to the Christian people, with the result that over 100 persons came forward and reconsecrated their lives to the service of the Master. There was a spirit of prayer and much evidence of the Spirit's presence. Many church members were enlisted in personal work with the result that the Lord's Seventy was organized for personal evangelism and visitation. During the last week the invitation was extended to the unsaved with the result that twenty-five made decisions for Christ and many others are at the point of making decision. The immediate results would have been greater, but the revival has been going on since the first of the year with the result that there had been many additions preceding the special two weeks' effort. Thirty persons made decisions in January, making a total of fifty-five for the past two months. The crowds attending the meetings and the interest were unusually large, so that many of the members consider it one of the most successful and satisfactory meetings ever held in the church. A special vote of thanks was given to the pastor and the musicians, and before the meetings closed the church raised $340 which was applied on the expenses, leaving the church free from all debt. The church is planning to make repairs and redecorate the church building this summer.

A Revival of Protestant Work

By Oscar F. Felth

AFTER some forty odd years of history, the Swedish Baptist Church of Kansas City, Kans., has found it necessary to become more fully an American church. For some years we have beeen carrying on the dual program, one part English and the other part Swedish. Making this transition has been a difficult problem.

Last fall a survey of the neighborhood was made and it was found that very little Protestant work was being carried on in this community, most of the Protestant churches formerly located in this neighborhood having moved over the hill west. A campaign committee was appointed to direct the personal workers in home visitation.

Rev. Carl Bassett, of the department of evangelism of the Home Mission Society, was loaned to our church for a two weeks' period. His meeting, which closed Sunday, March 4, resulted in more than seventy conversions, more than fifty coming into the fellowship of our church. The result of this campaign means more to us than the listing of the number of conversions, for from this meeting we shall be enabled to serve the surrounding community more fully as an American church.

Our Opportunity

ONE of the rarest privileges on earth is the privilege of winning someone else for Jesus Christ and his church. This ought to be the privilege of every Christian. In the week between now and Easter people, young and old, will be thinking of the wisdom and need of confessing Christ. It will be a great opportunity for those who are Christians to use their influence to win others. If we are alert and prayerfully interested in the matter plenty of opportunities will present themselves. Will you not carefully think through your list of friends and those with whom you have influence and see if you should not dedicate yourself to winning some of them to open confession of Christ?

Catholic Convert Wins 103 Others to Christ

There can be found no stronger or saner argument for home and state missions among foreigners, the majority of whom are either Catholics or lean to the Catholic faith, than the following incident related by Rev. F. C. Flowers, superintendent of the Louisiana Baptist Orphans Home:

A friend of mine, who had been converted from the Catholic faith, and I were traveling together to a needy mission point to conduct a revival when the friend turned to me and said:

"The Lord is mighty good to me. I was a Catholic and knew nothing of the joys of real fellowship and service. The Baptist pastor preached a series of sermons on salvation, contrasting the Bible plan with the plans of my church. I wanted to accept the truth but I put it off until after the preacher had gone to another field. But after awhile, the Lord led me to trust him fully and I united with the Baptist church. Since I became a Christian I have had much joy in service."

And as our Ford chugged along the highway through the pine woods he added with a note of joy in his voice: "And do you know the Lord has richly blessed me during these few years of service? Just a day or two ago I led my hundred and second Catholic to the Savior."

A day or two afterwards he confided in me that this hundred and third convert had been won. That man has a passion for his brethren who are still in the darkness of Romanism. He knows they have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge. What a blessed thing it would be if we all had that determinate passion for the lost!

Gleanings

Twenty Baptist churches in Cleveland have been engaged in a simultaneous evangelistic campaign. It is too early to tabulate the results. Rev. E. S. Stucker and his singer, Foster Jones, assisted Pastor I. N. DePuy of the Lakewood Church. These workers are now with the First Church, Canton, Ohio, Rev. W. E. Bridges pastor.

* * *

Pastor Vanderhoof of Scottsdale, Ariz., reports nine additions to the church as a result of meetings in which he was assisted by Mr. Darnell.

* * *

Dr. Ray Palmer recently closed a series of special meetings in the Beaumont Church of Kansas City, Mo. The acting pastor, Rev. T. P. Stafford, reports that thirty-three members were received on experience, ten by letter and that there would be a number of persons baptized later. The meetings continued for three weeks.

* * *

In Arizona

Rev. Ramon N. Garcia, of Yuma Mexican Church, reports progress in his work. He has recently organized a woman's society with fifteen members, a B. Y. P. U. with twenty members and has several persons preparing for membership.

The meeting held with the Safford church, Pastor Beal of Tuscon preaching, resulted in eight additions, three by baptism, five by letter.

Pastor Tomlinson of Naco reports twenty professions of faith as a result of a meeting recently held in his church by Bro Clarence Hedrick, evangelist. Mr. Tomlinson is very much encouraged in his work.

* * *

On Jan. 25 the First Church, Sandusky, Ohio, closed a three weeks' campaign of evangelistic effort. Evangelist E. J. Rollings, of Detroit, Mich., brought the message each evening, assisted by Mrs. Dorothy Rollings, pianist and soloist. The last day of the campaign twenty young men and women came forward offering themselves for work for the Master. During the campaign husbands and wives came forward to accept Christ, and the pastor, F. A. Twining, has baptized twelve, while others are offering themselves for baptism.

* * *

Mr. John Imrie, singing evangelist, Topeka, Kan., is assisting in a pre-Easter evangelistic meeting with the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis. Dr. Garland, state secretary for Virginia, is preaching. The pastor is Mr. Coombs.

* * *

Prof. C. W. McKeever, N. Y., will be the soloist and song leader of The Geo. M. Hulme evangelistic party. Mr. McKeever, the son of a Baptist minister, has been widely identified with Sunday-school work, and is well known for his work among men. Miss Margaret Davis, the third member of the party, is principal at this time of the Central School, Barberton, O. A large tent 50 x 80 has been secured for summer work. The evangelists' address is 1063 La Croix Ave., Akron, Ohio.

The Open Forum

Questions and Answers

Has a person not professing Christianity an obligation to the church?

How can a Christian woman whose husband refuses to make her a financial allowance, tithe?

Has simultaneous music and prayer any value?

OBLIGATIONS OF NON-CHRISTIANS TO THE CHURCH

Their property is worth more for being near a church. They have a better society to live in because of the work of the church. The pastor is always ready to help them in time of trouble and to bury their dead. The church furnishes a Bible school where old and young learn the best things. The difference between our country and New Guinea is largely due to the work of the church. Hence the non-Christian is under obligations not only financially but in many other ways.

"HOW CAN THIS WOMAN TITHE?"

The woman mentioned would have a tithe of nothing. But she should pray in her closet for her husband until he is converted, or at least till he realizes that his wife should have equal control of property and income with himself. He has no more moral right to direct the use of the income than she has.

Tithing is best for most Christians, but there are some who ought not to give a tenth because of their heavy burdens and almost no income. On the other hand, in most cases a person having an income of $2,000 or more should give a fourth. Those who have should make up for those who have not.

SYNCHRONOUS PRAYER AND MUSIC

This is an abomination and should be abolished. Perhaps God can hear and some people may enjoy the music. But praying when the organ is playing is difficult and joining in the prayer practically impossible. Such prayers generally precede the offering and the most of such prayers are stale anyway. They attract neither God nor man.

Freeport, Ill. G. B. HOPKINS.

THE CHURCH AND TITHING

Since the church is the only organization in the world existing primarily for God's use, men owe to the church the same obligation they owe to God. Every blessing in life comes either directly through God's power or indirectly through the influence of the church, if the church fulfills the will of God. The difficulty lies in man's inability to realize how much he owes to God and the church—with all its faults.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof
The world, and they that dwell therein."

But as long as there are men who think they own the earth—and women, the Lord and women will be short financially.

When a woman is "equally yoked with an unbeliever" who "refuses financial allowance and opposes gifts to religious work," no one should expect her to tithe.

Tithing, fortunately, is only one phase of stewardship. Her "oil cruse" of higher gifts is replenished as fast as used. Should her husband object to the time given to religious work, she might break it to him gently that her soul he does not own and by letting her "light shine" at home as well as abroad, win at last the commendation, "she hath done what she could."

The earth gives up its moisture to the sun; it returns in the blessing of rain. In like manner our tithes and woman's freedom return to bless mankiind.

BERTHA F. EMERY.

Colorado Springs, Colo.

A CONCRETE CASE

Why not ask your unchurched neighbor what time, what money he would give to safeguard his child if in danger? This is what your church acting through its federation, is doing to protect that child.

Los Angeles California Voice of recent date, says:

Joe Fuski Deported.

Following the close of a redlight house in Sacramento on evidence of the State Law Enforcement League, Joe Fuski, king of the Sacramento tenderloin, was given a sentence in San Quentin on pandering. Following his conviction, the State Law Enforcement League preferred charges with the United States immigration authorities asking his deportation. He was deported on October 28, 1922."

The State Law Enforcement League came into being in 1917 when the Sacramento Church Federation, a local organization, could not solve a statewide problem. Your federation had, in 1914, been one of several organizations, had any one of which failed, the Redlight Abatement Act would not be a law today.

Your federation was the only one of these organizations that seemed to grasp that legislation alone is not sufficient. It knew that a law enforcement organization was necessary. Under the leadership of C. H. Dunn, S. Fraser Langford and Lynn Simpson, the latter then editor of the Union, it first undertook a survey of the brothels of Sacramento. In the struggles that followed it learned that the vice organization was statewide and that a statewide counter-organization was necessary for success. It called Senator Grant, author of the Grant Redlight Abatement Act, to its leadership. This organization, which grew out of the work of your church acting through your federation, has succeeded in putting teeth into the law.

The above constitutes a good argument why your unchurched friend should become a church member. Your church, your federation should have his support because it shields effectively your boy, your girl from the Joe Fuski's.

Who Is Lost?

THE BAPTIST of March 10 just at hand, and I have your front page on "Who Is Lost?" by Dr. Franklin W. Sweet. It seems to me that such an article needs considerable explanation.

How does Dr. Sweet arrive at his question of sonship? How is the brotherhood to be worked out as a part of the process of salvation? Where does the message of the cross stand in this interpretation of the word lost?

My people, six hundred strong, are sacrificially giving to the spread of the gospel throughout the world. They are loyally behind every movement fostered by our convention. We do not believe it is the time to sound uncertain notes on the front page of our paper.

We believe that if this interpretation of Dr. Sweet's of the word lost has any scriptural proof or vital connection that he should have made that connection clear. If it has not such a connection certainly it had no place on the front page of a Baptist paper.

We, of course, do not want to be unkind in our criticism, and we feel sure the paper will set these facts clearly before us.

Akron, Ohio. C. E. HAMRIC.

---

In recent weeks the American Express Company has booked a substantial number of additional reservations for Northern Baptists planning to attend the Baptist World Alliance meeting at Stockholm in July. On the Steamship "America," the official ship leaving New York June 30, reservations have been booked for Dr. G. A. Hagstrom of St. Paul; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Engelmohr of Pittsburgh; Miss Bertha Richardson of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Walters of Springfield; Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Swett of Boston; Dr. and Mrs. F. H. Stillwell of Cleveland; and Prof. and Mrs. Frederick L. Anderson of Newton Center. Among others sailing on the Steamship "Pittsburgh," June 19, are Mrs. W. H. Hartshorn and Mrs. Mary H. Dearing, of Boston. Inquiries are being received at both the Express Company's office and at the headquarters of the committee on Baptist World Alliance at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, from Baptists in all parts of the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, and many definite additional bookings will be registered within the next few weeks.

Religious Education

The Value of Teacher Training to the Church School

By Edward J. Bringstaff

The present day task of the church school requires that teacher training be made part of the regular curriculum. The church school is no longer a negligible factor of life. Those who would fit themselves for service in the church school must look into the history of the movement and view the task from the standpoint of solving the great problem of religious education.

The responsibility of carrying out the program of religious education rests upon the church school. The separation of church and state and the abolishing of the use of the Bible in the day school shifts the entire task to the church as the organized force for religion in the community. If the training of character, the inculcation of right precepts, the leading to right moral choices, the cultivation of a good conscience, the learning of the way of truth, reverence and holiness, in a word; if the fear of the Lord be indeed the beginning of wisdom, the foundation of all personal, commercial and national success and happiness, then the institution having so serious a work in hand deserves our serious consideration.

Can we strive for the attainment of these ideals in a half-hearted way, with inadequate forces? Let us bring the problem down to the individual church. Can we justify ourselves unless every effort has been made to carry to the pupil the message under the most favorable circumstances.

The church school when properly organized is a department of the church, not a separate body. This fact then shifts the responsibility from a few—the teachers and officers of the school—to the entire church. If the church as a whole cannot see the opportunity and adequately meet it, then the success of the church school is seriously hampered.

It is true that the courses in teacher training will be studied by only those who are officers and teachers or prospective teachers. The propaganda of spreading the modern requirements of the church school does not reach all who should know them. Sufficient literature is available and members of the church should acquaint themselves with the situation confronting the modern school of the church.

A school cannot be more seriously hampered than the school that has insufficient physical equipment. A great many schools have in a measure worked out some of the principles of the working organization such as trained teachers and officers, providing of proper lesson material and programs. But on the other hand, comparatively few school have realized that with proper equipment their work could be made doubly effective. They have not realized that unless pupils of the same tendencies and ages are grouped together by classes, the teacher's effectiveness is felt only in a measure. In a word, every school should be graded along constructive lines. Every department should be provided with assembly rooms and each class should meet in individual classrooms. Until these needs are taken care of, the school cannot expect to attain its greatest growth and efficiency. To put the situation in one sentence: a school of 300 cannot expect to operate in a plant which is suited for only 200.

This, to me, is the great problem that must be solved by our church. If the course which we have just completed has brought this problem home to every one who has been in these classes, then the time has beeen profitably spent and our church will benefit greatly in the next few years to come.

Kankakee, Ill.

Week-Day Religious Instruction for Neglected Children

In the typical American community less than half the children are enrolled in any school where they receive religious instruction. This failure to reach the children is the primary cause of spiritual illiteracy among adults. It leads directly to empty pews and a population which is largely unchurched. That this failure can be remedied is shown by the accomplishment of dozens of communities where week-day religious instruction has been introduced and developed into an efficient system.

Andover, N. Y., recently organized a week-day church school system. One hundred per cent of the pupils of the public schools are now enrolled in the week-day church schools and the average attendance is up to public school standards. Salina, Kan., put in operation a few months ago a week-day church school system wherein each church carries on week-day religious educational work, in most cases the week-day work being correlated with the other educational activities of the individual church. Two thousand one hundred children were enrolled within a few weeks and the number enrolled has steadily increased. The average attendance in the week-day church schools of Salina is over 90 per cent of the enrolment.

The week-day church school has shown its ability to reach practically all the pupils of the public schools when public school time for the church school classes is secured and the work is put under the care of trained teachers. It has also

(Continued on page 255)

International Sunday School Lesson for April 8

ABRAHAM THE HERO OF FAITH

Lesson: Gen. 12: 1-5; Hebrews 11: 8-10, 17-19
Golden Text: Romans 4:3

Introductory

This is the first of a series of Hebrew biographies to extend over the rest of the quarter's lessons. There is no better way of knowing a people or the trend of the times than by becoming familiar with the lives of outstanding characters. The extract from the life of Abraham as given in the lesson verses is a mere sidelight on this great Hebrew leader. To get his biography, Genesis from the twelfth to the twenty-fifth chapter should be read. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is like a great searchlight thrown back two thousand years upon the man of faith.

Lesson

"Jehovah said unto Abram"—In the first part of Genesis through the seventh chapter he is called by this name; thereafter, Abraham, meaning father of a multitude. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will show thee," was the command of Jehovah. At this time there was a trend of emigration westward, motivated by desire for greater territory, or by fear of an enemy behind them. Abraham's migration was at the command of Jehovah. He was then seventy-five years old. With him went Sarai, his wife, and Lot, his brother's son, and all of his slaves, dependents and possessions. "They went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came." With the command of Jehovah went a promise: "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." It requires faith to pull up stakes and go out into a new country not knowing whither one goest. But "by faith Abraham became a sojourner in the land of promise, as in a land not his own, dwelling in tents . . . . for he looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God." The greatest trial of Abraham's faith came, no doubt, in the offering up of Isaac.

Thought Provokers.

Does God still speak to men as he did to Abraham? What is faith? How is faith exercised? How is it strengthened? Is there a difference between belief and faith? Has Abraham been a blessing to "all the families of the earth?"

"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."—Jesus.

The Chimney Corner

Numol Swallows the Golden Text

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

THE father of Numol suddenly had a very bright idea. There was an errand he ought to attend to in a certain village far over the hills, but the sun was hot and he knew how it would beat down upon his turban, almost blinding him with its dazzling heat; he could not help thinking how much more delightful it would be to stay home and sit all day long under the shady eaves of his own roof. "Well!" he suddenly exclaimed to himself, "why not send Numol?" Which was, of course, the very thing to do; so you are to picture the young and brown-skinned Numol trudging wearily along that sun-scorched roadway, wondering if he would ever reach the Village of Bleached Skulls—a curious name for a town, by the way, but surely it suggests to you a little of the primitive wildness of the heathen men who built its mud huts and lived in constant superstition.

Numol kept saying to himself: "Poor me, for the walking back in tomorrow's sun will be even worse than this, for there will be four heavy jars to carry, if my errand is successful."

Finally, after hours of walking, the thatched roofs of the little village came in full view, and Numol began inquiring for the man he was to see. It was then he discovered that every one was standing on tiptoe under the shadow of a great, spreading tree, listening to somebody talking. He prowled around the outskirts of the crowd, but could hear nothing, so he wriggled and elbowed his way until he was near enough to see—and behold, it was a white woman with curious tight things strapped around her feet, and even more curious things buttoned around her waist. For a long while he looked and looked, without listening to a word, for she was so unusual that he gasped for breath at each new discovery. There was, for instance, the absurdity of round pieces of glass fastened on her nose and extending across both her eyes! Why, oh why, did she want to look through things like that all day? The other brown people were as astonished as he, and would continually interrupt the lady to ask whether she had a husband, why she wore such peculiar clothes, and how her skin became so white. For it is a fact that none of them had ever seen a white person before. She evidently did not like these interruptions, for she was telling stories about somebody named Jesus—oh, a fine man, as one could plainly see from her stories.

The headman of the village grew so enthusiastic that he finally called out that he would be glad to welcome this Jesus to their village any time he chose to visit them; that he could occupy the finest hut; and he personally would give him all the chickens he cared to eat, and would see that no one hurt him. But the lady explained more carefully that Jesus was no longer living among men, yet he was able in his own silent way to enter into every heathen heart and live there. All over again she told about Christianity; then, closing her eyes, she prayed aloud that the Lord Jesus would come into everybody's heart right then. It was very surprising, and the poor lady hardly had time to eat, because people had so many questions. Numol had his question, too; he pushed himself close up beside her and said: "I don't live in this village, so wouldn't it be better for you to tell this Jesus not to come into me? He might not like being carried away from here into my town over the hills."

"Oh, but he would love it," she said eagerly; "not only to go to your village, but into the next one beyond that, and the next beyond that, then on and on until everybody everywhere has him in their hearts. And the next time I can come up to these hills again I will surely visit you, Numol!"

It was a bitter disappointment that she had to leave, but she said this was her vacation time and she was spending the whole month telling one new village every day the message of the Lord Jesus. (A strenuous vacation, as you plainly can see, surrounded by eager people every minute of every day!)

LITTLE Lamb, who made thee?
Dost thou know who made thee?
Gave thee Life, and bid thee feed,
By the stream and o'er the mead;
Gave thee clothing of delight,
Softest clothing, woolly, bright;
Gave thee such a tender voice,
Making all the vales rejoice?
Little Lamb, who made thee?
Dost thou know who made thee?
Little Lamb I'll tell thee,
Little Lamb, I'll tell thee:
He is called by thy name,
For he calls himself a Lamb.
He is meek, and he is mild;
He became a little child.
I a child, and thou a lamb,
We are called by his name.
Little Lamb, God bless thee!
Little Lamb, God bless thee!

—WILLIAM BLAKE.

As she was leaving the Village of Bleached Skulls she gave every one a tiny picture-card with something called a golden text printed on it. Then, because nobody knew how to read, she had the entire crowd of men, women and children repeat the verse over and over: "And Jesus said, Behold I stand at the door and knock." Just before her bullock-cart drove away she called to Numol. "Remember, I am counting on you to carry this good news to the people in your village."

"I will!" promised Numol proudly, clutching her little card in his brown hand, determined not to let go of it. But later on, when he saw the four heavy jars he was to take back to his father he knew his hands would be more than full, and he wondered where to carry the card most safely. So he swallowed it! Then with two poles over his shoulders, and a jar balancing at the end of each pole, he started his weary walk home.

It must be admitted that his father was exceedingly sceptical about his news. But Numol taught him the golden text, and his father could not resist telling the strange story to the men neighbors, and you may be sure his mother whispered it to the women neighbors, until all over town people were repeating that Bible verse: "And Jesus said, Behold I stand at the door and knock."

It seemed mysterious to everybody, and Numol was continually being questioned: "Now, at whose door will this Lord Jesus knock first?"

"At our door, of course," boasted Numol's father proudly. "Isn't Numol his own messenger?"

"No, no!" said Numol modestly. "I'm sure the lady said he would come knocking at everybody's door to look inside everybody's heart and see who is most ready to have him for a guest. We'd better always be ready, that's all I really remember. I—I didn't dream it would matter to you all so much."

But it did matter, and neighbor would ask neighbor: "Have you had an unseen knocking at your door?"

"No," said one old woman, "but there were footprints in the smooth, dry dust outside my door this morning, so I'm wondering if he came and passed by."

"Oh, that stupid little Numol, to have remembered so little!" cried another.

And they puzzled their brown heads, planning strange devices to win the Lord Jesus to choose them. One family kept a little bowl of rice outside the door, while another family had a jar of water on the threshold for the Lord Jesus in case he arrived thirsty. As for Numol, he did what the white lady had done—he closed his eyes and prayed to that unknown Somebody Somewhere: "Oh, do please send the Lord Jesus to our village today." And the people wagged their heads approvingly. "It is right that Numol should do that, for did he not swallow the message?"

Moons waxed, and moons waned, until one day a bullock-cart came creaking down the roadway, and every one cried: "Look! Look! It is Numol's white lady!"

It was, of course. And, oh, the questions they asked her, the eagerness they showed. Everybody talked at once! Holding up her hands for silence, she said: "See, I have brought you copies of the Bible, which tells this whole story of Jesus from beginning to end. Which man of your village can be your reader?"

"Alas!" they sighed, "not one of us can read."

"Then some one must be taught," she replied. "Now who shall it be? Who will be quickest at learning the hooks and curves of reading? I will teach him down at my school in the valley. Who will you send?"

Oh, such shouting: "Numol!" "Send Numol!" "He is bright!" "He's swallowed part of that book already, so surely he is a little prepared to learn!"

That was several years ago, and every vacation time Numol goes back to his village in the hills and reads the Bible to those in his village, so that when a missionary finally went there to live he found a little thatched church, a regular copy of the one down in the valley; there were men called deacons and even a Sunday-school superintendent—Numol, himself, standing at the pulpit his own father had carved, reading the Bible. And this is what Numol was reading: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall never pass away."

The Young Reserves

The Boy Who Wore Skirts for One Day

IN fairy tales it is always a wicked witch who casts some unpleasant spell lasting a day or a week or a year; but you must not suppose that any such thing had happened to Ted. It began at breakfast one Saturday morning when he was grumbling about all he had to do before supper. Snow to shovel, ashes to take out of the furnace, wood to chop, "and everything," he added, with a much overworked air, "girls certainly have an easy life."

"But you get paid for it," his uncle said, "and as a matter of fact, I consider that Trixie really has a far harder set of tasks than yours."

"Trixie?" Ted asked. Then he threw his head back and laughed. "Why all Trixie has to do is to make the beds and—"

"Look here," said his uncle, "I dare you to change places with Trixie for one day. Wear skirts and be a dutiful daughter. How about it?"

"Skirts?" groaned Ted. "Will Trixie do my work?"

"Oh, it will be fun to change jobs," Trixie cried—for snow is really rather interesting to shovel (just once!) and ashes aren't really so hard to remove from furnaces (just once!). She thought that it was going to be quite a lark to be the son of the house for one day, although it must be confessed that when it came to chopping wood she began to have her doubts.

"But I will only cross one bridge at a time," she said to herself very sensibly, as she started to shovel the walks.

Meanwhile, you will be interested in poor Ted. He put on a short, old blue skirt and an apron.

"What first?" he inquired.

"Beds," said his mother.

Now nothing looks quite so simple as bed-making. There lie the covers hanging over the foot of the bed, and all that needs to be done is to spread them smoothly over the mattress, tucking in the ends. With a vigorous swish, the boy-who-wore-skirts tossed sheet, blankets and counterpane over the bed and smoothed the top layer. But there seemed to be ridges underneath. He pulled the covers toward him gently, one at a time; ah, yes, now they were smoother. He tucked them in, thinking: "This is easy, when you once get the knack of it." But would you believe it? When he reached the other side of the bed there were no left-over ends to be tucked in. He had pulled them all over too far in that gentle but foolish shifting of his. He had to do everything from the beginning.

"This is a perfectly hateful old job," he growled, as he patted the sheet in place, then blanket number one, blanket number two, and so forth. At last the first bed was made, but even Ted had to admit that it looked like a relief map of the Alps, for there were curious ridges and peaks and valleys which never were noticeable when Trixie made the beds. With an exasperated sigh he began on the second bed. He knew enough to do it slowly this time, but even with care there were ridges and valleys. By the time the fourth bed was made, Ted was wishing that he had kept to shoveling snow!

"What next?" he inquired solemnly.

"Carpet sweeper on the rugs," his mother answered.

You should have seen him! And you should have heard him—crash! bang! he went against the chair legs and the table legs.

"You must be more careful than that," his mother warned him, "you are scarring the furniture, Ted."

He ran the sweeper very slowly after that, of course; but when he reached his own room he began wishing that he had been a little less careless in sharpening his pencils all over the carpet and in dropping everything from paper to twine all over the floor.

"The sweeping's done," he called. "What now?"

"Dusting," his mother smiled, and gave him a piece of cheesecloth. "I hope you will not knock anything over," she could not resist adding.

There never was a job so provoking. Every knob of the dark bureaus had its little layer of dust. Chairs seemed made especially for the purpose of having arms to catch the dust, crosspieces to catch the dust, spindles to catch the dust.

"I'll have rush of blood to the head," he groaned after chair number eight was dusted. Houses seemed made of chairs! And tables! and bookcases! and mantelpieces with dozens of breakable vases.

"I would rather take the ashes out of the furnace any day," he grumbled. "And now what?"

"The silver needs cleaning," his mother replied, handing him knives, forks and spoons and a jar of white paste.

"It looks clean enough to me," Ted answered, but he was amazed to discover how much black came off on the cloth when he rubbed it. Then: "Forks have too many tines, mother! Do I have to clean between them?"

"Indeed, you do!"

"Oh, I would rather chop wood," sighed this boy-who-wore-skirts.

Indeed, I think that you probably have guessed the end of this little story: for by the time Ted had set the table for luncheon, made a cake (?) and washed the luncheon dishes, he was really a tired, discouraged boy.

"Trixie," he said, with brotherly generosity, "you are a wonder! You do all these things in one Saturday morning and think nothing of it. I guess it would do all men good to wear skirts for one day!"

His uncle laughed heartily: "Ted," he said, "when I was your age my mother made me wear skirts for one day, too; ever since then I have appreciated what mothers and sisters do for us."

"Oh, I should say so!" gasped Ted. "I'm glad I was born a boy."

But Trixie smiled: "Isn't it funny, but I like my jobs?"

---

Answers to "The Age of India"

(Given last week.)

1, village; 2, tillage; 3, image; 4, marriage; 5, plumage; 6, dotage; 7, courage; 8, bondage; 9, pillage; 10, parsonage.

---

The head of the University Medical School at Sendai, Japan, has asked our missionaries to teach Christianity to the nurses in the university hospital, for in his opinion "Christian nurses are much kinder and better than non-Christian ones." Fifty to one hundred nurses attend the devotional meeting which is held Sunday afternoon.

Young People's Work

Topic for April 8

WHAT ARE WISE AND UNWISE USES OF THE LORD'S DAY?
Isa. 58:8-14; Ps. 118:24.

By Smith Thomas Ford

Whose day, did we say? The Lord's Day. Is it his by dedication or command? The answer to these question determines the spirit and method of conduct. If it is his day, he and not we must indicate its use Settle these questions, and we have gone far in determining the proper uses to which it can be put. Is it merely a social and economic period of time recognized by law and custom with no higher origin than a utilitarian convenience? Has it no higher sanction than that such a day of abstention from arduous toil makes for health and happiness, or has its institution a divine origin that lifts its observance into a realm whose obligations are spiritual and religious.

If it is a day instituted by superstition, then its observance is an insult to intelligence. If it has no other sanction than law and custom, then both law and custom may demand its abolishment when convenience and pleasure suggest.

The right or wrong use of the Lord's day must be determined by these propositions. If it is justly recognized as a religious day, sanctioned by law and custom, then any work, play or pastime which degrades it is wrong. If it has a religious origin, then it can demand that reverence, worship and cessation from ordinary occupations are justified to the extent to which religion is justified.

Beyond securing to the individual and to society the right to observe the day as conscience dictates, and beyond securing to the public an orderly administration of its affairs, secular laws should be enacted with the greatest caution and seldom applied to regulate conduct on the Lord's Day; but divine authority and religious convictions should control the use we make of its sacred hours.

No hard and fast rules should be imposed that rob us of our liberty or thrust us into straight-jackets; but, on the other hand, no love of gain or love of pleasure should modify that reverent recognition of its sacredness which the fear of God would suggest. It is never right to do that which dishonors God or demoralizes the soul; it is never wrong to do that which promotes public good and safeguards the moral life of the individual. Its observance as a day with sacred and divine obligations must be governed by our recognition of God's place in life's details. I recognize the difficulty of imposing a code of conduct on a person who acknowledges no higher standard of life than that suggested by custom or convenience, and to such the observance of the day can have no higher appeal than a decent regard for the convenience and convictions of others; therefore, I believe the right and wrong use of the Lord's Day must be determined by our religious convictions.

Observation and experience bear testimony to the moral and social elevation of a people who recognize its sanctity. The Lord's Day has been associated with worship, rest and spiritual culture since history began. It may have been called Sabbath, Sunday, or Lord's Day, but under whatever name, its deep significance has not been underestimated. Not grudgingly nor of necessity should we yield ourselves to its hallowed influences, but with soulful regard for God's commands, and our spiritual enlightenment, we should make conspicuous in our lives such uses of the day as will honor its Founder and glorify our faith.

B. Y. P. U. European Extension Fund

The numerous requests from Baptist groups in Europe for information about our young people's work and for our help and cooperation indicates a growing Baptist world consciousness and a desire for a larger fellowship on the part of our brethren across the sea. They indicate, also, an unparalleled opportunity for service for our organization. After inspiring consideration, our board of managers unanimously voted to lend the support of our organization in encouraging and counselling young people's work in the countries that have already requested cooperation with us, to raise a

"B. Y. P. U. European Extension Fund"

of at least $2,000, which action has been approved by the administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion. A committee consisting of Messrs. Herbert Hines of Illinois, John R. Glading of Michigan, and G. Ford Porter of Indiana, was appointed to raise this fund by a special appeal to the local B. Y. P. U.'s and by private subscription. The committee desires all locals to take, for this purpose, a special collection equal to about 10 cents per active member and send it to

Rev. Herbert Hines,
Kankakee, Illinois.

Acknowledgement of all subscriptions will be made in the order received on the Young People's Page of "The Baptist." Will your society be among the first to make this small contribution for B. Y. P. U. missionary work? Send cash now or pledge payable on or before May 1, 1923. DO IT NOW as the time is short.

Reduced Railroad Rates

We have been notified by the New England Passenger Association that reduced rates have been granted for the Boston Convention on the identification certificate plan. For the New England Association, going tickets will be on sale June 30—July 6, with a final return limit to original starting point July 13.

Dates of sale in the other passenger associations will be announced upon receipt of notification from said associations.

Identification certificates may be secured from state or provincial transportation leaders, list of which follows, or from James Asa White, general secretary, 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Transportation Leaders

Arizona—Wm. Goodman, University Station, Tucson.

California—Harold Langdon, 519 Jones St., Oakland (North).

Colorado—W. F. Ripley, 512 Exchange Bldg., Denver.

D. C.—John Ruthven, 2-5 Center Market, Washington, D. C.

Idaho—Herman F. Crowther, Nampa.

Illinois—Judson S. Tyley, 6463 Kenwood Ave., Chicago.

Indiana—Rev. J. R. Quick, 1048 River Ave., Indianapolis.

Iowa—Dr. Merrill Myers, Iowa Bldg., Des Moines.

Kansas—A. W. Briggs, 406 Metropolitan Ave., Kansas City, Kans.

Michigan—John R. Glading, 723 Detroit Savings Bank Bldg., Detroit.

Minnesota—Walter L. Wood, 998 Grand Ave., St. Paul.

Nevada—H. S. Foote, Sparks.

New Hampshire—Paul Covey, 564 North River Road, Manchester.

New York—L. R. Cooper, 385 7th Ave. Brooklyn; Gilbert L. Bigger, 385 Pulaski St. Brooklyn.

Pennsylvania—A. G. Charles, 715 Columbia Ave., Lancaster.

Rhode Island—Herbert C. Lottsfeldt, 149 Mercer Ave., E. Providence.

South Dakota—Jos. M. Smith, Brookings.

Wisconsin—C. A. Boyd, 1717 Wells St., Milwaukee.

Wyoming—W. F. Ripley, 512 Exchange Bldg., Denver Colo.

Toronto—Walt L. Rice, 289 Broadview Ave., Toronto, Ont.

Ont. & Que.—Thomas Riches, 114 Gladstone Ave., Hamilton, Ont.

Maritime Prov.—Rev. Waldo C. Machum, Fredericton, N. B.

Massachusetts—F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston.

Special

The address on evangelism at the Boston convention will be delivered by Dr. Samuel Judson Porter, pastor of the First Church, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Our Own Folks

Address at the Funeral of Robert Stuart MacArthur

By Rev. Charles Frederick Goss

Those of us whose vocation it is to bury the dead find ourselves confronted by various situations. At one time, we must perform a funeral service for a man or woman, whose utter insignificance or wickedness are so well known that silence is our duty; at another for a person whose life was a complex blend of good and evil elements, where we have to select a gold or silver thread from the mysterious warp or woof and in obedience to the ancient proverb, "Speak well of the dead;" at still another, we encounter a character so pure and noble that emotions gush from our hearts and eulogies from our lips, by a natural and irrepressible impulse. Such is the experience of this day. The distinguished honor of giving public expression to the universal reverence for the character of Doctor MacArthur has fallen to my lot and it will not be easy to restrain my feelings, or my words.

I shall speak as simply and briefly as I can, but must warn you that there will be no strain of melancholy in my speech, no wail of sorrow and no lamentation. When such a mariner as he puts out to sea, there should be "no moaning at the bar." This brave old soldier has "fought a good fight, has kept his faith and gone home to receive his crown." My song of praise shall not prove a threnody, or be accompanied by the flute or harp, the sackbut or the psaltery, but by the cornet and the trumpet.

A Lover of Life

I shall limit myself to a description of Doctor MacArthur's character rather than his deeds, and to only four of those innumerable traits which made him illustrious in the eyes of all who knew him.

In the first place, he was a lover of life. In an age of cynicism, when so many are surfeited, bored and ennuied by existence, it is almost startling to see a man of three score years and ten enjoying existence as does a little child or growing youth. To see the seasons come and go; to hear the songs of birds and laughter of children; to eat or sleep; to work or play; to stay at home or travel; to watch events, or to take his share in the affairs of daily life; to breathe the air of heaven—to live was joy to him. Life was the gift of God! Life was a golden opportunity! Life was a mission! "Life was good, but not in itself." It was good because he made it good, and so it became a genuine beatitude.

In the second place, Doctor MacArthur was a lover of people. As men grow old, they are not unlikely to become critical and satirical. "The more I see of people, the fonder I become of dogs," is the bitter cry of many an aging heart. It was not so with our noble friend. It was with him, as Jean Paul Richter, "When I am tempted to scorn my fellow men, I have only to look a little more closely into the countenance of any one I meet upon the street, to be moved to wonder and compassion."

Doctor MacArthur was deeply moved by a single, individual soul. He was more deeply moved by people in the mass. When he faced a crowd of mortal men and women he was thrilled. They gave up to him some mysterious contribution of emotion, as the ocean gives up to the sky its vapors, which he sent back to them in words of inspiration, as the sky sends back those vapors in abundant showers of rain. Doctor MacArthur loved us even when we were not lovely, because he saw in every one of us a child of God.

In the third place, Doctor MacArthur was a lover of the organized institutions of human society. His soul was moved to awe, by law and order. He believed "Order was heaven's first law." If he abhorred anything, it was anarchy, lawlessness, mobocracy. He believed that human life should roll toward the eternal seas, not like a broad and shallow river which overflows and desolates its banks, but like a rushing torrent in a mountain region, restrained by irremovable barriers, of truth upon the one side and law upon the other.

For this reason he loved the church of Jesus Christ, and all the institutions of benevolence, education, religion and the state. He was a passionate lover of civilization and of good government. Doctor MacArthur was a patriot. He loved his country with a passion. He was born in Canada and he loved his native land. He became an American, and he loved his adopted country more. Its institutions of liberty and of justice appealed to the highest that was in him. You had but to utter the names of such great citizens as Washington and Lincoln, or point to the stars and stripes, to see his soul on fire, and to hear him describe the joys of existence in this free country, or appeal to an audience for their loyalty, was an experience never to be forgotten.

In the fourth place, Doctor MacArthur was a lover of God. There have been; there are, and always will be, "God-intoxicated men"—men and women who feel the presence of the infinite, eternal, omnipotent and omniscient Creator, as others feel the heat or cold, who perceive him as clearly as they see the ocean or the sky. "They hear him not, they see him not, yet know that he is nigh."

A Seer

Doctor MacArthur was one of that wondrous band of seers. He seemed to be as conscious of the Divine Being as of himself, a being whom he adored and served with all his body, mind and spirit. All the material forms of nature, and all the immaterial manifestation of the spirit that as in man revealed that God. But it was in the character of Jesus Christ that, to him, this revelation was completed. To that sublime, unselfish, adorable being, the Son of the Everlasting Father, he gave himself in a consecration of all his powers. In what life was he saw what God must be, and year by year became transformed into his likeness, so that his last days were his best days and his loveliest, so that he was more Christlike, more charitable, and more spiritually minded, every day, until the last one came.

He was, and everybody felt it, "a man of God." At the termination of their hunt, young Saul and his servant came in sight of a certain city. "There is in that city," Saul said suddenly, "a man of God and he is a man held in honor."

A man of God has dwelt in our city, and he, too, is "held in honor."

It is at this point that I must terminate my tribute, a tribute poor and most inadequate. If my friend could hear me, I should apologize to him; not, indeed, because I have uttered all I feel; but because God has not bestowed upon me the power to utter what I feel. He has not, however, withheld from me the power to feel deeply the beauties of man's nature, clouded as it is by human faults. I deeply feel the beauty of the nature of a little child, of growing youths, of the middle-aged who bear the burden and the heat of the working day; but with advancing years I feel more deeply, still, the beauty of old age, when chastened and ennobled by the discipline of life. The feeling of admiration which I felt for Doctor MacArthur's cheerful and even joyous old age, was profound. His life and his character were a challenge to us all. To have seen his devotion to God, his love of service, his purity of heart, his belief that "the best is yet to be" and, yet, continue to pursue a career of meanness, of vice, or even pettiness, would disgrace the soul of any one. We must all be better, because he was good.

Died with the Armor on

I have spoken of his life. I will close by speaking of his death. He died with his armor on! He died in peace. He died in hope. He died in the belief of the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

It was a beautiful death, quiet, speedy and majestic. To hear about it, is to be reminded of that last great scene in the life of the prophet Elijah, when the gates of heaven opened and the chariot of fire descended; when the aged hero of so many illustrious victories over the world, the flesh and the devil ascended into that blazing car and was borne aloft into the sky, leaving his heart-broken companions to cry out in agony and wonder, "My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof."

Retiring Pension Fund Thoroughly Established

The central question concerning any pension plan has to do with its financial soundness. It is because of a failure to recognize this essential element that many of the plans for pensioning teachers and others have been failures or worse. The following excerpts voluntarily made by the actuary of the ministers' and missionaries' benefit board in his annual report for the year ending Dec. 31, 1922, will be of special interest to all who are interested in the problem of provision for our ministers and missionaries.

"Interest in the affairs of the retiring pension fund when once it is established centers primarily in its financial condition. History affords numerous examples of failures of pension systems due to the fact that the great conceptions of men for the purpose of rendering assistance to others less fortunate have not in many cases involved a financial stability commensurate with the conception. Time passes and the measure of future responsibilities becomes less and less adequate until the pension plan fails and those who once anticipated benefits in old age receive either nothing or only a small percentage of those anticipated benefits. I am confident that the bases which the board has so wisely approved will stand the test of time. The retiring pension fund is firmly established and its members are adequately protected.

"Probably the best way to show the development of the membership is by the membership schedule which follows. An examination of the results set forth therein shows a wonderful progress since Jan. 1, 1921. During that two-year period the membership has increased five and a half times, while the aggregate salaries, expected pensions, and current dues approximately six times. This is, indeed, a healthy growth and demonstrates beyond doubt that the retiring pension fund is thoroughly established. The membership trebled in 1921 and more than doubled during 1922.

"The average salary of the members in 1922 was $2,372."

A Ninety-Five-Year Old Worker

Mrs. Elizabeth Price is the oldest member of the First Baptist Church of Springfield, Ohio, and is in her ninety-fifth year.

She has been a subscriber to the Journal and Messenger and to THE BAPTIST for fifty-five years and has a keen interest in all church and missionary work. During the last three years she has cut and arranged for sewing, 16,000 three-inch squares of patchwork, which have been sent to our missionaries in various parts of the world for use in their industrial schools. She says she would rather do this work than to eat her meals.

Doctor Conwell Receives Bok Award

On March 7, Russell H. Conwell received the annual Bok award of $10,000 which is given to that citizen of Philadelphia who, in the judgment of the committee, has given the greatest service to the city. At the presentation of the award the academy was crowded to the doors. Seven hundred students of Temple University were present in a block to see their president honored. Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot gave addresses. Last year the award was given to Dr. Stokowski, leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The Public Ledger comments on the award as follows:

"The Philadelphia Award was not given to the teacher or the scholar or the minister or the lecturer, but to the man of heart who has been all of these things and more; to one who found happiness as the bearer of others' burdens, who was most at peace when he moved in humble ways among humble people, helping boys and girls and young men and women to a better place and better opportunities in life.

"It is hard to tell what quality of spirit a man must have to find contentment in poverty and reward for a life of hard labor in the friendship of the poor. Whatever that quality is Dr. Conwell has it. His great talents are incidental things. Certainly he has done more than enough to deserve the Philadelphia Award and the honors that go with it. His life has been a challenge to all selfish people, an example to hurried, disconsolate folk who look for happiness in the wrong places, and something of a blessing to multitudes of the city's youth whom he has patiently helped over places which otherwise would have been for them intolerably hard."

D. A. Wilson, Missionary

Rev. D. A. Wilson, of Managua, Nicaragua, C. A., after a long life of devotion and self-sacrificing service in Latin America, passed away on Feb. 24.

As a faithful missionary of the Home Mission Society in Mexico, Cuba, and Nicaragua, Mr. Wilson, for almost a quarter of a century with only one slight period of relaxation, laid strong missionary foundations and built an enduring superstructure. During this period he labored fifteen years in Cuba and five years in Nicaragua. As a thoughful and loving pastor, a patient teacher and a tender and illuminating preacher, he built the truth of Christ deeply into personal, family and institutional life wherever he lived. One of his last great pieces of work was the purchase for the Home Mission Society of grounds and a building in Managua, made possible by income from special gifts. By next fall this building will be opened as a missionary school for boys.

During all his years of service, Mrs. Wilson labored with him in the gospel, shared his privations, and made their home an attractive Christian magnet to draw the people closely together.

Thanks from Swatow!

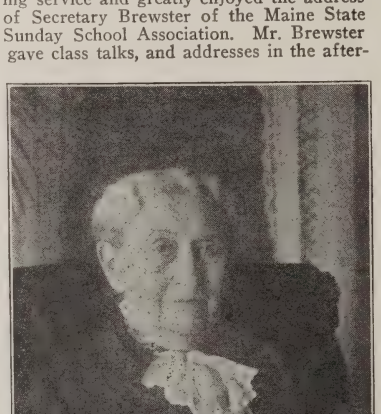
"Again and again we realize as we look over the day's or work's work, there are experiences through which we have passed that never could have endured, humanly speaking had it not been for the strength and power that has been given us as we feel in answer to prayers of those in the homeland. I thank our intercessors through you for their share in the work this term in our own school.

"The relief work in the distressed districts is continuing, but our special representatives feel that they will soon have to stop because of lack of funds, although, many are still in great need and suffering. Extend our hearty appreciation to all who have helped to relieve in this time of need because in so many places it has been the opening door into the barred hearts and many are listening with interest to the gospel story as they never did before."

The above is extracted from a communication received from Mabelle R. Culley, Swatow, South China, dated January 20, 1923.



We urge all Baptists everywhere to continue in prayer for the great work our missionaries are carrying on during this time of need among the typhoon sufferers.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

WASHBURN: Rally Day in the Sunday school saw the attainment of the goal for attendance set several weeks ago, 275. The junior boys, Mrs. Wilder's department, fifty-one strong, sat on the platform at the morning service and greatly enjoyed the address of Secretary Brewster of the Maine State Sunday School Association. Mr. Brewster gave class talks, and addresses in the afternoon and evening. Practical steps are being taken to enlarge the quarters and the equipment of the Sunday school. Pastor B. H. Thomas is doing constructive work. He cares also for an out-station at Everett. To his aid come Rev. C. W. Walden and daughter for evangelistic services for two weeks.

MRS. ELIZABETH PRICE

PRESQUE ISLE: Rarely does the promotion director meet such a congregation as he found in Pastor Ranger's church Sunday morning. The church and side vestries were full. The Sunday school is carefully graded, and fills every one of the many class rooms in the church building. The future of the church seems assured.

BLUEHILL: Pastor W. I. Robison has had the assistance of Evangelist Harry Taylor and his daughter, Ruth, in a series of special meetings for three weeks. The meetings were full of joy and power. Many decisions for Christ were made and there will be a large addition to the church in the spring. The steady work of Pastor Robison is of such a character as to make possible such results from special effort.

OCEAN PARK: The Baptists of New England, and especially of Maine, have, in Ocean Park, not merely an ideal playground and vacation center, but the best possible location for summer school work. The enrolment last year in the school of methods was 848. The young people who gathered there and received the instruction and inspiration of some of the leading teachers in New England, carried the message and the uplift to a very large number of our Maine churches and Sunday schools. Ocean Park may be of untold advantage to the Baptist young people of New England. A tract of land of thirty-five acres has been purchased which will allow for the normal expansion of the Ocean Park work. A campaign to raise $20,000 for advance work is now on hand and should have the hearty support of those who believe in the future and in our Baptist young people, who will largely determine its character.

HEBRON ACADEMY: Rev. A. E. Kingsley, who is pastor both of the Hebron church and the Academy, has been giving a series of sermons on the death of Christ in its relation to modern conditions and needs. The series has beeen highly appreciated.

FOR MANY SUCCESSFUL YEARS Mrs. Rufus Lamson of Portland was the director for the Women's Home Mission Society in Maine. Ill health compelled her resignation a few months ago. In order to facilitate work in the broad territory of Maine, an eastern and a western division has now been created. Mrs. A. B. Lorimer of Woodfords, has been appointed director for the western district, and Mrs. H. I. Hix of Rockland for the eastern district. The Kennebec river is the dividing line between the two.

FIRST CHURCH, SANFORD: Pastor Hardy has entered upon his eighth year of service, and reports the closing of a prosperous year. The Sunday school has taken on new life and promises to become one of the standard schools of the state.

THE QUARTERLY MEETING of the South Aroostock Association was held with the United Baptist Church of Houlton, March 6. The reports from the churches indicated real progress especially in Sunday school work. "The Bigger and Better Sunday School" was presented by Rev. H. C. Speed; Rev. A. O. Thomas gave an address on "Religion in the Home;" Mr. A. W. Knox, a business man, on "Religion in Business;" Principal E. H. Stover of Ricker Institute, on "Religion in School Life;" Rev. W. P. Richardson on "Religion in Personal Life." In the evening Dr. Whittemore spoke on "World Victories of Christ." In the evening a musical program was given. Rev. F. C. Hartley and his people gave a cordial welcome.

Student Volunteer Union

The annual conference of the student volunteers was held at Waterville, Colby College, March 9-11. Over fifty delegates from Bates, Bowdoin, Colby, University of Maine, Bangor Theological Seminary, and New Hampshire, were present. Two and a half days were spent in conference sessions, fellowship, listening to addresses of instruction and inspiration from those who had had long experience on foreign fields, and in new consecration to the work before.

The spirit and consecration of these young people is evidence of the living power of Christianity and holds promise for its increasing victory.

Dr. George H. Hamlen, many years missionary at Balasore, India, and Dr. Longwell of Assam, were among the leading speakers from missionary fields.

MASSACHUSETTS

DR. JOHN M. ENGLISH, emeritus professor of homiletics at Newton, has been giving the first three lectures on practical Christian ministry at the institution. These lectures are on the foundation established by the alumni in honor of Professor English's long and valuable service in the chair of homiletics. The fund totals $10,000. Professor English spoke on the "Pastoral Ministry" under three sub-topics: 1, Pastoral Preaching; 2, Pastoral Superintending; 3, Pastoral Equipment.

OUR MINISTERS' CONFERENCE at Boston has been having a hiatus—losing itself in general meetings on general topics, gathered in the Park Street Church. These too-frequent breaks affect our continuity, and many question whether the gain exceeds the loss. Some of the conferences decline to be side-tracked.

PRESIDENT GEO. E. HORR of Newton has been preaching at Bates College. He is a welcome visitor, especially to the Baptist institutions, and always gives the students weighty and inspiring messages.

DR. ROBERT L. WEBB, First Church, Dorchester, taking advantage of the prevailing interest in Egyptian excavations, has been giving evening sermons on "Egypt, the Mysterious." He makes them instructive and illustrative, and envelops them in the gospel message.

PASTOR DENTON J. NEILY, First Church, Medford, has given evening messages on "Building an Ideal Home." He enlists his young people in supporting and inspiring choruses, and the people are responding in large congregations.

DR. A. K. DE BLOIS, First Church, Boston, has returned in freshened vigor after a respite in Florida. The work at the First Church, so many-sided, is taxing to a leader's endurance, and easily tempts to overdraw the capital of strength—thus success may become perilous. Dr. Elisha M. Lake has been the preacher during the pastor's absence.

REV. E. M. S. BLEAKNEY of Tabernacle Church, Utica, N. Y., has been looking in on us, and reports plenty of "weather," and an abundance of cooperation, opportunity and encouraging results, in that solid old storm center.

REV. W. HARRY FREDA, the beloved young pastor at Clarendon Street Church, Boston, overtaxed by the labors of a strenuous winter, has beeen forced to rest a bit, but already is "coming back." The early spring usually tells us just where the strain has been too great. How would it do to take half the summer vacation in early March? Just when March is coming in like a lion, go off and be a lamb.

NEW JERSEY

REV. PAUL HAYNE OF HACKENSACK has accepted the call to the First Church, Haddonfield. The many friends of Mr. Hayne rejoice that he is to stay in New Jersey.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY young people of the Hudson Association held their first annual "get-together" on the evening of March 6 in the recreation hall of the First Church of Union Hill. The young people were divided into four college groups—Denison, Brown, Colgate and Bucknell. Contests took place, Denison winning by 17 1-2 points. It was an enjoyable affair.

DELAWARE

SECOND CHURCH IS THE OLDEST and strongest church in Delaware. It was founded as a protest against the old school delusion and is the mother church of the state. The annual meeting, Feb. 26, showed thirty new members during year, total of 507. Excellent mimeograph reports showed progress and activity in all departments. Total current expenses $8,600 and total benevolences, $8,184. Treasurer S. J. Horn received a resolution of thanks for twenty-six years' service. Pastor Allison has completed two full years of service and has a united church with him. He is in his second year as president of the Delaware State Convention, and active in denominational work.

DOVER: The seventy-third annual meeting of the First Church was observed in a delightful way on the evening of March 7. Dr. Chas. A. Walker, the pastor, who came upon the field on Oct. 1 last, is finding hearty response to his leadership. Several have been welcomed into the fellowship of the church by letter and experience. A new building for church, school and social purposes is an imperative necessity, and steps have been taken for the beginning of the erection of such a building within the next few months. At the annual meeting, which was preceded by a supper, two new deacons were chosen in succession to Samuel B. Hancock and Samuel H. Barker, both of whom passed from earthly scenes last June, within a few days of each other. Other officers were reelected by acclamation. A spirit of harmony prevails.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE LATROBE CHURCH, Rev. W. P. Wheeler, pastor, has purchased a lot and is planning to erect a new church this summer.

REV. ROBERT T. KETCHAM has accepted a call to the First Baptist, Niles, Ohio. Rev. Ketcham has been pastor of the church at Butler for four and one-half years. He will preach his farewell sermon April 1. During the four and a half years' pastorate of Mr. Ketcham with the church at Butler, 247 have been received into the membership of the church, 211 of these by baptism. The church has added $1,100 to the yearly salary of the pastor in that time. The increase in offerings for missions is 700 per cent, $15,000 has been expended on debt, interest and improvements. Five young people of the church have or now are taking special Bible Institute Training. Mr. Ketcham has built up the largest Sunday evening congregation in the city. At one time it was necessary to use a theater as the church could not seat those attending. This large attendance has been steady and not spasmodic.

MR. GEORGE DAVIS, Mt. Oliver, Pittsburgh, a member of the Knoxville Baptist Church and Sunday school, has not missed a Sunday in Sunday school for twenty years ending Jan. 1, 1923.

UNIONTOWN—REV. W. A. WISSINGER of Greensburg occupied the pulpit of the Great Bethel Church, March 11, at which time the church extended a call to Mr. Hollingshead of Lockport, N. Y. Great Bethel is one of the largest and most important churches in western Pennsylvania.

MEADVILLE: THE FIRST CHURCH reports a successful week of missions. Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Geil from the Congo, Africa, who are supported by the church, were present, and in addition to giving addresses exhibited pictures and about 200 curios. The field over which they have charge has more than 4,000 church members, 2,000 of whom have been baptized during the last three years. Dr. Benninghoff, who attended First Church when he was a boy, was also present and delivered an address.

AN ESSAY CONTEST WILL BE conducted by the World Wide Guild of the Pittsburgh Association. The subject will be "What Christian Education means to a Girl in India." The essay is limited to 2,000 words and must be in the hands of the secretary, Mrs. D. T. Isaac, by May 1. Any member of the World Wide Guild in the association is eligible to enter the contest.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

During the year just closed, the Blakely Church, Olyphant, Rev. Irving J. Beckwith, pastor, reports 10 per cent increase in membership, one licentiate (John J. Sherman), attractive improvements to both parsonage and church, and the best financial year in its history. The church has ten students in universities and eleven teachers in the local schools. Licentiate W. H. Priest renders frequent service outside his own church. Four women are doing Americanization work. Rev. L. L. Aber, enthusiastic superintendent of Lackawanna county Sunday-school association is a valuable member.

THE BEREAN CHURCH, Carbondale, recently celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary. In 1830 two Welsh immigrants, James and John Bowen, with their wives, formed the nucleus of a Baptist church in Carbondale. In 1832 they and a few others erected a house of worship; in 1833 they organized a Baptist church, the first of its kind in Carbondale. It ceased to exist because the membership became depleted. However, in March, 1848, the Berean Baptist Church of Carbondale came into being with seven members. The first pastor was Rev. Daniel E. Bowen. During the pastorate of Rev. F. E. Jepson the cornerstone of the present building was laid on June 27, 1888. There was an indebtedness of $12,500, $10,000 of which was obtained on a mortgage, the trustees giving their note for the remaining $2,500. Following the resignation of Rev. F. E. Jepson, Rev. H. J. Whalen was called to the church. In March, 1904, a three-fold celebration was held—the recognition of the fifty-sixth anniversary of the founding of the church, the cancellation of the mortgage and other indebtedness and the beginning of the fifth year of Dr. Whalen's pastorate. A new organ was presented by Mr. Andrew Carnegie and Hon. E. E. Hendrick. In December, 1921, a call was extended to Rev. Frank A. Stanton of Salem, N. J., the present pastor.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

DR. J. W. WEDDELL supplied the pulpit of Second Church, Chicago, on Sunday, March 11.

FRANK T. BRDLIK was ordained at Chicago, Sunday, March 11. The Chicago Permanent Council had previously recommended Mr. Brdlik for ordination. Rev. Edward Catlos, pastor of the First Bohemian Baptist Church, presided; prayer, Rev. John Fort; scripture reading, Rev. George Hadraba; sermon, Rev. Geo. W. Taft; charge to the candidate, Rev. A. S. Carman; ordination prayer, Dr. V. J. Vita. All of those participating, save Mr. Brdlik's former teachers, Doctors Taft and Carman, were Bohemian Baptist pastors in Chicago. Mr. Brdlik and his bride will soon go to Europe and will take up Baptist missionary work in the vicinity of Prague.

DR. J. W. WEDDELL OF MORGAN PARK, has prepared a series of intimate talks on the Bible which will take the form of afternoon blackboard conversations on the messages of the books of the Bible and expository and practical evening lectures on the great vital truths of the Word. These popular discourses are the fruit of forty years of Bible study and have proved a blessing in many communities. The course may be given in one week of intensive Bible studies or may last through a period of six weeks—one lecture a week; sometimes in parlor recitals in the Christian home. A free will offering is taken. Dr. Weddell may be addressed at Morgan Park for arrangements.

INDIANA

FOR SEVERAL WEEKS Baptist pastors of Indianapolis have held meetings for men each Sunday. The men have come in great numbers and there have been a number of conversions.

ROBERT OGLE, son of Rev. Albert E. Ogle of Indianapolis, died recently in New York City. The body was brought to Indianapolis for interment.

DR. PAUL MONROE, a graduate of Franklin College in 1890, has accepted a position at the head of the International Institute of Education at the request of the Rockefeller education board. Mr. Rockefeller and his son, John D., Jr., have agreed to endow this institution with $1,000,000 a year as long as Dr. Monroe is connected with it. Dr. Monroe is to be at the head of the institute for ten years.

IOWA

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF NORTHWOOD feels keenly the loss of Dr. Elmer H. Dwelle, who died in the prime of his manhood at Park Hospital, Mason City, Feb. 28. At the time of his death he was a trustee and the treasurer of the church. His judgment in church matters was always of the best. There survive, Mrs. Dwelle and three small children, and the father, Horace V., ninety years old last Christmas day.

MICHIGAN

FIRST CHURCH OF PONTIAC entered upon a very constructive program the first of the year. A religious census has been taken in the interest of the Sunday school. Superintendent W. D. Jacobs is making plans for a decision day March 25, with a baptismal service Easter Sunday. An enthusiastic tithers' league has been organized. A junior congregation under the leadership of Miss Lottie Livingston, new church secretary, has been organized and is doing some good work. A book by I. J. Van Ness, "Training in Church Membership," is being taught. A school of missions is being conducted every week. The senior B. Y. P. U. has a membership of almost 200. This union has been divided into groups and these groups go out from Sunday to Sunday to other churches, schoolhouses, anywhere they can find a place for a meeting. They also organize and strengthen B. Y. P. U.'s wherever possible. Dr. C. S. Knight conducts a class in homiletics and public speaking every Wednesday evening after prayer meeting for those who wish to learn how to carry on this work. There are from twenty to thirty taking this course. The church is planning on special revival services beginning April 8. At every service there are committees whose business it is to meet and welcome strangers and visitors. Their names are secured and letters written them by the pastor. There have been about twenty conversions since the first of the year. In addition to this, there have been a number of people to bring in their letters and line up with the church and its work.

Hillsdale College

The date for the Hillsdale College alumni banquet in Chicago has beeen set for April 14. Pres. W. G. Spencer plans to be present at this meeeting which is usually attended by one or two hundred of Hillsdale's alumni living in and around Chicago. The secretary of the alumni association in Chicago, to whom all communications regarding the banquet should be sent, is DeWitt D. Lash, 420 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

Dr. Peter H. Goldsmith, director of the Inter-American Division of the Association of International Conciliation of South America, was a guest of the college on Thursday, March 8, and gave an address. Dr. Goldsmith had an excellent set of pictures which he showed in connection with his lecture.

College Church has called to its pastorate, Rev. W. H. Roberts, who will graduate this spring from the Rochester Theological Seminary. Mr. Roberts was overseas with the Marine Corps in 1918-19 and spent his last two months abroad in the A. E. F. at the University of Beaune. He entered Rochester Theological Seminary in September, 1920, beginning to preach the first Sunday after his arrival in a neighboring church, of which he is still the pastor. The church has been without a pastor since the resignation of Dr. Henry M. Ford last October.

MINNESOTA

MRS. MELLIE GARVER HILLMAN, daughter of Dr. J. A. and Eliza Garver, wife of Silas Hillman, died Feb. 1 at her home in Dodge Center. She was a member of the West Concord church. She was laid to rest beside her husband in Riverside cemetery, the last of her family except for nieces and nephews. She had an annuity in the A. B. P. S.

MARCH 1 MARKED THE ANNIVERSARY of the seventieth year of the First Church, Minneapolis, and the twenty-sixth year of Dr. W. B. Riley's pastorate. He was voted a $4,000 increase in salary. The new Sunday-school building which will accommodate nearly 5,000 students will be dedicated April 15. The present enrolment in the Sunday school, including the home department, is 2,750.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

THE BOULDER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS will be held on the Chautauqua grounds, June 20-28. This school offers a rare opportunity for mental, physical and spiritual profit at one of the loveliest spots under the shadow of the Rockies. Further information will be given later.

COLORADO

Pay-Up Campaign

All is set for a wide pay-up campaign on New World Movement pledges in Colorado. Pres. J. W. Bailey has been chosen campaign director, with the following district directors: Rocky Mountain, Rev. Horace W. Cole; southern, Rev. M. D. Austin; western slope, Rev. George L. Boroughs; San Louis Valley, Rev. C. A. Sigmon; southwestern, Rev. F. E. Cholerton. This intensive campaign is planned to reach every church in the state in the next six weeks. The campaign opened at Grand Junction Sunday, March 11, with Dr. A. M. Petty of Portland, Ore., at the head of a "flying squadron" visiting Fruita, Pear Park, Palisade, Delta, Montrose, Salida, Canon City, Pueblo First, Eastside, Mesa and Lake Avenue, Fowler, Rocky Ford, Lamar, Arvada, Golden, Denver City Park, Beth Eden, and Mt. Olivet. Another team will be led by W. F. Ripley, visiting Brighton, Ft. Lupton, Ft. Morgan, Sterling, Iliff, Holyoke, Ault, Denver Bethel, Judson Memorial, Mt. Hermon and Barnum.

Rev. James H. Davis will pilot a team visiting Cripple Creek, Victor, Fountain, Peyton, Colorado Springs, Bethany, Simla, Briggsdale, Keota, Vallery, Wiggins, Louisville and Lafayette. Rev. A. C. Blinzinger will direct activities visiting Deer Trail, Flagler, Shiloh, Twin Lakes, Vona, Bonney and Pleasant Meadows. Rev. E. M. Steadman will lead in the campaign at Monte Vista, Hooper, Center, Saquache, Alamosa, Durango, Dolores, Loveland, Ft. Collins, Eaton, Johnstown, Berthoud, Greeley, Kersey, Littleton and the remaining churches in Denver.

On each team apart from the leader will be a layman, pastor and a woman representative of the continuation campaign. A number of other churches are yet to be scheduled. The teams plan to secure a good local committee in every church to secure new pledges payable before April 30, and to press payments on pledges of long standing. We hope to round out $1,000 a day in sixty days, in order to meet our state quota for this fiscal year. We have never found our churches more responsive in accepting the plans recommended, or in falling in with a set-up for the visiting team.

There has beeen a wide demand for the booklets, "On the March" and "How to Use On the March," so much so that we have had to order new supplies from time to time.

WYOMING

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Rocky Mountain district of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign and Home Societies will be held with First Church, Cheyenne, Wyo., Tuesday and Wednesday, May 1-2.

UTAH

THE BURLINGTON CHURCH, Salt Lake City will issue a monthly news letter giving facts about the work and the problems which it faces. This church occupies a strategic position as it is the only Christian church in a large and growing community. It is on the firing line of missionary effort, and therefore has an unusual opportunity for service. Rev. Henry Jacobs is pastor.

MONTANA

Resolution Against "Comeouters."

The following action was unanimously passed at a recent meeting of the Home Missions Council of Montana, Helena, representatives from nine denominations being present.

"The Montana Home Missions Council desires to put upon record for the instruction and admonition of churches of our several communions in the state, the following:

"There are certain so-called evangelists going about the state in twos, securing admittance to our church houses wherever possible, only to denounce organized Christianity and to break up, if possible, the church of the community. These people take no offerings but live off the people of the community, and on leaving a community, send requests for money to carry on their propaganda of division and destruction in other unguarded places. Paul's fear, Acts 20:29, applied to such as these. They are comeouters. Their methods are Ishmael against his brethren. They leave in their wake divided communities and distracted churches.

"It should be known in all of our churches that the policy of the Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal (South), United Brethren and Evangelical Church, Presbyterian and Lutheran churches do not give to trustees the right to open churches to any minister without the consent of the minister in charge, or if the church is vacant, the superintendent or committee of ministers having charge of vacant churches, while in Congregational, Baptist and Christian churches, common courtesy as well as the possible peace of the church would suggest the same course.

"These men acknowledge no church authorities, hence are amenable to no one and to nobody whatever, either as to teachings or conduct. Their methods, in most communities, shock even a worldling's conception of honesty."

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

FIRST CHURCH, SACRAMENTO: Rev. Bryant Wilson has completed his third year; 270 members were received during this period, and the hand of fellowship has been given to thirteen new members at each of the last two communion services. Rev. Bruce Crane was secured last year as the pastor's assistant.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE TEMPLE CHURCH, Los Angeles, has adopted an expense budget for 1923 of $50,000.

MISS AMY LEE STOCKTON has associated with her in evangelistic work Miss Rita Gould, who resigned her position as choir leader and soloist for the First Church of Long Beach, in order to enter the evangelistic field.

ON FRIDAY AFTERNOON, Feb. 23, the board of directors of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Southern California gave a reception in Berean Hall, Los Angeles, to visiting and resident women missionaries. About 200 women from neighboring churches were present, and in the receiving line were twenty-four missionaries representing Japan, China, Burma, Assam, Africa, Porto Rico, Mexico and various parts of our own country. After a few words of welcome from Dr. Brougher each missionary was introduced, and in a long sentence gave the name of her station and an idea of the character of her work. These introductions were interspersed with a short musical program, after which refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed. The board of directors was assisted in arranging this affair by a committee of women from the First and Temple Churches, and our missionaries expressed themselves in appreciation of this recognition.

Obituary

Mrs. Louisa Arenz Rhea died at the home of her daughter Mrs. F. Taylor, New Berlin, Ill., Jan. 20, 1923. She was born in 1837 at Arenzville, Ill. Her father was at one time special envoy on behalf of the United States government to the courts of Berlin and Vienna. On June 17, 1856, Mrs. Rhea married Henry Yates who died in 1871. In 1880 she married Mr. Thomas F. Rhea who passed away in 1900. She was a member of the Berlin church for sixty-five years. In her home forty-seven years ago was organized a woman's missionary society—one of the oldest in that part of Illinois.

Francis Wayland Ayer

(Continued from page 228)

with and known a great man." And so we have.

Mr. Ayer was a man of vision. That is one test of a man, as of a nation. There are people who live at the bottom of a well, and see nothing but the patch of blue sky above the well-curb. There are many who live at the surface of the earth, whose horizon is the natural one from that point of view. There are those who live on the mountain-tops, or to whom that place of vision is familiar, and they see all the kingdoms of the world at the sunrise. At Meredith, Mr. Ayer often took his friends to the hill where the water-tower stands and to the lookout on the hill above the village. His reason for doing so was that thence one could see so very far over the rolling hills and valleys of "God's country." It was like him to love that kind of a prospect.

This quality was very manifest in his business life, and through it he built up great enterprises. But that was not all; he saw also, as few have seen, the meaning and the requirements of great denominational and interdenominational enterprises, such as the Northern Baptist Convention, the New Jersey Baptist Convention, the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the State Young Men's Christian Association, as well as local denominational and interdenominational organizations. He was keenly alive to educational interests, and was always the friend of institutions of learning. He gave freely of his time and strength and money to Peddie, and at the time of his death he was president of the New York Baptist Union for Ministerial Education, the holding corporation for the Rochester Theological Seminary.

Mr. Ayer was a man of wisdom. This is closely akin to his vision. He knew how to utilize latent power, to use resources which often lie unused. In these days when there are many claimants for recognition as truth, he had singular skill in differentiating alleged from real truth. He had a great sense of reality, and was not very often deceived as to its presence or absence.

THE three Baptist Hospitals—the only Baptist Hospitals of the Northwest—Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital, Merriam Park Hospital, are thoroughly and efficiently equipped for service.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK SAINT PAUL

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS
We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent. Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—
Special Easter Services—Just Out
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful. Write for slide bulletins. Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 years Supplying Churches
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

THE QUEEN OF SWEETS PURE MAPLE SYRUP AND SUGAR
Direct to you—10-lb. can sugar, $3; one gal. syrup, $2.40; six gal., $13.50. Cash with order or C. O. D. with charges. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. A Baptist.
O H. Jackson, Westford, Vermont.

His wisdom manifested itself in his dealing with people. He built up great lines of business by selecting and surrounding himself with those he trusted and who proved worthy of his trust. He would lay heavy responsibilities upon those associated with him, and then hold them to the discharge of the responsibilities with which they were entrusted. He did not try to play a lone game; he realized that while one can chase a thousand, two can put not two thousand, but ten thousand to flight.

Mr. Ayer was a man of faith. With no overweening self-conceit, he believed in himself, as he had good warrant for doing. He had splendid physique, fine mentality, and an integrity of purpose which was manifest to all those with whom he came into contact. I have already said that he had faith in people, and for those in whom he had confidence he would stand in unfaltering support and friendship.

But above all, he was a man of faith in God. He believed in the Divine purpose, and in the sure victory of those who keep in the current of God's will and way. He had no doubt of the ultimate triumph of righteousness. That makes a man of real courage, and he was a man who faced the storm, when necessary, with serene and unfaltering fortitude.

Mr. Ayer was a man of love. He was reticent, he did not wear his heart upon his sleeve; there were great depths of tenderness in him which not all knew.

He loved nature, and in all her changing moods the earth poured out for him the revelation of God's heart and God's face. It surely is not amiss to speak of his love for living creatures, like horses and cattle. It was good to watch him as he controlled his driving horses with hand and voice, and as he stroked the glossy necks of the cattle of the Jersey herd which he loved so well.

He loved the church, and gave himself to the interests of the church without reserve. I am inclined to think that to the church he gave the maximum of his thought and care. Every detail of church life in the country and in the city was of deep interest to him, and he made himself an invaluable factor.

He loved the Bible, and it was constantly his companion in thought and prayer. He did not trouble himself particularly with theories of inspiration; many of the questions which so unfortunately divide God's people went by him without special attention. He went straight to the Book itself, and made it the man of his counsel and the guide of his path. His faith was direct and profound. As he loved the revelation of God in nature, so he loved that revelation in the written Word.

He loved people. All in the Camden church and school have lost one of their dearest friends. He knew every home within miles of the hill-top at Meredith. He knew the families, parents and children. He repeatedly spoke of the welfare of the children, and his cheery greetings were given on all sides as he went through the countryside which was so dear to him. His employees were close to his heart. His relation to them was no merely mechanical one.

Into his love for the members of his family we need not go, but they know how he gathered them into the strong tower of his heart.

But above all else and above all others, he loved his Master. He was the "master of Meridale Farms," but One was his master, even Christ, and he loved him with an utter and devoted and simple love. I shall never forget a prayer which I heard him make before the open fireplace in the home of his daughter in Camden. This great man, to whom the markets of the world were well known, and in whose mind were the details of vast business enterprises, laid open his heart before Christ as simply as a child. Religion with him was real.

And now he has "gone away." We wonder what has come to him in the way of knowledge since he went. His was an inquiring mind. Much light has come to him since the veil of our imperfect vision has been lifted. Dr. Nathaniel Burton of Hartford spoke in my hearing when I was a boy, of the glory of the things it is given faith to know here and now, but "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." We could wish that he might tell us what he knows today.

And what is he doing? Something he is doing, we may depend upon that, for not else would he be content. Some time ago he said, half humorously, "If there is an advertising business in heaven, I would like to serve in it by and by, if I can." He will have something to do which will be worth while; it could not be otherwise.

"Somewhere, out of human view,
Whate'er thy hands are set to do
Is wrought with tumult of acclaim."

Above the snow which lies deep upon Round Top at Northfield, I saw last Sunday the top of the stone which marks the resting-place of Dwight L. Moody. On this stone many times I have read the words, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." On the announcement board outside the North Baptist Church of Camden I saw, on the day of the service in memory of the man of whom we speak, the same words, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." The words are true of Dwight L. Moody and of Francis Wayland Ayer, as they are true of every great and devoted servant of the living God. These men did not build into the structure of their life and work wood and hay and stubble. With the passing years the permanence of the service which they rendered will be increasingly manifest.

---

The Foreign Mission Society has received a report from its European representative, Dr. W. O. Lewis, written from Moscow, Russia, dated Feb. 13, in which he announces the distribution of the clothing sent on the relief ship in December. He writes that there were many formalities to be gone through with before the cargo could be unloaded at Odessa, and the Soviet government insisted on unpacking carefully a large number of bales of clothing before they were released for distribution. Dr. Lewis spent some time in Moscow in conference with Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke where an All-Russian Baptist Evangelical Relief Committee was organized and comprehensive plans formulated for the distribution of the clothing. A program of distribution was prepared with the result that the bales of clothing were immediately despatched by rail to the various centers, from which their contents were distributed among Baptists and evangelicals and their needy neighbors and friends. A substantial portion was distributed in accordance with the agreement with Mr. Hoover under the direction of the American Relief Administration in important centers designated by Dr. Lewis, irrespective of religious affiliations of the recipient. Nothing was lost on the journey, and every piece of clothing that was packed at the warehouse in Brooklyn actually arrived at its destination. In closing his preliminary report, Dr. Lewis stated that conditions in Russia are apparently quiet. In some places economic conditions are somewhat better, while in others they are worse.

Want Ads

Middle-aged lady desires position with family traveling to Stockholm. Experienced nurse. Speaks English and Swedish. C. A., care of THE BAPTIST.

Baptists benefited—Yamhill County, Oregon, offers mild winters, pleasant summers, tempered by sea breezes. We have diversified farming, commercial fruits, berries and English walnuts. Location of Baptist College of the Northwest, Linfield's standards are known country wide. A new $75,000 church an immediate prospect. Write the Secretary of the Commercial Club or Pastor C. L. Trawin for information, McMinnville, Oregon. Forty miles south of Portland. Two paved highways; two electric lines.

Teachers Wanted—Many trained, experienced, Christian teachers needed for all departments of schools and colleges beginning September. Now is the time. Write today for information. The Westminster Teachers' Bureau, Henry H. Sweets, Manager. 410 Urban Building, Louisville, Ky.

Two Homes for Sale in Morgan Park, well located and with modern conveniences. Henry R. Baldwin, 74 W. Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Phones, Central 0606 and Beverly 0549.

If Some One Should Ask You About A Will

And When You Make Your Own

The Corporate Names of Our Societies and the States in which they are Incorporated are:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: New York. Rev. P H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., Home Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society; New York. Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society; Pennsylvania. Gilbert N. Brink, D.D., General Secretary, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Massachusetts. Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society; Illinois. Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of The Northern Baptist Convention; New York. E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Frank W. Padelford, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named above will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

ANNUITIES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent, a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these SINGLE and DOUBLE CONTRACTS will be sent to you on request.

Our Book Shelf

The Christian Crusade for a Warless World, by Sidney L. Gulick. New York: Macmillan. $1.

The time has come for a Christian crusade for a warless world, and to succeed it must be intelligent as well as enthusiastic. These chapters by this well-known writer and internationalist, will serve to make one intelligent about the whole program of peace. The foreword is by the commission on international justice and good-will, of the Federal Council. There is an appendix with suggestions along the lines of promoting peace. A bibliography is also included in the volume.

The Church and the Ever-coming Kingdom of God, by E. E. Kresge. New York: Macmillan.

The writer, a prominent pastor and leader in the Reformed church, presents an urgent plea to the church to make "the social implications of the kingdom of God" the central and governing principle of its thought and its labors. He holds that this social conception of the kingdom is the central one in Christianity, and that the weaknesses and failures of the Christian church are chiefly due to its departures from this conception. He develops his thesis with vigor and brilliancy, if not quite with the ideal impartiality of the exegete and historian.

The Strategy of the Devotional Life, by Lynn Harold Hough. New York: F. H. Revell Co.

The brilliant Detroit pastor, lately for a brief term president of Northwestern University, treats of what he engagingly terms "the strategy of the devotional life" in addresses first given to the council of cities of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is marked by the striking imagery and felicitous phraseology for which the author is noted. There seems an occasional slight straining for effect and typographical slips have a little too frequently got by the proofreader, but the little volume is fresh and charming and it constitutes a new approach to an old problem.

The Middle of the Road, by Philip Gibbs. New York: George H. Doran. $2.

A story of after-war world conditions. The Irish-English struggle is discussed. The condition of France, Germany and famine stricken Russia has a large place. In and through the whole are woven the hardships of Bertram Pollard, who promised his mother on her deathbed that he would work for peace. He is misjudged by many and even his young wife, Joyce, believes him to be a traitor to England. The story shows the difficulty of keeping the middle of the road in the tangle of world affairs.

Christianity and Progress, by Harry Emerson Fosdick. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

The Cole Lectures at Vanderbilt University have for their scope the "defense and advocacy of the Christian religion." In 1922 the course was given by Doctor Fosdick of Union Theological Seminary on "Christianity and Progress"—an inquiry into the effect of the philosophy of progress upon the Christian message. Doctor Fosdick is first of all a preacher par excellence. The sequences of his sentences belong to the mind of the homilete rather than of the logician. He is more analogical than logical; one will find "like" or "as" on almost every page—twenty times as often as "therefore" or "because." It is, for this reason, not wholly surprising that in the first lecture on "The Idea of Progress" one has to make a microscopic search for its definition. The lecturer refers to the "progressive interpretation of history," "progressive hopes," "our modern progressive way of thinking," and then to the factors that have produced the "idea of progress"—new inventions, new discoveries, new knowledge, new social hopes and, most of all, evolution—but he fails in the end to tell the reader just what progress is. We wish he might have seen his way clear at the outset to have laid down a basis—in facts, not fancies—for a teleological interpretation of the universe. In spite of what on the philosophical side is a rather fundamental defect, the discussion is suggestive and stimulating. This is no fool-proof universe, Doctor Fosdick declares, automatically progressive. Humanity's sinful nature is an inherited mortgage and handicap on the whole human family. Social palliatives will not take the place of radical cures. This earth is not destined "to drift into paradise like thistledown before an inevitable wind." In his views of sin, the author is much nearer Jonathan Edwards than most evolutionists. The lecture on "The Perils of Progress" is perhaps the most effective of the series. It is a book which should appeal alike to modernists and fundamentalists.

BIBLE PLAYS

By RITA BENTON

Nearly all the plays are suited to outdoor presentation.

"The plays are simple and in good taste—have humor, movement and climax and are perfectly practicable." —The Christian Work.

Illustrated. Net, $2.00; by mail, $2.20

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

THE WORLD'S GREAT RELIGIOUS POETRY
Compiled by CAROLINE MILES HILL, Ph. D.
Over 800 Pages, $5.00

"It offers the opportunity to study in succession the poetical thought of all ages and of many nations and such aspects of religion as The Idea of God, Faith, Prayer, Death, and Immortality, etc.

"The method of indexing first by authors, then by poem titles, then by first lines, and certain other mechanical features increase its value as a reference book.

"I feel certain that it will have, as it deserves, a large sale when its real worth comes to be known."—Bishop Thomas Nicholson.

"What more elevating and broadening exercise could a teacher or speaker on spiritual themes desire than the habitual study of such a book? It will be of the greatest spiritual service to people of all religions and of no religion. It meets a well-nigh universal need."—Christian Advocate (New York).

"I radio-ed to half a million the merits of 'The World's Great Religious Poetry' the other day."—S. Parkes Cadman.

"It will be of immense value to preachers not merely as a mine of illustrative material, but even more as a stimulus to fine taste in religious reading and utterance."—Bishop Francis J. McConnell.

"There is enough in this book to fill in spare hours for many years."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

"I congratulate you on the publication of this admirable work."—William Lyon Phelps (Yale).

"My advice to ministers and Church people is to get it at once."—Dr. Frank Crane.

"It should prove a reservoir of inspiration as well as illustration for the preacher."—Chancellor Charles W. Flint (Syracuse).

THE APOSTLE PAUL AND THE MODERN WORLD
By Francis G. Peabody
Author of "Jesus Christ and the Social Question"
Probably $2.50

Proves that researches within the last few years that were not primarily concerned with Paul's career, nor indeed with the Christian tradition but with the state of the Roman empire have clarified the teaching of Paul surprisingly.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION
By Robert H. Thouless (Manchester)
$2.50

The God revealed by religious experience shown to be identical with the God required by the moral consciousness and the God required to explain the world and the God revealed in historical Christianity.

Little Books on Religion
A New Macmillan Series
Seventy-five cents

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF POWER
By Captain J. A. Hadfield

A remarkable essay originally published in "The Spirit," edited by Canon B. H. Streeter.

THE NEW TESTAMENT TODAY
By Ernest Findlay Scott (Union)
Reissue

"A spirit of sincerity, love of truth and joy of discovery that is strongly fascinating."—American Lutheran Survey.

WHAT IS MYSTICISM?
By Rev. Charles M. Addison

Not a man by himself, but a man and God, is the true unity of being and power.

THE FUNDAMENTALS OF CHRISTIANITY
By Henry C. Vedder (Crozer)
Re-issue at $1.50

"Ministers and others who have passed beyond the milk diet stage will find it suggestive."—The Baptist.

"Begin to read this book and you will want to keep at it until you finish."—Zions Herald.

THE JESUS OF OUR FATHERS
By John W. Good
Georgia State College for Women
Over 800 pages, Cloth, $6.00

A monumental work.

Scholars who have severed all the ties that once bound them to the traditional will find this book little to their liking. It is for the army of men and women of true piety who walk in the old ways.

ANGER: ITS RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SIGNIFICANCE
By George M. Stratton (California)
$2.25

A study of how anger has been treated by the various religions and the part it has played in their development. Shows the bearing of these results on the war against war.

OLD TESTAMENT LIFE AND LITERATURE
By I. G. Matthews (Crozer)
$2.50

An all-round account of Israel, its tribal beginnings, its rise to nationality, its troubled career of independence and its even more disturbing history as a subject people.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
64-66 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

RODEHEAVER'S GOSPEL SONGS
(Latest)
Give new life to all religious services—especially revivals — also "Awakening Songs," "Songs for Service," "Victory Songs";—One book prepaid 45c cloth, 35c limp, 30c manila. Any quantities, .05c less, not prepaid. Returnable sample on request.

RAINBOW SACRED RECORDS
Of Homer Rodeheaver's voice, and of other great evangelistic singers. Double face records, 75c each. Write for our lists.

FABER FOLDING ORGANS
Fold like a suitcase; light weight, carry with you anywhere. Great for Classes, Clubs, etc. Write for catalog, prices, etc.
THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
629 McClurg Bldg. Dpt. B, 814 Walnut St.
Chicago, Ill. Philadelphia, Pa.

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS
Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write
J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

Harry W. Jones
CHURCH ARCHITECT
Minneapolis

Handbook for Workers with Young People
By JAMES V. THOMPSON
"This textbook is worthy of the widest use in conferences of all denominations, as it touches one of the vital problems of all churches and is therefore adapted to the needs of all."
—The Christian Advocate.
Net, $1.50; by mail, $1.65
THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

THE RELIGION OF THE ORGANIST

By REGINALD L. McALL

Address at the annual rally of the New Jersey Council National Association of Organists, St. James Church, Upper Montclair.

The relation of the organist to the minister will depend largely on his attitude toward religion. One who has no genuine interest in religion would have little fellowship with its messenger.

Why does the organist feel an interest in religion? What is that interest? How can he express it?

The answer to the first question is that he realizes the moral and mystical significance of music. We call its mood either serious or gay. Music stirs our resolve, or sets our feet moving with a rhythm that makes them tingle. It sends us to war or soothes our pain. This classification is preferable to the misleading terms "religious" and "secular," for much so-called secular music is serious, and is well adapted to religious uses. But music has clearly defined connotations in moral terms, and a moral index number could be found for nearly all music. We readily recognize the positive factor in uplifting devotional strains. On the other hand, there are distinct and sometimes virulent values on the negative side. Music can be made to portray and suggest impulses which are not merely secular, but which point downward and degrade the moral fibre. We can never ignore this always potential and often active moral factor. We have an edged tool in our hands.

Another dangerous instrumentality is the moving picture. It has a concentration of moral quality which often causes serious results, and in this lies its great danger. A striking example of the value of the art of organ music can be found in its refining influence on the moving picture.

The reason for such implications in music is not hard to find. Music, like religion, deals with and reveals the unseen. It rarely describes material facts, though it may aptly suggest their mood. [This limitation explains the necessity of detailed annotations in program music, which are often far-fetched.] But music deals with the realm of the imagination—the home of the soul. Hope, fear, love, worship, remorse, resolve—these are music's themes. Poetry is the only other art which concerns itself so nearly with this realm, for the song of a shirt is a revelation of life—and you will notice how poetry gains in effect when wedded to music.

And this is true of the Bible. It is not a textbook of science and geography, though its "holy men of old" were not unversed in the physical knowledge of their day. Its function is to unfold God's revelations of himself to man and of man to his own self. The unseen God and the unseen in man are its subjects. Again you will notice how finely its visions, promises and revelations of life are illumined by music.

Such a vital revelation of God and man ennobles life, proclaims its sacredness and the tragedy of marring it. And our art should reveal the highest life—that of the spirit. Dr. Fosdick, in one of his sermons, imagines a violin that bore the name of Antonio Stradivari and had shared in producing the symphonies and overtures of the great masters, seized by a cheap, coarse hand, which tried to play upon those same strings a syncopated barbarity. If that violin could feel, it would express resentment, it would be ashamed.

Having established the relation of our purpose with that of religion and discerning the spiritual equation in our music, we come to understand in what field we are leading our people. For ours is a twofold responsibility—the field and the leadership. Whether we know it or not, whether we like it or not, we are called upon to exercise leadership, as did the prophet of old whose business in life was to reveal it to men of lesser vision. This leadership involves both technique and character. It is within the reach of us all. It is peculiarly desirable in the organist, a fact which becomes very clear by comparing him with other musicians.

A competent violinist in the orchestra is a performer. He plays and reads well, but while he may discern niceties of interpretation, his usefulness depends on the complete surrender of his individuality to that of the conductor. A pianist, however, does more than merely play well. His ability to interpret is the index of his fame. But we, as organists, in addition to our technique and interpretation, are, like the orchestral leader, continually acting as conductors. We not only assist our soloists, but we give the interpretations of choral music to our choirs and of congregational music to the body of worshipers. At other times we actually conduct choruses, glee clubs, or community singers, and sometimes (but not often enough) orchestras. Thus every organist is a conductor, as well as a performer and interpreter. Without this instinct, which involves qualities of magnetism and leadership, his own playing would be uninteresting, for in reality interpretation is conducting oneself. We have heard solo organ playing which suggested this failing. Moreover, his ability to obtain a response from his congregation would be crippled, as would the singing itself. The difference between the singing of various congregations can be explained largely by the possession or lack of this divine gift of leadership. It must not be forgotten that conducting is an art which has its own technique, and that it can be exercised with the fingers on the keys of the organ as effectually as with a baton.

May I digress to suggest that this knowledge of music's function in morals, coupled with courage and prophetic instinct in proclaiming it, will equip us for our task of selecting what music shall be sung. If we can fulfill these two requirements we are qualified to guide the musical taste of our people, young and old, and we should claim the task as our own. Why should the unskilled play with the edged tools? It is our fault if we acquire a reputation for being interested only in the more advanced

EUROPE, GREECE, EGYPT, PALESTINE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE
Tours Personally Conducted—45 to 108 Days, From $675 to $1485
Why Pay More? Our Tours Give as Much as Any Give More Than Many Cost Less Than Any
Sailings June and July. Write today for itinerary and full information The WICKER TOURS, Richmond, Va.

forms of music, with the result that no one thinks of consulting us about the songs to be used by the primary department of the church school, or the book selected for informal church meetings. As teachers our perception of pedagogical principles would call us to this service.

One stumbling-block to success in the character element of our leadership is actually due to our occupation. We are compelled to develop the critical faculty. But the exercise of good judgment and the maintenance of a high standard for our students should not make us hypercritical. If our religion and our art do not keep us sweet-tempered and do not prevent us from becoming censorious it is time to consult a doctor.

Our concern has been mainly with expression. But the effect of such activities on character is inevitable. It is surely not to be wondered at if, realizing the nobility of our calling, and spending the golden years as workmen that need not be ashamed, we find ourselves learning to follow more closely the guidance of the great Conductor, and to work for his approval. The marvel is that he has given us such precious opportunities. Let us therefore show forth his praise, not only by our music but in our lives, and by giving up ourselves to his service, for this is the religion of the organist.

And it is a never-ending service, for "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Those who learn to praise here will not have to keep silence hereafter. What a message of triumphant immortality music bears! In that epitome of human grief sculptured at the entrance of Pere Lachaise cemetery in Paris we see the look of despair of the mourners who cannot follow with their eyes the one they loved round the corner of the road and know not if all be well with him. Ah! could their ears but catch the far-off sound of many voices singing and chanting, doubt would vanish and childlike faith be born again. While the Israelites could not sing the songs of their homeland in a strange country for very grief at their hated exile, we can joyfully employ the language which tells of our homeland, and which we are certain to employ when we are promoted to further service in the upper rooms of our Father's house.

The Coming Generation of Baptists

(Continued from page 240)

The future generation of Baptists, however, does not depend alone upon our educational institutions. The primary responsibility rests upon our homes and our churches. The initial impulse toward Christian activity should be given in the home and encouraged in the church. A sad feature of our modern church life is the failure of so many of the children of leading members of our churches to take the places of their fathers and mothers in the work of our churches and the denomination. Responsibility here rests upon the young people as well as upon their parents.

The home, the church, the college—upon these three agencies, more than upon any others, depends the future of our denomination. In the great work of extending the kingdom of God on earth they are interdependent. We must zealously guard and promote the interests of them all. Our colleges should be so adequately supported as to suppress all desire to break away from the denomination. Our churches should constantly encourage their young people to attend these colleges and in doing so they should have reasonable assurance that these colleges will continue the work which the church has begun. Our homes, however, hold the real key to the situation. As soon as the child begins to understand he should be led to a knowledge of the church and of the college. He should be taught that he is to go to college and also as to the specific college to which he is to go. Such training can be given and with an enthusiasm which will never leave the outcome in any doubt whatever.

As Baptists we are today a great company charged with a tremendous responsibility. We have no reason to be ashamed of our past. We have made our mistakes and have suffered because of them. We should not, however, permit them to deter us from attempting yet greater things. We may make them stepping stones to nobler achievements. A hearty cooperation on the part of all our forces and a steadfast loyalty to our great commission will produce a generation of Baptists which will prove worthy of any of its predecessors.

FOR ME

FOR HIM

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

I thought of it once as I sat by myself,
And looked at the boxes that stood on the shelf,
One so large, one so small, with a contrast most grim,
A band-box for me and a mite-box for Him.

I paid for my hat and I paid for my gown,
And I paid for the furs that I purchased downtown,
And when I returned it was plain as could be,
A mite-box for Him and a band-box for me.

I tossed in a dime but it didn't seem right,
I couldn't be proud of that curious sight,
So I took out my check-book and tried to be square,
For I wanted my giving to look like my prayer.

The Continuation Campaign

of the

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society
Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Week-Day Instruction

(Continued from page 243)

demonstrated its power to reach great sections of the child population of the country which are untouched by the customary educational efforts of the churches. Even in communities which are considered to be made up almost wholly of church-going people, many children come into the week-day church schools and report that they have not been enrolled in any Sunday school. In foreign-speaking communities the greater part of the children who enter the week-day church schools do not know what a Sunday school is and have never attended any school where religious instruction was given. One week-day church school in Hammond, Ind., was made up of children 90 per cent of whom had not been enrolled in any Sunday school.
Presbyterian Magazine.

What Shall I Render Unto the Lord For All His Benefits Toward Me?

When every Northern Baptist conscientiously answers this question we will reach our goal

HOW OUR GIFTS ARE DIVIDED

Ten Million Dollars

are required to meet

The Needs of the Above Organizations

The Fiscal Year Closes April 30

The New World Movement of Northern Baptists

HAVE YOU READ "ON THE MARCH?"

BAP

Volume IV March 31 No. 9

The Baptist

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
MAR 30

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Burne-Jones

The Christ Triumphant

Fresh from the Field

Rev. W. Quay Rosselle, pastor of the First Church, Malden, was the speaker at Lenten services in Keith's Theater, Philadelphia.

Rev. George R. Stair recently closed a series of evangelistic meetings at Muncy, Pa. From there he went to Pineville, Ky., the county seat. He was invited to conduct a service in the courtroom during a feud murder trial and complied with the request.

Walnut Grove Presbyterian Church of Farmington, Ark., is doing most practical work in operating a twenty-five acre model farm, under the demonstration parish plan of the Presbyterian board of home missions. Four acres are set to blackberries, ten to grapes and twelve to strawberries. The farm is self-supporting.

We were to have had an Easter message from Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of the Temple, Los Angeles. A telegram from him reads: "Expected to furnish you with Easter message for THE BAPTIST but unavoidable circumstances make it impossible for me to find time to prepare it. I thank you for inviting me and will hope to serve you at some future time. You have my good will and best wishes."

In the University of Nanking, thirty-five students, together with forty-three middle-class students, responded to the special meetings which were held by Dr. Stanley Jones and Sherwood Eddy by taking a definite stand for Christ. The faculty members have a splendid opportunity to reach students in this institution, for the reason that more than half come from non-Christian schools and thus have not previously been under Christian influence.

A conference on daily vacation Bible schools was held March 20-22 at the Newton Theological Institution, Newton Center, Mass. The speakers and leaders include Rev. W. Y. Tourant, Bennington, Vt.; Rev. F. F. Peterson, director of religious education for the Massachusetts Baptist State Convention; Miss Grace Hartley, assistant director; Rev. Fred W. French, Brockton. Each afternoon there was instruction in shop work and from seven to nine each evening teaching in shop work and conferences.

As the result of sympathetic help from the American churches, through the Federal Council, there was held in Copenhagen last summer the first official gathering of Protestantism in continental Europe, there being seventy-five delegates present, representing thirty-seven church bodies and twenty-one European nations. As the result of this conference, there has now been established by the Swiss Protestant Federation, with headquarters in Zurich, a central bureau of Protestantism for Europe, for the immediate purpose of securing and coordinating relief for the needy churches and religious institutions of the continent. The director of this organization is Dr. Adolf Keller, secretary of the Swiss Protestant Federation. The Federal Council, with the assistance of its constituent bodies, has underwritten two-thirds of the budget of the bureau. The executive committee is made up of representatives from the Swiss Federation, the churches in the Scandinavian countries, Holland, and Great Britain, with Dr. Macfarland as advisory member for the American churches. This is an indication of the extent of the world cooperative movement of the churches.

Dr. J. Madison Hare, pastor of the church at Scotch Plains, N. J., was chaplain in the army during the Spanish-American and world wars. He has recently received his commission as brevet major in the national guard of New Jersey, with a letter from the governor congratulating him on the service he has rendered his country.

Under the auspices of the missionary education movement of the United States and Canada, 150 Fifth Ave., New York City, a new travel department has been opened under the direction of Rev. John Cobb Worley. The purpose of this department is to guide travelers through countries where missionary work is being done.

His Hour

BY HARRIET BURCH WHARTON

St. Luke 19:30-31

THEY loosed him. Honored colt
On which no man had ever sat
And took him straight to Jesus.
The slender form—the back
That bore its precious burden
Must have sensed its rider
And for love of him gone carefully but proud.
We know that never greater glory
Can there be, than this—
They fetched him for the Savior's use,
The Lord had need of him,

Cristo, Cuba, has experienced one of the most glorious revivals in years. The details were told in a recent letter from Miss Margaret Renshaw of the Woman's Home Mission Society. As the result of a series of evangelistic meetings which covered a period of a week, 220 Cubans gave their lives to Christ. Among these were young and old men and women, white and black, whole families as well as many cases which had been considered hopeless for a long time because of their stubborn refusal to hear God's message. These converts are organized into classes fifteen in number.

The demand for "On the March" has greatly exceeded expectations. Over 200,000 copies have been printed. The entire supply is exhausted and the orders are still coming in. No funds are available for a further edition, but those who have delayed ordering this important pamphlet should have it if possible. Stacy R. Warburton requests that any pastors or churches that have copies to spare send them at once to the nearest literature bureau. More copies must be secured if possible. The addresses of the literature bureaus are: 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 125 Wabash Ave., Chicago; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

Gypsy Smith, Jr., has moved to the state of Mississippi and is doing evangelistic work in the Southern states. He recently closed a meeting at Biloxi.

Dr. H. Francis Perry has resigned as pastor of the Church of the Redeemer of Brooklyn, N. Y. He proposes after many years in strenuous service to take a reasonable period of rest and recreation before accepting another pastorate.

Manly C. Wareham, a teacher in the public schools of Chicago, is one of the men who will conduct a tour party in Europe this summer.

Rev. A. W. Beaven, of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., was university preacher at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., and also spent three days of the week of prayer at Denison University, with the students placing before them the Christian life and life work decisions.

The ninety-ninth annual meeting of the American Baptist Publication Society will be held in Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N. J., May 28, 1923, at 2 p. m., and succeeding days, to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the board of managers, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting. By order of the board of managers.—William H. Main, Rec. Sec.

The will of John Wesley, dated April 27, 1768, has been presented to Wesleyan University by Acting President Stephen H. Olin, who paid fifty guineas for it. The will was drawn when Wesley was sixty-five years of age. It is of foolscap size and mounted on linen. A portion of the seal is missing. Among the bequests are a ring to his "faithful housekeeper" and "ye notes on ye New Testament and ye book on Original Sin" to all itinerant preachers who had not yet acquired a set of his sermons.

The Agoga class of the First Church, Hollywood, Cal., Dr. S. J. Skevington, pastor, publishes a bulletin each week. It is a "live" one. Reading one issue almost made us want to sell out and go West so that we could join the class. One of the features of the leaflet is a report of the three-minute speech given the week before. On a recent Sunday William C. Troyer gave the talk. The report reads: "—and Bill said, that one of the cardinal crimes of man against man was, 'two-facedness.'—and Bill wondered if, that, although we were all for Christ, we were not sometimes 'two-faced' to him. —and Bill said a lot more, and suggested that the 3-minute speaker each Sunday, offer a suggestion to help 'Agoga' as an organization."

Some weeks ago a rumor was circulated that on account of the political disturbances in Europe, the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance would be postponed. The committee to promote attendance promptly issued a statement to the effect that such a rumor was not justified, and it immediately opened correspondence with Dr. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the alliance, and with Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist commissioner for Europe, securing their opinion as to the possible bearing of conditions in Europe on plans for holding the meeting at Stockholm. Both Mr. Shakespeare and Dr. Rushbrooke have written to the committee that from their knowledge of conditions in Europe, there is no need to consider a postponement of the congress. Within the last few weeks Dr.

(Continued on page 260)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., March 31, 1923 No. 9

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post-office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST:
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125.00. No time or space discounts.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

Page

FRESH FROM THE FIELD....255
EDITORIAL....261
THE EASTER HOPE, BY I. G. MATTHEWS....264
FROM LIFE TO MIRACLE OR FROM MIRACLE TO LIFE, BY NEWTON GEORGE THOMAS....265
HOLY WEEK IN THE HOLY LAND, BY HERBERT HINES....267
RELIGION AND THE PRINTING PRESS, BY GILBERT N. BRINK.268
THE HONESTY OF MATTHEW AND MARK, BY O. P. EACHES....269
THE OLD AND THE NEW, BY MORTON SCOTT ENSLIN....269
CHRIST AND COUE, BY JOHN A. EARL....270
THE BIG INVESTMENT....271
A PLEA FOR FAIR PLAY—MISSION COMITY WITHOUT HYPOCRISY, BY V. W. DYER....272
IN THE CAPITALS OF CENTRAL AMERICA, BY SAMUEL GRAHAM NEIL....272
THE BUSINESS OF SOUL WINNING....274
HOW TO KEEP YOUNG PEOPLE INTERESTED IN THE CHURCH, BY N. F. PETERSON....275
OPEN FORUM....275
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION....276
YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK....277
THE CHIMNEY CORNER....278
OUR OWN FOLKS....280
OUR BOOK SHELF....286
OUR MUSIC CORNER....287

Whisk Broomes Not Enough

"Find enclosed my subscription. My family, 'whisk' Broomes and all, could not keep house without THE BAPTIST." This letter came from a missionary pastor in Michigan by the name of of George W. Broome. You can guess who the "whisk broomes" are. Blessed that parent who inculcates in his children a love for something more than the "funnies" in the daily paper. On another page you will see a story of some of the achievements of this pastor.

Killam's Kollum

Scores Have So Noted

"Has any one else noticed that since Coué came to this country your paper (Why 'your'?—Editor) has greatly improved? Every day in every way I think THE BAPTIST is getting better and better. I promise you that if the paper keeps up at the present rate I'll make a drive for a real list of subscribers."—Rev. W. F. Meyer, Leomister, Mass. Yes, Meyer, the folks who talk and write as you have done are legion. On the other hand some brethren feel called of the Lord to keep us humble. You have tempted us to produce evidence that you are not the only one who has rendered unto Coué that which is Coué's.

A School Man Speaks

Under date of March 9, J. L. Porter of the Porter Institute of Evansville, Ind., writes: "May I take this occasion to express my personal appreciation of your (he means our) paper? I believe you are putting on an educational program that only a few of the members of our denomination really appreciate. It was my privilege to hear a man 'who is high up' in another denomination say, 'THE BAPTIST is one of the best denominational papers published today.'" You see by the date of this letter that the commendation comes after Coué visited Chicago.

Laymen Like King Tut

"Vol. IV, number 6, page 170—The Tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamen. No article in a long time has appealed to me as this did. It is most informing and interesting. Let us have more like it. It is stuff like this that makes the paper worth while to my mind."—C. G. Lister, Berkeley, Cal. We can fill the order. This article was prepared after wide reading by our office editor, Mrs. J. Van Osdel. She ought to have signed the article, but she saw the proof sheets last. Certainly we will give you another article like this when they discover another "Tut."

Leave the Scrapping to Others

Rev. George D. Knights of the First Church, Long Beach, Cal., writes, since Coué came to Chicago: "I want to speak a word of commendation for the present showing of THE BAPTIST. Controversial stuff does not greatly enrich my sheep and lambs and I am glad that we are getting so much splendid material at the present time. . . . If a privately owned paper wants to cover the controversial I have no objection, but for the denominational organ, it seems to me that there is enough to hit the constructive." Here! Here!

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 258.)

Rushbrooke has been in various parts of Europe, and he has just returned from a visit to Russia. He finds that the Baptists are preparing to go to Stockholm. The reports in our own papers are now more reassuring, and the outlook seems favorable for the meeting at Stockholm. We are glad to be told that American Baptists will probably be well represented. Already the larger part of the space reserved on the steamship "America" has been engaged by delegates, and many will go on other vessels.

During the last half of the month Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has been giving a series of lectures in Seattle. The first week in the afternoon he spoke upon "The Historic Christ—a Study of the Records;" in the evening on "The Bible—Some Reconsiderations." During the last week his afternoon subject was "Studies in Grace" and the evening "Meditations Around the Cross." The meetings were held in the First Church auditorium.

M. S. Anuta and J. M. Hestenes were ordained to the gospel ministry, Wednesday, March 14, at the First Church of Hammond. Rev. W. F. Bostick, pastor of First Church, acted as moderator; W. S. T. Bassett, of First Church, South Bend, clerk; Rev. Carlos M. Dinsmore, Indianapolis, examiner. The ordination sermon was preached by Mr. Dinsmore. Mr. Anuta is a Russian Pole and Mr. Hestenes a Norwegian by birth. Together they have charge of the work at Brooks House.

The United States Department of Labor will issue soon a report which shows conditions in the beet fields of Michigan. The report relates to more than 500 families scattered through three counties of the state. In these families 67 per cent of the children, boys and girls between the ages of six and sixteen, were found at work in the fields One-fourth of these child workers were less than fourteen years of age. This help is recruited from the cities of the state and surrounding states. The housing conditions are bad. All in all it will be worth while to church workers in the beet growing section to secure this report.

Four organizations have undertaken to hold more than 2,000 conferences and mass meetings throughout the United States for the purpose of urging more effective American cooperation in organizing the world against future wars. These meetings began on March 4. The headquarters of the campaign have been established in New York at the office of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches. The other cooperating organizations are the Church Peace Union, the World Peace Foundation of Boston and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. These bodies represent virtually every religious denomination in the country. Among the speakers who will address these meetings are: George W. Wickersham, formerly United States attorney general; Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University; William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York and chairman of the World Alliance; Hamilton Holt, editor the Independent and chairman of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation; Nehemiah Boynton, formerly moderator of the Congregational church; Herbert S. Houston, publisher of Our World and formerly president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World; Major General O'Ryan; Everett Colby of New York; Henry A. Atkinson, executive secretary of the World Alliance; Rev. Harry E. Fosdick of New York; Bishop Luther Wilson of New York; Rev. Edward Cummings of Boston, secretary of the World Peace Foundation; Linley V. Gordon, associate secretary of the World Alliance; Frederick Lynch, educational secretary of the World Alliance; Rev. Samuel Eliot of New York.

Great help has been given in the restoration of devastated churches in France and Belgium through the Federal Council of Churches. The latter was responsible also for the calling of the Copenhagen conference on relief work for the churches of Europe, which led to the organization of the central office for relief work, most of the expense of which is being carried by the church boards of America. This conference, which was attended by seventy-two persons representing thirty-seven different communions and church federations of twenty countries, was noteworthy as being the first time European churches had stepped over denominational lines and national boundaries in friendly cooperation.

The Legend of the Lilies

By Arthur E. Cowley

I HEARD an Easter legend told
Of how the lilies came,
Those flow'ry emblems white and gold
That God's great art acclaim.

'Tis said that on the Eastern Morn
When Christ stept from the tomb,
To bring to us eternal dawn
And banish death and gloom,
Where'er his feet, so gracious, trod
And pressed the virgin earth,
There passed a tremor through the sod
That gave the lilies birth.

If it be true I cannot say,
But this my heart doth know,
Where'er his footprints mark the way
The loveliest flowers grow.

A judge who for the last sixteen years had presided over the Chicago Municipal Court has thoroughly investigated the social and personal effects of alcoholism. He says that 20 per cent of the jails in the United States have been without prisoners since the prohibitory amendment went into effect, and that of the remaining 80 per cent the number has been reduced anywhere from 15 to 80 per cent.

Alan C. Valentine, the Rhodes Scholar from Swarthmore College at Oxford University has written in the American Friend of the value of "the right kind of tradition" which he finds there. He says: "There are no locks on the doors at Balliol—simply because no one seems to consider the possibility of thieves. The locker-room man tells me that although every gymnasium locker has a lock and key, he has never heard of their being used, and any one who locked his locker would be committing a social blunder. There is no roughhouse, no broken furniture.....not because it would be impossible, and not because the men are not 'red-blooded,' but simply because they would consider it childish as a general thing."

Mrs. Nancy Judson Tolman, widow of Rev. John N. Tolman, a member of the First Church, Chicago, and a resident of Chicago for thirty years, died March 20, at the age of ninety-nine years.

Dr. M. P. Hunt, pastor of the West Broadway Church, Louisville, Ky., has resigned his pastorate in order to become secretary of the anti-gambling commission of the state.

The Temple Church of Wheeling, W. Va., and the First Church have merged. This action, long under consideration, will doubtless strengthen Baptist work in that city.

Dr. George Burnett has resigned the presidency of Tennessee College after serving for fifteen years. He proposes to take time to rest before deciding upon his future work.

The first annual conference of the Baptist Bible Union of America is to be held in Kansas City, Mo., May 10-15. Dr. W. B. Riley of Minneapolis promises to provide a fuller statement of the plans for the meeting. The executive committee of the union is R. E. Neighbor, Elyria, Ohio; O. W. Van Osdel, Grand Rapids, Mich.; W. L. Pettingill, Philadelphia; W. B. Riley, Minneapolis and J. Frank Norris, Fort Worth, Tex.

According to the "Continent," the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches of Steele City, Neb., have united to form a Presbyterian church. Does this mean that Methodist plus Baptist plus Congregationalist equals Presbyterian? The same journal states that the Christian and Presbyterian churches of Diller, Neb., have "federated" and are now a Congregational church. We confess that we are bewildered.

Bishop Charles Edward Locke, in the New York Times, says that there is great rejoicing here both among Americans and Filipinos that Gov. Gen. Leonard Wood has decided to remain at his important post in the Philippines. Personally the governor general is a very agreeable gentleman. He is accessible to the humblest. Anyone is impressed with his sincerity and his unselfishness. His versatility is seen in his detailed knowledge of all the branches of government. He neglects nothing, and nothing escapes his keen observation. He possesses enormous energy and is popular among all classes. He is a man of strong religious convictions. Every Sunday morning finds him in his place of worship.

In the issue of March 3, there is an unsigned article, "At the European Door of America." This article first appeared in the Metropolitan Bulletin and is, as you note, a "publicity" article. In sending this, with another, to us Dr. C. H. Sears said: "It has occurred to me that you might use one or both of the enclosed articles. They appeared in the Metropolitan Bulletin but you need not refer to the bulletin in printing them unless you so desire inasmuch as in the nature of the case the Metropolitan Bulletin has a very small circulation. In re-reading them it strikes me that they may have some general value." Doctor Sears now calls attention to the fact that credit was not given for this article—above is the reason.

The Baptist

The Lord of the Keys

OUR Lord holds them! Amid the splendor of John's vision on lonely Patmos, when he had fallen like one dead at the feet of the majestic Being with a countenance dazzling as the sun and a voice as the sound of many waters, that One reached forth his right hand and laid it upon him, saying, "Fear not, I am the first and the last and the Living One; and I was dead and behold, I am alive forevermore, and I have the keys of death and of Hades."

To the startled women at the empty tomb of Christ the two angelic guards in shining apparel said, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" And when Paul the apostle would stir the Christians of Colossae from low conceptions of religion and from gross sensuality of life he exclaimed, "If then ye were raised together with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ is."

Our Lord with the keys has, for us and for all who will consent to have it so, locked death in and let life out, forever and forever. It is the throbbing message of Resurrection Day; it is very symbolism of the ordinance of baptism; it is the central note of Christianity itself. Christ has shut and locked the tomb with death inside. He conquered it in mortal combat; then turning his back upon the tomb, he straightway set his feet in the shining upward way and he takes us with him.

The Christian should live and do business in that higher sphere, "where Christ is." All life which Christ has touched is lifted into the sphere of his living. The Christian should straighten himself up from his money-grubbing and amusement-seeking and look often toward the stars and the clear heavens; he should think less of the buzzing of troublesome insects and more of the mighty orbs which swing through space at the touch of the finger of God; he should shut his ears to the jazz about him and listen until he begins to hear the far music of the angels and the redeemed about God's throne. It is not that he is to be neglectful of earth and humanity and common duties; but for him they become transformed—the dull becomes radiantly beautiful, the monotonous takes on intense interest, even the painful and disagreeable can be gently endured, since that day when the Lord of the Keys shut death in and let life out and started on that upward way taking us with him.

It is so different from everything besides. The attempts of our unaided human hearts to attain a fuller life, or to pierce the secrets of the future life are so pathetic and futile even for the wisest and wealthiest, while for the ignorant and poor they are tragic. The Breton peasants believe that they may gain from the dead information as to the course of events. A Paris paper shortly before the great war told of the death of Corentine Le Cleche, who was "Listener to the Dead" for her village for thirty years. Long hours were spent by her in the cemetery listening on behalf of the other villagers to voices from those lying silent beneath the sod, in order to learn how this villager might make a good marriage for his daughter, another a good bargain in a trade, still another draw a prize at the lottery. And there among the graves the "listener" was found dead with hands pitifully outstretched as though in supplication for the answer to life's last great question.

But our Lord with the keys has solved the secrets of death and the mysteries of life. Though he may not confide them all to us here and now, it is enough that he knows them, and that we are walking with one to whom the way has no mysteries and no contingencies. We may rejoice in this Easter season in spite of the world's unrest and turbulence; in spite of uncertainty in our denominational outlook or in that of our own local church; in spite of sudden summons which has taken from our side noble and seemingly indispensable leaders or the closest and dearest of friends. Nay we look up at the near or distant or unpredictable approach of the shadowy messenger who is to beckon us upon our last journey, with utter serenity. Our Lord of the Keys has taken away the sting and the dread forever, and given us something beautiful in its stead.

"Think of stepping on shore and finding it Heaven!
Of taking hold of a hand and finding it God's hand,
Of breathing a new air and finding it celestial air,
Of feeling invigorated and finding it immortality,
Of passing from storm and tempest to an unknown calm,
Of waking up and finding it Home!"

The Local Church

WE are very solicitous for the welfare of all our local churches because upon them depends the future of our denomination. All productivity of ministers, missionaries and money, as well as all the dynamic needed to project what is produced, must come out of the local bodies. A casual glance around the situation leads us to fear that the above fact is often lost sight of when the plans and programs are being built in some center far away from the agencies that must produce every element needed to make the plans and programs a success.

The Northern Baptist Convention is a democracy made up of delegates from the units called local churches. Every local church is entitled to representation in that body. The delegates attending the sessions of the convention are supposed to represent their church and not themselves, and for that purpose they must be appointed by and receive their credentials from the local church.

In spite of this fact we often hear it asserted that the local church has no voice in determining policies and practices in connection with the denominational program. In fact, it is often said, "Too much comes from above down to the local church and the only interest the denomination has in the local church is to exploit it for all that it can get." If there is any great amount of truth in this statement then a change in procedure is needed at once, so that every local church shall have a real chance to speak its mind upon the policies and practices that shall determine the united objectives of all our churches.

The less of pressure from above and the more of lift from below that can be produced will in the long run determine the progress of the denomination. We, therefore, earnestly hope that in increasing volume there will come up from the local groups to those individuals or collective bodies who serve them in representative capacity such plain and unmistakable directions as to the conduct of all our enterprises that in the future "the will to serve and produce" contained in the local churches shall be built into all that we aim to do, and do, at home and abroad.

The denomination will be strong in so far as there is strength, vision and the spirit of cooperation in the local churches. Leadership at the top is essential, but it is just as essential at the other end.

In the future we ought to kindle the spirit of democracy in our local churches so that the increasing measure of their participation and growth will mean the doing of more and larger things around the world.

Courts Are Exacting

WE are deeply pained to learn that two of our missionary societies have recently lost $5,000 each because a will drawn by a devoted Baptist woman did not contain the exact names of the missionary societies. It is a thousand pities that this accident occurred, but it is liable to happen again.

We were told recently by Secy. Charles L. White, of the Home Mission Society, that while on one of his trips to the Pacific Coast a Baptist woman gave him the following brief but surprising story:

"When I read a recent article of yours on the loss that certain of the missionary societies sustained because of an incorrect corporate name which could not be passed on, I was so impressed with the fact that the same thing might occur at any time unless persons making wills should secure the exact corporate name of the various societies, which the Probate Court had been introducing into many wills, that I immediately called on the telephone a prominent Baptist woman of wealth, remembering she had made her will and named a missionary society. When I asked her if she were positive that the correct name had been given in her will she said that it was barely possible that she could have made a mistake and that she would ask her attorney who drew the will at once to meet her in the safety deposit vault and examine the will if I would take to the bank the correct corporate names of the missionary societies."

To the amazement of this friend, the names of each missionary society were incorrectly given—some of them were almost beyond recognition. On comparing the names in the will with the correct ones, the lawyer expressed great astonishment. Of course that will was corrected, but we are wondering how many other men and women have made the same mistake. Would it not be worth while to check up this matter?

The Emergency God

THAT God is a refuge, an ever-present help in trouble, the scriptures make perfectly plain. He is a God who helps men in emergencies. We fear, however, that all too many men think of God almost exclusively in the times of crisis. We do not minimize the value of his ministrations in the trying hours of life but would call attention to the experience of men which seems to indicate that what God is to them in an emergency is determined largely by what he is to them in every-day life. God does help men in their extremity; but he wants to be more than an emergency God.

We are all familiar with man's devices to meet emergencies. Our automobiles are equipped with two brakes—a service brake and an emergency brake. The first we use habitually and instinctively —instinctively because habitually. The use of the second requires deliberate thought and action. By experience we have found that in the moment of danger we have seemed to forget the emergency help which was at hand. We knew that the device was there. We knew that it was built to meet unusual need but in the crisis we have depended upon the ordinary helps to which we have become accustomed.

This crude illustration may help to make clear our meaning. God is ready to help in man's extremity. God is a present help in trouble. He is that and more to the man who daily seeks companionship with him. The man who forgets God in the routine of life is in danger of failing to call upon him in the hour of need. The tendency will be for him to lean upon the same staff upon which he has daily depended. God is able to meet our needs in the hour of our greatest extremity. Happy is the man who calls upon him out of his distress. Thrice happy the man who in all his ways acknowledges him.

A Page of Opinion

The Call to the Church

IN a pre-Easter message to the churches, the commission on evangelism and life service of the Federal Council of Churches declares that the world's deepest need today is a vital personal religion:

"When has the world's need for sympathy and brotherhood been so impelling and beseeching as it is today? When have hate and selfishness so nearly brought ruin to all that is helpful and good? How shall the church perform today the task to which God has sent her as the light of the world and the salt of the earth, if her own lamp is not trimmed and burning and her own life so true that she can be the purifying influence in a time of selfishness and sin?

"The call to the church is first of all a summons to prayer and consecration. We need to confess our shortcomings and to be ashamed of our aloofness, our sinfulness and complacency. Let us examine ourselves before we take others to task. Hatred and selfish unconcern will cease among the nations when they cease in the individual hearts of men and women.

"There is a deepening conviction among men that the greatest power on earth is the power of prayer. It will release more energy for the world's help than any other agency. Pentecosts are ever at hand and will fall upon the church when by the same method that precipitated the first Pentecost she brings herself close to the Infinite.

"Our topics for the Easter season present Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. There is no human need so great that he cannot meet it; there is no want that he cannot satisfy. Once more we follow in his footsteps through the tender teaching, the holy fellowship, the cruel scourging and the agony of the cross. With greater hope than ever we hail the Easter dawn and pray that the light of that great day may illuminate the world.

"The world's deepest need is not political, is not economic; it is, in every age, and above all at the present hour, the need of vital personal religion."

"A Good Mixer"

THE American Friend, in a timely warning against cheapening of a worthy calling speaks some plain truths: "Is he a good mixer? This ideal of the ministry has done its ignoble part in cheapening this most worthy of callings. It does not contemplate the minister as a preacher, pastor and spiritual guide, but as boomer of the church. 'He is an official handshaker and back-slapper.' He is a ringer of doorbells, a convener of committees, an advertising manager, a runner on philanthropic errands, a drinker of tea, and alas, too often, a desperately unproductive preacher. When a man can do a multitude of little things with smiling gusto and an appearance of success he is accredited as a 'live wire.' When he can go among profane men without making them ashamed of their profanity he is a 'good mixer.' He does get certain people into the church for a time, but often does them little real good after he gets them there. He sacrifices the time necessary to the cultivation of his mind and the enrichment of his soul in the interests of a lot of irrelevant and unprofitable enterprises. He labors from early morning to late at night until his enthusiasm for trifles expends itself, and then he moves on to another church. But he has never taken the time to learn his proper business, and has lost his opportunity in a vain attempt to satisfy the querulous demand for a 'good mixer.'

"These least common denominator people do succeed in moving about with a wonderful social ease and so we produce the social mongrel who so often achieves a practical success of such extraordinary character. But it does seem clear that we must produce a kind of sympathy and understanding which will give the rewards of social success to those who are finely loyal to a noble type rather than to those who are adepts in social compromise.

"The minister should possess an attractive personality and a zeal for righteousness. He should be approachable and lovable and faithful to conviction. He should be a leader, an interpreter of spiritual truth, a 'man of God furnished completely unto every good work.' But when a congregation seeks first 'a good mixer,' for its minister it is unconsciously degrading the person and purpose of the pastor, and the ancient proverb fittingly applies, 'And it shall be, like people, like priest.'"

The Fellowship of the Resurrection

In the issue of March 22, the Congregationalist says:

"There is a fellowship of the resurrection. Paul refers to the early Christians as those who were risen with Christ (Col. 3: 1), and the privilege of early Christians is the privilege of their successors.

The fellowship of Christians, in love one to another and in the ministry of the Gospel toward the world that Jesus came to save, is the end and purpose of the resurrection, as it is the surest proof of the living presence and power of Christ. His presence in the soul—creating love for the sinful and erring, sympathy for the weak, freedom for the strong, and the passion to understand and enter into fellowship with all who love the Lord—is the evidence of personal faith in the doctrine of the resurrection. The new life in Christ is inseparable from an ideal of fellowship in his name."

Would Change One Word

"CHRISTIANITY—the Greatest World Religion" is a caption in one of our exchanges. If we were to phrase this we would say, "Christianity the Only World Religion." Some of the non-Christian religions fit in well with the habits and customs of certain peoples. But the gospel of Christ will work the same far-reaching transformation in the life of the oriental and occidental. Christianity seeks nothing less than world dominion.

The Easter Hope

By I. G. Matthews

EASTER day has been, of all days, in the Christian calendar, perhaps the most significant. The early church, with very good reason, designated it as the day for the commemoration of our Lord. In the cycle of the year it is the open door to the spring time. In world religion it was the natural season for the observance of the spring festival, as the powers of nature were then in the height of their promise. Throughout Asia and Rome, in the early centuries of Christianity, paganism held its chief celebrations with great rejoicing and with most significant religious rites at this time of the year. The church, with its living faith, a sure foundation for joy, could not long lag behind the heathen world in a manifest expression of joy, nor could it easily avoid the commemoration of special days.

The resurrection of Jesus was, to the Apostolic church, one of its most assured facts. It was the focal point in the thought of most of the early writers and leaders. This belief gave the early disciples strength and courage to undertake the stupendous task of world-evangelism. It so quickened their shattered hopes that they became the intrepid propagandists of the gospel of the kingdom.

The Basis of Christian Conduct

Paul made it basal to Christian hope and conduct. As Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, we too might live and move in a new sphere of life. He argued that the power working in each Christian was a power which operates in the strength of the might which the Father exerted in raising Christ from the dead. In his lengthiest discussion of the resurrection, the great apostle, in his own vigorous way, concludes: If Christ did not rise, your faith is futile, you are still in your sins, . . . we are of all men to be most pitied.

The first historian of the Christian church places an essential emphasis on the resurrection of Christ. The climax of each of the numerous addresses recorded in the book of Acts, is to the effect that God, by the resurrection from the dead, made this very Jesus to be both Lord and Christ.

Christ the Lord Is Risen

"CHRIST the Lord is risen today"—
Sons of men and angels say:
Raise your joys and triumphs high;
Sing, ye heavens, and earth, reply.

Vain the stone, the watch, the seal,
Christ has burst the gates of hell;
Death in vain forbids him rise;
Christ has opened Paradise.

Soar we now where Christ has led,
Following our exalted Head,
Made like him, like him we rise;
Ours the cross, the grave, the skies.

—Charles Wesley.

The same hope steeled the early martyrs so that for the moment they forgot the tortures of the flesh and endured as seeing him who is invisible. A fact so central in the thought of the Christian people, living among those who observed times and seasons, could not fail to demand in due time a special place in the days of the year for the commemoration of so signal a belief.

True, the spiritual ideal of worship had been proclaimed by Jesus. Yet, as human beings who live in a very concrete world, places and times have always a very deep significance for us. A certain pew in the village church, or a little room in the old home may conjure up memories that very readily and very deeply grip our moral and spiritual nature. Days likewise lay hold on our imaginations. Anniversaries of great events, properly observed, add to the fulness of individual life; and days of national significance enrich the moral tone and idealism of any people.

Danger, indeed, may lurk in formalities. Observance of days may easily become to unthinking minds of no more value than the slavish devotion of the pagan to his ancient ritual. In early times many forgot the injunction of Paul —let no one take you to task on questions of . . . the observance of festivals or new moons or Sabbaths. The church split into two warring factions as to the day on which Easter should be observed; and it seems curious to us that Rome valued conformity so greatly, that she finally excommunicated all the Christian world that would not observe as Easter the Sunday after the first full moon of the spring month.

Later centuries, lured by the speculative possibilities of a doctrine of the resurrection, ofttimes foolishly spent their energies in inconclusive dialectics as to the how and the what of this important truth. Valuable as all such discussion may be as an aid to clearness of thought, the conviction that Jesus lives and the personal realization of his spiritual presence, was and is the essential fact in the great doctrine for practical Christianity.

The Abiding Presence

In the early church, it was this that was its hope and mainstay. This made radiantly triumphant all their experiences. Was the saint called upon to pay the final penalty for his testimony to the truth? The heavens were opened and the Son of Man was seen standing at the right hand of God. Was the church sore distraught by enemies? Jesus himself appeared in the road and barred the way to further aggression. Was the early interpretation of the gospel called into question by Judaizers? Then Paul appeals to personal experience with the Christ who lives in him. Were great disasters looming up ahead and serious defections at work within? Then came the vision of Jesus moving out and in among the churches. The reality of the abiding presence of the Master was the important fact in the history of the early church.

Apart from this consciousness the church becomes decadent. With such a living conviction there is uninterrupted confidence and consequent conquest. This is its glory and the very nerve-center of a vigorous, growing life. Not only in the first generations of our history, but through the passing of the centuries, "he who is and who was and is coming" has ever been walking among the churches.

This confidence is based not only in the marvelous triumph of the gospel in the early days and in the recorded testimony of early writers, but also in the character of Jesus. The bonds of death could not hold him. A person with his moral courage, his rare spiritual discernment and his resplendent character could not be holden by the grave. In a moral and spiritual world such a conclusion would be impossible. It would mean a collapse of highest values. A mechanistic theory of life does not explain him. In his contacts with his disciples and others there was always the unexplained spiritual overtone of divine personality.

The heart of man cannot escape the conviction that such qualities, such powers and such a personality are more than the transient episodes of a passing order. The law of conservation of energy assures us that the beauty or the fragrance of the flower, the light reflected in the dewdrop or imprisoned in the seam of coal, is never lost. Nor less necessary is this law in the less understood realm of human life. The beauty of the Master's character, the subtle potentialities of his personality, are our highest apologetic for immortality. The abiding worth of human life is more easily grasped when we see it in the illumined face of the Saviour of men.

To this we may add his own recorded conviction of a future life and the establishment therein of permanent personal relations. This is in accord with the hope of all men, and the conviction of the best men of all ages in their moments of greatest illumination. "Let not your heart be troubled," has come to the seeker for light on the beyond, as the cherished belief of all the saints. To the child-like faith of Jesus, a place in the heavenly home was assured to all the Father's children.

It is in the light of these two facts—the beauty and perfection of human character as seen most eminently in Jesus, and the firm conviction of the noblest minded men of all ages that the soul of man goes on uninterruptedly, that the Christian finds his fairest horizons and his surest hope of a perfected life.

Hence, there is in the church that perennial joy that finds its most expressive moment at Easter. The season speaks to us of that life that is eternal rather than temporal, spiritual rather than carnal.

Today, with the encroachments of the material into all the domains of life, we need this vision and we do well, at least annually, to commemorate the resurrection of Christ. If Jesus is risen, then even this life is more than food and raiment. It is touched by a nobler passion than the dancing and the mourning of the market place. Its joys are those that are abiding, and neither are they chiefly nourished by environment nor unduly disturbed by physical disaster. They are drawn from the springs of that life which is hid with God in Christ Jesus. Our hopes are not limited to time and space; they center in values that are projected into the great beyond. To all the weary sons of toil who share this faith, the horizons of life are lifted, and the music swells out into a nobler symphony than was ever inspired by the mortal.

Gladly, then, do we join in the universal worship at the Eastertide. For us it embodies the deepest truth and the highest hopes of all generations of Christians. With profound reverence of heart, facing the mystery of being, we join in the old, old chorus, that, with the passing of years, has lost nothing of its sublimity:

Hallelujah, he is risen!
Hallelujah! amen.

Chester, Pa.

From Life to Miracle or from Miracle to Life

By Newton George Thomas

EVERY religion boasts its miracles and immaculate conceptions but Christianity alone presents a resurrection. In its dignity it presents a plea that has no precedent. As climax to a tale it is isolated in its grandeur. The resurrection throws light into the darkest field of human thought. Upon it Paul spent the full splendor of his imagination and the utmost depths of his philosophy. Without question he deemed it the keystone of an arch that was to span the entire horizon of human thinking.

The Master Argument

"If Christ be not risen, then is your faith vain" was the master argument of this master of argument. From the moment of its astounding announcement the resurrection seems to have occupied just that place in the Christian's faith and philosophy. Over and over in his system of apologetics have the evidences of that sublime occurrence been discussed. The casual comment of the centurion at the cross, the needlessness of desecration of a corpse observed by a guard, the placement of his body in an unused tomb, the Roman seal upon its door and the Roman soldiery about it, the incriminating quotation "lest his disciples come and take him away," the utter lack of expectation of his followers, and their incredulity in the occurrence on first announcement—have all been opposed to the theories of Straus and Renan and their peers. The contention seems to have been and seems still to be drawn from the Pauline theorem that if it can be proved that Jesus rose from the dead Jesus has the right of insistence upon human faith in himself and the superstructure of Christianity is safe.

GO to dark Gethsemane
Ye that feel the tempter's power;
Your Redeemer's conflict see,
Watch with him one bitter hour;
Turn not from his griefs away,
Learn of Jesus Christ to pray.
—James Montgomery.

Our Faith Is Not Vain

How apart all this seems from the pungent logic of the major apostle! It surprises that so much time and effort have been given to this interpretation and that such importance should be placed on the event. The impression is inescapable from the reading that this might not have been the Pauline argument after all, that it is not the point he urges. It appears rather that this is a reversal of the intended order. "If Christ be not risen then is your faith vain." His hearers sense a subtle insinuation, a challenge. "But our faith is not vain! It has been testified to our innermost consciousness." The conclusion is definite. Therefore is Christ raised. The apostle's method is from the living testimony, from vital Christianity to miracle not from miracle to Christianity. The method implies from Christ to resurrection rather than from the resurrection to Christ.

To the novitiate reading the gospel history, the matchless teaching of the Nazarene, the sunlit perfectness of his life, the illuminating beneficence of his hands, the persistence of his affection, the endlessness of his patience command the mind to concede him to be the complete composite of godliness. Christ himself is the master miracle! At his touch health returns where disease has destroyed; at his word vitality surges where death would foreclose its claim; where death has conquered his command reconquers. These are the incidents of his day while he is the supreme event. Is it easy to conceive that he could be a prey to the things he vanquished?

It is easy to say that denial of the resurrection implies denial of the entire gospel narrative, but the denial is not so easy. Intelligence stops short of that. The Christ of history is not deniable and to dismiss the resurrection while accepting him is to deny the possibility of a molehill while ascending the Matterhorn. Can the imagination depict the Lord of Peter and James and John beside the road crying "unclean," or feeling his way with a blind man's step, or with arm atrophied, pendant, useless at his side, or a prisoner in a grave?

Pity the Man Whose Soul Needs Miracles

In this non-miraculous age, non-miraculous in the mystical sense of the Galilean's days, denial of miracles comes easy to the lips because so many refuse to recognize the great emprise of God. But physical miracles need not be impossible to be excluded from the day's events. Perhaps a better day of spiritual vision, of spiritual truth has dawned. Pitiable is the man whose soul needs miracles in a non-miracle, in a spiritual age. When Jesus wrought, ages of Phariseeism had darkened vision, stopped ears, calloused the touch of the soul and there were needed illustrations that the gross might sense. Hence miracles. Then men had eyes for loaves and meat but none for the bread that came from heaven; they had fingers that could grasp the hand of a resurrected friend but no spiritual touch that could sense a living soul; they heard the voice say "Peace be still" and saw the waves sleep at the Master's feet but no spiritual tympanum vibrated when he said "Thy sins be forgiven thee." He stood in their presence the greatest miracle of all and they cried "Show us a sign." Knowing him in the beauty of his holiness is it not easy to believe that he rose though no disciple saw him in the garb of his victory; believe it because he said it, because he was Truth?

Nor does this minimize the importance of the august event of the first Lord's day morning. It stood a landmark on the memory to the first disciples. To it they clung and for it they died. The greatness of its need he proved by his many returns as well as the frequent pledge in former days of its occurrence. One might be forgiven for speculating on how the Christ evolved the concept of his own resurrection. His belief in it was not to be compared with the general vague conception of the Jews of a resurrection at the last day. Perhaps his soul's strong resentment that death could end so great a mission might have given rise to it. Perhaps it was a confidence in his father's love that assured him that he would not be left a prey to death. It may be that the response that life made to his will gave thought of the indestructibility of his own life.

O JESU, King of gentleness,
Do thou thyself our hearts possess,
That we may give thee all our days,
The tribute of our grateful praise;
O Lord of all, with us abide
In this our joyful Eastertide,
From every weapon death can wield,
Thine own redeemed forever shield.

The strife is o'er, the battle done,
The victory of life is won,
The song of triumph has begun.

All praise be thine, O risen Lord,
From death to endless life restored,
All praise to God, the Father be,
And Holy Ghost eternally.

—HORATIO W. PARKER.

Christ Completes the Assurance

More than all this, as the Son of Man must he answer the last, sad cry of man. It is necessary that he shall complete the assurance that if a man die he shall live again. The human dream of immortality he would bring to certainty. He must prove that the dread bourne from which no philosophy had ever recovered a single mariner is peopled with those who are liberated and have left their earthly tenements for more permanent abodes.

The Dream of Youth

It must not be thought that immortality is the faint hope of those whose interest here have waned or vanished. Immortality is the dream of youth and of manhood's aspiration. Men have always appraised their efforts in terms of perpetuity. With this hope have they struggled. With faith in the unmeasured tomorrow they have made their major sacrifices. The worth of a thing is tested by its reach and so the best argument of faith comes from the lips of those engaged in great endeavor. The strong man's pledge to duty and to righteousness has always been sealed by the belief that character lives. Could it be possible that man's journey from the hieroglyphs of the aborigines to the colored dreams of Raphael, from the dwelling of the troglodyte to St. Peter's and St. Paul's, from the jargon of the Hottentot to the mighty measures of Miltonic speech, from the strange, sad wail of the pagan's reed to the victorious diapason of Handel's Messiah, from the superstitions of the savage to the sinlessness and freedom of Jesus is to end when triumph is nearest by finding the flight of the soul cut off by death? Jesus took the answer of this question out of the realm of supposition and probability and gave the advancing spirit a glorious certitude. "I am he that liveth that was dead", he cried, "and because I live ye shall live also."

University of Illinois.
College of Dentistry.

Holy Week in the Holy Land

By Herbert Hines

A VISIT to the Holy Land is a thrilling experience that cannot be described or duplicated—it can only be lived! All that is sacred and most dear in the tender relations of our Christian experience is illumined with a brilliant actuality. The ineffable pilgrim inspiration which poets, orators and musicians have sought to reproduce by all the allurements of their several arts, suddenly grips you with mundane reality. Yes, here they are—the little town of Bethlehem where our Saviour came to be among men; Zion, city of our God, with its ancient battlements and gray towers standing out massive and monumental as though a part of the everlasting hills that are about them; Nazareth, where one can readily imagine the boy Jesus deftly at work in Joseph's carpenter shop; and the shimmering shores of blue Galilee where Jesus loved to be. You will, however, have the acme of emotional thrills if you spend a few weeks before Easter in Jerusalem. The first week or so in and around it will furnish you the necessary topographical knowledge, the historical associations of the different spots, and will prepare you to enter into the spirit of Holy Week. The experience of reconstructing the scenes of the Saviour's last week with the aid of the very spots and the blessed memories clustering about them will create lifelong impressions that nothing can efface.

Palm Sunday, a few years ago, found a small group of visitors in Jerusalem at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher; but these Protestant trained Christians, not being able to get much inspiration from a Latin mass, felt keen disappointment at the tawdriness of the celebration. So from the crowd and press, tinsel and incense of the gloomy church they walked slowly on in reverence through the city gates, along the dusty road to Bethany, the road of the triumphal entry. They returned to the city behind a band of the most picturesque and pious of all pilgrims who used to journey to the Sacred Land—the Russians, who were weeping for joy, singing hallelujah and from time to time bowing down to kiss the road in inexpressible devotion to him who had walked that way.

Thursday in the Garden

During the week we were often in the city, in the temple area and upon the Mount of Olives, pondering the events which this anniversary week served to impress, and thinking what they have meant to the world—and to us. But Thursday evening was the high-water mark of the week for inspirational services. Every year it is customary for the English church and American colony members to hold services in the Garden of Gethsemane in memory of the evening when Jesus sweat drops of blood for the sins of humanity. I chose to go with the American colony for the obvious reason that I was their guest during my more than three weeks' stay in Jerusalem. This is a tranquil, communistic colony of about 110 pious, self-effacing souls who are seeking to live the highest form of Christian life. They do this with a great measure of success, consequently they knew how to enter into the spirit of the evening. By conjuring up your own feelings you can easily imagine the impression of such a memorial sing, first in the quiet of Gethsemane near the very spot where Jesus prayed while his followers slept, then farther up the hillside of Olivet, where we could overlook the city. The starlight added to the somber stillness of Jerusalem. The sight of the city over which Jesus wept moves to tears more than ever, for its dirt, squalor, ignorance and superstition still bespeak the fact that it has not given heed unto the words of the Master. The impressive hymn, "It is well with my soul," especially its "When peace like a river," written by the founder of the American colony, gave the keynote of the evening and sent us home, some in tears, all in silence, conscious that an experience of a lifetime had been ours.

Friday we went over the Via Dolorosa, which the Catholic church has marked off by fourteen so-called "stations of the cross," places where the events on the road to Calvary were supposed to have happened. For example, one is where the cross was laid on Jesus, another marks the spot where Simon of Cyrene took the cross before him. The fourteenth and last station is the holy sepulcher itself, the genuineness of the place of which some doubt.

Soldiers at the Sepulcher

The Church of the Holy Sepulcher, like the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem, is a great disappointment to many visitors. The civil authorities hold the property, but permit Greek, Latin and Armenian Christians to use it, allotting a special time to each. But in order to keep the guests from murdering one another, they place a number of soldiers there. This really is a necessity, because there have been fights and massacres among the Christian sects in the Grotto of the Nativity, and there would be more if cold steel did not overwhelm. The spectacle of soldiers at the birth and burial places of the Prince of Peace to keep his followers from butchering one another is a bit repulsive to the western pilgrim and ludicrous to the Jews and Mohammedans. On this particular occasion, however, the soldiers gave a realistic tinge. They seemed almost a necessity in the reproduction of the service, for, like the Roman soldiers of old, they stood about keeping peace and order amid the throng that crowded in to the crucifixion service, some to mock, some to mourn and some merely to see what was going on.

All the details of the Franciscan service bordered on realism. But the impressive thing about it all was that as we went about in the crowd we saw people following the service from prayer books written in their own languages—six different languages we saw. How many more there were we did not know. Many nations and tongues gather about the cross! That evening there was a three-hour service in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher under Catholic auspices.

Easter in Jerusalem

Easter morn was a glorious one! The coolness of the morning air was tempered by the soft rays of the early sun, the singing of the birds, the greenness of the grass—indeed, the whole atmosphere about Jerusalem made it easy to bring in upon us the whole story of Easter life: "He is not here, he is risen," and "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" We were early at the sepulcher, for the Latin service began at 7 a. m., and we must needs secure good places. The service was indeed beautiful to look upon, but frightfully unintelligible. The procession around the place of the holy sepulcher after the service was most spectacular. The effect upon the assembled multitude was powerful, and upon many American Catholics who were there, overwhelming. But as was the case the week before, I had to flee away for the full appreciation of the day. Breaking away from the party I went to the Mount of Olives and there, sitting under a large olive tree on the hillside, from where I could see directly below the Garden of Gethsemane, the city and the temple area, I read the narratives of the last days of Jesus—alone and in full sight of the hallowed spots! For me Christ arose again that day, and the Old Book became a New Book.

Kankakee, Ill.

Death, the Beginning

SHAPELESS and grim,
A Shadow dim
O'erhung the ways,
And darkened all my days.
And all who saw,
With bated breath,
Said, "It is Death!"

And I, in weakness
Slipping towards the Night,
In sore affright
Looked up. And lo!—
No Spectre grim,
But just a dim,
Sweet face,
A sweet high mother-face,
A face like Christ's own
mother's face,
Alight with tenderness
And grace.

"Thou art not Death!" I cried—
For Life's supremest fantasy
Had never thus envisaged
Death to me—
"Thou art not Death—the End!"

In accents winning,
Came the answer,—"Friend,
There is no Death!
I am the Beginning,
—Not the End!"

—John Oxenham.

The Kingdom and the Printing Press

By Gilbert N. Brink

NINETY-NINE years ago the American Baptist Publication Society was organized to promote evangelical religion by means of the Bible, the printing press, colportage, and other appropriate ways. The Word of God is given not for any age, but for all time. The Publication Society is the chief instrument among Baptists for circulating this charter of Christian faith throughout the world. During its long years of service the Publication Society has printed and distributed millions of copies of the Bible. The far-reaching effect of this wide distribution of God's Word can not be estimated. "Neglect of the Bible and ignorance of its teachings is not only a mark of ignorance and lack of culture, it is positively unpatriotic. The dissemination broadcast throughout the citizenship of America of a knowledge of God's Word would be the strongest safeguard that could be devised against the weaknesses and perils that threaten the republic." (Robert A. Ainsworth). The power of the printed page grows daily. The world is learning to read. Education in its march is creating every year armies of new readers. Today we have colporter-missionaries in Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, El Salvador, and in thirty states of the homeland. In the year ending April 30, 1922, our workers distributed 43,031 copies of the scriptures to individuals, aiding 915 Sunday schools with grants of scripture. Also there were made thirty-six grants to sixteen countries outside of the United States, including a grant of almost $600 to Poland, while in addition 13,122 copies of the Bible were given to churches within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. This work is widespread and constant. It grows larger every day of the year.

The Book Department

Our book publishing department has committed to it a work that is essential in all Baptist missionary propaganda—the printing of the Bible and other helpful literature, in which is included a series of nine tracts in English on evangelism; other nine evangelistic tracts in the Bohemian language, and three Americanization tracts in the Italian, Hungarian, Polish, Roumanian and Slovak languages. Since the beginning of the society's work over 69,000,000 pages of tracts have been distributed. The society aids financially in the publication of ten monthly religious newspapers for our various foreign-speaking brethren in America. There is no factor more fundamental to the promotion of the success of our Baptist work among foreign-speaking people than these publications. It is doubtful whether any intelligent, self-supporting, self-propagating Baptist constituency can ever be developed in these groups without this Christian literature.

The American Baptist Publication Society is the agent of Northern Baptists for the promotion of religious education among our people, and as such seeks to do the will of the denomination in making possible a constructive, well-balanced, worth while Sunday-school literature, which shall always be true to the Bible as the revealed will and word of God.

The department now issues sixty-six different periodical publications with an annual output of about fifty millions of copies. There are six kinds of publications: (1) Illustrated papers and magazines; (2) The improved uniform series of international Sunday-school lessons with parallel helps for pupils and teachers; (3) The Keystone graded series of international Sunday-school lessons; (4) Week-day church school courses; (5) Vacation church school courses; and (6) Judson training manuals.

Six years ago the entire department was newly organized to meet better the specialized needs of the modern Sunday school for literature, based on sound educational principles. The Sunday school of today is an educational institution. It is more, but it is this if true to its sacred trust. The courses of study must conform to accepted standards in psychology and pedagogy. Most Sunday-school pupils through the week are in the midst of a public school system organized and standardized, with graded courses and equipment, trained teachers and administrators. As Baptists, who hold to the separation of church and state, we believe in Sunday or church schools. And we also believe that religious education is absolutely essential to round out and complete the education to which all children and youth are entitled. The children of the community have a right to as good instruction on Sunday as on Monday. Bible lessons and Bible teaching should be suited to the needs of pupils during their different stage of growth and development. Bible materials are so rich and varied that there is "milk for the babes," appetizing truth for youth, and meat for strong men and women. A Sunday school which fails to give careful and prayerful attention to its instructions and instructors, dishonors the Bible it uses and deceives the pupil it enrolls. The greatest need in these days of chaotic thinking and living is to bring divine truth into human life and relationships with such power as to drive out selfishness and enthrone Jesus Christ.

Easter

By V. Halsey Linsley

Of the light of eternal morning
And the joy of an endless spring,
With the promise of all graves conquered,
The flowers at Easter sing.

For long ago in a garden
Where a strong new tomb was sealed
And guarded by soldiers chosen
For valor on many a field.

The seal of that tomb was broken,
The stone doors hurled away,
And our Saviour risen, victorious,
Came forth at the dawn of day.

Los Angeles, Calif.

The department holds that the five-fold task of the present Sunday school is: To give thorough graded instruction in the Bible; to lead the pupils to Christ as Saviour; to help the pupils form Christian ideals of character and conduct; to express Christian life in missionary and philanthropic service, and to secure the acceptance of the Lordship of Jesus Christ. This task is a big challenge to our Baptist Sunday schools everywhere, and furnishes a program which should command the best endeavors of the most efficient Sunday-school workers in our denomination.

Many pastors on isolated fields and young people living out of reach of college and training school, are hungering for more definite religious instruction than they can receive in the Sunday school alone, and in the day schools of their vicinity. There are men and women in all our churches who are seeking a better knowledge of the Bible and of missions. To meet their needs, the Publication Society, in cooperation with the Home Mission Society, has organized correspondence study courses, thus bringing religious education within the reach of all through the mail. Of our Baptist missionary field workers of 700 men and women, scattered from coast to coast, from Canada to the Gulf, and overflowing into Mexico, Porto Rico, Cuba, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, over 300 are doing systematic study under the direction of the staff in our correspondence study department. Thus the printed page is again serving widely.

Religion Must Be Taught

It is estimated that the children from six to twelve years of age in the United States number 20,500,000. Those in Sunday schools number about 5,350,000. Two-thirds of all American children are not receiving any organized religious instruction. We can save ourselves from becoming a nation of religious illiterates only by placing religion on a par with other subjects in the education of the child. Religion must be taught as other subjects are taught, if it is to become a vital part of our national life. Likewise, training in religion has become a necessity. Roger W. Babson says, "Religion, like everything else of value, must be taught."

The church school now breaks into three main sections: First, that which meets on Sunday; second, that which meets on week days, and third, that which meets during the vacation period. Over 400 cities in the United States now have regular week-day sessions; some of them as community enterprises in collaboration with the public schools; in other places the churches of the community unite to do this work; and in still others the churches of a denomination are uniting and carrying this on as a denominational enterprise. Texts are being prepared by the society to meet the needs of these week-day schools; these texts are correlated closely with the Sunday sessions of the church school, so that the one supplements the other. The church vacation school is growing rapidly in popularity. This last year we had 1,000 or more in our churches, with over 70,000 enrolled. Here again, the ministry of the printed page has a very wide outreach, and supplements well the Sunday session of the church school.

Printed material plays its large part. Whether we think of the Publication Society as a book publishing organization or as a Sunday-school publishing board, or as a tract society or as a general religious publishing organization, we find it rendering helpful service through the printed page to all of our people, to our Sunday schools, to our foreign-speaking brethren and to all who receive through its representatives God's Word—or religious tracts.

The Publication Society is thus one of the greatest missionary organizations in the world. It employs more than 100 specialists who are devoting their lives to the improvement and strengthening of our church schools. All surplus profits from its business are transmuted into Bible work and religious education. It is growing stronger every year, and consequently is increasingly able to serve our great denomination. Its publications are most effective heralds of the gospel, and teachers of Biblical truth. It is engaged solely in developing efficiency in individual service and in our denominational life. Its motto is "For Christ and the truth."

The Honesty of Matthew and Mark

By O. P. Eaches

IN the spring of 30 A. D. Jesus met the assembled believers at a designated place in Galilee. There were five hundred of them, the largest gathering of disciples up to that time. It would be a glad occasion when most of them would see the risen Redeemer for the first time after the rising from the dead. It would give an opportunity for Jesus to give words of greeting and counsel, the last time he would see them before the ascension in May. Thomas, for a time doubting the report of the resurrection, was straightway convinced on seeing him. In Matt. 28:17 we have announced the results of the conference, "and when they saw him they worshipped him; but some doubted." At this first large Easter service with the Christ himself present, we would expect to read, "and they all worshipped him," but some, seeing him, speaking to him, with opportunity for examination, were faint-hearted in believing. They were doubtless real disciples, followers of Christ, but with tangled and crooked modes of thinking. In that first century John had a constant struggle with those who maintained that Jesus did not have a real flesh-and-blood nature but only the appearance of men. A philosophical presupposition may have kept them from the joy of a full reception of the risen Jesus.

If Matthew had not been a supremely honest recorder of events as they actually were, he would not have placed this doubting on record. If the proofs of the resurrection of Jesus were not so conclusive and convincing as to force all who met him to believe his statement then this doubt put on record would seem to furnish to those of after years a reason for saying, "If Jesus did not convince them of his resurrection why should we believe him risen?" But Matthew was not afraid of putting down the truth—it never hurts.

Mark had a like spirit in recording circumstances that seemingly militated against Christ and early Christianity. There was a time in Christ's early ministry when he acted in so radical a manner, breaking even Jewish traditions, coming into conflicts with the rulers and making such large claims that his mother and the household thought they must take him under control. "And when his friends heard it, they went out to lay hold on him; for they said, he is beside himself." (Matt. 3:21). When Mohammed began his mission, his mother and his family at once identified themselves with him and his work. When Jesus started a new spiritual movement and he became the leader of a new world faith, his mother, brothers and intimate friends became recognized as those not endorsing his claims. They were not open enemies as the Sadduces and Jewish leaders, but their influence counted against him. The avowed opponents of Jesus could fittingly say, "If those who know him best do not accept him or his claims, why should we?" Christ's standing among men was not helped by the knowledge that his kinspeople thought him out of his head. Why did Mark insert an incident of this kind when he knew that a report so discreditable in itself would work, for a time at least, against the standing of Christ's cause? In writing a resume of Christ's life he is supremely honest and records this incident because it is true. When Matthew and Mark record a great event like the resurrection of Jesus we may rely on their word. Some may deny their inspiration; none can deny their honesty.

The Old and the New

By Morton Scott Enslin

THREE years ago it was my privilege to visit one of the great shrines of France—the Calvary of Pont Chateau out in the department of Finistere. There in that particularly desolate region is found a group of costly statues and buildings representing the events of the Passion from Pilate's judgment hall to the ascension. There are the stations of the cross, the hill Golgotha, the tomb and all the rest in life-size representation. I shall never forget the vivid impression it made on me that gloomy afternoon as I waded through grass up to my knees while it rained as only in France it can rain. But what impressed me most was the scene depicting the ascension. There stood the disciples on one side, the women on the other, all centered about Christ.

But my attention was not centered on him, but on the expression on the faces of the stone observers. On the faces of the disciples was a look of surprise and bewildered sorrow hard to express. It was as if to say, "Why! are you going to leave us? We have left all to follow you; we have given up friends and business; we have incurred suspicion; we have grown to love you. Carest thou not that we suffer?"

While the expressions on the faces of the women were different. No trace of sorrow or fear; perfect love seemed to have cast out fear. Their faces were lifted in love and joyful trust as if to say, "Go, go to your seat of glory; we are so glad that your glorification is at hand."

It was all the point of view. It was not that either group felt the worse about losing him. The disciples were looking back on the old and were grieved to see their friend leaving them again. He had left the tomb; their first fear had been ungrounded. Now was their short-lived joy to be dispelled? Was he to leave them again? Were the old ties to be broken? The women were looking to the future with anticipation in their hearts and eyes; they were foreseeing his glorification and power.

And this difference in point of view was reflected in the difference of attitude. Looking to the past the disciples saw it broken and they were alarmed and saddened; looking to the future the women saw it bright and shining and they were gladdened and expectant.

There is a similar note in the Gospel of John. Mary in tears cries out, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him." And this has been repeated again and again in dismal protest by many Christians as they look aghast at the work of the Bible critic. It is the same attitude as that of the disciples at Pont Chateau. The past was broken; the dead body was gone; the dead Jesus that Mary had come out to weep over was not there. But she failed to see as so many do today that though the dead Jesus was not there, yet directly behind her ready to bless her stood the risen, triumphant Lord; and all she need do was to turn about and wipe the tears from her eyes to behold him.

The old and the new; vain regrets versus joyful expectancy. If we can only cause men and women to stop raising the piteous lament about taking him away and can cause them to open their eyes and see him as he is in his power and beauty, we shall go a long way toward healing the bitter waters.

---

The federal census of 1920 reports that the Negro death rate is 18.4 per thousand, as against 12.8 for the whites—50 per cent higher. Infant mortality averages twice as high among Negroes as among whites, and the death rate from tuberculosis and typhoid about three times as high. The life expectation of Negroes is reported as forty years, against fifty-four years for whites. It is such considerations as these that have for some years brought together annually the social and welfare agencies of both races in the observance of Negro health week, the purpose of which is to carry the message of hygiene to every Negro home and to enlist every community in a thoroughgoing campaign of sanitation. The date set this year is the week of April 1-7.

Christ and Coue

By John A. Earl

EMILIE COUE, the noted Frenchman, has recently returned to France after spending some time in the United States. For several years wonderful cures of various kinds of illness have been effected at his institute in Nancy, France. Several books have been written describing his methods and philosophy. His philosophy is so childlike and his methods are so simple that one is inclined to laugh them to scorn. But as he gets results, the inclination to laugh is turned into the desire to praise. The man himself is a large part of the secret of his success. He is modest, humble, unassuming. He lays no claims to extraordinary powers. He does not pose as a healer. His sympathies are with the medical men of science, and his recent trip to America had for its object the adoption of his methods in hospitals.

The Method

His philosophy is that every person has within himself a latent power which needs only to be awakened, released and utilized to work wonders. This is called the subconscious self. The word subconscious means that beneath the conscious self there is a depth of consciousness which is most active and potent when the conscious will and emotions and intellect are at rest. Coué's method is to utilize this subconscious life in the healing of disease by the same method the mother uses when she sings a lullaby to put the baby to sleep. Hence he uses a simple formula of words which he teaches the patient to say aloud to himself when his will, emotions and intellect are in a state of repose. This positive, constructive formula of simple words repeated aloud at least twenty times in succession as a kind of lullaby when one is resting or going to sleep goes down into the subconscious area of the subconscious self which, under this stimuli, becomes the potent force in the healing of disease. Thousands of people have faithfully followed the simple philosophy and methods of Coué and testify to its benefits.

My purpose tonight is to show you that Coué is only a belated follower of Christ in his philosophy and methods. Ninteen hundred years ago Christ and his disciples performed cures of all kinds by the simple philosophy and methods illustrated again by Emilie Coué. In fact, our first text intimates that there were Coués in the time of Jesus; for John found a Hebrew Coué who was casting out demons in the spirit and by the methods of Christ who did not belong to the Christian group, and John forbade him. But Jesus said, "Forbid him not, for he that is not against you is for you." Therefore the first point I wish to emphasize tonight is that Coué is recognized and claimed by Christ as a helper even though he may not be wearing an ecclesiastical label. This statement is of large significance. Ecclesiasticism is represented by John in his attitude toward the man who was casting out demons without association with the followers of Jesus or without authority from Jesus. The church—Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant—has too often been intolerant of men who

> "And John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out demons in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. But Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not; for he that is not against you is for you." Luke 9:49-50.
>
> "But if thou canst do anything, have compassion on us and help us. And Jesus said unto him, If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth." Mark 9:22-23.
>
> "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15:7.

did their work independent of ecclesiastical fellowships and faiths; but the church owes such men an inestimable debt of gratitude. Jesus could sympathize with the detached man whom John sought to prohibit, because Jesus had detached himself from the temple and the synagogue, from the rabbis and the Sanhedrim, and was blazing his own trail. They were trying to stop him because he did not follow them; but he was doing the very thing for which the best of them stood, though in a new way. Yes, Jesus sympathizes with the Coués who are relieving human distress and adding to the world's stock of happiness even if they do not follow with us. I have a lurking suspicion that if Jesus were to choose between the man who says, "Lord, Lord," and does not do the things which he commands, and the man who does not say, "Lord, Lord," and yet does the things which he commands he would choose the latter. However, it is better to combine both. I plead for the cultivation of the fine spirit of Jesus toward all the Coués in every field of human endeavor.

Man's Power Over Disease

Now, as my first text reveals the attitude of Christ toward Coué himself, my second text reveals the attitude of Christ toward the philosophy of Coué. Coué's philosophy is simply this—that man has the power within himself to lay hold of hidden resources hitherto undreamed of for the healing of disease. Get the picture of the distracted father before your mind. He had brought his afflicted boy to the disciples of Jesus in the fond hope that they could do something for him, but they had failed. Now he stands in the presence of our Lord himself telling his tragic story which was broken off by his pathetic cry, "If thou canst do anything, have compassion on us and help us." Taking the words out of the man's mouth Jesus exclaimed, "If thou canst!" And then continuing he spoke somewhat after this fashion, "If thou canst! My friend, it is not a question of my power, but of your faith, for all things are possible to him that believeth. The cure of your boy lies in you and in him." Nothing could more clearly illustrate the philosophy of Jesus with regard to salvation that includes the healing of diseases as well as the deliverance from sin and the enrichment of life for service. Now because the resources lie within us it does not follow that Christ is ruled out. Christ is the Way and shows us the way; Christ is the Truth and shows us the truth; Christ is the Life and gives us the life. He called the resources within us, faith. Coué calls it the subconscious self. But whatever it is called does not affect the fact that man has it in his own hands to release the forces which make for communication by radio. Ether has been in the universe from the beginning, but man has only now discovered how to utilize it in sending messages and music around the world. The time is not far distant when he will utilize the same laws to reflect images to the eye around the world as he now uses to repeat sounds to the ear.

Discovery Based on Faith

Every great discovery made in the physical universe was based on faith—faith in the trustworthiness of nature. Scientific men have believed that the universe is intelligible, and that in spite of all appearances to the contrary, the universe is order and not chaos, and, therefore, the embodiment of thought and system. Kepler, the great astronomer, simply thought God's thoughts after him. The scientist creates nothing. He simply discovers and utilizes what God has created and what has been in the universe always. So the church is slowly learning that the God of the physical universe is also the God of the spiritual universe, and that the spiritual universe, in spite of all appearances to the contrary, is a universe of law and not of confusion and caprice. Faith lays hold of this fact and proceeds to discover the wonderful provision of God's grace for the healing of diseases, for the conquest of fears, for the enrichment of life; not by suspension of eternal law, not by hurried visits from an absentee God, not by some magical incantation, not by the observance of superstitious rites—but by working together with God in the observance and utilization of his laws which are eternal, universal and trustworthy. That is the highest exercise and expression of faith. Faith is a living thing, a growing thing, and in spite of the many attempts to crowd it into a fixed creed, faith is still the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. It was to this power Christ appealed when he said to the distracted father of the epileptic boy, "All things are possible to him that believeth." Our attitude of soul is the key that unlocks or locks the door to the release of hidden resources for the promotion of health and for the enrichment of life.

As my first text reveals the attitude of Christ toward Coué himself, and as my second text reveals the attitude of Christ toward the philosophy of Coué, so my third text reveals the attitude of Christ toward the method of Coué. Coué's method is a formula of simple words to be repeated aloud until the words become a part of the subconscious self. The words are these, "Day by day, in every way, I am getting better and better." In this matter he is only following the method of Jesus, for Jesus said, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you." This is a most startling promise on the part of our Lord. I have not time to give an exposition of all the terms of the promise; but a part of it deserves special emphasis and explanation because it bears upon the method of Coué. That part of the promise is in the words, "If my words abide in you." Jesus antedated Coué by nineteen centuries in insisting that his words had charm and power if they could only get into the inner consciousness of people and remain there as a living vine is rooted in the soil. He said on another occasion: "The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life." (John 6:63.) The words of Jesus are symbols of spiritual realities, and when we repeat his words over and over again until the things they represent and the experiences they define are clearly reflected in our subconsciousness and wrought out in our daily lives, we then have access to sources of power expressed in the promise, "Ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Time will not permit any extended proof of this statement, and yet the proofs are abundant. John 3:16 taken into the heart and made at home there has wrought wonders in the life. The Golden Rule taken seriously puts us in the place of power. All the recorded words of Christ could be committed to memory in a week, and yet who can estimate the power of his words when once they take possession of the hearts of men? If Coué's formula of simple words has wrought wonders in delivering afflicted people from paralysis, rheumatism, neurosis, blindness and numerous other diseases, how much more will the vital words of Christ, seriously taken, honestly believed, and assiduously practiced, deliver us from all our sins and all our diseases and all our fears, and give us, instead of these things, love, righteousness, health and victory.

St. Paul, Minn.

The Big Investment

A home in which there was always time for the children.

It is seldom that a preface to a book points back to the motivating power behind the book as does that in a recent publication by Funk & Wagnalls Company entitled "Knowing Birds through Stories." Floyd Bralliar is the author. The influence of a father and mother who plan for their children and who have time for them after their arrival, breathes through the pages of the volume, but the preface gives the clue to the power of prenatal and childhood environment.

"When father and his Southern bride came back from the Ozark country to his boyhood home in Southeastern Iowa and purchased a claim, their first thought was not of the crops their land could be forced to produce and the money they might make. When a site was selected for the new house it was located on the southern edge of a woodlot, ten acres of which were set aside as a playground. Possibly it would be more accurate to say that this woodlot was selected as a playground, and the house was located so as to be convenient. Be this as it may, because of their natural taste and pioneer training, great importance was attached to this plot, selected because of its location as well as the large variety of trees and plants that grew on it. Specimens of every additional wild plant and flower they could obtain were transplanted to this grove. It was fenced and the underbrush retained except that here and there a specimen clump was removed, while only such stock as would do no harm were allowed to pasture there. Even those were kept out most of the year.

"Like most pioneers, father was a great hunter, but in this grove nothing was ever allowed to be disturbed by the crack of a gun. There we children went to find the first bloodroot or anemone in the spring, and there we gathered the last black haws and wild grapes in the fall. Nowhere else were the wild gooseberries so large, the crabapples so yellow and fragrant, or the plums so red. Much of every Sabbath, when it was not raining, and every spare hour of the week between, we children spent in this grove. Best of all, father and mother were as anxious to go to "the grove" as any of us; and when they did go, we children were always delighted, for there was sure to be a story, a bit of information, or a reminiscence connected with a tree or a flower.

"With a stream of living water running through it, and the orchard, corn, peas, barn and cattle sheds on its border, it is small wonder that this grove became the haven for birds of every description, and many of them became so tame that they did not resent my assisting in their household affairs by furnishing prepared nesting material and by giving the babies an occasional treat of worms and bugs. It was here I learned to know and love the birds; and it is the story of some of these birds with a few others I have met elsewhere that I mean to tell in this book. I have traveled far and wide, but never have I seen any other place of nearly the same size that was inhabited by so many kinds of birds, or where they were so unconcerned when we were around. This grove was a haven for over thirty years, and doubtless several generations of birds taught their young that there they could find safety.

Like other children, we hunted bird's nests, and were always alert to see what our feathered friends were doing, but we did not take the eggs. Even to this day I have never made a collection of birds' eggs. To mother, a bird's nest was a sort of sanctuary, and I have never been able to get far enough from her training to regard it in any other light."

In the body of the book Mr. Brailliar mentions a rainy day when, as a very small boy, he was kept in the house because of rheumatism. "Mother came over and sat down by me and began to talk about the geese that were playing out in the water." What she talked about was the family of web-footed birds. "She explained," "she told me," are frequent expressions of the author. He mentions that this was done after she had finished her work and had a few minutes to spare. Even the uninitiated can imagine that an Iowa homesteading claim would not offer a great deal of leisure to the wife and mother of a family. But there seemed always time for the children —to answer their questions, to sit down and talk with them intelligently on subjects in which they were interested.

Could there have been a bigger or a better investment of time than this?

The New World Movement in My Church

By W. A. Elliott,
Pastor First Church, Ottawa, Kan.

OUR allotment for the New World Movement was $75,000, a sum that seemed staggering in its proportions and utterly impossible to raise. We were asked to give for missionary and benevolent purposes an amount larger than we had hitherto raised for similar purposes in twenty-five years. It was so out of proportion to anything that we had ever done that the most optimistic of our people doubted whether we could reach the goal.

We accepted the apportionment and set about to inform our people concerning the denominational needs. The pastor spent weeks in presenting every phase of our denominational undertakings. He informed, inspired and incited.

With our men organized for the canvass, and every man committed to the idea of raising the entire amount, we went to our people for their pledges. The readiness and eagerness of our people to respond surprised us. Everywhere we found responses and in generous sums. Instead of the $75,000 allotted, we raised $83,000 in cash and pledges.

The remarkable thing about our church is that our people not only pledged the above amount, but are now ahead in the payment of those pledges. Our people have not been deflected from our work by the confusing voices heard on every side since the campaign. There has been no disposition to repudiate their obligations. We anticipate that every dollar of the amount will be paid.

And what of the result in our church life? As a result our church has arisen to a new sense of achievement and confidence in its ability to do the heroic thing. Incidentally, there has come to our people a new sense of importance and self-respect. We have never before had a finer spirit in all of our work, money never came more easily, and the spirit of revival has never been more manifest. We have received more members into our church through our regular services than at any previous corresponding period.

With all of this we have greatly enlarged the circle of our influence as a church and have had increasing joy in the thought of extending into distant lands and among pagan peoples the beneficent ministries of the Christian religion. With the accomplishment of this task there has come to all of our people a wider outlook and a truer sympathy in their relations to the great world in which they live. All of us have grown in our appreciation and apprehension of the purposes of God and of our responsibility as disciples to this sinning, sorrowing world.

If every church throughout the bounds of the Northern Baptist Convention had assumed the raising of its allotment in all sincerity and devotion; if every church had faithfully undertaken the heroic, there would have come a new day in our work at home and abroad and our pastors and churches would have now been feeling the throb of new life, in all the activities of the kingdom of God. There would have been realized a unity and a spirit of cooperation that would have brought us many a mile in advance of our present situation.

Only the church that attempts great things for God can reasonably expect great things from God. It is not otherwise with pastors and leaders.

A Plea for Fair Play—Mission Comity Without Hypocrisy

By V. W. Dyer

JUDSON'S great pioneer work in Burma was the beginning of American foreign missions and also the first work of the American Baptists. No one would deny this. It was so obvious that when the large foreign mission societies of northern United States agreed to certain principles of mission comity and divided up the various mission fields among themselves in order to avoid friction and overlapping, without hesitation they allocated Burma to the Baptists. Of course, that is distinctively Baptist; so they all understood but at the same time these mission boards recognized that northern India around Lucknow was the great field of the American Methodists. It was realized that it would be a violation of mission comity for American Baptists to enter that great Methodist field and likewise wrong for the Methodists to begin work in Burma.

Whether mission comity and agreements among the mission societies are desirable or not should be decided over again. If so, then all parties should strictly observe the letter as well as the spirit of mission comity and pledges. If the American Protestant denominations wish to return to the "grab-as-you-please plan" and have no comity regulations at all, let us do so frankly at once. But in God's name let us have no evasion, nor violation, nor hypocrisy. The world expects us to be as reliable in keeping our word as business concerns are. Decide these two questions before we discuss anything else:

1. Is there any such thing as mission comity among us?
2. Is Burma the Baptist field?

The Nose of a Camel

All the great American (northern) Protestant denominations agreed to keep out of Burma and they did so, except the American Methodists, who came in about thirty years ago by special agreement of the Baptist missionaries of Burma, but to do English work only. Mr. F. D. Phinney (who died last December after forty years service in which he built up the most remarkable mission press in the world and was so beloved that he had the largest funeral ever seen in Rangoon), told a number of missionaries during the last two years how the Methodist bishop assured him personally and the Baptist mission, that if the Baptists would consent to the Methodists doing work among the Anglo-Indians and Europeans which would be English work only, they would come to Burma for this purpose only and would not start mission work among the native peoples. Mr. Phinney and the rest of the mission consented. It was the old story of the camel getting only his nose under the edge of the tent; soon he tried to get the rest of his body in. Inside of two years, in spite of all Christian courtesy and agreement, the American Methodists opened up work among the Chinese and then among the Burmese. Recently they have begun an Indian mission (which has already caused trouble and misunderstanding), and, finally, they have been gathering data on our world-famous Karen mission stations. From the days of George Dana Boardman, a century ago, the Karens have known nothing but the simple New Testament Christianity as taught by Baptist missionaries.

Why, oh why, must American Christians inflict upon the Karens and Burmans the needless perplexity of American sects and denominations? The Presbyterians at Kengtung in upper Burma saw the point and withdrew. Should the Baptists give up the field to the Methodists? Is there some place on the globe that the Methodists will suggest that the Baptists may have as their field without the willing assistance of the Methodists?

Comity or anarchy, honesty or hypocrisy, which is it to be?

I pray for the advancement of world-wide missions, especially for some of my Methodist friends, but I must confess that I find it difficult to pray for the aggressive progress of the American Methodists in our Baptist field of Burma when it causes so much unnecessary trouble for our missionaries, and what is worse, so much confusion for the peoples of Burma. But are the Baptists properly covering the field? No! Certainly not! But, we are doing it as well and for the most part, better than the other large mission boards in the other parts of the world! No mission field is properly and completely supervised and provided with sufficient missionaries of the right quality. When other denominations have as many missionaries to per capita of population, as many Christians in proportion as the Baptists have in Burma, then and then only, shall we welcome others to help us do the work we have been unable to do. Yes, we will send out with earnest prayer and eager expectation the Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us!" It is not a case of the Baptists in Burma playing dog in the manger but a matter of religious efficiency, kingdom-of-God strategy, of mission comity!

What of the great Methodist field in North India? In speeches and in print they plead for more money and missionaries. They say and say truly: "We have not help enough to handle the wonderful mass movement which is upon us." They beg pathetically for American Methodists to give their wealth and their youth to save the situation. I know of some well-to-do Baptists who are keenly interested in that wonderful field! Shall we Baptists cry: "On to Lucknow," and give relief like the famous Baptist general, Havelock, who once saved that city? Shall the Baptists answer their call and open up a Baptist work there? Or would the Methodists prefer to call off their advance guard in Burma and send them, a score and more with the money it costs to maintain their Burman work, to the relief of Lucknow? The facts are, according to a last spring number of the Missionary Review of the World, that the Baptists in Burma have about twice as many missionaries to per capita of population as the Methodists have in North India. Since their need is twice as great as ours in Burma we Baptists would better help them man their most needy field instead of them sending unasked-for help to Burma where we have no such mass movement which we cannot handle. It all goes back to a question of mission comity!

Is There a Comity Agreement?

1. Is there such a thing as comity arrangements among us?
2. Were the denominations right in alloting Burma to the Baptists?

"We Methodists are responsible for 8,000,000 women in Burma; therefore you must give." was a part of the speech of a Methodist missionary a few years ago, and it was spoken in Judson's home town of Malden, Mass! The Methodists have large plans for an aggressive advance in Burma, not merely in places where Baptists have no work at all but in the same fields alongside of Baptist schools and churches, as they have already done in the small town of Pegu. This very month (January) two Methodist missionaries left their stations to preach in Tavoy, where Baptists have two missionaries, and Methodists have never had any work at all unless their Penang and Singapore work is considered sufficient justification. At Mergui the Baptists have 1,600 baptized believers in churches supervized by the Tavoy missionaries and yet in spite of that fact the Methodists are planning to open a station there which must add confusion to our work, cause friction, produce expensive overlapping and violate mission comity. At this writing they are there "spying out the land."

Is there no remedy? Is mission comity no more than "a scrap of paper?" Is there no world-vision of what is best for the kingdom of God as a whole? Will not the great evangelical denominations allow courtesy, cooperation, and Christian love to prevail?

Rangoon, Burma.

Midday in Old Moulmein

By Ethel Leora Hunt

THE hot dry grass is little darker
Than the dust filled cover of the sky.
Along the whitened road the oxen
Draw the creaking cart wheels.
Why not lie beneath a mango tree
As coolies do, brown bodies dressed
In one scant strip of cotton cloth,
And take a well-earned rest?
Oh, not a breath of wind appears
To stir the giant banyan trees!
With Buddha let us dream! Neikban,
That state of very Nothingness,
Our torpid souls should please!

I Heard Spring Call

I HEARD Spring call across the gray
And broken-clouded sky today,
And caught a faint evasive scent,
That swiftly on the east wind went,
Like some dim memory of May.

There is no least light-budded spray
Of white or green along my way,
And yet, on some grave message bent,
I heard Spring call.

It sounded like some thrush astray
Too early, or some wistful fay
That begged a scrap of merriment;
Through storm and cold I bide content,
Since, beginning promise blithe and gay,
I heard Spring call.

Charlotte Becker.

In the Capitals of Central America

Also some impressions of the various republics

BY SAMUEL GRAHAM NEIL

THE capital cities of the Central-American republics are, on the whole, handsome and pleasing in appearance, with conditions of climate and environment of much beauty and utility. Guatemala City is marked by a general air of prosperity; it is the most populous city in Central America, with a population of nearly 100,000. It is electrically lighted, has well-kept public buildings; wide, regular streets; tree-planted avenues and broad plazas; numerous theaters, picture palaces and museums; and a number of schools for both sexes. The houses are built low (as a rule one story) in order to minimize the danger from earthquake shocks which have been frequent and serious. Street railways and large automobile busses afford ample transportation facilities throughout the city. The republic of Guatemala has about 500 miles of railroads in operation, with through lines from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts.

Managua is the capital of Nicaragua and has a population of about 45,000 people. It is an important commercial town, situated at a favorable strategic point so far as communication and commerce are concerned. When compared with Guatemala City, or the City of San Salvador, Managua as a capital city is rather backward. There is but one railway of importance in Nicaragua, the National Railway, which, with its branches, totals about 200 miles. The road starts at Corinto on the Pacific. By the projected railway to Matagalpa, and that connecting the lakes with the Atlantic coast, Managua will be brought into direct communication with all the important districts in the country.

Neighbor to a Volcano

San Salvador is the capital of the republic of El Salvador. It is picturesquely situated at an altitude of over 2,000 feet above the sea, and has a population of about 70,000 people. As is the case with so many of the Central-American cities, only two or three miles separate it from a volcano, that of San Salvador. This is a mountain of magnificent aspect, 8,000 feet in height and a very grim neighbor. In 1854, and again in 1873, the city was practically destroyed by earthquake. A handsome university and others of the customary Latin-American institutions mark out the city for distinction; it may favorably be compared as a center of life with small cities in America or Europe. The scenery in many districts of Salvador is extraordinarily grand and imposing. It is essentially an agricultural country, and contains some magnificent stretches of pastureland, where cattle are bred in considerable numbers.

The capital of Costa Rica, San Jose stands 3,870 feet above sea level, and is usually considered the pleasantest city in Central America. It has a population of 30,000 people. Even though the majority of its houses are lowly structures, and from an architectural point of view, unimpressive, yet it is of modern appearance, and the setting of the town is extremely picturesque. There are two large parks. The cathedral, government offices, museums, library and barracks are among the principal buildings. Costa Rica also possesses a university and an observatory. The chief pride of the city, however, is centered on its theater. This is built of Carrara marble, and is said to have cost $10,000,000. The inhabitants of this city are famed for their hospitality, and the women of San Jose for their beauty. On the whole the people of Costa Rica are better educated than in the majority of the Central-American republics.

In all of the republics there are great natural resources to be found. The coastal lands on the Atlantic are very fertile, and produce enormous crops of bananas; there are also extensive grazing lands near the coasts and in the interior, especially on the Pacific side of the Divide; the interior valleys and the plateaus are exceedingly rich, and nearly every product of the tropical or temperate zones may be grown to perfection. There are also vast areas of forests rich in valuable woods, and great stretches of land rich in mineral deposits.

One of the most prominent and permanent features of Central America is its immense size. No one can possibly surmise the capacity of the Central-American republics for agriculture, industry, population and possibilities, without an adequate comprehension of the extent of territory covered by the various republics. North Americans have very faulty conceptions of the magnitude of the Central-American republics. Very few of the countries correspond in size to our states. They are in most cases vastly larger. They are "countries." Even little Costa Rica would have room and to spare, for New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut. Portugal would rattle around freely in Honduras, and Belgium expanded to three times its size would fall short of coinciding with all the edges of that Central-American country.

Size, by itself, is relatively unimportant unless helped out by other conditions favorable to human welfare, but the republics of Central America are exceedingly fortunate in that their percentage of useless territory is comparatively small. The Carribean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico constitute a veritable Mediterranean, open to commerce at all seasons of the year; and the Panama Canal facilitates traffic from all corners of the globe to either side of the North American and South American republics.

Central America has always been open to settlers, and rich enough in supplies and opportunities to satisfy the needs of home-seekers for countless years; nevertheless, immigration into Central America has pursued a leisurely course. Every Central-American country is today suffering from man-power hunger. Vast stretches of habitable land lie unused, and tremendous natural resources remain undeveloped through want of population. The policy of isolation maintained by Spain until the Central-American republics gained their independence, the real distance of Central America from Europe, and the anti-pioneering spirit fostered in some countries by an accumulation of "modern improvements" eplains in some measure the dearth of Central-American immigration.

The Chinese Population

Next to the Italians, the Germans and the Chinese have settled in Central America in the most considerable numbers—with the exception of the Spaniards and the Portugese. In Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua, and in most of the West Indies, the German settlers are proprietors of coffee and sugar plantations, conduct important commission houses and have large banking interests. Many fine stores and some leading hotels are managed by the Chinese. In the new era upon which Central America has entered, it is becoming more and more Europeanized and will some day be identical as a "melting pot" with the United States, differing only in the circumstances that the basic fabric of society will be Spanish and Portugese instead of American, as among us.

Nearly all of the stories of the Central-American revolution are in the past—the stories of the mal-treatment of foreigners, of uncertain concessions, of the trickery of tyrannical rulers, and of wholesale plunder and perfidy by politicians. Slowly but surely men of integrity and honesty are being placed in positions of authority and trust. As a result, with few exceptions, life and property are as secure in Central America as anywhere else; and in many of the countries the people have almost forgotten what a revolution is like. Even little Nicaragua, though it has had a stormy political history, can boast of being the only country in America which enjoyed an uninterrupted peace for the thirty-four years from 1859 to 1893, while in others the revolutions that have occurred have been almost bloodless and not one-half so exciting as many of our national elections in the red light and

(Continued on page 288)

Transformation

BY CHARLES C. EARLE

I BURIED a bulb in a garden bed,
And covered it o'er with fertile loam
It seemed lying there in the earth as dead.
With a spray of cyprus to mark its home.

That day, I planted a hyacinth there,
A double one, white, though the bulb was brown,
"'Tis strange," said I, "that a blossom so fair,
That little low grave with glory will crown."

When the spring-time came, and the soft winds blew,
The lingering frost from the earth did creep.
And the sunbeams, warm, pierced the cold earth through.
And awakened to life, the bulb asleep.

From the bulb so brown, came a stalk so green,
From the stalk so green, came a bloom so white.
I marveled and said, "To me it doth seem,
The work of a God, the God of light."

So man shall be raised, though he may die,
Changed by the power of Infinite Love.
The bulb of the body in the earth may lie,
The soul shall awake in glory above.

The Business of Soul Winning

The Revival in St. Louis

By J. S. Kirtley

ON Sunday, March 18, the Baptists of St. Louis and the surrounding community closed the most remarkable evangelistic campaign in their history. Sixty churches conducted daily meetings simultaneously and cooperatively, twenty-four white and thirty-six negro.

Each church followed its own plan, most of the churches having the assistance of outside pastors or evangelists and song leaders, though in several there were no meetings owing to condition of the buildings and several combined with neighboring churches of other denominations.

Some of the assistants in the meetings were evangelists of the Southern Home Board, though most of the helpers were pastors of churches. At the Third Church, where Rev. J. Kirtley is serving as acting pastor, Dr. M. E. Dodd, of the First Church of Shreveport, La., did the preaching, and Mr. W. P. Martin, his musical director, had charge of the singing.

All the meetings began March 4 and ended March 18. On Friday, March 16, after the services in the various churches were over, members of all the congregations assembled at the Third Church at 10:30 for an all-night prayer meeting. A packed audience spent the night in fervent prayer, spirited singing and, with very inspiring addresses. One hour the meeting was led by the negro brethren and two of them gave extraordinarily inspiring addresses—Dr. Watson of Chicago, and Dr. Maxwell of St. Louis.

The attack on this large and needy city was daring, strategical, determined and encouragingly successful. It was under the direction of Rev. J. W. Beagle, the capable superintendent of evangelism in Missouri. At eleven o'clock each day, the pastors and personal workers assembled at the Third Church to make reports, form plans and encourage each other. I suppose there was seldom a meeting in any one of the churches, white or negro, in which loving and earnest prayer was not made for all the cooperating churches.

The results that can be tabulated are not all in today, but I can give enough to foreshadow the total. Twenty-three white churches received 571 by baptism and 223 by letter and relation. Thirteen negro churches received 281 by baptism and 490 by letter and relation. But the most interesting fact of all is that the organization was so thorough in each church and the list of those doing personal work so large that the revival is sure to go on for weeks and months.

At the Third Church there have been seventy-three additions by baptism and fifty by letter and relation. This large and strategical church has always been evangelistic and it has always been devoted to true education. Most thorough preparation had been made for these meetings. Dr. Geistweit, who left for his work in Dayton the first of March, had been stimulating the preparations very constantly and effectively. A campaign committee under the leadership of Mr. A. W. Payne had organized thoroughly for the work. I stepped in to fall heir to that efficient and inspiring preparation.

This is the best form of general evangelism that I know anything about. The tabernacle method in a city-wide union campaign has somethings to commend it, but its disadvantages are so very great I wish that Baptists everywhere would adopt this method of simultaneous meetings.

St. Louis, Mo.

Win One

Nothing can ever take the place of personality in winning the world for Christ. An attractive church building, good music, bright and interesting service and great preaching will not take the place of "personal persuasion." Jesus recognized this fact when he sent his disciples out two by two to do personal work. If you want to win some one for Christ and the church, you must be willing to pay the price of prayer, time, and persistent effort.—Temple Church Bulletin, Los Angeles.

Gleanings

Pastor Tomlinson of Naco, Ariz., reports twenty professions of faith as a result of a meeting recently held in his church by Clarence Hedrick, evangelist. Mr. Tomlinson is very much encouraged in his work.

* * *

Rev. George R. Stair, formerly pastor of the Englewood Church, Chicago, conducted a three-weeks' evangelistic campaign at Muncy, Pa. Rev. William E. Staub, in a letter to The Baptist, commends the work of Mr. Stair as being free from objectionable sensationalism.

* * *

The most wisely conducted, carefully followed up, and therefore the most successful evangelistic campaign of which we conceive, is an honest-to-goodness Christian life.

Mrs. J. W. Gaiser.

Greenville, Pa.

* * *

The daily press has heralded the story of the conversion of Fred A. Stone, famous actor and comedian. The Pacific Christian Advocate tells the story. He had at one time been a member of the Methodist church, probably a member on probation. He had not for years entered a church. Sitting in a snow-bound train on the Dakota prairies he made up his mind to discharge his obligations as a Christian man. When the train reached Butte, Mont., he went to the pastor of the Methodist church of that city and made his confession and pledged his life to carrying out Christian principles. He then and there pledged one-tenth of his income to Christian work. When asked whether he would leave the stage he replied that he would not. "My life has been clean and my impulses and instincts have been good. I have always been a fun-maker, but my playing has been wholesome and clean." In Yakima the pastor of the Methodist church received a check for $50 with this brief note. "This is the tithe of what I received in Yakima."

In a Scottish Fishing Town

The People's Journal, a Scottish paper, reports a gigantic revival along the Moray Firth coast, and in picturesque language describes the scene. "A full-throated chorus of earnest praise echoed along the straggling streets of the little grey fishing town of Lossiemouth. A piercing wind blew from the northeast and normally the streets would have been deserted, but the hymn-singing circle of fisher folk were wrapt in a spiritual ardor that made them careless of the discomforts of the storm. Gathered at an exposed corner where the four winds were meeting in a riot of unrest, the blue-jerseyed fishermen and their shawl-clad, bareheaded women folk joined in the old favorite Sankey hymns, their fervent voices rising above the harsh sound of the sea and the wild wind.

"The great new revival at Lossiemouth does not owe its origin to any eloquent preacher coming as a stranger to the town. The seed was well sown by Rev. Donald Fletcher, the minister of the local Baptist church, who about three weeks ago began a series of prayer meetings in the small church hall which is the property of the congregation. Soon the building would not accommodate the large number of persons who attended these meetings. . . . Every evening about 7 o'clock the revivalists begin to assemble in the Baptist Church. After individual members have ceased to offer up prayer the period of testimony begins. . . . The benediction concludes the meeting, but outside the revivalists form themselves into an orderly company and march, chanting their hymns, throughout the town. As they pass a street corner where a number of people are standing watching, one or two of the latter may step quietly into the marching ranks. New recruits have thus probably been won for the cause.

"Lossiemouth has long been considered a community where the people were typically Scottish in that they rarely gave rein to their feelings. The religious revival that is now influencing the lives of the inhabitants has, therefore, evidently a sure and strong foundation. The outward designs of fervor will probably pass after a little time, but a permanent influence for good in the life of the community should remain."

A Meeting with a Climax

THE Baptist Church of Brandon, Ohio, recently closed a revival meeting. R. M. Dodrill pastor of the church, was assisted by Rev. M. H. Bridwell, of Pomeroy, Ohio, and Paul Albright, of Akron, Ohio.

The climax came on the last night of the meeting, when sixteen young men and women surrendered their lives to Jesus Christ. There were twenty-five conversions during the meeting. This has been the greatest revival meeting held at the Baptist church of Brandon for many years.

---

Of the present House of Representatives and Senate more than 300 members are lawyers.

A Lutheran world convention will be held at Eisenach, Germany, August of this year. About twenty delegates of the United Lutheran Church in America have been appointed.

The Open Forum

BAPTISTS ARE NOT ALL IN JAIL

Not all of the Baptists are in jail. This does not mean that the remainder of them ought to be, but from the telegraphic intelligence appearing in a number of Illinois dailies recently, the whole sainted denomination is headed that way. The news item carried the information that the warden of the Alabama State Penitentiary asserted that a census of the institution revealed the fact that there were 1,289 Baptists behind the walls, outnumbering all others. This statement was again forced on the attention of the writer when he received through the mail on the following day, an unsigned copy of the above clipping. The subscribers to the dailies were "getting our number."

The writer admits that Baptists are sometimes put in embarrassing situations, by folks of Baptist leanings and criminal tendencies. Some years ago the secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society in Philadelphia, received an application for Sunday-school literature from a convict in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., in which the life termer remarked, "We have all denominations represented in the Atlanta penitentiary, but the Baptists are in the lead."

For fear that the readers of the secular journals might form a false opinion of the rest of us Baptists who have not as yet been apprehended, the writer S. O. S.-ed an appeal to Secy. D. F. Green of the Alabama Baptist State Convention, at Montgomery, Ala., asking if all of the Baptists of Alabama were taking lessons in the lock step, and if not, for heaven's sake, to broadcast it. Dr. Green replied in a most enheartening letter as follows:

"I am glad you wrote me with reference to the report that went out from Montgomery that of the 3,063 prison population, 1,289 claim that they were Baptists. This is very easily accounted for. Of this number of prisoners more than two-thirds of them are negroes. We have approximately 330,000 negro Baptists in Alabama out of a negro population of 900,000. Very few negroes belong to any other denomination. They are naturally Baptists, unless some white man 'goes foolin' with them."

"Another way of putting it is that according to government statistics Baptists outnumber all other denominations in the state. Unfortunately, Baptist people are just ordinary folks, and commit crimes somewhat in proportion to others. A great many prisoners in Alabama have been sent up for blind-tigering or for boot-legging whisky. We have about 17,000 Primitive or Hard Shell Baptists in Alabama that do not think it is wrong to make, sell or drink whisky. Excluding the Primitive Baptists and the negro Baptists, there are very few Baptists in the penitentiary in Alabama. Comparing our numbers with the others, I do not think there is any cause for alarm at the situation in our state. You can say to the brethren in Illinois, that the reason we have so many in the penitentiary, is because we have so many of them. Approximately fifty-four out of every hundred members of churches in Alabama, belong to the Baptist denomination."

CHURCH OBLIGATIONS

Does a man not a professing Christian have any obligation to the church? Yes. This is the most beautiful and wonderful country in the world; and it has been made such by the Christian church. We are regarded by the world as being a Christian nation. Every one born under the stars and stripes is in some sense a Christian. The church is our foster mother, and the one who does nothing for his foster mother is guilty of gross ingratitude. If nominal Christians could dwell in a heathen country for a year, they would be brought to a realization of their obligation to the Christian church. All Americans owe to this great power for good, obligations they will never be able to fully pay.

J. H. Hollingsworth.

How to Keep Young People Interested in the Church

By N. J. Peterson

During the past year our church has received into its membership a large number of young people between the ages of eight and twenty-five. The question at once arose how to interest these young people and train them for efficient leadership in the church. Three plans suggested themselves: First, we organized a young people's orchestra beginning with six members about a year ago and the interest in this has grown to such an extent that today we believe we have the largest orchestra of any church in America for its size of 235 members. There are thirty-two in the orchestra who play the following instruments: twelve violins, one viola, one violoncello, one double bass, one viol, one flute, one piccolo, three fifes, two ocarinas, three cornets, two trombones, two drums, one piano and one organ. Dr. A. Z. Hall is the director of this orchestra and meets with it several times a week for practice. A number of new applicants are waiting to be admitted to it, so we now find it necessary to organize a new group as thirty-two is about all one director can handle. The church is paying for the instruments of those who cannot afford to purchase them; fourteen of the instruments are paid for by the church, six are borrowed and the rest of them are owned by the persons who play them. With the exception of four all the members of the orchestra are between the ages of eight and eighteen, and all members of the church.

Second, we decided to present a good Bible to every boy and girl who would be present for twenty-six consecutive Sundays at the following services: Sunday school, junior service and the regular morning preaching service. Whenever any one missed a service he understood that he had to begin all over again. Up to this time more than forty Bibles have been presented this year for perfect attendance at these services. Strangers who visit our church are surprised to see that the first three rows of seats are occupied by boys and girls who remain after Sunday school for junior service and for the regular morning service. The pastor, N. J. Peterson, preaches a ten-minute junior sermon immediately before the regular morning service and not a boy or girl leaves but stays right through.

Third, we planned to give each boy and girl something specific to do. For instance, during the summer months we divided them into groups, as nearly as possible according to Sunday classes, and beginning with the seniors and down through the juniors had each group take charge of one of the mid-week meetings. This worked fine; each group or class was eagerly waiting its turn to have charge of the service and would meet several times during the week to prepare the program for the meeting. We were all surprised at how splendidly they did. They learned how to express themselves and how to be on the lookout for new and practicable experiences.

This summer we are going to organize several Bible and missionary classes so as to get every last member lined up with the church in some kind of specific work, for one thing is certain and that is that it is impossible to keep young people in close contact with a church unless they are given something to do, and something that is big enough and interesting enough to capture their imaginations and impulses.

We are just getting ready to dedicate a fine modern $15,000 Sunday school addition to accommodate our growing Sunday school and young people's organizations.

Eaton, Colo.

Religious Education

International Sunday School Lesson for April 15

JOSEPH, THE PRESERVER OF HIS PEOPLE
Lesson: Genesis 45:3-15 Golden Text: Exodus 20-12

Introductory

Joseph is the great-grandson of Abraham, the friend of God and the man of faith. He is one of the most romantic figures in Old Testament history. He is the elder son of Jacob and Rachel, his younger brother being Benjamin. He has ten half brothers, jealous of him because he is called their father's favorite. This hate results in a plot whereby they sell him into Egyptian bondage. The lesson given for today is only one outstanding incident in the life of Joseph. To understand the boy and the man a full survey of his life must be had. For this read Gen. 30:22-24; 37:2-50:26.

The Lesson

During the famine the half brothers of Joseph, together with his own brother, Benjamin, come to Egypt to buy corn. Joseph tests them to determine whether they have become better men. They have no thought of finding the brother, spitefully sold into slavery years before, in the king's palace, second only to the king himself. Joseph, anxious to hear of his father and to recognize these kinsmen, commands all courtiers and officers to leave the room, as he wishes no curious witnesses to the scene about to take place. But his emotions are so strong when he makes himself known to his brethren that all the house of Pharaoh hear. "I am Joseph," he announces. "Doth my father yet live?" But they could not answer him for they are troubled at finding him here in this unexpected place of power. He summons them nearer, begging them not to be grieved at their sin against him. He pointed out that it was the will of God that he should be brought to this strange country, for thus had he been made a lord of the house of Pharaoh, and ruler over Egypt, and in a position to save a remnant of his people from the famine. Five years of the famine are yet before them, and Joseph urges them to go back to his father with the message: "Thus saith thy son, Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not; and thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen, and thou shalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and they children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast." The sweetness and the saneness of Joseph in the midst of great prosperity is shown as he kisses his brother, Benjamin, and weeps upon his neck, and then kisses his half brothers and weeps over them. No recorded incident of Joseph's life is more convincing evidence of the greatness of Joseph's character.

Leading Thoughts

1. Never did Joseph doubt God's guidance and never did God forsake him; 2. Doing the duty nearest in the very best way it can be done is a sure path to power; 3. God ever works in spite of the evil intent of some of his humans; 4. He loves most who forgives most.

The Prime Requisite

By Roy L. Van Deman

"From all I can gather they say he is safe."

Proctor took his seat on a bench in the little park beside his lifelong friend Diligens. Here they often met on Sunday afternoons and talked over problems together. Few came there and it was quiet.

Proctor continued, "The directors of our college feel that other qualifications are needed but that this is essential."

Diligens asked, "What is safety? Does he see Christ? There is no safety unless one is open to truth."

And Proctor said, "What is truth? Are the mists of modern thought truth?"

Diligens answered, as you would, "Jesus said, 'I am the truth.'"

"We are at one, Diligens. I shall refuse my vote to any man who erects any standard other than Christ and calls it truth to which others may safely subscribe."

"I am glad we see eye to eye, Proctor. We in our church are having the same problem just now which you are having in your college board. We are trying to get the right man to direct the religious education of our young people. It has come to be a complex and difficult work. No man without both special training and deep insight can succeed. Even we older men know that secular education has gone far ahead of the church schools. We ought to know too, if we do not, that the adolescents of our time differ from many in our youth, Proctor. Nowadays they ask more questions and will not follow those who cannot answer them. Greater companies of them than ever before, not only in colleges but in the high schools, desire truth above gold, and I think would lay down their lives for it. It is of the nature of youth to desire ardently. They need some one who understands adolescence to unveil the beauty and the power of Jesus in terms common to their own inner life. The problem in the colleges is the same as that in the churches, only perhaps more complex. No one can teach religion to youth who hasn't deep insight into youth, who can't see."

A silence fell between the two, thinking.

"You and I once had an hour when we really saw Christ, solitary and alone. That day we drove to the lake during the assembly and went into the Bible hour. You remember? I know you remember. We were in a vast crowd of people in that hour. He was its center but he seemed alone. They were circling about him, crowding, looking, talking. Then the great crowd shifted as he came nearer our little eminence and he stopped again near us. He straightened a poor old woman. We saw it with our eyes. Then he taught in words that found us as no words ever had before. We saw him as the world's healer, the hope of centuries, there before our eyes. You remember how our hearts glowed in that hour?"

"The hour passed but nothing afterwards has been as it was before. We have taught many, you and I. But you know as well as I that the things we have said have had little value except they have been an inspiration to youth to follow him. Once I wrote an argument. You read it. Did it help you? It did not. Once you wrote a creed? I read it. Did it help me? No. It got between me and Jesus. Can our arguments and our creeds help nobody, therefore? Perhaps. If they leave somewhat open, a way back to him, I think they may. But they are so like to distract the interest from himself. Do you not think so, Proctor?

Again they both fell silent, thinking.

"I have come to believe, Proctor, that our minds are rather given us to see with than to formulate things with. We are too quick to formulate e'er we see. To see means to live with mind open to the meanings of Christ however they may reach us. To see means outlook on the world with which Christ is grappling. To see means insight into childhood, patience with adolescents, sympathy with doubt and immaturity, and the knowledge of growing human life.

And Proctor answered, "I think I sense it, Diligens. To see is the primary thing."

Is It Nothing to You?

THAT one-third of the world is still illiterate, ignorant of true prayer, and beyond the reach of medical skill? That the thirst for western education has gripped the Far East with a startling rapidity, breaking down age-long traditions as to womanhood and caste, and sending to school in Japan a larger proportion of children of school age than in any other land? That in India scores of thousands are being turned away from the church because there are no teachers to instruct them? That not one-half of the church members in America give to either local church expenses or to benevolence, nor are enlisted in any active church?—Metropolitan Baptist Bulletin.

Young People's Work

Topic for April 15

STEWARDSHIP OF SELF

I Cor. 6:19, 20; Rom. 14:12.

"First, they gave their own selves to the Lord."

Thou seemest human and divine;
The highest, holiest manhood, thou!
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours to make them thine.
—Tennyson.

Materials

"Stewardship of Life," by Agar, price 75 cents. Order from the American Baptist Publication Society, 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago. "Stewardship Principles and Programs for Young People," by Laegeler, free. Order from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago; 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, California.

Stewardship of self includes:

1. Our time. If I belong to God, it follows that my time is also his. That will mean that a proportionate share of each day or of the week should be spent in doing specific Christian service—acts of helpfulness, acts of worship, teaching, or other service in the church.

2. Our ability. Whatever special ability we may have should be dedicated to Christ. A filing clerk gave herself to Christ and offered her expert filing skill to the Lord. She is keeping the Sunday-school records of that church in wonderful fashion. An advertising expert uses his skill to design church billboards, programs, and advertising copy for the newspapers.

God wants and can use every bit of ability we have. He calls to his service not only the singers and speakers and teachers and givers, but all who will offer him whatever they have.

3. Our influence. Each one is somebody's hero or heroine. Some person is greatly influenced by what I am and say and do. The principle of stewardshi recognizes that influence is a mighty force for God.

Livingstone, missionary, explorer and hero, may be taken as a noble examp when he said: "My Jesus, my King, my Life, my All: I again dedicate my whole being to thee. I will place no value on anything I have or possess except in relation to the kingdom. If anything I have will advance the interests of that kingdom it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping it I promote the glory of him to whom I owe my hopes in time and eternity."

"To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low,
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go."
—"Principles and Programs."

B. Y. P. U. European Extension Fund

Our Baptist brethren across the sea have wiggled a Macedonian finger at us, desiring help in organizing their young people and in binding them together with us into a world organization. Just think of it! B. Y. P. U. the world round! It gives us a vision, a task and a goal all in one, and spells OPPORTUNITY. We shall need $2,000 to go ahead with this missionary work and we shall need it right away. Take a collection in your society next Sunday equal to about ten cents per member and mail it immediately to

Rev. Herbert Hines,
193 N. Harrison Ave.,
Kankakee, Illinois.

Step on it, locals, and "Belt Yon Poor Urrup" with B. Y. P. U.

Why Baptist Young People Should Go to Boston

There are some very obvious reasons why this convention should come to the Bay State Capital. It must convene some place, it has never been here, so why not come to New England?

Second, many young people combine a vacation with this international gathering, and New England is a summer vacation land. Fine automobile roads well marked, beautiful country, with lakes, seashores and woods, and every comfort and convenienc makes this section of America very attractive.

But the greatest reasons are found in the religious and historical settings of Boston and vicinity. The First Baptist Church in America was founded at Providence, R. I., the second at Swansea, Mass., and the third at Boston, the old First Church, whose doors the magistrates nailed up to prevent heretical worship. The first Baptist martyr in America, Obediah Holmes, was whipped on Boston Commons.

Here was founded the Massachusetts Baptist Convention, a generation before our national societies were organized. Out of its boards came the men who founded the home and the foreign societies. This state convention aided for years in support of John M. Peck, the great western missionary. When Adoniram Judson went to Burma this convention paid $1,000 toward his salary, or in the next few years contributed $1,100 toward the translation of the Bible into the Burmese.

Boston is the home of great Baptist churches, known wherever Protestant Christianity is known. But the chief pull is the fact that New England is a popular Baptist center. There are more Baptists in New England than in all the Rocky Mountain states, the Pacific Coast states with Nebraska and Kansas added to give a flavour of the prairies.

Historically and educationally Boston can claim certain attractions. A study of the monuments commemorating the great events connected with the history of New England and America will do considerable to give you the historical background of the foundings of the nation. In and around Boston are between forty and fifty institutions for higher learning, including Newton Theological Institution, Harvard University, Technology, Boston University. Among the noted public buildings which should be visited because of their historical association or art treasures contained there in, are Faneuil Hall, Old South Church; North Church, the old state house, the public library and the art museum.

Here is the birthplace of Franklin and the graves of his parents, the final resting place of Revere, the Adams, Hancock, colonial governors, Longfellow, Holmes.

Space will not permit us to relate the interest to be found in old Salem, Concord Lexington, Plymouth and the great industrial centers. We can only say "Welcome" to you to all of these wonderful opportunities for pleasure and instruction.—F. F. PETERSON, Chairman.

Speakers and Conference Leaders

Mr. Milton M. McGorrill, director of religious education, Temple Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. N. S. McKechnie, pastor First Church, Belleville, Ontario; Prof. H. B. Robins, Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y.; Rev. C. N. Arbuckle, pastor First Church, Newton Centre, Mass.; Rev. Albert H. Gage, director of religious education, Chicago Association; Rev. U. M. McGuire, pastor First Church, Greencastle, Ind.; Rev. R. M. West, pastor First Church, Lewisburg, Pa.; Dr. James A. Francis, pastor First Church, Los Angeles, Calif.; Dr. Russell H. Conwell, pastor Temple Church, Philadelphia; Dr. Frank W. Padelford, secretary of the board of education, New York City; Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor First Church, Syracuse, N. Y.; Dr. F. W. Patterson, president Acadia University, Wolfeville, N. S.; Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, pastor First Church, Detroit, and president of B. Y. P. U. of A.; Dr. Harry S. Myers, of the stewardship department of the General Board of Promotion, New York; Mr. H. F. Smaltz, president of the Young People's Union of Brooklyn and Long Island; Rev. Charles A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin; Miss Edna Geister, famous social and recreational expert of Elgin, Ill.; Rev. C. W. Petty, pastor First Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Dr. Joseph Taylor of China; Rev. W. G. Towart, pastor First Church, Bennington, Vt.; Mr. John Ruthven, president Columbia Federation B. Y. P. U., Washington, D. C.; Dr. S. J. Porter, pastor First Church, Oklahoma City, Okla.

The Chimney Corner

Easter Weather

By Margaret E. Sangster

A SOFT wind blew across my face; a wind that sang little songs and breathed wee fragrant secrets and murmured small happy words. And I lifted my eyes to the sky—gray-veiled by the smoke of a thousand chimneys—and forgot that I was standing on New York's busiest corner.

All around me swirled crowds—women in shiny straw hats, men in spring overcoats, and little children in half socks and strapped slippers. I wondered as I watched a fluffy cloud drift through the gray smoke, if any of them were hearing a voice of the wind—as I was hearing it. Perhaps the children were conscious of it—passing lightly over its subtleties—but the men and women were far too hurried, every one of them, to pay heed to vague songs and vaguer secrets. They were too busy to even know that it was Easter weather!

With a start, almost, I brought my eyes back to the hurrying street. On New York's busiest corner one does not watch the sky over-long. Sky-gazing is apt to draw a crowd in New York. And a crowd is, almost, unlawful! It would be hard to explain—to a policeman with not much imagination—that a cloud looked like a fairy's pillow.

I brought my eyes back to the hurrying street. And there, on the corner opposite me, I saw a flower man with a tray of violets in his hands. They were hot-house violets, tortured into stiff little bunches, but from across the street one could only see that they were fashioned of a heavenly color. From across the street one could only dream the sweetness of them. Violets—in the city!

The crowds surged past the flower man. They jostled him this way and that, in their eagerness for speed. He did not sell many flowers, but I somehow felt that, even though he did not sell many of them, he was happier than the people who hurried by. For they were passing a little garden, all unseeing. And he, despite the city, was holding a garden in his two hands!

They used to grow in great purple beds—the violets. When the meadows were gay with Easter weather, they used to make a carpet in the quiet places. One seldom spoke aloud, when the violets were abloom—there was something nearly solemn about them. They were so shy themselves, and so silent; unlike the roses of June, that seem to hum gently to each other, and the dahlias of the late summertime—that almost shout aloud, so riotously colorful they are! They were so still that we used to walk among them on tiptoe, speaking in whispers.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of The Baptist.

We always felt, there in the meadows, that God was very near. We didn't exactly think it in a conscious way—for we were only children—but we thought it, nevertheless. Perhaps the violets thought it, too, for they bowed their heads ever so reverently each time a tiny breeze crept by.

We often wondered why the violets were such silent flowers. We used to tell ourselves, without speaking it out, that they were quiet because they bloomed so early. If they had hummed like the roses of June, if they had dared to shout as the dahlias shout, they might have called the winter back again. And then the frost would have pinched them, and the chill winds would have broken them, and the snow would have buried them. By keeping silent they passed unnoticed by the retreating winter!

Perhaps that was why, too, they hid under their broad green leaves and did not bloom in the open like the rest of the flowers. One has to search out violets, more than any other flower except the arbutus—and the arbutus blooms, too, in Easter weather.

But perhaps they did not hide because they were afraid. Perhaps they only hid because they were too shy, too modest, to show their beauty to the world. There are people like violets, who bury their personalities under a commonplace exterior; people whose souls are as fragrant and as beautiful as purple blossoms. The pity of it is that sometimes they wither and die—and no one has sought them out!

Thought-words came easily when one went violet hunting. Lovely words like "dewy" and "misty" and "elusive" and "slim" and "delicate." Words that were as light as a sunbeam's fingers laid across a baby's hair—never heavy words or ugly words.

Sometimes the words flew straight into lines—like birds going south and sometimes they made verses.

Not rhymed verses like they would today, for we knew nothing about rhymes. And yet they were more real, more sincere, perhaps, than any other poems that we have written since we grew up. For they came directly from our souls and were never profaned by the pencil and paper of commerce—and we oftentimes write poetry now because an editor wants to buy some, or because there is a long thin space in the middle of a page of type that needs to be filled.

Some of the thought-words that flew into lines were like this, only not rhymed:

When God smiles down on earth's green face.
He thinks that every level plain
Misty with violets, sweet with rain,
Is just another heaven place!

And some of them were like this—only far better and much easier to understand:

A dewy bed of violets,
A-bloom in Easter weather,
Is like a sweet elusive song,
And like harp music, soft yet strong,
And rainbows, slim and pale and long,
All melted up together!

We had two flat bowls, on the lowest shelf of our china-closet. One of them was a yellow bowl and one of them was a gray bowl. When we put a great mass of violets into the yellow bowl they seemed suddenly to become joyous, and their small golden hearts flamed with light. And we wanted to skip about the room and clap our hands and sing the sunny little songs that they taught us in school. And when our mother asked us why we were so hilarious we would stop skipping, and hang our head, and not know quite what to answer.

But if we placed the violets—gathered very carefully so that their stems were as long as possible—into the gray bowl, the effect was very different. Then the gold of their hearts seemed to fade into a mysterious, almost colorless tint and the purple grew darker and more velvety. And then we wanted to creep away in to some quiet place and repeat over the psalm that we had learned because it was grandmother's favorite.

When the violets in the yellow bowl or in the gray bowl were faded we used

Bobby's Prayer

By Margarita Haywood

DEAR father, there's the other boy tonight,
Who's praying to a god that's made of wood.
He asks it to take care of him till light
And love him—but it won't do any good.

He is so far I cannot make him hear;
I'd call to him and tell him, if I could,
That you'll take care of him, that you are near
And love him—for his god is made of wood.

I know he'd ask you if he only knew,
I know he'd love to know you if he could.
Dear God, take care of him, and love him, too—
The other boy, whose god is made of wood.

—Everyland.

to empty them, ever so gently, into the long grass that grew in the back yard. We couldn't bear to throw them into the trash basket; it might have hurt their feelings. And sometimes a few of them weren't quite faded and those we would carefully pick out and place between the pages of some well loved green and gold book. Sometimes, even yet, we come upon the wan little ghosts of them—for we still love our green and gold books. And when we lift them, between a careful thumb and forefinger, they disappear—and only a thin film of dust is left. And sometimes the type of the green and gold book grows dim for a moment, and hard to read. For we cannot help remembering that our yesterdays—when we picked violets in the glad sunlight of the Easter weather—have become only little thin films of dust too!

A soft wind blew across my face today—a wind that sang the songs of youth and whispered the secrets of childhood and murmured the story of Easter weather. And overhead a little white cloud, almost like a fairy's pillow, swept across the sky—blotting out the smoke of a thousand chimneys. And as I stood on New York's busiest corner, feeling almost like an island—because the people who hurried past me were like the waves of the sea—I saw that a flower man was standing on the opposite corner with a tray of violets in his hands.

I wonder if he realized, when I crossed the street and purchased a stiff little bunch of hot-house violets from him, that I was buying something more precious than flowers? I wonder if he could guess that I was very far away from New York's busiest corner as I paid him the silver coin that he asked for? I wonder if he knew that I was seeing visions and dreaming dreams?

Somehow I can't help thinking that he did know. For he smiled at me just a trifle wistfully, as I pinned the violets against the dark cloth of my coat and his eyes were soft with understanding. —Christian Herald.

The Young Reserves

The Magic Eggs

HARRY had lived in China almost all his life (nine years), but his minister-father had recently moved into a town where no missionary had ever been before. You can imagine what a curiosity Harry was to all the Chinese people—with his red hair! And his freckles! And his blue eyes! They thought that he must have been bewitched to have hair that was not black and eyes that were not dark brown. As for the freckles, they gave up guessing! "Very likely the poor boy has had some strange Christian disease which left him all speckled."

"Very likely, just as our heavenly blossoms (small-pox) leaves us pock-marked!"

Harry's mother was continually explaining Harry wherever she went, but on their first Easter in that new town she had to explain him more than ever, although Harry himself had the best intentions in the world. In fact, you would have said that he was doing a positive kindness in making an Easter present for the poor old Chinaman who took care of their missionary hens.

Very carefully Harry boiled three eggs until they were hard. Very carefully he painted those eggs—one blue, one pink, one yellow; and on each he printed in black ink the Chinese characters which said "A Happy Easter to Li Chang."

Saturday night he put these three eggs in the chicken coop, but little he guessed what would happen on Easter Sunday morning when Li Chang discovered the "present." For no sooner had the old man begun pottering around the yard than he saw the gay colors in the hay. Eggs! Instantly he supposed that the hens had laid them. "Pretty stiff Christian magic," he said to himself, "I have never known any idol who could make a hen change its habits. These Christians can do anything!"

But when he saw the printing then he was more impressed than ever. Unfortunately he could not read, but he hurried home to bring his grandson who had had some schooling. This little boy knelt down and through the slats of the coop he read aloud the astonishing message: "A Happy Easter to Li Chang."

Well! It was enough to send him hurrying home for his older brother, who also came, read the message and agreed that it was the most unusual magic ever seen in that town. The news spread—the neighbors came, some of them startled, some of them delighted, some of them eager to "swap" such superior hens for their own very tame fowls!

When the missionary himself sauntered out to see what the clamor was about, he was equally amused and distressed to have people say to him: "Honorable sir, we perceive that you have indeed a great religion, if it can make a Chinese hen lay blue eggs and pink eggs and yellow eggs, each with a printed message."

You can imagine how the missionary hastened to say that it was not magic at all, but the love of his little son for old Li Chang. The nice part of it is that Li Chang joined the church on account of it; and by this time I should not be surprised if a number of his neighbors had also joined, for the "magic eggs" made the family quite popular, and even little Easter eggs can preach sermons, of course.

The World Is Something Like an Egg

By Evelyn Worthley Sites

"THE world is something like an egg,"
Said Mr. Gak to me;
"The yellow, that is China,
And the white, that is the sea.
The other little countries,
Like America and France,
Are tiny specks out in the sea—
You know that at a glance."

You think him very ignorant;
But tell me, if you can,
Have you a bigger, broader world
Than had this Chinese man?
Or is your world just like an egg,
And would the yellow be
America; while Eastern lands
Are specks out in the sea?

—Everyland.

The Bible that Cost Three Eggs

SOME of you have written recently to say that you are reading a book called "India Inklings," but as others of the Young Reserves have not read it perhaps you will be interested to hear about Manikam and his cousin Machamma who used to worship Hindu idols; but because they were becoming more and more interested in such "Christian" things as primers and scales and clocks and medicine bottles their parents suddenly forbade them to go near the Christian mission school again.

The adorable little Machamma, although so brown, now became also quite blue! She was afraid that she would forget all that she had learned, until it dawned on her that if she could only "buy Happiness" then she could spell out the dear stories which she had come to love. "Happiness" meant a Bible, for almost the only passage that she knew by heart was in Matthew's gospel, the part you and I call the Beatitudes: "Blessed (happy) are the pure in heart," etc. But no one would give her any money, and she was gradually becoming bluer and bluer when suddenly her friendly little red hen began to cackle suggestively, "Cut! Cut! Cut Cada-cut!" Three times she did this in spite of Machamma's disgusted waving of her hand: "Go away, you old hen!"

But the third time it suddenly dawned on Machamma that the dear hen was actually offering her new-laid eggs to "buy Happiness." You may be sure that the radiant Machamma hid the precious eggs in the corner of her coral-pink sari, hurried secretly to buy her Book of Happiness and although her father finally burned this Bible, still she never could be quite so blue again.

Oh, if only all the hens in India would cooperate with our missionaries how many millions and millions would know about Easter and keep it with you and with me!

As you see your Easter eggs on April 1 this year, will you not remember these two egg stories, and pray Bobby's prayer?

Our Own Folks

Porto Rico Association

By Herbert Ford

Occasionally we hear strange tales from the benighted north that the association is an anacronism, a back number, a has-been. Not so here. The annual gathering in Porto Rico is the biggest event of the year to all the churches. This year Cayey, a prosperous interior town, was the scene of the twentieth meeting of the Porto Rico Association, March 8-11.

The meeting gave positive proof that the people of this mission field at least are coming into their own and learning to deliberate with vision and judgment about kingdom needs. A marked feature of this year's assembly was the large number of young people as delegates, and the freshness and vigor consequently manifested throughout. The theme that provoked the liveliest discussion was, "Why Do We Lose so Many Members from Our Churches?" by Rev. Daniel Echavarria. No less vital was "The Preparation Necessary for Country Pastors" and "The Development of Lay Workers and Their Opportunity." A strong devotional spirit prevailed, and the evening services, which were devoted to evangelistic messages, carried us to the mountain tops. Hundreds of townspeople were turned away. The Sunday-school attendance was 677, and we had to meet in a theater. There were 140 in the men's class.

A recommendation was adopted that in the present crisis, with lack of money and men, lay workers be used to a greater extent, and that each pastor gather a little group of men and boys and train them in the use of the Bible, in propaganda methods, and in leading meetings, with the aim of developing the country work more. The spiritual condition of the churches was found to be very high. There were over 300 baptisms reported, and a phenomenal increase in Sunday-school attendance.

